Phil. My Lord, I thank God I have patience to bear and abide all your cruel intents against me: notwithstanding I speak this earnestly, being moved thereto justly, to notify your unjust and cruel dealing with men in Corners, without all due order of Law.

After this, at night I was conducted again by three or four into the Cole-house.

The ninth Examination of Mr. Philpot before Bishop Boner and his Chaplains

In the morning the next day I was called down betimes by my keeper, and brought again into the Wardrobe, where I remained until the Bishop had heard his Mass, and after said he sent up for me into his inward Parlour, and there he called for a Chair to sit down, and brought his infamous Libel of his forged Articles in his hands, and laid it down, willing me to draw near unto him, and read:

The ninth Examination of Mr.
John Philpot
before the Bishop and his Chap-

1555.

Anno 1555. Lord. I am this day appointed to tarry at home from the Parliament Houfe, to examine you and your Fellows upon these Articles, and you stand dallying with me, and will neither answer to nor fro. I wis all your Exceptions will not serve you. Will it not be a fair honesty for you, think ye, that when thou comest before my Lord Maior and the Sheriffs, and other worshipping Audience, when I shall say before them all, that I have had thee these many times before me, and before so many learned men, and then thou couldst say nothing for that thou standest in, for all thy brags of learning, neither wouldst answer directly to any thing?

John Philpot
will stand to his former Plea to answer before his own Ordinary.

Phil. My Lord, I have told you my mind plain enough; but yet I do not intend to lose that privilege the Law giveth me, the which is free choice to answer where I am not bound, and this privilege will I cleave unto, until I be compelled otherwise.

Lord. Well, I perceive you will play the obdurate fool. Lay thine Appellation when thou comest in Judgment, and answer in the mean while to these Articles.

Phil. No, my Lord, by your leave I will not answer to them, until my lawful Appeal be tried.

Lord. Well, thou shalt hear them, and with that he began to read them.

John Philpot
will not hear his Articles
read.

Phil. I thrank back to the window, and looked on a Book, and after he had read them over he said unto me;

Lord. I have read them over, although it hath not pleased you to hear me. I marvel, in good faith, what thou meanest to be so wilful and stubborn, seeing thou maist do well enough if thou list. It is but a singularity; dost thou not see all the Realm against thee?

Phil. My Lord, I speak unto you in the witness of God, before whom I stand, that I am neither wedded to mine own will, neither stand upon mine own stubbornness or singularity, but upon my Conscience instructed by Gods Word: and if your Lordship can shew better evidence than I have for a good Faith, I will follow the same.

Lord. What thou wilt not, lo, for all that. Well, all that is past shall be forgotten; and be thou conformable unto us. I wis thou mightest find as much favour as thou wouldst desire.

Phil. Then I perceiving that he fawned so much upon me, thought it good to give him some comfort of my relenting, to the intent I might give him and his hypocritical Generation openly a further foil, perceiving that they dare reason openly with none, but with such as be unlearned, and for lack of knowledge not able to answer, or else with such as they have a hope, that for fear or love of the world, will recant: I said, my Lord, it is not unknown to you, that I have openly, in the audience of a great number, stood to the maintenance of these Opinions I am in, and by learning did offer to defend them; therefore, my Lord, I would it might openly appear to the world that I am won by learning, or else what will they say, but that either for fear, or love of the world, I am without any ground turned from the Truth? and if I hear any kind of learning openly shewed, I shall be as conformable as you may require me.

Lord. Yea marry, now ye speak somewhat like a reasonable man. I wis you might have had a great deal more favour in my house, and liberty, then you have had; and you shall lack nothing that is within my house; call for it, and you shall have it. And what is it that you would openly by learning somewhat be satisfied in? tell me.

Phil. My Lord, I have openly said, and do believe it also, that your Sacrifice of the Mass is no Sacrament.

Lord. What, do you deny the Presence of Christ in the Sacrament?

Talk of the Sacrament.

Phil. No, my Lord, I deny not the Presence of Christ in the Sacrament, but I have denied the Sacrament of the Altar, as it is used in your Mass, to be the true Sacrament of Christs institution; and first it must be proved a Sacrament before there can be any Presence granted.

Lord. Why, do you deny the Mass to be a Sacrament?

This Argument in the second figure conde-mnates irratively, doth not hold by Logic.

I pray you what is a Sacrament? Is it not a sign of a holy thing, as S. Augustine doth define it?

Phil. Yes verily that it is.

Lord. Then I make this Argument unto you, a Sacrament is the sign of a holy thing: but the Mass is the sign of a holy thing, ergo, it is a Sacrament.

Phil. You must add this to your Major, or first Proposition, as S. Augustine doth mean, that a Sacrament is the sign of a holy thing instituted of God, and commanded; for otherwise it can be no Sacrament, for all men cannot make a Sacrament.

Lord. I grant that; and such a sign of a holy thing is the Mass of Christs institution.

Phil. I deny that, my Lord.

Lord. I will prove this by S. Augustine by and by. I will go shew you the Book, and you shall have any Book I have that you will demand. Ho, who is without there. Call me Mr. Doctor Chedsey, Mr. Archdeacon, Mr. Cofins, and other Chaplains hither.

Here my Lord, Mr. Doctor Chedsey is gone to Westminister, and Mr. Archdeacon was here even now.

Lord. Mr. Cofins, I pray you examine him upon these Articles, and write his answer he maketh to every one of them. I will go examine his Fellows, and send you S. Augustine by and by. I find this man more conformable than he was before.

Cofins. I trust, my Lord, you shall find him at length a good Catholick man. Marry, here be a fight of Heresies; I dare say you will hold none of them, nor stand in any of them. How say you to the first?

Phil. Mr. Cofins, I have told my Lord already, that I will answer to none of these Articles he hath objected against me; but if you will with learning answer to that which is in question between my Lord and me, I will gladly hear and commune with you.

Cofins. No, will you? Why what is that then that is in question between my Lord and you.

Phil. Whether your Mass be a Sacrament, or no.

Cofins. What, the Mass to be a Sacrament? Who ever doubted thereof?

Phil. If it be an undoubted truth, you may the sooner prove it; for I doubt much thereof.

Cofins. Why, I will prove it. It is the sign of a holy thing; Ergo, it is a Sacrament.

Phil. I deny your Antecedent.

Cofins. What, will you so? then there is no reasoning with you.

Thus Mr. Cofins gave over in the plain field for want of further proof. And then the morrow Mass Chaplain began to speak for his Occupation; and with that Mr. Harpsfield came out from my Lord with S. Augustines Epistles, saying:

Harps. My Lord hath sent you here S. Augustine to look upon, and I pray you look what he saith in a certain Epistle which he writeth; I will read over the whole. Here you may hear the celebration of the Mass, and how it reprooveth them that went a hawking and hunting before the celebration of the same, on the Sabbath and Holydays.

Phil. I perceive the Contents of this Epistle, and I see nothing herein against me, neither anything that maketh for the proof of your Sacrament of the Mass.

Harps. No, doth he not make mention of the Mass, and the celebration thereof? what can be spoken more plain?

Phil. S. Augustin meaneth of the celebration of the Communion, and of the true use of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, and not of your private Mass, which you of late years have erected in the stead thereof; for this word Mass, hath been an old term attributed to the Communion even from the Primitive Church. And I pray you tell me what Missæ doth signifie. I think not many that say Mass can well tell.

Cofins. No, cannot? that is marvel.

Phil. Then tell me if you can. But Mr. Cofins and my morrow Mass Chaplain were both dumb, looking upon Mr. Harpsfield for help, and at length he spake.

Harps. You think it cometh of the Hebrew word Masah, as though none were seen in the Hebrew but you.

Phil. I have not gone so long to School, to derive the signification of Missæ, which is a Latin word, out of Hebrew; but I have learned to interpret Greek words by Greek, and Latin by Latin, and Hebrew by Hebrew; I take the Communion to be called Missæ, à mittere, of such things as at the celebration of the Communion were sent by such as were of ability, to the relief of the Poor, where the Rich brought after their Devotion and Ability, and required the Minister in the Celebration of the field.

Communion to pray unto God for them, and to accept their common Aims, which they at such times did send for the help of their poor Brethren and Sisters; and for this cause was it called Missa, as learned men do witness. At the which Celebration of the Mass, all that were present did communicate under both kinds, according to Christs institution, as they did in S. Augustine's time. But unless you can shew that your Mass is used as then it was, ye shall never by the name of Mass (which S. Augustine attributed to the true use of the Communion) prove your private Mass to be a Sacrament, unless ye can prove the same now to be in your Masses as was then, which is clean contrary.

Harph. What, deny you the Mass to be a Sacrament? for shame speak it not.

Phil. I will not be ashamed to deny it, if you cannot prove it.

The Mass is a Sacrifice, a holy thing, &c.

Harph. Why, it is a Sacrifice, which is more than a Sacrament.

Phil. You may make of it as much as you list: but you shall never make it a Sacrifice, as you may imagin thereof, but first it must be a Sacrament, for of the Sacrament you deduce your Sacrifice.

Harph. Why? doth not Christ say, This is my Body? and doth not the Priest pronounce the same that Christ did?

A Sacrament is no Sacrament without his use.

Phil. The pronounciation only is not enough, unless the words be therewithal applied to the use, as Christ spake them to. For though ye speak the words of Baptism over water never so many times, yet there is no Baptism unless there be a Christian person to be baptized:

Harph. Nay, that is not like; for, Hoc est corpus meum, is an Indicative proposition, shewing a working of God in the Substance of Bread and Wine.

Phil. It is not only an Indicative proposition, but also Imperative or commanding. For he that said, Hoc est corpus meum, i. This is my Body; said also, Accipite, manducate, i. Take ye, eat ye. And except the former part of the institution of Christs Sacrament be accomplished according to the Communion; the later, This is my Body, can have no verification, take it which way you will, and how you will.

Al vrow-Mass Chap. Why then you will make the Sacrament to stand in the receiving, and that receiving maketh it a Sacrament.

Receiving maketh not the Sacrament, yet the Sacrament of the Lords Supper without it be received, is no Sacrament.

Phil. I do not say, that the receiving only maketh it a Sacrament, but I say, that a common receiving must needs be concurrent with the true Sacrament, as a necessary Member, without the which it cannot be a Sacrament, because Christ hath made this a principal part of the Sacrament, Take ye, eat ye, which you do not in your Mass according to Christs institution; wherefore, it can be no Sacrament, for that it wanteth of Christs institution.

Cosins. We do forbid none to come to it, but as many as list may be partakers with us at the Mass, if they require it.

Phil. Nay, that they shall not, though they require it, you will minister but one kind unto them, which is not after Christs institution. Besides that, you ought before you go to Mass, to exhort all that be present, to make a Sacrifice of Thanksgiving, for Christs Passion with you, and exhort them to be partakers with you, according to Christs Commandment, saying unto all that be present, Take ye, eat ye: And likewise by preaching shew forth the Lords death, which you do not.

What the Priests ought to do at their Mass.

Cosins. What, if all things be done, even as you would have it, and whilst the Minister is about to minister the Sacrament, before any have received it, there rise a sudden hurly burly, that the Communicants be compelled to go away; is it not a Sacrament for all that none hath communicated before the Priest?

Phil. In this case, where all things are appointed to be done according to Gods word, if incident necessity had not let, I cannot say but it is a Sacrament, and that he which hath received, hath received the true Sacrament. After this, the Morrow-mass Priest findeth this apish reason.

The Morrow-mass Priest. If the Sacrament of the Mass be no Sacrament, unless all do receive it, because Christ said, Take ye, eat ye; then the Sacrament of Baptism is no Sacrament where there is but one baptized, because Christ said to his Apostles, Go preach the Gospel to all Creatures, baptizing all Nations in the Name of the Father, &c.

Anno 1555.

Phil. In that saying of Christ, baptizing all Nations, is a commandment to the Apostles, to baptize all sorts of men, and to exclude none that believe, be he Gentile or Jew, not meaning all at once, for that were impossible. And there are many examples that Baptism may be singularly ministered to one person, as we have example in Christ baptized of John, and in the Eunuch baptized of Philip, with many more such like: but fo have you not of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, but contrariwise by the expresse words of S. Paul, you are commanded to use it in a communion and participation of many together; Cor. 11. Quisquis comedit ad manducandum, alius alium expectat; as oft as ye come together to eat (meaning the Lords Supper) tarry one for another. And also the Minister in the celebration of the Sacrament speaketh unto all that be present in Christs behalf, to communicate with him, saying, Take ye, and eat ye. Wherefore, as many as be present and do not communicate, break Gods commandment in not receiving the same, and the Minister is no just Minister that doth not distribute the Sacrament, as Christ did, to all that are present; and where Gods word is transgressed, there is not Christ present, and consequently it is no Sacrament.

The Sacrament of Baptism may be ministered unto any singular person.

The Sacrament of the Lords Supper requires a Communion.

Harph. What, would you have it no Sacrament without it be a Communion?

Phil. I make it not so, but Gods expresse word teacheth me fo, yea, also all the ancient Writers; as S. Chrysostom Chrysost. in writing upon the Epistle to the Ephesians, faith, That the oblation is in vain, whereas none doth communicate with the Priest. If by his judgment the action of the Priest alone is in vain, where is no Communion, how can that be a Sacrament, which he calleth a vain Oblation, and a vain standing at the Altar?

At the ministeration of the Supper the all that be present ought to communicate.

Cosins. You are such another Fellow as I have nothard, that will not have the Mass to be a Sacrament; you are no man for me to reason withal. Come, let us go, pointing to the Morrow-mass Chaplain: we will leave you (Mr. Archdeacon) and him together; and so they went away. Afterward the Archdeacon fell into earnest persuasions with me, saying:

Cosins and the Chaplain give over their part.

Harph. Mr. Philpot, you and I have been of old acquaintance a long time; we were School-fellows both in Winchester, and in Oxford many years. Wherefore I must with you as well to do as my self, and I pray you to think of me.

Phil. I thank you for your good will towards me. But if you be deceived, (as I am sure you are) I shall desire you not to with me deceived with you. For afore God I tell you plainly, you are highly deceived, and maintain false Religion, and be not those men you take your selves for: and if you do not repent, and leave off your persecuting of Christs Truth, you will go to the Devil for it. Therefore consider it in time, I give you warning, for else in the Day of Judgment I shall be a witness against you, that I told you this here talking together.

Harph. Fie, that is but your own vain singular opinion; I perceive you are now still that man you were in Oxford.

Phil. I trust you can report no notorious evil that ever you knew by me there.

Harph. I can say no evil of your Conversation, but I knew you to be a studious man. Marry, if you remember when we met in disputation in parvis, you would not lightly give over, and for that cause I speak what I have said.

Phil. Mr. Harpsfeld, you know in the Schools of Oxford, when we were young men, we did strive much upon vain glory, and upon contention, more than for the truth; but now our years and our ripper learning teach us to fall to a truth, which must be our portion for ever. And if I was then, in my time of ignorance, earnest in my own cause, I ought now to be earnest in my Master Christs cause, and his truth. I know now that nothing done upon vain glory and singularity can please God, have it never so godly a shew: wherefore I pray you judge not fo of me now.

Harph. What, will you think your self better learned, then all the learned men in this Realm?

Phil.

Phil. My Faith hangeth not upon the learned of the world, but upon the learned of Gods Word.

Harps. Well, I will talk with you no more as now, but pray to God to open your heart.

Phil. I pray God open both our hearts, to do more his will, than we have done in times past.

Harps. Ho Keeper, take him away with you.

Phil. I pray you Mr. Harpsfield, tell me what this Pronoun (Hoc) doth demonstrate and shew, in this Indicative Proposition, as you call it, Hoc est corpus meum, This is my Body?

Harps. It doth demonstrate the Substance of Bread, which by the words spoken by the Priest, and by the Omnipotency of God, is turned into the Substance of Christs very Body.

Phil. Is the Substance of the Bread, as you say, turned into Christs Body?

Harps. Yea, that it is.

Phil. Why, then Christs Body receiveth daily a great increase of many thousand pieces of Bread into his Body, and that is his Body become now, which was not before, and by this you would seem to make, that there is an alteration in Christs glorified Body, which is a wicked thing to think.

Harps. Then he fet about again, and remembering better himself, and seeing the inconvenience of his first assertion, of the Transubstantiation of Bread into Christs Body, he said, That the Substance of Bread, after the words spoken by the Priest, was evacuated or vanished away by the Omnipotency of God.

Phil. This is another Song than you sang first: and here you may see how contrary you are to your selves. For indeed your Schoolmen do hold, That the very Substance of Bread is really turned into the Substance of Christs Body. And now you perceiving of late the inconvenience which is objected against you in that Opinion, you are driven to imagine a new shift, and say, the Substance of Bread is evacuated, contrary to that your Church hath first believed and taught. O what contrariety is there among you, and all to deface the sincere Truth?

Harps. Is not God omnipotent? and cannot he do as he hath said?

Phil. But his omnipotence will not do as you say, contrary to his word and to his honour. It is not Gods honour to include him bodily into a piece of Bread, and of necessity to tie him thereto. It is not Gods honour for you to make a piece of Bread God and Man, which you see before your face doth putrify after a certain time. Is not Gods Omnipotency as able to give his Body with the Sacramental Bread, as to make so many turnings away of the Bread, as you do, and that directly against the Scripture, which calleth it Bread many times after the Consecration? Are you not ashamed to make so many alterations of the Lords holy Institution as you do, and to take away the substantial parts of the Sacrament, as, Take ye, eat ye, drink ye all of this; do ye this in remembrance of me: and to place in their steads, Hear ye, gaze ye, knock ye, worship ye, offer ye, sacrifice ye for the quick and the dead? If this be not blasphemy to God and his Sacraments, to add and to pluck away in this sort, and that contrary to the mind of all ancient Writers, and contrary to the example of Christ and all his Apostles, tell me.

Harps. I know you have gathered the sayings of the Doctors together, which make for your purpose; I will talk no longer with you.

Phil. I pray God open both our hearts, to do more his will than we have done in times past.

Harps. Ho Keeper, take him away with you.

The tenth Examination of John Philpot before Bishop Boner, his Register, and others.

The next day after Dinner I was brought into my Lords upper Hall, and there he called me before him and his Register, and before Dr. Chedsey, in the presence of two homely Gentlemen, and a Priest which I knew not: At what time the Bishop said,

Lond. I do here lay unto this man in your presence. (requiring you to be a witness against him, as much as you know in any of them) these Articles, this Book of the Catechism made in King Edwards days, also these Conclusions agreed upon both in Oxford and Cambridge;

also I lay unto him, that he hath despised the Censures of the Church, and hath stood accursed more than this twelve-month, and never required Absolution thereof: How say you, wast thou not accursed by my Lord Chancellor?

Phil. I was excommunicated by him wrongfully, and ^{John Philpot} without any just cause, and without order of Law, being ^{accused by} never personally cited: ^{Syn. Gentiles}

Lond. Didst thou not tell me the other day, when I required thee to come to the Mass, that thou wast excommunicated, and therefore by the Law couldst not hear Mass? How long hast thou been thus excommunicated?

Phil. More than a twelve-month and a half.

Lond. Lo, you may hear what he saith: write it.

Phil. But as you would have written that I have said, ^{John Philpot} I have been thus long excommunicated; so also let him ^{required as-} write, that I did require of my Lord Chancellor that did ^{olution of} excommunicate me, my Absolution, but he would not give ^{Winchester,} it me, saying, That I was excommunicatus ipso jure, be- ^{and was de-} cause I was a Heretick, as it pleased him to call me, there- ^{ined.} fore accursed by your Law, and so commanded me to Prison, where I remain.

Gentleman. Why do you not require Absolution at my Lords hands here now?

Phil. Because he is not mine Ordinary, neither hath by the Law any thing to do with me of right.

Lond. What an obstinate Fool is this? I tell thee I will ^{Sp. Tamer} be thine Ordinary whether thou wilt or no. ^{will needs}

Phil. And because of this your unrighteous force to- ^{be his Ordi-} wards me, I have appealed from you, and require you, ^{nary.} Mr. Register, that my Appeal may be entered in writing.

Lond. Have you heard such a forward Fellow as this? he ^{Mr. Philpot} seemed yesterday to be very tractable, and I had a good ^{appeareth} hope of him. I tell thee thou art of my Diocess. ^{from the S.}

Phil. I am of Winchester Diocess, and not of London ^{of London} Diocess. ^{again.}

Lond. I pray you may not a man be of two Diocesses at once?

Phil. No, that he cannot.

Lond. Lo, will you see what an ignorant Fool this is ^{How one} in the Law, in the which he would seem to be seen? I tell ^{may be of} thee a man may be of three Diocesses at once: as if thou ^{Diocess} wert born in London, by reason thereof thou shouldst be ^{as once,} of my Diocess; or else if thou wert not born, but hadst a Dignity here, also thou art to be counted of my Diocess, or else by reason of thy habitation in my Diocess.

Phil. In none of these respects I am of your Lordships Diocess. But for all that, this will not follow, that I, dwelling at Winchester, am at that present of London Diocess.

Lond. What wilt thou lay thereof? Wilt thou recant if I prove it?

Phil. But what shall I win if you do not?

Lond. I will give thee my Bishoprick if I prove it not.

Phil. Yea, but who shall deliver it me if I win?

Lond. Thou art an arrogant Fool, enter their Oaths, and take these Witnesses Depositions. I must be gone to the Parliament House.

After this spake unto me a Priest standing by, asking me whether I was kin to my Lord Rich, or no.

Phil. I said, he said to himself to me the other day, but how I know not.

Ched. I heard him say he was his nigh Kinsman.

Baalamie. Why, then you and I must be of kin, for he is my nigh Kinsman. How chance it that you and I ^{His Beasle} be of contrary judgments? ^{mine Kin-}

Phil. It is no marvel, for Christ prophesied, That the Father shall be divided against the Son, and the Son against the Father for my Truths sake.

Baal. You do hold (as I understand) against the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, and against the holy Mass.

Phil. If you can prove it a Sacrament, I will not hold against you.

Baal. What, prove it a Sacrament, quoth he? doth not ^{Scripture} S. Paul say, *Quia oculus non vidit, & auris non audivit, ea ^{headstrongly} preparavit Deus diligenter ^{applied.} Je; That such things as the eye hath not seen, neither ear heard, hath God prepared for them that love him?*

Phil. That saying of S. Paul concerneth nothing your Sacrament, but is meant of the heavenly joys that be prepared for all faithful Believers.

Basil. Why, then I perceive you understand not S. Paul. By God, you are deceived.

Phil. You ought not to swear Kinsman, if you will that I shall so call you: and without disworship of our Kindred, I understand S. Paul as well as you, and know what I say, and with that shewed him a Greek Testament with Erasmus's translation, and with the old also, demanding him which Text he was best acquainted withal.

Basil. I knew Greek too once, as well as you, I care not which you read.

Phil. You know them then all alike; you understand the one as well as the other. With this my Baalamite Kinsman departed in a fury.

The next days talk
Bishops.

The next day after I was brought down again after dinner to the Chappel, and there my Baalamite Kinsman (to verify the Scriptures, that a mans own Kinsfolks shall be his enemies) came in with the Bishop as a Witness against me: and there the Bishop caused another that came to him about other matters, to swear also to be a witness against me, which was a Priest also, saying,

Witnesses

Tunstall.

Lord. You shall swear to depose all the truth of certain Articles you shall be inquired of concerning this man; and here I (according to the Law) do bring them forth in thy presence.

the Bishop.

Phil. My Lord, I do not agree to the production of them, but do appeal from all these and other your proceedings against me: and require you Mr. Register, that my Appeal may be entered, and I will give you for your labour.

Reg. Your Appeal shall be entered at Leisure. Whom do you appeal unto? tell me.

Phil. I appeal to a higher Judge, as to the Lieutenant of the Archbishoprick of Canterbury; for I know not who is Bishop thereof at this present. With that the Bishop went away, and my Baalamite Kinsman looking big upon me, but said never a word.

Thus have I in hast scribbled out all mine Examinations hitherto, that the same which hath been done unto me in dark, might come to light, and that the Papists unjust proceedings, and nakedness in their false Religion, might be known to their confusion. Jesus is Emanuel, that is, God with us, Amen. 1555.

The eleventh Examination of John Philpot, had on S. Andrews day, before the Bishop of Duresin, the B. of Chichester, the B. of Bath, the B. of London, the Prosecutor, Mr. Christopherston, and Dr. Chedley, Mr. Morgan of Oxford, Mr. Hufsey of the Arches, Dr. Weston, Dr. Harpsfield Archdeacon, Mr. Collins, and Mr. Johnson Register to the B. of London, in his Palace.

Yet another Examination of John Philpot before Bishops and Doctors.

I Was coming, being sent for with my Keeper, and the Bishop of London met me in his Hall-door, and full mannerly he played the Gentleman-Usher to bring me before the Lords, saying,

Lord. My Lords, I shall desire you to take some pains with this man, he is a Gentleman, and I would he should do well, but he will wilfully cast away himself.

Dures. Come hither Sir, what is your name?

Phil. My name is Philpot.

Dures. I have heard of that name to be a worshipful stock, and since you be a Gentleman, do as you may live worshipfully among other Gentlemen. What is the cause of your trouble now?

Phil. I told him the cause, as in my former Examinations is expressed.

Dures. Well, all causes set apart, will you now be a conformable man to the Catholick Faith, and leave all new fangled Opinions and Heresies? I wis I was in Germany with Luther at the beginning of these Opinions, and can tell how they began. Leave them, and follow the Catholick Church throughout the whole world, as the whole Realm now doth.

Selling of a mans conscience in Religion re-quiesh
vancement.

Phil. My Lord, I am in the Catholick Faith, and desire to live and dye in the same: but it is not unknown to your Lordship, that I with others these twenty years have been taught another manner of Faith then you now go about to compel us unto; wherefore it is requisite that we have a time to weigh the same, and to hear how it agreeth with Gods word. For Faith is at a sudden neither won, neither removed, but as S. Paul faith, Faith cometh by bearing, and bearing by the word; Fides ex auditu, auditus per verbum.

Chich. And if you will give me leave, my Lord, I will shew him how he taketh the saying of S. Paul amiss, as many other now adays alledging the same do, that they ought not to be compelled to believe, whereas S. Paul meaneth of Infidels, and not of the Faithful; and so S. Austin, writing against the Donatists, faith, That the Faithful may be compelled to believe.

Phil. S. Bernard (if it please your Lordship) doth take that sense of S. Paul as I do, saying, that Fides est suadenda, & non imponenda; Faith must be persuaded to a man, and not imposed. And S. Augustine speaketh of such as were first thoroughly persuaded by manifest Scriptures, and yet would resist of stubborn wilfulness.

Chich. So Bernard meaneth of Infidels also.

Phil. No, my Lord, that he both not, for he writeth not of the Infidels, but he writeth of such as were deceived by Errors.

Chich. My Lord of Durham, I have been so bold to interrupt your Lordship of your tale, I pray you now proceed on.

Dur. Mr. Philpot, will you be of the same Catholick Faith and Church with us you were baptized in, and your Godfathers promised for you, and hold as we do, and then may you be rid out of trouble? I perceive you are learned, and it is pity but you should do well.

Phil. I am of the same Catholick Faith and Catholick Church I was baptized unto, and in that will I live and dye.

Dur. That is well said; if you hold there you cannot do but well.

Chich. Yea, my Lord, but he meaneth otherwise then you do; Are you of the same Faith your Godfathers and Godmothers were, or no?

Phil. I cannot tell what Faith they were of certainly, but I am of the Faith I was baptized unto, which is, the Faith of Christ: for I was not baptized in the Faith of my Godfathers, but in the Faith of Christ.

Chich. S. Austin faith, That Infants are baptized in fide de susceptorem, in the Faith of their Godfathers.

Phil. S. Augustine in so saying, meaneth of the Faith of Christ, which the Godfathers do or ought to believe, and not otherwise.

Dures. How say you, will you believe as we do, and all the Learned of the Realm, or no? and be of one Church with us?

Phil. My Lords, It is not unknown to you, that there hath been always two Churches.

Chich. Nay, that is not so: there is but one Catholick Church.

Phil. I shall desire your Lordships to hear out my tale, and to take my meaning. For I know there is but one true Church; but always from the beginning there hath been joynt to the same true Church a false Church, Adversary to the true: and that was declared at the first in Abel and Cain, who percutured and slew his Brother, in whom (as S. Augustine witnesseth) is represented the false and true Church. And after that, as soon as God had chosen his peculiar people, and shewed unto them his Sanctuary, holy Statutes, and Will, anon after rose the false Church, and ten of the twelve Tribes of Israel divided themselves from the true Church of Juda and Benjamin, and made to themselves at Bethel, and set up golden Calves, and yet pretended therewith to serve God, and so abused his word. Notwithstanding, God was displeased with them, and ceased not his wrath, until he had utterly destroyed them.

Chich. I will grant you before the coming of Christ, there were two Churches in the old Law: but in the new Law since Christs coming, you cannot shew it to be so by the Scripture.

Phil. Yes, my Lord, that I can, if you will give me leave. After Christ had chosen his twelve Apostles was there not a Judas in the new Law, and a Simon Magus? and were not they of the false Church?

Chich. Yea, but I mean after the Gospel was written, where can you find me two Churches after Christ had ascended, and sent the Holy Ghost?

Phil. The Gospel was within eight years after the Ascension written by S. Matthew, and the writing there-

Dy. driven to a strait

Anno 1555. of is not material to the Declaration of these two Churches to have been always from time to time, as by example it may be shewed: and yet as evil as my memory is, I remember in the New Testament is mention made of two Churches, as it appeareth in the Apocalyp. and also S. Paul to the Thessalonians maketh mention that Antichrist, with his false Generation, shall sit in the Temple of God. To the which Chichester replied not.

Duref. The Church in the Scripture is likened to a great Fishers net, which containeth in it both good fishes and bad fishes. I trust you will be of the better sort, and lean to the truth.

Phil. My Lord, it is my whole desire now to follow that which is good, whatsoever I have done in times past, and to cleave to Gods Truth.

Duref. Do you so, and then shall you do well: it is almost night, my Lord of London, I must needs be gone.

Lord. Nay, my Lord of Duref., I must desire your Lordship, and my L. of Chichester, to tarry a little while. And before he had said, the Bishop of Bathe went his way without saying any word. What, my Lords, I have earnest matters to charge this man withal, whereof I would your Lordships to be made privy, and I have them here written in a Libel, I pray you sit down again, or else I will. First, I lay to him here, that he hath written in a Bible, which I took from him, this erroneous saying, Quod Spiritus est Vicarius Christi in terra; i. The Holy Ghost is Christs Vicar in earth. Wilt thou abide by this saying of thine; that the Spirit is Christs Vicar on earth?

Phil. My Lord, it is not my saying, it is a better learned mans than mine: For I use not to write mine own sayings, but the notable sayings of other ancient Writers, as all others be where ye find the same written. And as I remember, it is even the saying of S. Bernard, and a saying that I need not to be ashamed of, neither you to be offended at, as my Lord of Duref. and my Lord of Chichester, by their learning can discern, and will not reckon it evil said.

Lord. No will? why, take away the first syllable, and it foundeth Arim.

Phil. That is far fetched indeed; if your Lordship will scan mens sayings in such wise, you may find out what you list.

Lord. But to help this, I find moreover written with his own hand in another Book; In me Johanne Philpot ubi abundavit peccatum, superabundavit & gratia; that is, in me Johan Philpot, where fin did abound, grace hath superabounded. I pray you what superabundant grace have you more then other men? So said Arim, That he had the abundance of grace above all other.

Phil. My Lord, you need not be offended with that saying more than the other, for it is the saying of S. Paul himself, and I did apply it to my self for my comfort, knowing that though my sins be huge and great in the sight of God, yet is his mercy and grace above them all. And concerning Arim and his Adherents, I desire them, as it is well known I have written against them.

Lord. Alas I lay to thy charge that thou killedst thy Father, and was accused of thy Mother in her Death-bed, as I can bring witness thereof.

Phil. O Lords, what Blasphemy is this? Hath your Lordship nothing of truth to charge me withal, but (as I may speak it with your Honour) such forged blasphemous lies? If any of these can be proved, I will promise here to recant at Pauls Cross, what you will have me do, so sure they are as great blasphemies as may be objected against any man. Ha, my Lords, I pray you consider how my Lord of London hath hitherto proceeded against me: For indeed he hath none other but such pretended slanderous lies.

Chic. They be Parerga; that is, matters, beside the purpose.

Duref. My Lord, I must needs bid you farewell.

Lord. Nay, my Lord, here is a Letter which I shall desire your Lordship to hear ere ye go. This man (being in my keeping) hath taken upon him to write Letters out of Prison, and to pervert a young Gentleman, called Mr. Green, in my House, (call him thither) and hath made a false report of his examination, as you shall hear, not being content to be evil himself, but to make others as bad as him-himself. He all to tare the Letter when he saw my man went about to search him, but yet I have pierced it again together, and caused a Copy to be written thereof, and he read the torn Letter, bidding Mr. Chichester and Morgan to mark the Copy thereof.

The Contents of the Letter was the Examination of Mr. Green before the Bp. of London in the presence of Mr. Fecknam Dean of Pauls, and of divers others, whose ready answers in the Scriptures and in the Doctors were wondered at of the Dean himself, and of many others, as Fecknam did report: and that he was committed to Dr. Chedsey, and to have his meat from the Bishops own Table. How say you my Lords, was this well done of him, being my Prisoner, to write this? And yet he hath written a shameful lye, that he was in Dr. Chedseys keeping. How say you Mr. Doctor Chedsey, is it not a shameful lye?

Ched. Yes, my Lord, he was never in my keeping.

Lord. Art not thou ashamed to write such shameful Letters?

Come hither Mr. Green, did not I shew you this Letter? Mr. Green called.

Green. Yea forsooth, my Lord, you shewed it me.

Lord. How think you, my Lords, is not this an honest man to belye me?

Phil. Your Lordship doth mistake all things. This Letter (as your Lordship may perceive, and all other that have heard the same) was not written by me, but by a Friend of mine, certifying me at my request, how Mr. Green sped at the Bp. of *London*s hands: And there is nothing in the Letter that either I, or he that wrote it, need to fear, but that might be written as my report.

Lord. Then tell me who wrote it, if you dare.

Phil. No, my Lord, it is not my duty to accuse my Friend: and specially seeing you will take all things at the worst: Neither shall you ever know of me who wrote it. Your Lordship may see in the end of the Letter, that my Friend did write unto me upon the occasion of my Appeal, which I have made to the whole Parliament House about such matters as I am wrongfully troubled for.

Lord. I would see any so hardy to put up thine Appeal.

Phil. My Lord, I cannot tell what God will work, I have written it, speed it as it may.

Lord. My Lords, I have used him with much gentleness since he came to me. How fallest thou, have I not?

Phil. If to lye in the vilest Prison in this Town, being a Gentleman, and an Archdeacon, and in a Cole-house, by the space of five or six weeks already, without fire or candle, to be counted gentleness at your hands, I must needs say I have found gentleness. But there were never men so cruelly handled as we are at these days.

Lord. Lo, what a Varlet is this? Besides this, my Lords, even yesterday he procured his man to bring a bladder of black powder, I cannot tell for what purpose, I.

Phil. Your Lordship needeth not to mistrust the matter: it is nothing but to make ink withal, for lack of ink, as I had it before in the Kings Bench, when my Keeper took away my Inkhorn.

Lord. And why shouldst thou go about any such thing unknowing unto me, being thy Keeper? for I am thy Keeper in this House, I tell thee.

Phil. My Lord, because you have caused my penman and inkhorn to be taken from me, I would yet him that my Friends might understand what I lack, not that I intend to write any thing that I would be afraid should come to your sight.

Lord. More than this, my Lords, he caused a Pig to be roasted, and made a Knife be put between the skin and the flesh, for what purpose judge you. How fallest thou, didst thou not so?

Phil. I cannot deny but there was half a Pig sent me, and under the same a Knife lying in the Sauce; but for no ill purpose that I know; your Lordship may judge what you will. It was not to kill my self nor any other, as you would have men to believe; for I was never yet without a Knife since I came to Prison. Therefore all these be but false firmities, and not worth rehearsal.

Lord. I have here to lay to his charge (chiefest of all) his Book of the Report of the Disputation had in the Convocation-house, which is the ranciest Herein that may be, against the blessed Sacrament of the Altar. How say you Mr. Doctor Westcott did he maintain the same there stubbornly, or no?

False firmities against John Philpot.

The Bishop begins to be weary of their par.

Bishop Bure would faine pick out matter till he could will how.

Another matter pickt against John Philpot.

Rom. 5: 1 Tim. 1.

John Philpot falsely charged with untruth, when no truth can be found against him.

Hilp. Yes, my Lord, that he did, and would never be answered. And it is pity that the same worlhipful Congregation should be flandered with such untrue reports.

Phil. You answered me indeed, Mr. Doctor (being then Prolocutor) goodly, with hold thy peace, and have him to Prison, and put him out of the House. I have read the Book, and I find the report of every mans Argument to be true in all points. And if there be any fault, it is, because he fetterth forth your doings too favourably, and nothing like to that you did use me, being an Archdeacon, and not of the work of the House.

Hilp. Thou art no Archdeacon.

Phil. Indeed, Mr. Doctor, ye have amongst you un-Archdeaoned me as now, (I thank God of it) and that without all order of Law.

Lord. I pray you my Lords hearken what he writeth of himself, I read it over this morning, and made a note of it. He saith, that Dr. Weston called him frautick and madman, and said, he should go to Bethlehem.

Phil. Indeed my Lord, so it pleased Dr. Weston to taunt at me, and say his shameful pleasure, but yet I was no whit the more for all his sayings, than Christ was when the Scribes and the Pharisees said likewise he was mad, and that he was possessed of a Devil, most blasphemously.

Duref. My Lord of London, I can tarry no longer, I must needs bid you farewell. Mr. Philpot, me thinketh you have said well that you will abide in the Catholick Faith, and in the Catholick Church: I pray you to do, and you shall do right well. And so departed with Mr. Weston and Mr. Hussey.

Phil. I have purposed so to do, howsoever I speed, by Gods grace.

Lord. I pray you my Lord of Chichester, and Mr. Prolocutor, and Mr. Doctor Morgan, to commune with him whiles I bring my Lord of Duref going.

Christ. Mr. Philpot I was acquainted with you at Rome, if you be remembered, but you have forgotten me, and talked some what with you of these matters, and I find you now the same man that you were then, I wish it were otherwise. For Gods sake be conformable to men that be better learned than you, and stand not in your own conceit.

Phil. Whereas you call me in remembrance of acquaintance had at Rome, indeed it was so, though it were but very strange on your part, to me-ward, being driven to necessity.

Christ. You know the world was dangerous at that time.

Phil. Nothing so dangerous as it is now; but let that pass. Whereas you say, you find me to be the same man I was then, I praise God for that you see me not like a Reed wavering with every wind. And whereas you would have me follow better learned men than my self: indeed I acknowledge that you, with a great many other, are far better learned than I, whose Books, in respect of learning, I am not worthy to carry after you: but faith and the wisdom of God consisteth not in learning only, and therefore S. Paul willeth that our faith be not grounded upon the wisdom of man. If you can shew by learning out of Gods Books, that I ought to be of another faith than I am, I will hear you, and any other man whatsoever he be.

Christ. I marvel why you should dissent from the Catholick Church, since it hath thus long universally been received, except within this five or six years here in England.

Phil. I do not dissent from the true Catholick Church, I do only dissent from the Bishop of Rome, which if you can prove to be the Catholick Church of Christ, I will be of the same also with you.

Christ. Will you believe S. Cyprian, if I can shew out of him, Quod Ecclesia Romana est talis ad quam perfidia accedens non potest, That the Church of Rome is such a one, unto the which misbelief cannot approach?

Phil. I am sure you cannot shew any such saying out of S. Cyprian.

Christ. What will you say then?

Phil. I will say as much as I am able to make.

Morgan. Will you promise to recant, if I shew his saying to be true.

Phil. My faith shall not hang upon any Doctors saying, further than he shall be able to prove the same by Gods Word.

Christ. I will go fetch the Book, and shew it him by and by, and therewithal he went into the Bishops Study, and fetch Cyprian, and appointed out these words in one of his Epistles, Ad Romanos autem, quorum fides Apostolo predicante laudata est, non potest accedere perfidia; But unto the Romans, whose faith by the testimony of the Apostle is praised, misbelief can have no access.

Phil. These words of Cyprian do nothing prove your pretended Assertion, which is, that to the Church of Rome there could come no misbelief.

Christ. Good Lord, no doth? What can be said more plainly?

Phil. He speaketh not of the Church of Rome absolutely.

Christ. By God, a Child that can but his Grammar will not deny that you do, the words be so plain.

Phil. Swear not, Mr. Doctor, but weigh Cyprians words with me, and I shall make you to say as I have said.

Christ. I am no Doctor, but I perceive it is but labour lost to reason with you.

Boner. And with that the Bishop of London came in blowing again, and said, What is my Lord of Chichester gone away also? (for he even a little before departed also without any other word saying, but he must needs be gone.) What is the matter you now stand upon?

Morg. Mr. Christoferson hath shewed Mr. Philpot a notable place of the Authority of the Church of Rome, and he maketh nothing of it.

Boner. Where is the place? let me see. By my faith here is a place alone. Come hither, Sir, what say you to this? Nay, tarry a while, I will help this place with S. Pauls own testimony, the first to the Romans, where he saith, That their faith is preached throughout the world; how can you be able to answer to this?

Phil. Yes, my Lord, it is soon answered, if you will consider all the words of Cyprian: for he speaketh of such as in his time were faithful at Rome, and followed the Doctrine of S. Paul, as he had taught them, and as it was notified throughout the world, by an Epistle which he had written in the commendation of their faith. With such as are praised of S. Paul at Rome, for following the true faith, misbelief can have no place. And if you can shew, that the faith which the Church of Rome holdeth now, is that faith which the Apostle praised and allowed in the Romans in his time, then will I say that S. Cyprian then said, and with you, That infidelity can have no place there; but otherwise it maketh not absolutely for the Authority of the Church of Rome, as you do mistake it.

Christ. You understand Cyprian well indeed; I think you never read him in your life.

Phil. Yes, Mr. Doctor, that I have, I can shew you a Book noted with mine own hand: though I have not read so much as you, yet I have read somewhat. It is a frame for you to wrest and wrath the Doctors as you do, to maintain a false Religion, which he altogether against you, if you take them aright; and indeed your false packing of Doctors together hath given me and others occasion to look upon them, whereby we find you shameful liars, and misreporters of the ancient Doctors.

Morg. What, will you be in hand to allow Doctors now? they of your Sect do not so. I marvel therefore you will allow them.

Phil. I do allow them in as much as they do agree with the Scriptures, and so do all they which be of the Truth, howsoever you term us, and I praise God for that good understanding I have received by them.

Christ. What, you understand not the Doctors, you may be ashamed to say it.

Phil. I thank God I understand them better then you; for you have Excavationem cordis, the blindness of heart; so that you understand not truly what you read, no more than the wall here, as the taking of Cyprian doth well declare. And afore God you are but deceivers of the people, for all your brag you make of learning; neither have ye Scripture nor ancient Doctor on your side, being truly taken.

Morg. Why, all the Doctors be on our side, and against you altogether.

Phil. Yes, so you say when you be in your Pulpits alone, and none to answer you. But if you will come to cast accounts with me thereof, I will venture with you a recantation;

Anno 1555. tation, that I (as little fight as I have in the Doctors) will bring more authorities of Ancient Doctors on my side then you shall be able for yours, and he that can bring most, to him let the other side yield. Are ye so content herewith?

Christo. It is but folly to reason with you, you will believe no Man but your self.

Phil. I will believe you or any other Learned Man if you can bring any thing worthy to be believed. You cannot win me with vain words from my faith. Before God there is no truth in you.

Morgan. What, no truth? no truth? ha, ha, ha.

Phil. Except the Articles of the Trinity, you are corrupt in all other things, and found in nothing.

Morgan. What say you, do we not believe well on the Sacrament?

Philpot. It is the thing which (among all other) you do most abuse.

Morgan. Wherein I pray you? tell us.

Phil. I have told you before M. Doctor, in the Convocation House.

Morgan. Yes marry: indeed you told us there very well. For there you fell down upon your knees, and fell to weeping, ha, ha, ha.

Phil. I did weep indeed, and so did Christ upon Jerusalem, and am not to be blamed therefore, if you consider the cause of my weeping.

Morg. What, make you your self Christ? ha, ha, ha.

Phil. No sir, I make not my self Christ: but I am not ashamed to do as my Master and Saviour did, to bewail and lament your Infidelity and Idolatry, which I there fore saw through tyranny you would bring again to this Realm, as this day doth declare.

Morgan. That is your Argument.

Christo. Wherein do we abuse the Sacrament? tell us.

Phil. As I may touch but one of the least abuses, you minister it not in both kinds as you ought to do, but keep the one half from the people, contrary to Christ's institution.

Christo. Why, is not there as much contained in one kind, as in both? And what need is it then to minister in both kinds?

Phil. I believe not so: for if it had, Christ would have given but one kind only: for he instituted nothing superfluous, and therefore you cannot say that the whole effect of the Sacrament is as well in one kind, as in both, since the Scripture teacheth otherwise.

Christo. What if I can prove it by Scripture, that we may minister it in one kind? The Apostles did so, as it may appear in the Acts of the Apostles in one or two places, where it is written that the Apostles continued In orationibus & fractione panis, In Prayers and in breaking of Bread, which is meant of the Sacrament.

Phil. Why, M. Doctor, do you not know that S. Luke by making mention of Breaking of Bread, meaneth the whole use of the Sacrament, according to Christ's institution, by a figure which you have learned in Grammar, Synecdoche, where part is mentioned, and the whole understood to be done, as Christ commanded it?

Christo. Nay, that is not so. For I can shew you out of Ench. in Eccl. hist. that there was a Man of God (whom he named) that sent the Sacrament in one kind by a boy, to one that was sick.

Phil. I have read indeed that they did use to give that was left of the Communion Bread, to Children, to married men, and to women, and so peradventure the Boy might carry a piece of that was left to the sick Man.

Christo. Nay, as a Sacrament it was purposely sent unto him.

Phil. If it were so, yet can you not precisely say, that he had not the Cup ministered unto him also by some other sent unto him: but though one Man did use it thus, doth it follow that all Men may do the like? S. Cyprian noteth many abuses of the Sacrament in his time, which rose upon singular Mens Examples, using of Water in stead of Wine, therefore he saith, Non respiciendum quid aliqui ante nos fecerunt, sed quid Christus qui unum primum ante nos fecerit & mandavit, that is, we must not look what any Man hath done before us, but what Christ hath of all Men did and commanded.

Christo. Hath not the Church taught us so to use the Sacrament? and how do we know that Christ is Homo unicus, or, that is, of one substance with the Father, but by the Determination of the Church? How can you prove that otherwise by express words of Scripture, and where find you Homo unicus in all the Scripture?

Phil. Yes that I do, in the first of the Hebrews, where it is written that Christ is the express Image of Gods own substance, eiusdem substantia.

Christo. Nay, that is not so. That is, There is no more but expressio imago substantia, The express Image of Gods Substance, and Image is accident.

Phil. It is in the text, Of his substance, Substantia illius, or of his own substance, as it may be right well interpreted. Besides this, that which Christ spake of himself in S. John manifesteth the same, saying, I and the Father be one thing, Ego & pater unum sumus. And whereas you say, Imago here is accident, the ancient Fathers use this for a strong Argument, to prove Christ to be God; because he is the very Image of God.

Christo. Yea do? is this a good Argument, because we are the Image of God, Ergo, we are God?

Phil. We are not called the express Image of God, as it is written of Christ, and we are but the Image of God by participation; and as it is written in Genesis, we are made to the likeness and similitude of God. But you ought to know (M. Christofer) that there is no accident in God, and therefore Christ cannot be the Image of God, but he must be of the same substance with God.

Christo. Tush.

Morgan. How say you to the Presence of the Sacrament? will you stand to the judgment here of your Bookyours, or will you recant?

Phil. I know you go about to catch me in words. If you can prove that Book to be of my setting forth lay it to my charge when I come to judgment.

Morgan. Speak, be you of the same mind as this Book is of, or no? Sure I am you were once, unless you are become another manner of Man then you were.

Phil. What I was, you know; what I am, I will not tell you now; but this I will say to you by the way, that if you can prove the Sacrament of the Mass (as you now use it) to be a Sacrament, I will then grant you a presence, but first you must prove the same a Sacrament and afterward intreat of the presence.

Morg. Ho, do you doubt that it is a Sacrament?

Philpot. I am past doubting, for I believe you can never be able to prove it a Sacrament.

Christo. Yea do? good Lord, doth not S. Augustine call it the Sacrament of the Altar? How say you to that?

Phil. That maketh nothing for the probation of your Sacrament. For so he with other ancient writers do call the Holy Communion or the Supper of the Lord, in respect that it is the Sacrament of the Sacrifice which Christ offered upon the Altar of the Cross, the which Sacrifice all the Altars and Sacrifices done upon the Altars in the Old Law did prefigure and shadow, the which pertaineth nothing to your Sacrament hanging upon your Altars of Lime and Stone.

Christo. No doth? I pray you what signifyeth Altar?

Phil. Not as you falsely take it, materially, but for the Sacrifice of the Altar of the Cross.

Christo. Where find you it ever so taken?

Phil. Yes that I do in Saint Paul to the Hebrews the thirteenth, where he saith, Habemus Altare de quo non est fas edere his qui tabernaculo deserviant, We have an Altar, of the which it is not lawful for them to eat that serve the Tabernacle. Is not Altar in this place taken for the Sacrifice of the Altar, and not for the Altar of Lime and Stone?

Christo. Well, God bless me out of your company. You are such an obstinate Heretic, as I have not heard the like.

Phil. I pray God keep me from such blind Doctors, which when they are not able to prove what they say, then they fall to Blaspheming (as you now do) for lack of better proof. In the mean while the Bishop of London was talking with some other by, and at length came in to supply his part, and said.

Boner. I pray you Masters, harken what I shall say to this Man: come hither Master Green. And now Sir (pointing to me) you cannot think it sufficient to be taught your Green. No you never wrote unto me.

Boner. Why, is not this your Letter which you did write concerning him.

Phil. I have shewed your Lordship my mind concerning that Letter already: it was not written to Master Green, neither was he privy to the writing thereof.

Lord. How say you then, if a Man be in an error, and you know thereof, what are you bound to do in such a case?

Phil. I am bound to do the best I can to bring him out of it.

Lord. If M. Green here be in the like, are you not bound to reform him thereof if you can?

Phil. Yes that I am, and will do to the uttermost of my power therein. The Bishop remembering himself, thinking that he would but shrewdly after his expectation be holpen at my Mouth, but rather confirmed in that which he called an error, ceased to go any further in his demand, and called M. Green aside, and before his Register read him a Letter, I know not the contents thereof: and therewithal he gave M. Green the Book of my disputation in the Convocation-House, and afterward went aside, communing with Master Christopher, leaving M. Morgan, M. Harpsfield, and M. Cefins, to reason with me in the hearing of Master Green.

Morgan. M. Philpot, I would ask you how old your Religion is?

Phil. It is older then yours by a thousand years and more.

Morgan. I pray you where was it fifty years ago?

Phil. It was in Germany apparent by the testimony of Hulse, Hierom of Prague and Wickliffe, whom your generation an hundred years ago and more, did burn for Preaching the Truth unto you; and before their time and since hath been, although under Persecution it hath been put to silence.

Morgan. That is a marvellous strange Religion, which no Man can tell certainly where to find it.

Philpot. It ought to be no marvel unto you to see Gods Truth thorow violence oppressed; for so it hath been from the beginning from time to time, as it appeareth by Stories, and as Christs true Religion is now to be found here in England, although Hypocrites hath by violence the upper hand. And in the Apocalypsi you may see it was Prophecied, that the true Church should be driven into corners, and into the Wilderness, and suffer great Persecutions.

Morg. Ah are you seen in the Apocalypsi? there are many strange things.

Phil. If I tell you the truth which you are not able to refel, believe it, and dally not out so earnest matters: Me think you are liker a scotter in a play, then a reasonable Doctor to instruct a Man, you are bare-arsed, and dance naked in a Net, and you see not your own nakedness.

Morg. What, I pray you, be not so quick with me, let us talke a little more coldly together.

Phil. I will talk with you as mildly as you can desire, if you will speak Learnedly and Charitably. But if you go about with tants to delude the truth, I will not hide it from you.

Morg. Why will not you submit your judgment to the Learned Men of this Realm?

Phil. Because I see they can bring no good ground whereupon I may with a good Conscience settle my Faith more surely then on that which I am now grounded upon by Gods manifest Word.

Morgan. No do? that is marvel that so many Learned Men should be deceived.

Phil. It is no marvel by Saint Paul, for he saith, That not many Wife, neither many Learned after the World be called to the knowledge of the Gospel.

Morg. Have you then alone the Spirit of God, and not we?

Philpot. I say not that I alone have the Spirit of God, but as many as abide in the True Faith of Christ, have the Spirit of God, as well as I.

Morg. How know you that you have the Spirit of God?

Phil. By the Faith of Christ which is in me.

Morg. Ah, by Faith do you so? I ween it be the Spirit of the Buttery, which your fellows have had that have been burned before you, who were drunk the night before they went to their death, and I ween went drunken unto it.

Phil. It appeareth by your Communication, that you are better acquainted with the Spirit of the Buttery, then with the Spirit of God; wherefore I must now tell thee, thou painted wall and Hypocrite, in the name of the living Lord, whose truth I have told thee, that God shall rain Fire and Brimstone upon such scornors of his Word and Blasphemers of his people, as thou art.

Morg. What, you rage now.

Phil. Thy foolish Blasphemies have compelled the Spirit of God, which is in me, to speak that which I have said to thee, thou enemy of all righteousness.

Morg. Why do ye judge me so?

Phil. By thine own wicked words I judge of thee, thou Blind and Blasphemous Doctor: for as it is written, By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words: thou shalt be Condemned. I have spoken on Gods behalf, and now I have done with thee.

Morg. Why then I tell thee Philpot, thou art an Heretic, and shalt be burned for thine Heresie, and afterwards go to Hell-fire.

Philpot. I tell thee, thou Hypocrite, that I pass not this for thy Fire and Fagots, neither, I thank God my Lord, stand in fear of the same: my Faith in Christ shall overcome them. But the Hell Fire which thou threatnest me is thy portion, and is prepared for thee (unless thou speedily repent) and for such Hypocrites as thou art.

Morg. What, thou speakest upon Wine, thou hast tipped well to day by likelihood?

Phil. So said the cursed Generation of the Apostles being replenished with the Holy Ghost, and speaking the Wondrous Works of God, they said they were drunk, when they had nothing else to say, as thou dost now.

Morg. Why, I am able to answer thee, ywis, I trow.

Phil. So it seemeth, with Blasphemies and lies.

Morg. Nay, even with Learning, say what thou canst.

Phil. That appeared well at my disputation in the Convocation-House, where thou tookst upon thee to answer those few Arguments I was permitted to make, and yet wast not able to answer one, but in thine answers didst fumble and flammer, that the whole House was ashamed of thee: and the final conclusions of all thine answer was, that thou couldst answer me if I were in the Schools at Oxford.

Morg. What, did I so? thou believest me.

Phil. I do not belie thee, the Book of the report of the disputation beareth record thereto, and all that were present then can tell, if they list, thou saidst so. And I tell thee plain, thou art not able to answer that Spirit of truth which speaketh in me for the defence of Christs true Religion. I am able by the might thereof to drive thee round about this Gallery before me, and if it would please the Queens Majesty and her Council to hear thee and me, I would make thee for shame shrink into the door.

Morg. Yea, would you so?

Phil. Thou hast the Spirit of Illusion and Sophistry, which is not able to countervail the Spirit of Truth. Thou art but an ass in the true understanding of things appertaining unto God. I call thee ass, not in respect of malice, but in that thou kickest against the truth, and art void of all Godly understanding, not able to answer to that thou braggest in.

Morg. Why, have I not answered thee in all things thou hast said unto me? I take them to record.

Phil. Ask of my fellow whether I be a thief.

Cefins. Hark, he maketh us all thieves.

Phil. You know that phrase of the proverb, that like will hold with like. And I am sure you will not judge with me, against him, speak I never so true; and in this sense I speak it. The strongest answer that he hath made against me is, that you will burn me.

Morg. Why, we do not burn you, it is the Temporal Men that burn you, and not we.

Phil. Thus you would (as Pilate did) wash your hands of all your wicked doings. But I pray you, invocate secular brachium; call upon the secular power to be Executors of your unrighteous judgments. And have you not

Anno not a title in your Law, De hereticis comburendis, to burn Hereticks?

1555. Harp. I have heard you both a good while reason together, and I never heard of stout an Heretick as you are, M. Philpot.

Cofins. Neither I in all my Life.

Phil. You are not able to prove me an Heretick, by one jot of Gods Word.

Mr. Harpfield and Cofins depart. Harpfield. You have the Spirit of Arrogancy, I will reason with you no more. And so he was departing, and Master Cofins also. And with that the Bishop and Christoferson came in again, and said.

Boner. Master Doctor, how doth this Man and you agree?

Morgan. My Lord, I do ask him where his Church was fifty years ago.

Boner. Are you not half agreed? as one Man said once to two parties, in whom the one was equally disagreeing from the other.

Christof. My Lord, it is but folly to reason with him any further, your Lordship shall but lose time, for he is incurable.

Boner. Well then, let his Keeper have him away. And with that Doctor Chedsey led me a way by the which we could not pass, and therefore came back again through the Bishops Chamber, where all these Doctors were clustered together; and as I was passing by, the Bishop took me by the gown and said, wote you what what Mr. Christoferson telleth me? I pray you Master Christoferson rehearse the Sentence in Latin; and so he did. The contents whereof were, That an Heretick would not be won. Christof. S. Paul fidei, Hereticum hominem post unam atque alteram admonitionem devota; Fly an Heretick after once or twice warning.

Christian truth called Heretic. All the Doctors. Yea, my Lord, it is best you do, and trouble your Lordship no more with him.

Phil. You must first prove me justly to be an Heretick, before you use the judgment of S. Paul against me: for he speaketh of such as hold opinion against the manifest Word, the which you cannot prove by me: and because you want in your proof, and be able to prove nothing against me, therefore you go about falsely to suppose me to be an Heretick, for the safeguard of your own counterfeit honories; but afore God, you are the Hereticks which so stoutly and stubbornly maintain so many things directly against Gods Word, as God in his time shall reveal. As I went out of his Chamber, the Bishop called me aside and said:

The Holy Ghost is Christ's vice upon Earth and bow. Boner. I pray thee in good sadness, what meanest thou by writing in the beginning of thy Bible, Spiritus est Vicarius Christi in terra; The Spirit is the Vicar of Christ on the Earth? wis you have some special meaning thereof.

Phil. My Lord, I have none other meaning than as I have told you already, That Christ since his ascension worketh all things in us by his Spirit, and by his Spirit doth dwell in us. I pray you my Lord let me have my Bible, with other lawful Books and Writings which you have of mine, whereof many of them be none of mine, but lent to me by my friends.

Boner. Your Bible you shall not have, but I will perhaps let you have another, and after I have perused the rest, you shall have such as I think good.

Phil. I pray your Lordship then, that you would let me have Candle-light.

Boner. To what purpose I pray you?

Phil. The Nights be long, and I would fain occupy my self about somewhat, and not spend my time idly.

Boner. You may then pray.

Phil. I cannot well say my Prayers without light.

Boner. Can you not say your Pater-noster without a Candle? I tell you Sir, you shall have some meat and drink of me, but candles you get none.

Phil. I had rather have a Candle than your meat and drink; but seeing I shall not have my request, the Lord shall be my light.

Boner. Have him down.

Ched. I will bring him to his Keeper, my Lord. Master Philpot, I wonder all these learned Men whom you have talked withal this day can nothing at all persuade you.

Phil. Why, Master Doctor, would you have me to be persuaded with nothing? or would you have me build my Faith upon sand? What do you all bid me, whereby I might by any sufficient authority to be persuaded to you?

Ched. I am sorry you will so wilfully cast away your self, whereas you might live worshipfully; do you not think other have Souls to save as well as you have?

Phil. Every Man shall receive according to his own doings. Sure I am you are deceived, and maintain a false Religion; and as for my casting away, I would my burning day were to morrow, for this delay is every day to die, and yet not to be dead.

Ched. You are not like to die yet I can tell you.

Phil. I am the more sorry thereof. But the Will of God be done of me to his Glory. Amen.

The twelfth Examination of John Philpot, on Wednesday the fourth of December before the Bishop of London, the Bishop of Worcester, and the Bishop of Bangor.

In the morning I was fet down to the wardrobe adjoining to the Chappel, and within a while after came three of the Bishops Chaplains unto me saying:

Chaplain. Master Philpot, my Lord hath sent us unto you, to desire you to come to Maf, certifying you that there is a Doctor of Divinity, a Chaplain of my Lords, a notable learned Man, called Doctor Chedsey, going to Maf: Therefore we also pray you good Master Philpot, be content to come; it is hard hereby.

Phil. I wonder my Lord would trouble you in sending you about this matter, seeing he knoweth I am a Man (by your Law) that cannot hear Maf, because I stand Excommunicate.

Bish. Chap. Your Excommunication is but upon a contumacy, and my Lord will dispence with you, if you will come.

Phil. My Lord cannot, for he is not mine Ordinary, and I will not seek any such thing at his hands. With this answer they went their way. And after Maf the Bishop called me before him into his Chappel, and there in the presence of his Register, (after he had said his mind, because I would not come to Maf) recited the Articles, which he oftentimes before had done in that behalf, with his depositions of the witnesses, of whom some were not examined.

Bon. Sir, what can you now say, why I should not proceed to give Sentence against thee as an Heretick?

Phil. Why my Lord, will you proceed to give Sentence against me before your witnesses be examined? that is plain against your own Law, as all your doings have been hitherto.

Bon. See what a fool thou art in the Law. I need not to recite the depositions of the witnesses, but if I list; for I know them well enough already.

Phil. It appeareth indeed you may do what you list.

Bon. Tell me, I say whether thou wilt answer, or no; and whether if thou wert absolved of thine Excommunication, thou wouldst come to Maf, or no?

Phil. I have answered as much as I intended to do until I be called to lawful judgment: and as concerning my Conscience I will not make you God to sit there as yet; it is Gods part only to be searcher of my Heart.

Bon. Look how foolishly he speaks. Art thou God? and yet dost thou not sit in thine own Conscience?

Phil. I sit not in mine own Conscience; but I know it, and God there only ought to sit, and no Man else.

Bon. Thou art a naughty fellow, and hast done much hurt, and hast seduced other poor fellows here in prison with thee, by thy comforting of them in their errors, and hast made them joyce and sing with thee.

Phil. Yea my Lord we shall sing, when you and such other as you are shall cry Vae, Vae, Wo, wo, except you repent.

Boner. What an arrogant fool is this? I will handle thee like an Heretick and that shortly.

Phil. I fear nothing (I thank God) you can do to me. But God shall destroy such as thou art, and that shortly, as I trust.

Boner. Have him away this is a loose indeed.

Phil. And I washad into the Wardrobe again by my keeper, and within an hour after was sent for to come before before him and the Bishops of Worcester and Banger.

Sir, I have talked with you many times, and have caused you to be talked with of many Learned Men, yea and honourable both Temporal and Spiritual, and it availeth nothing with you. I am blamed that I have brought thee afore so many, for they say, thou gloriest to have many to talk withal. Well, now it lyeth upon thee to look to thy self; for thy time draweth near to an end, if thou dost not become conformable. And at this present we are sent from the Synod to offer you this Grace, that if you will come to the Unity of the Church of Rome with us, and acknowledge the Real Presence of Christ in the Sacrament of the Altar with us, all that is past shall be forgiven, and you received to favour.

Talk betwixt
John Poulet and the B. of
and Banger.

Worc. M. Philpot, we are sent (as you here have heard by my Lord of London) from the Synod, to offer you mercy, if you will receive it, and of good-will I bear you I wish you to take it, whilst it is offered, and be not a singular Man against a whole Multitude of Learned Men, which now in fasting and Prayer are gathered together to devise things to do you good. There have many very Learned Men talked with you, why should you think your self better Learned than them all? Be not of such arrogance, but have humility, and remember there is no Salvation but in the Church.

Banger. Me thinketh my Lord hath said wonderfully well unto you, that you should not think your self so well Learned, but other Men are as well Learned as you, neither of so good wit, but other be as wise as you, neither of so good Memory, but other have as good Memories as you. Therefore mistrust your own judgment, and come home to us again. I wis I never liked your Religion, because it was set forth by violence and tyranny, and that is no Token of True Religion. And I was the same manner of Man then that I am now, and a great many more. Marry, for fear we held our peace, and bear with that time. Wherefore M. Philpot, I would you did well, for I love you; and therefore be content to come home with us again into the Catholic Church of Rome.

If violence and tyranny be no token of true Religion: what may Men judge then of the Pope's Religion? I pray you?

Phil. Where, my Lord (as I may begin first to answer you) you say, that Religion is to be nullified, which is set forth by tyranny, I pray God you give not Men occasion to think the same by yours at this day, which had none other Argument to stand by, but violence. If you can shew me any good sufficient ground, whereby to ground my Confidence, that the Church of Rome is the true Catholic Church, whereunto you call me, I will gladly be of the same; otherwife I cannot so soon change the Religion I have learned these many years.

The Pope's Religion hath no other ground to stand upon but violence.
Where this Religion was over hundred years ago.

Banger. Where was your Religion to be found (I pray you) an hundred years ago, that any Man knew of it?

Phil. It was in Germany, and in divers other places apparent.

Worc. Jesus! will you be still so singular a Man? What is Germany to the whole World?

Quere: Is it at Latine.

Bon. My Lords, I pray you give me leave to tell you; that I sent for him to hear Mass, this Morning. And wot you what excuse he made unto me, forsooth that he was accused, alledging his own shame. He playeth as the varlet Latimer did at Cambridge: when the Vicechancellor sent for him (who intended to have Excommunicated him for some of his Heresies) and the Chancellor was coming to his Chamber, he hearing that the Chancellor was coming, made answer that he was sick of the Plague, and so deluded the Chancellor; even so this Man saith, he was accused, because he will not come to Mass.

Worc. My Lord (I am sure) here doth behave himself like a Father unto you; therefore be admonished by him, and by us, that come now friendly unto you, and follow your Fathers before you.

Phil. It is forbidden us of God by the Prophet Ezekiel, to follow our Fathers, or to walk in their Commandments. Worc. It is written also in another place, Interroga Patres, Ask of your Fathers.

Fathers may be asked, but not followed further than they follow the Scriptures.

Phil. We ought to ask indeed our Fathers that have more experience and knowledge than we, of Gods will, but no more to allow them, then we perceive they agree with the Scripture.

Worc. You will be a contentious Man, I see well; and S. Paul saith, that neither we, nor the Church of God have any such custom.

Phil. I am not contentious but for the verity of my Faith, in the which I ought to contend with all such as do impugn the same without any just objection.

Anno 1555.

Worc. Let us rise, my Lord, for I see we shall do no good.

Boner. Nay, I pray you tarry and hear the Articles I lay to his charge. And after he had recited them, they arose, and after standing, they reasoned with me a while.

Worc. M. Philpot, I am very sorry that you will be so singular. I never talked with any yet in my Diocess, but after once Communication had with me, they have been contented to revoke their errors, and to teach the people how they were deceived, and so do much good, as you may if you list. For as I understand you were Archdeacon of Winchester (which is the eye of the Bishop and you may do much good in that Country if you would for sake your errors, and come to the Catholic Church.

Phil. Wherewithal you do four perfwaded them to your will, I see not. Error, that I know, I hold none; of the Catholic Church I am sure I am.

Worc. The Catholic Church doth acknowledge a real presence of Christ in the Sacrament, and so will not you.

Phil. That is not for I acknowledge a very essential presence in the * duly using of the Sacrament.

Worc. What, a Real Presence?

Phil. Yea a Real Presence by the Spirit of God in the right Administration.

Worc. That is well said: and do you agree with the Catholic Church also?

Phil. I do agree with the true Catholic Church.

Worc. My Lord of London, this Man speaketh reasonably now.

Bon. You do agree in generalities, but when it shall come to the particularities, you will far disagree.

Worc. Well, keep your self here, and you shall have other Learned Bishops to commune further with you, as my Lord of Durham, and my Lord of Chichester. Whom I hear say you do like well.

Phil. I do like them as I do all other that speak the truth. I have once already spoken with them, and they found no fault with me.

Worc. Pray in the mean season for Grace to God.

Phil. Prayer is the comfortable Exercise I feel in my trouble, and my Confidence is quiet, and I have the peace of mind, which cannot be the fruits of Heresie.

Worc. We will bid you farewell for this time.

Phil. After Dinner they called for me again, and demanded of me whether I meant as I spake before dinner, and would not go from it. To whom I answered, that I would not go from that I had said.

After Dinner M. Phil-pot called again.

Worc. You said at my departing from you before Dinner, that if we did burn you, we should burn a Catholic Man: will you be a Catholic Man? and stand to the Catholic Church.

Phil. I will stand to the true Catholic Church.

Worc. Will you stand to the Catholic Church of Jack Church, Rome?

To stand to the Catholic Church, is not enough with these Men, except you be in the Church of Rome.

Phil. If you can prove the same to be the Catholic Church, I will be one thereof.

Worc. Did not Christ say unto Peter, and to all his successors of Rome, Pasce oves meas, pasce agnos meas? Feed my Sheep, Feed my Lambs? Which doth signifie that he gave him a more authority than the rest.

Phil. That saying pertaineth nothing to the Authority of Peter, above others, but declareth what Christ requirith of his beloved Apostles, that they should with all diligence Preach to the Flock of Christ the way of Salvation, and that doth the iteration of feeding, spoken to Peter, only signifie. But the Bishop of Rome little regardeth the spiritual feeding, and therefore he hath imagined an easier way to make himself Lord of the whole World, yea and of Gods Word too, and doth not feed Christs Flock as Peter did.

December.
The Words of Christ (Feed my Sheep) opened.
The Pope is no feeder.

Worc. How can you tell that?

Phil. Yes I have been there, and I could not learn of all his Countrien, that ever he Preacheth.

Worc. Though he Preacheth not one way, he Preacheth another, by procuring good order for the Church to be kept in.

Phil. I am sure that it will be his Damnation before God, that Anno 1555. that he leaveth that he is commanded of Christ, and setteth forth his own Decrees to deface the Gospel.

Worc. It is the evil living that you have seen at Rome, that causeth you to have this ill judgment of the Church of Rome. I cannot now tarry with you to reason further of the matter.

How say you to the real presence of the Sacrament, will you stand to that?

Phil. I do acknowledge (as I have said) a real presence of the Sacrament, in the due Administration thereof, to the worthy receivers by the Spirit of God.

Worc. You add now a great many more words than you did before: and yet you say more of the Sacrament, than a great many will do.

Thus they departed, and after them came into me D. Chedsey, and D. Wright Archdeacon of Oxford with a great many more.

Ched. M. Philpot, here is M. Archdeacon of Oxford come to you, to give you good Counsel, I pray hear him.

Phil. I will refuse to hear none that will Counsel me any good; and if any can bring any matter better than I have, I will stick thereto.

Wright. I would with you M. Philpot to agree with the Catholick Church and not to stand in your own conceit: you see a great many of learned Men against you.

Phil. I am (M. Doctor) of the unfeigned Catholick Church, and will live and die therein: and if you can prove your Church to be the true Catholick Church, I will be one of the same.

Wright. I came not to dispute with you, but to exhort you. Here be better learned than I that can inform you better than I.

Ched. What proof would you have? I will prove unto you, our Church to have his being and Foundation by the Scriptures, by the Apostles, and by the Primitive Church, confirmed with the Blood of Martyrs, and with the Testimony of all Confessors.

Phil. Give me your hand, M. Doctor, prove that, and have with you.

Ched. If I had my Books here, I could soon prove it. I will go fetch some; and with that he went and fet his Book of Annotations, saying, I cannot bring my Books well, therefore I have brought my Book of Annotations, and turned there to a common place of the Sacrament, asking me whether the Catholick Church did allow the presence of Christs Body in the Sacrament, or not? hear say you do confess a real presence; but I will be hanged if you will abide by it: You will deny it by and by.

Philpot. That I have said, I cannot deny; neither intend, whatsoever you say.

Ched. If there be a real presence in the Sacrament, then evil Men receive Christ, which thing you will not grant, I am sure.

Phil. I deny the Argument, for I do not grant in the Sacrament, by Transubstantiation, any real presence, as you falsely imagine, but in the due Administration to the worthy receivers.

Ched. I will prove that the Evil and Wicked Men eat the Body of Christ, as well as the good Men, by S. Austin here.

Phil. And in the beginning of his Text Saint Austin seemeth to approve his assertion; but I had him read out to the end, and there Saint Austin declareth most evidently that it was quodammodo, after a certain manner the evil Men received the Body of Christ, which is sacramentally only in the outer sign, and not really, or indeed, as the good doth. And thus all the Doctors that you seem to bring in for your purpose, be quite against you, if ye did rightly weigh them.

Ched. By God you are a subtil fellow. See how he would write S. Augustines words.

Phil. See who of us writeth Saint Austin more, you or I, which take his meaning by his own express words. And seeing you charge me of subtilty, who subtilty is this of you, to say, that you will prove our matter of the Church, even from the beginning, promising to shew your Books therein, and when it cometh to the shewing, you are able to shew none, and for want of proof slip into a by matter, and yet faint in the proof thereof: Alas God you are bare art in your Religion.

Ched. You shall be constrained to come to us at length, whether you will or no.

Phil. Hold that Argument fast; for it is the best you have, for you have nothing but violence.

The thirteenth Examination of M. Philpot, before the Archbishop of York, and divers other Bishops.

The Thursday after, I was called in the morning before the Archbishop of York, the Bishop of Chichester, the Bishop of Bath, and the Bishop of London. The Bishop of Chichester being first come began to talk with me.

Chich. I am come of good will to talk with you, to instruct you what I can, to come to the Catholick Church, and to will you to instruct your own judgment, and to learn first to have humility, and by the same to learn of others that be better learned than you, as they did learn of such as were their betters before them.

Philpot. We must all be taught of God, and I will with all humility learn of them that will inform me by Gods Word, what I have to do: I confess I have but little learning in respect of you, that both of your years and great exercise do excel therein: but Faith consisteth not only in learning, but in simplicity of believing that which Gods Word teacheth. Therefore I will be glad to hear both of your Lordship, and of any other (that God hath revealed unto by his word) the true Doctrine thereof, and to thank you, that it doth please you to take pains herein.

Chich. You take the first alledged amiss, as though all Men should be taught by inspiration, and not by learning. How do we believe the Gospel, but by the authority of the Church, and because the same hath allowed it?

Phil. S. Paul saith, He learned not the Gospel by Men, neither of Men, but by the Revelation of Jesus Christ. Which is a plain and sufficient proof that the Gospel taketh not his Authority of Man, but of God only.

Chich. Saint Paul speaketh but of his own knowledge how he came thereto.

Phil. Nay he speaketh of the Gospel generally, Which cometh not from Man but from God; and that the Church must only teach that which cometh from God, and not Mans precepts.

Chich. Doth not S. Augustine say, I would not believe the Gospel if the Authority of the Church did not move me thereto.

Phil. I grant, that the Authority of the Church doth move the unbelievers to believe; but yet the Church giveth not the Word his Authority; for the Word hath his Authority only from God, and not of Men. Men be but the disposers thereof. For first, the Word hath his being before the Church, and the Word is the Foundation of the Church, and first is the Foundation sure, before the building thereon can be steadfast.

Chich. I perceive you mistake me, I speak of the knowledge of the Gospel, and not of the Authority; for by the Church, we have all knowledge of the Gospel.

Phil. I confess that, for Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word. And I acknowledge that God appointeth an ordinary means for Men to come unto the knowledge now, and not miraculously, as he hath done in times past; yet we that be taught by Men, must take heed that we learn nothing else but that which was taught in the primitive Church by Revelation. Here came in the Bishop of York and the Bishop of Bath, and after they had saluted one another, and communed a while together, the Archbishop of York called me unto them, saying,

York. Sir, we hearing that you are out of the way, are come of charity to inform you, and to bring you into the true Faith, and to the Catholick Church again; willing you first to have humility, and to be humble and willing to learn of your betters, for else we can do no good with you. And God saith by his Prophet; On whom shall I rest, but on the humble and meek, and such as tremble at my Word? Now if you will so be we will be glad to travel with you.

Phil. I know that humility is the door whereby we enter unto Christ; and I thank his goodness, I have entered in at the same unto him, and with all humility will hear whatsoever truth you shall speak unto me.

York. What be the matters you stand on, and require to be satisfied in?

The 13. Examination of M. Philpot before the Archbishop of York and other Bishops.

Faith cometh not by learning, but by believing.

The authority of the Church.

The place of S. Augustin, I would not believe the Word if the Church did not move me &c. The Word hath his Authority only from God, and not of the Church. The Word is the Foundation of the Church, and not the Church of the Word.

D. Chedsey saith in his proof.

Phil. My Lord, if it shall please your Grace, we were entered into a good matter before you came, of the Church, and how we should know the truth but by the Church.

Tork. Indeed that is the head we need to begin at, for the Church being truly known we shall sooner agree in the particular things.

Phil. If your Lordships can prove the Church of Rome to be the true Catholic Church, it shall do much to persuade me toward that you would have me incline unto.

Tork. Why, let us go to the definition of the Church. What is it?

Phil. It is a Congregation of people dispersed thorough the World, agreeing together in the Word of God, using the Sacraments and all other things according to the same.

Tork. Your definition is of many words to no purpose.

Phil. I do not precisely define the Church, but declare unto you what I think the Church is.

Tork. Is the Church visible or invisible?

Phil. It is both visible and invisible. The invisible Church is of the Elect of God only; the visible consists both of Good and Bad, using all things in Faith, according to Gods Word.

Tork. The Church is an universal Congregation of Faithful people in Christ thorough the World, which this word Catholic doth well express; for what is Catholic else? doth it not signify universal?

Phil. The Church is defined by S. Austin to be called Catholic in this wise, Ecclesia ideo dicitur Catholica, quia universaliter perfecta est & in nullo claudicat. The Church is called therefore Catholic, because it is thoroughly perfect, and halts in nothing.

Tork. Nay, it is called Catholic, because it is universally received of all Christian Nations for the most part.

Phil. The Church was Catholic in the Apostles time, yet was it not universally received of the World; but because their Doctrine which they had received of Christ was perfect, and appointed to be Preached and received of the whole World, therefore it is called the Catholic Church, and all persons receiving the same, to be counted the Catholic Church. And S. Austin in another place writeth, that the Catholic Church is that which believeth aright.

Tork. If you will learn, I will shew you S. Austin, writing against the Donatists, that he proveth the Catholic Church by two principal points, which is, universality and succession of Bishops in one Apostolic See from time to time. Now thus I will make mine Argument.

The Church of Rome is universal and hath her succession of Bishops from time to time.

Ergo, It is the Catholic Church.

How answer you to this Argument?

Phil. I deny the antecedent, that the Catholic Church is only known by Universality and Succession of Bishops.

Tork. I will prove it, and with that he brought forth a Book which he had noted out of the Doctors, and turned to his common places therein of the Church, and recited one or two out of S. Austin, and specially out of his Epistle written against the Donatists, where S. Austin manifestly proveth, that the Donatists were not the Catholic Church, because they have no succession of Bishops in their opinions, neither universality; and the same force hath S. Austins Argument against you.

Phil. My Lord, I have weighed the force of that Argument before now, and I perceive it maketh nothing against me, neither cometh it to your purpose; for I will stand to the Trial of S. Austin for the Approbation of the Catholic Church whereof I am. For S. Austin speaketh of Universality joined with verity, and of Faithful Successors of Peter before corruption came into the Church. And so if you can deduce your Argument for the See of Rome now, as S. Austin might do in his time, I would say it might be of some force, otherwise not.

Tork. S. Austin proveth the Catholic Church principally by Succession of Bishops, and therefore you understand not S. Austin. For what, I pray you, was the opinion of the Donatists, against whom he wrote, can you tell? What Country were they of?

Phil. They were a certain sect of Men, affirming a among other Heresies, that the dignity of the Sacraments depended upon the worthiness of the Minister; so that if the Minister were good, the Sacraments which he ministered were available, or else not.

Chick. That was their error, and they had none other but that. And he read another authority of S. Austin out of a Book which he brought, even to the same purpose that the other was.

Phil. I challenge S. Austin to be with me thoroughly in this point, and will stand to his judgment, taking one place with another.

Chick. If you will not have the Church to be certain, I pray you by whom will you be judged in matters of controversy?

Phil. I do not deny the Church to be certain; but I deny that it is necessarily tied to any place, longer then it abideth in the word; and for all Controversies the word ought to be judge.

Chick. But what if I take it one way, and you another, how then?

Phil. S. Austin sheweth a remedy for that, and willeth, Quod unus locus per plura intelligi debet; That one place of the Scripture ought to be understood by the more.

Tork. How answer you to this Argument? Rome hath known Succession of Bishops, which your Church hath not.

Ergo, That is the Catholic Church, and yours is not, because there is no such Succession can be proved in your Church.

Phil. I deny (my Lord) that Succession of Bishops is an infallible point to know the Church by; for there may be a Succession of Bishops known in a place, and yet there be no Church, as at Antioch, and Hierusalem, and in other places, where the Apostles abode as well as at Rome. But if you put to the Succession of Bishops Succession of Doctrine withal, (as S. Austin doth) I will grant it to be a good proof for the Catholic Church; but a local Succession only is nothing available.

Tork. You will have no Church then I see well?

Phil. Yes my Lords I acknowledge the Catholic Church, as I am bound by my Creed; but I cannot acknowledge a false Church for the true.

Chick. Why is there two Catholic Churches then? Phil. No. I know there is but one Catholic Church, but there have been, and be at this present, that take up on them the Name of Christ and of his Church, which be not so indeed, as it is written; There be they that call themselves Apostles, and be not so indeed, but the Synagogue of Satan and liars. And now it is with us, as it was with the two Women in Solomons time, which lay together, and the one suppressed her Child, and afterward went about to Challenge the true Mothers Child:

Chick. What a babbling is here with you now? I see you lack humility. You will go about to teach, and not to learn.

Phil. My Lords, I must desire you to bear with my hasty Speech; it is my infirmity of nature. All that I speak is to learn by, I would you did understand all my mind, that I might be satisfied by you through better Authority.

Chick. My Lord, if it please your Grace, turn the Argument upon him, which you have made, and let him shew the Succession of the Bishops of his Church, as we can do. How say you, can you shew the Succession of Bishops in your Church from time to time? I tell you, this Argument troubled Doctor Ridley so fore, that he could never answer it; yet he was a Man well learned, I dare say you will say so.

Phil. He was a Man so learned, that I was not worthy to carry his Books for Learning.

Chick. I promise you he was never able to answer that. He was a Man that I loved well, and he me; for he came unto me divers times being in Prison, and conferred with me.

Phil. I wonder, my Lord, you should make this Argument which you would turn upon me, for the trial of my Church whereof I am, or that you would make B. Ridley so ignorant that he was not able to answer it, since it is of no force. For behold, first I denied you, that local succession of Bishops in one place is a necessary point alone to prove the Catholic Church by, and that which I have denied you cannot prove : and is it then reason that you should put me to the trial of that, which by you is unproved, and of no force to conclude against me ?

Chich. I fee, my Lords, we do but loose our labours to reason with him; he taketh himself better learned than we.

Phil. I take upon me the name of no learning. I boast of no knowledge, but of Faith and of Christ, and that I am bound undoubtedly to know, as I am sure I do.

Chich. These Hereticks take upon them to be sure of all things they stand in. You should say rather with humility, I trust I know Christ, then that you be sure thereof.

Phil. Let him doubt of his Faith that listeth; God giveth me always grace to believe that I am sure of true Faith and favour in Christ.

Bathe. How will you be able to answer Hereticks, but by the determination of the known Catholick Church ?

Phil. I am able to answer all Hereticks by the Word of God, and convince them by the same.

Chich. How arrogantly is that spoken ? I dare not say so.

Phil. My Lord, I pray you bear with me; for I am bold on the Truths side, and I speak somewhat by experience that I have had with Hereticks; and I know the Arians be the subtillest that ever were; and yet I have manifest Scriptures to bear them down withal.

Chich. I perceive now you are the same manner of man I have heard of, which will not be satisfied by learning.

Phil. Alas, my Lord, why do you say so ? I do desire most humbly to be taught, if there be any better way that I should learn, and hitherto you have shewed me no better, therefore I pray your Lordship not to misjudge without a cause.

Bathe. If you be the true Catholick Church, then will you hold with the Real Presence of Christ in the Sacrament, which the true Church have ever maintained.

Phil. And I, my Lord, with the true Church do hold the same in the due ministratiō of the Sacrament : but I desire you, my Lord, there may be made a better conclusion in our first matter, before we enter into any other; for if the Church be proved, we shall soon agree in the rest.

In the mean while my Lord of York was turning his Book for more places to help forth his cause.

York. I have found at length a very notable place, which I have looked for all this while, of S. Augustine, De simplicitate credendi.

Chich. It is but folly, my Lord, that your Grace do read him any more places, for he esteemeth them not.

Phil. I esteem them, inasmuch as they be of force, as your Lordship doth hear me deny no Doctors you bring, but only require the true application of them, according to the writers meaning, and as by his own words may be proved.

York. I will read him the place, and so make an end. After he had read the Sentence, he said, that by four special points here S. Augustine proveth the Catholick Church. The first is, By the consent of all Nations, the second, by the Apostolick See, the third, by Universality, and the fourth, by this word Catholick.

Chich. That is a notable place indeed; if it please your Grace.

Phil. I pray you my Lord, of what Church doth S. Augustine write the same, of Rome, or not ?

York. Yea, he writeth it of the Church of Rome.

Phil. I will lay with your Lordship as much as I can make, it is not so; and let the Book be fen.

Bathe. What art thou able to lay, thou hast nothing ?

York. Doth he not make mention here of the Apostolick See, whereby he meaneth Rome ?

Phil. That is very freightly interpreted, my Lord, as though the Apostolick See had been no where else but at Rome. But let it be Rome, and yet you shall never verifie the same, unless all the other conditions do go therewith, as S. Augustine doth proceed withal, whereof none, except the Apostolick See can now be verified of the Church of Rome. For the Faith which that See now maintaineth hath not the consent of all Nations, neither hath had. Besides that, it cannot have the name of Catholick, because it differeth from the Catholick Churches which the Apostles planted, almost in all things.

York. Nay, he goeth about here to prove the Catholick Church by Universality; and how can you shew your Church to be Universal fifty or an hundred years ago ?

Phil. That is not material, neither any thing against S. Augustine : for my Church (whereof I am) were to be accounted Universal, though it were but in ten persons, because it agreeth with the same that the Apostles did universally plant.

York. I perceive you are an obstinate man in your Opinion, and will not be taught; wherefore it is but lost labour to talk with you any longer, you are a Member to be cut off.

Chich. I have heard of you before, how you troubled the good Bishop of Winchester, and now I see in you that I have heard.

Phil. I trust you see no evil in me by this; I desire of you a sure ground to build my Faith on, and if you shew me none, I pray you speak not ill of him that meaneth well.

Chich. Thou art as impudent a Fellow as I have commined withal.

Phil. That is spoken uncharitably, my Lord, to blaspheme him whom you cannot justly reprove.

Chich. Why? thou art not God: Blasphemy is counted a rebuke to Godward, and not to man.

Phil. Yes, it may be as well verified of an infamy laid to man, speaking in Gods cause, as you now do lay unto me, for speaking freely the Truth afore God, to maintain your vain Religion. You are void of all good ground. I perceive you are blind Guides, and leaders of the blind: and therefore (as I am bound to tell you) very Hypocrites, tyrannously persecuting the Truth, which otherwise by just order you are by no means able to convince. Your own Doctors, and Testimonies which you bring, be evidently against you, and yet you will not see the Truth.

Chich. Have we this thank for our good will, coming to instruct thee ?

Phil. My Lords, you must bear with me, since I speak in Christs cause; and because his glory is defaced, and his people cruelly and wrongfully slain by you, because they will not consent to the dishonor of God, and to hypocrite with you; if I told you not your fault, it would be required at my hands in the day of Judgment. Therefore know you, ye Hypocrites indeed, that it is the Spirit of God that telleth you your sin, and not I; I pass not, I thank God, of all your cruelty. God forgive you, and give you grace to repent : and so they departed.

Veritas odii in parit. The free heart of John Philpot in telling truth.

Another calling of Mr. Philpot before the Bishop.

Concernin these four points answered sufficiently before.

Another talk the same day.

The same day at night before Supper, the Bishop sent for me into his Chappel, in the presence of the Archdeacon Harpfield, Dr. Chedsey, and other his Chaplains, and his Servants; at what time he said :

Lord. Mr. Philpot, I have by sundry means gone about to do you good, and I marvel you do so little consider it. By my truth, I cannot tell what to say to you : tell me directly whether you will be a conformable man; or no; and whereupon you chiefly stand.

Phil. I have told your Lordship often times plain enough, whereon I stand chiefly, requiring a sure Probation of the Church whereunto you call me.

Harpf. S. Augustine writing against the Donatists, declareth four special notes to know the Church by; the consent of many Nations, the Faith of the Sacraments confirmed by Antiquity, Succession of Bishops, and Universality.

Lord. I pray you Mr. Archdeacon, fetch the Book hither; it is a notable place, let him see it. And the Book was brought, and the Bishop read it, demanding how I could answer the same.

Phil. My Lord, I like S. Augustines four points for the trial of the Catholick Church, whereof I am: for it can abide every point thereof together, which yours cannot do.

Harpf. Have not we Succession of Bishops in the See and Church of Rome? Wherefore then do you deny our Church to be the Catholick Church ?

Phil. S. Augustine doth not put Succession of Bishops only to be sufficient, but headeth the use of the Sacraments according to Antiquity and Doctrine universally taught & received of most Nations from the beginning of the the Primitive Church, the which your Church is far from. But my Church can avouch all these better than yours; therefore by S. Augustinus judgment, which you here bring, mine is the Catholick Church, and not yours.

Harpl. Ched. It is but folly (my Lord) for you to reason with him, for he is irrecoverable.

Phil. That is a good shift for you to run unto, when you be confounded in your own sayings, and have nothing else to say; you are evidently deceived, and yet will not see it when it is laid to your face.

THUS have I at large set forth as many of the said John Philpot his Examinations and privy Conferences as are yet come to light, being faithfully written with his own hand. And although he was divers other times after this examined, both openly in the Confistory at Pauls, and also secretly in the Bishops House; yet what was there said is not yet sufficiently known, either because Mr. Philpot was not himself suffered to write, or else for that his writings are by some kept close, and not brought forth, otherwise then as the Bishops Register hath noted, whose handling of such matters because it is (either for fear or favour of his Lord and Master) very slender, little light of any true meaning can be gathered, especially in the behalf of the Answerer; howbeit, such as it is, such thought I good to put forth; requiring the Reader to judge hereof according to his Answers in his former Examinations.

The last Examinations of Mr. Philpot in open Judgment, with his final Condemnation by Bishop Boner in the Confistory at Pauls.

THE Bishop having sufficiently taken his pleasure with Mr. Philpot in his private talks, and seeing his zealous, learned, and immutable constancy, thought it now high time to rid his hands of him, and therefore on the thirtieth and fourteenth days of December, sitting judicially in the Confistory at Pauls, he caused him to be brought thither before him and others, as it seemeth, more for orders sake, than for any good affection to justice and right judgment. The effect as well of which their two sundry proceedings, as also of one other had the eleventh day of the same Month in his Chappel, appear in a manner to be all one. The Bishop therefore first speaking to Mr. Philpot, said;

Lord. Mr. Philpot, amongst other things that were laid and objected unto you, these three things ye were especially charged and burdened withal.

The first is, That you being fallen from the unity of Christ's Catholick Church, do refuse and will not come to be reconciled thereunto.

The second is, That you have blasphemously spoken against the Sacrifice of the Mass, calling it Idolatry.

And the third is, That you have spoken against the Sacrament of the Altar, denying the Real Presence of Christ's Body and Blood to be in the same.

And according to the will and pleasure of the Synod Legative, ye have been oft by me invited and required to go from your said Errors and Heresies, and to return to the unity of the Catholick Church, which if ye will now willingly do, ye shall be mercifully and gladly received, charitably used, and have all the favour I can shew you. And now to tell you true, it is assigned and appointed me to give Sentence against you, if you stand hard, and will not return. Wherefore if ye so refuse, I do ask of you, whether you have any cause that you can shew, why I should not now give Sentence against you?

Phil. Under Protestation, not to go from my Appeal that I have made, and also not to consent to you as my competent Judge, I say, touching your first objection concerning the Catholick Church, I neither was nor am out of the same. And as touching the Sacrifice of the Mass, and the Sacrament of the Altar, I never spake against the same. And as concerning the pleasure of the Synod, I say, that these twenty years I have been brought up in the Faith of the true Catholick Church, which is contrary to your Church, whereunto you would have me to come; and in that time I have been many times sworn (as well in the reign of King Henry 8. as in the reign of good K. Edward his Son) against the usurped Power of the Rof Rome, which Oath I think that I am bound in my Conscience to keep. Quia tenor reddere Domino juramentum. But if you, or any of the Synod, can by Gods word perfwade me that my said Oath was unlawful, and that I am bound by Gods Law to come to your Church, Faith, and Religion, whereof you be now, I will gladly yield, agree, and be conformable unto you, otherwise not.

Boner then, not able with all his learned Doctors, to accomplish this his offered condition, fell to perfwading all his Doctors out of him, as well by his accustomed vain promises, as also by his bloody threatnings, to return to their Church: to the which he answered, Phil. You, and all other of your sort, are Hypocrites, and I would all the world did know your Hypocrisy, your Tyranny, Ignorance, and Idolatry.

Upon these words, the Bishop did for that time dismiss him, commanding that on Monday the 16 day of the same Month, between the hours of one and three in the Afternoon, he should again be brought thither, there to have the Definitive Sentence of Condemnation pronounced against him, if he remained then in his former constancy.

The last Examination of Mr. John Philpot.

AT which day and time, Mr. Philpot being there presented before the Bishops of London, Bathe, Worcester, and Litchfield, Boner Bishop of London began to talk in this manner.

Lord. My Lords, Stokeley, my Predecessor, when he went to give Sentence against an Heretic, used to make this Prayer.

Deus qui errantibus, ut in viam possint redire, iustitiae veritatem, tunc lumen ostendis, da cunctis qui Christianam professionem censentur, & illa respuere que basic inimica sunt, nomini, & ea que sint apud seclari per Christum Dominum nostrum, Amen. Which I will follow. And so he read it with a loud voice in Latin. To which Mr. Philpot said:

Phil. I would ye would speak in English, that all men might hear and understand you; for Paul willeth that all things, spoken in the Congregation to edifie, should be spoken in a Tongue that all men might understand.

Whereupon the Bishop did read it in English: and when he came to these words, To refuse those things which are foes to his Name; Philpot said, Phil. Then they all must turn away from you; for you are Enemies to that Name (meaning Christ's Name) and God save us from such Hypocrites as would have things in a Tongue that men cannot understand.

Lord. Whom do you mean?

Phil. You and all other that be of your Generation and Sect. And I am sorry to see you fit in the place that you now sit in, pretending to execute Justice, and to do nothing less but deceive all men in this Realm.

And then turning himself unto the People, he further said, Oh all you Gentlemen, beware of these men (meaning the Bishops) and all their doings, which be contrary unto the Primitive Church. And I would know of you, my Lord, by what Authority you proceed against me.

Lord. Because I am Bishop of London.

Phil. Well, then ye are not my Bishop, nor have I offended in your Diocese: and moreover, I have appealed from you, and therefore by your own Law you ought not to proceed against me, especially being brought hither from another place by violence.

Lord. Why, who sent you hither to me?

Phil. That did Dr. Story and Dr. Cook, with other the King and Queens Commissioners; and my Lord, is it not enough for you to worry your own Sheep, but ye must also meddle with other mens Sheep?

Then the Bishop delivered to Philpot two Books, one of the Civil Law, and the other of the Canon, out of the which he would have proved that he had Authority to proceed against him in such sort as he did. Mr. Philpot then perusing the same, and seeing the small and slender proof that was there alledged, said unto the Bishop:

Phil. I perceive your Law and Divinity is all one; for you have knowledge in neither of them; and I would ye did know your own ignorance: but ye dance in a Net, and think that no man doth see you. Hereupon they had much talk, but what it was, is not yet known. At last Boner spake unto him, and said:

Lord. Philpot, as concerning your Objections against my

B. Bener noted to be ignorant in the Law.

Phil. My Lord, it appeareth by your Interpretation of the Law, that ye have no knowledge therein; and that ye do not understand the Law; for if ye did, ye would not bring in that Text.

Hereupon the Bishop recited a Law of the Romans, That it was not lawful for a Jew to keep a Christian man in captivity, and to use him as a slave, laying then to the said Philpots charge, that he did not understand the Law, but did like a Jew. Whereunto Philpot answered:

Phil. No, I am no Jew, but you my Lord are a Jew. For you profess Christ, and maintain Antichrist, you profess the Gospel, and maintain Superstition, and ye be able to charge me with nothing.

Lord and other Bish. With what can you charge us?

Phil. You are Enemies to all Truth, and all your doings be naught, full of Idolatry, saving the Article of the Trinity.

Whilst they were thus debating the matter, there came thither, Sir William Garret Knight, then Maior of London, Sir Martin Bowes Knight, and Tho. Leigh then Sheriff of the same City, and fare down with the said Bishops in the said Consistory, where and what time Bishop Bener spake these words in effect as followeth.

Lord. Philpot, before the coming of my Lord Maior, because I would not enter with you into the matter wherewith I have heretofore, and now intend to charge you withal, until his coming, I did rehearse unto you a Prayer both in English and in Latin, which Bp. Stokesley, my Predecessor, used when he intended to proceed to give Sentence against an Heretic.

And here he did again read the said Prayer both in English, and also in Latin: which being ended, he spake again unto him, and said:

Lord. Philpot, amongst other, I have to charge you specially with three things.

1. First, Where you have fallen from the unity of Christs Catholick Church, you have thereupon been invited and required, not only by me, but also by many and divers other Catholick Bishops, and other learned men, to return and come again to the same: and also you have been offered by me, that if you would so return, and confess your errors and heresies, you should be mercifully received, & have so much favour as I could shew unto you.

2. The second is, That you have blasphemously spoken against the Sacrifice of the Mass, calling it Idolatry and Abomination.

3. And thirdly, That you have spoken and holden against the Sacrament of the Altar, denying the Real Presence of Christs Body and Blood to be in the same.

This being spoken, the Bishop recited unto him a certain Exhortation in English, the tenor and form whereof is this.

Bishop Beners Exhortation.

MR. Philpot, this is to be told you, that if you, not being yet reconciled to the unity of the Catholick Church, from whence ye did fall in the time of the late Schism here in this Realm of England, against the See Apostolick of Rome, will now heartily and obediently be reconciled to the unity of the same Catholick Church, professing and promising to observe and keep to the best of your power the Faith and Christian Religion observed and kept of all faithful people of the same: and moreover, if ye which heretofore, especially in the year of our Lord 1553. 1554. 1555. or in one of them have offended and trespassed grievously against the Sacrifice of the Mass, calling it Idolatry and Abominable, and likewise have offended and trespassed against the Sacrament of the Altar, denying the Real Presence of Christs Body and Blood to be there in the Sacrament of the Altar, affirming also withal, material Bread and material Wine to be in the Sacrament of the Altar, and not the Substance of the Body and Blood of Christ; if ye, I say, will be reconciled as is aforesaid, and will for sake your heresies and errors before touched, being heretical and damnable, and will also allow the Sacrament of the Mass, ye shall be mercifully received, and obediently used with as-much favour as may be; if not, ye shall be reputed, taken, and judged for an Heretic (as ye be indeed.) Now do you chuse what ye will do; you are counselled herein friendly and favourably.

Isa est quod Edm. Bener Episc. Lond.

The Bishops Exhortation thus ended, Mr. Philpot turned himself unto the Lord Maior, and said;

Phil. To you my Lord Maior bearing the Sword, I am glad that it is my chance now to stand before that Authority that hath defended the Gospel and the Truth of Gods Word; but I am sorry to see, that that Authority, which representeth the King and Queens persons, should now be changed, and be at the commandment of Antichrist; and ye (speaking to the Bishops) pretend to be the followers of the Apostles of Christ, and yet be the very Antichrists and Decivers of the People; and I am glad that God hath given me power to stand here this day, and to declare and defend my Faith, which is founded on Christ.

Therefore, as touching your first Objection, I say, that I am of the Catholick Church, whereof I was never out, and that your Church (which ye pretend to be the Catholick Church) is the Church of Rome, and so the Babylonical, and not the Catholick Church; of that Church I am not.

As touching your second Objection, which is, that I should speak against the Sacrifice of the Mass, I do say, that I have not spoken against the true Sacrifice, but have spoken against your private Masses that you use in corners, which is blasphemy to the true Sacrifice; for your Sacrifice daily reiterated is a blasphemy against Christs death, and it is a lye of your own invention: and that abominable Sacrifice which yest upon the Altar, and use in your private Masses in stead of the living Sacrifice, is Idolatry, and ye shall never prove it by Gods Word; therefore ye have deceived the People with that your Sacrifice of the Mass, which ye make a Masquing.

Thirdly, where you lay to my charge, that I deny the Body and Blood of Christ to be in the Sacrament of the Altar, I cannot tell what Altar ye mean, whether it be the Altar of the Crose, or the Altar of Stone: and if ye call it the Sacrament of the Altar in respect of the Altar of Stone, then I defie your Christ, for it is a rotten Christ.

And as touching your Transubstantiation, I utterly deny it, for it was brought up first by a Pope. Now as concerning your offer made from the Synod, which is touching gathered in Antichrists name; prove me that the be of the Catholick Church (which ye shall never do) and I will follow you, and do as you would have me to do. But ye are Idolaters, and daily do commit Idolatry. Ye be also Traitors; for in your Pulpits ye rail upon good Kings, as King Henry, and King Edward his Son, which have stood against the usurped Power of the Bishop of Rome; against whom also I have taken an Oath, which if ye can shew me by Gods Law that I have taken un-justly, I will then yield unto you: but I pray God turn the King and Queens heart from your Synagogue and Church, for you do abuse that good Queen.

Here the Bishop of Coventry and Luthefield began to shew where the true Church was, saying;

Covent. The true Catholick Church is sit upon an high hill.

Phil. Yea, at Rome, which is the Babylonical Church.

Cov. No, in our true Catholick Church are the Apostles, Evangelists, and Martyrs; but before Martin Luther there was no Apostle, Evangelist, or Martyr of your Church.

Phil. Will ye know the cause why? Christ did prophecy that in the latter days there should come false Prophets and Hypocrites, as you be.

Cov. Your Church of Geneva, which ye call the Catholick Church, is that which Christ prophesied of.

Phil. I allow the Church of Geneva, and the Doctrine of the same, for it is una, Catholica, & Apostolica, and doth follow the Doctrine that the Apostles did preach: and the Doctrine taught and preached in K. Edwards day, was also according to the same. And are ye not ashamed to persecute me and others for your Churches sake, which is Babylonical, and contrary to the true Catholick Church?

T t 2 And

To the first Article. John Philpot is of the Catholick Church, but not of the Babylonical Church.

To the second Article. John Philpot speaketh not against the true Sacrifice, but against the Sacrifice used upon the altar, used in private Masses.

To the third Article. Philpot denyeth not the Sacrament of the be of the Catholick Church (which ye shall never do) and I will follow you, and do as you would have me to do. But ye are Idolaters, and daily do commit Idolatry. Ye be also Traitors; for in your Pulpits ye rail upon good Kings, as King Henry, and King Edward his Son, which have stood against the usurped Power of the Bishop of Rome; against whom also I have taken an Oath, which if ye can shew me by Gods Law that I have taken unjustly, I will then yield unto you: but I pray God turn the King and Queens heart from your Synagogue and Church, for you do abuse that good Queen.

D. Bener B. of Coventry speaketh. How can the Apostles be of that Church, where their Doctrine is against it?

And after this they had great conference together, as well out of the Scriptures, as also out of the Doctors. But when Boner law that by learning they were not able to convince Mr. Philpot, he thought then by his defamations to bring him out of credit; and therefore turning himself unto the Lord Maior of London, he brought forth a Knife, and a Bladder full of Powder, and said;

Lord. My Lord, this man had a roasted Pig brought unto him, and this Knife was put secretly between the skin and the Brist thereof, and so it was sent him, being in Prison. And also this Powder was sent unto him, under pretence that it was good and comfortable for him to eat or drink; which Powder was only to make Ink to write withal. For when his Keeper did perceive it, he took it and brought it unto me. Which when I did see, I thought it had been Gunpowder, and thereupon I put fire to it, but it would not burn. Then I took it for Poyson, and so gave it to a Dog, but it was not so. Then I took a little water, and it made as fair Ink as ever I did write withal. Therefore, my Lord, you may understand that a naughty Fellow this is.

Then the Bishop brought forth a certain Instrument, containing Articles and Questions, agreed upon both in Oxford and Cambridge, whereof you have mention before. Also he did exhibit two Books in print; the one was the Catechism made in King Edwards days, An. 1552. the other concerning the true Report of the Disputation in the Convocation House, mention whereof is above expressed.

Moreover he did bring forth, and laid to Mr. Philpot charge two Letters; the one touching Bartlet Green, the other containing godly exhortations and comforts; which both were written unto him by some of his godly friends; the tenour whereof we thought here also to exhibit.

You shall understand that Mr. Green came unto the Bishop of London on Sunday last, where he was courteously received; for what policy the sequel declareth. His entertainment for one day or two, was to dine at my Lords own Table, or else to have his meat from thence. During those days he lay in Dr. Chedseyes Chambers, and was examined. Albeit in very deed the Bishop earnestly and faithfully promised many right worshipful men (who were Sutors for him, but to him unknown) that he in no case should be examined; before which, Mr. Fecknam would have had him in his friendly custody, if he would have desired to have conferred with him, which he utterly refused. And in that the Bishop objected against him singularity and obliquity; his Answer therunto was thus. To avoid all suspicion thereof, although I my self am young and utterly unlearned in respect of the learned, (and yet I understand, I thank my Lord) yet let me have such Books as I shall require; and if I, by Gods Spirit, do not thereby answer all your Books and Objections contrary thereto, I will assent to you. Whereunto the Bishop and his attendants, permitting him at the first to have such Books. Who at sundry times have reasoned with him, and have found him so strong and ripe in the Scripture and godly Fathers, that sithence they have not only taken from him such liberty of Books, but all other Books, nor leaving him so much as the New Testament. Since they have baited and used him most cruelly. This Mr. Fecknam reported; saying farther, that he never heard the like young man, and so perfect. What shall become farther of him, God knoweth; but death I think, for he remaineth more and more willing to dye, as I understand. Concerning your Bill, I shall confer with others therein, knowing that the same Court is able to redress the same. And yet I think it will not be reformed, for that I know few or none that dare or will speak therein, or prefer the same, because it concerneth spiritual things. Notwithstanding, I will ascertain you thereof; committing you to the Holy Ghost, who keep you and us all, as his. Your own, &c.

I Early thanks rendered unto you my wellbeloved in Christ, for the Book ye sent me, wherein I find great consolations, and according to the Doctrine thereof, do by the faithful prepare my cheeks to the strikers, and my womanish back to the burthens of reproof; and join the strength of my God I trust to leap over the wall; for his sweetest overcoming me daily, and maketh all these Apothecary drugs of the world, even medecinal-like in my mouth. For the continuance whereof, I beseech thee (my dear Fellow-souldier) make thy faithful prayer for me, that I may with a strong and glad some Conscience finish my course, and obtain the reward, though it be no whit due to my work. I am not content that you so often gratifie me with thanks for that which is none worthy, but duty on my part, and small relief to you. But if you would love me so much, that I might supply your lacks, then would I think ye believed my offers to be such, as agreed with my heart. And for the short charges ye speak of, the means are not so pleasant, if God (whom my trust is in) will otherwise prepare; but Solomon saith, All things have here their time; Thou to day, and I to morrow, and so the end of Adams line is soon run out. The mighty God give us his grace, that during this time, his glory be not defaced through our weakness. Because you desire to know your self a worthy Souldier, if need so require, I will supply your request for the Scarf ye wrote of, that ye may present my handy-work before your Captain, that I be not forgotten in the odours of incense, which our beloved Christ offered for his own; to whom I bequeath both our Bodies and Souls.

Over and besides these Letters, the Bishops did also bring forth a Supplication made by Mr. Philpot unto the high Court of Parliament, whereof mention is made in the first of the two Letters last mentioned; the Copy whereof doth here infuse, as followeth.

To the King and Queens Majesties Highness, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons of this present Parliament assembled.

In most humble wise complaineth unto this honourable Court of Parliament John Philpot Clerk, that where there was by the Queens Highness a Parliament called in the first year of her gracious reign, and after the old custom a Convocation of the Clergy, your Suppliant then being one of the said Convocation House, and matters there rising upon the using of the Sacraments, did dispute in the same, knowing that there all men had and have free speech, and ought not to be after-troubled for any thing there spoken, and yet, that notwithstanding, not long after the said Parliament, your said Suppliant (without any act or matter) was commanded to Prison to the Kings Bench by the late Lord Chancellor, where he hath remained ever since, until now of late that my Lord the Bishop of London hath sent for your said Suppliant to examine him (being none of his Diocess) upon certain matters, wherein they would have your Orator to declare his Conscience, which the said Bishop saith he hath Authority to do, by reason of an Act of Parliament made in the first and second years of the King and Queens Majesties reigns, for the reviving of three Statutes made against them that hold any Opinion against the Catholick Faith, whereby he affirmeth, that every Ordinary may, ex officio, examine every mans Conscience: and for that your said Orator hath and dare refuse, that the said Bishop of London hath any authority over your said Orator, for that he is neither his Diocessan, nor hath published, preached, nor held any opinion against the Catholick Faith (notwithstanding the said Bishop of London detaineth him in the Cole-house in the Stocks, without either bed or any other thing to lie upon but straw) and for that your said Orator cannot appeal for his relief, from the said Bishop, to any other Judge, but the same Bishop may refuse the same by their Law, and therefore hath no succour and help, but by this high Court

Court of Parliament, for the explanation of the said Act, therefore if any please you, that it may be enacted by the King and Queens Majesties, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons of this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, that no Bishop nor Ordinary shall commit or detain in Prison any suspected person or persons for the Catholick Faith, except he or they have spoken, written, or done some manifest act against the Catholick Faith, and the same to be lawfully proved against every such person or persons, by the testimony of two lawful Witnesses, to be brought before the said person or persons so accused, before he or they shall either be committed to prison, or convicted for any such offence or offences; the said former Statute, made in the said first and second year of our said Sovereign Lord and Lady notwithstanding: whereby your said Orator shall not only be set at liberty, and divers other more remaining in Prison; but also the blood of divers of the Queens Majesties true and faithful Subjects preserved.

Of this Book of Disputation in the Convocation, read before. These Books, Letters, Supplications, and other Matters being thus read, the Bishop demanded of him, if the Book intituled, The true Report of the Disputation, &c. were of his penning, or not? Whereunto Philpot answered, That it was a good and true Book, and of his own penning and fitting forth.

The Bishops waxing now weary, and being not able by any sufficient ground, either of Gods Word, or of the true ancient Catholick Fathers, to convince and overcome him, fell by fair and flattering speech to perfwade with him; promising, that if he would revoke his Opinions, and come home again to their Romish and Babylonical Church, he should not only be pardoned that which was past, but also they would with all favour and cheerfulness of heart, receive him again as a true Member thereof. Which words when Boner saw would take no place, he demanded of Mr. Philpot (and that with a charitable affection I warrant you) whether he had any just cause, to allege why he should not condemn him as an Heretick. Well, (quoth Mr. Philpot) your idolatrous Sacrament, which you have found out, ye would fain defend, but ye cannot, nor ever shall.

In the end the Bishop, seeing his unmoveable steadfastness in the Truth, did pronounce openly the Sentence of Condemnation against him. In the reading whereof, when he came to these words, Teque etiam tanquam hereticum, obsequium, perniciem, & impenitentem, &c. Mr. Philpot said, I thank God that I am an Heretick out of your cursed Church; I am no Heretick before God. But God bless you, and give you once grace to repent your wicked doings, and let all men beware of your bloody Church.

Moreover, whilst Boner was about the midst of the Sentence, the Bishop of Bathe pulled him by the sleeve, and said, My Lord, my Lord, know of him first, whether he will recant, or no. Then Boner said, (full like himself) O let him alone; and so read forth the Sentence.

And when he had done, he delivered him to the Sheriffs, and so two Officers brought him thorow the Bishops House into Pater-noster-Row, and there his Servant met him, and when he saw him, he said, Ah dear Master.

Then Mr. Philpot said to his man, Content thy self, I shall do well enough; for thou shalt see me again.

And so the Officers thrust him away, and had his Master to Newgate; and as he went, he said to the People, Ah, good People, blessed be God for this day; and so the Officers delivered him to the Keeper. Then his man thrust to go in after his Master, and one of the Officers said unto him, Hence Fellow, what wouldst thou have? And he said, I would go speak with my Master. Mr. Philpot then turned him about, and said to him, To morrow thou shalt speak with me.

Then the under Keeper said to Mr. Philpot, Is this your man? and he said, Yea. So he did licence his man to go in with him; and Mr. Philpot and his man were turned into a little Chamber on the right hand, and there remained a little time, until Alexander the chief Keeper did come unto him; who at his entering greeted him with these words;

Art thou done well to bring thyself hither? Well, said Mr. Philpot, I must be content, for it is Gods appointment; and I shall desire you to let me have your gentle favour; for you and I have been of old acquaintance. Well, said Alexander, I will shew thee gentleness and favour, so thou wilt be ruled by me. Then said Mr. Philpot, I pray you shew me what you would have me to do.

He said, If you would recant, I will shew you any pleasure I can. Nay, said Mr. Philpot, I will never recant, whilst I have my life, that which I have spoken, for it is most certain truth, and in witness hereof I will shed it with my blood. Then Alexander said, This is the laying of the whole pack of you Hereticks. Whereupon he commanded him to be set upon the block, and as many Irons upon his legs as he could bear, for that he would not follow his wicked mind.

Then the Clerk told Alexander in his ear, that Mr. Philpot had given his man money. And Alexander said to his man, What money hath thy Master given thee?

He answered, My Master hath given me none. No, said Alexander, hath he given thee none? That will I know, for I will search thee. Do with me what you will, and search me all that you can, quoth his Servant; he hath given me a Token or two to send to his Friends, as to his Brother and Sisters. Ah, said Alexander unto Mr. Philpot, thou art a maintainer of Hereticks; Thy man should have gone to some of thine Affinity, but he shall be known well enough. Nay, said Mr. Philpot, I do send it to my Friends; there he is, let him make answer to it. But good Mr. Alexander, be so much my Friend, that these Irons may be taken off. Well, said Alexander, give me my Fees, and I will take them off; if not, thou shalt wear them still.

Then said Mr. Philpot, Sir, what is your Fee? He said, Four pound was his Fees. Ah, said Mr. Philpot, I have not so much; I am but a poor man, and I have been long in Prison. What wilt thou give me then, said Alexander? Sir (said he) I will give you twenty shillings, and that I will send my man for, else I will lay my Gown to gage; for the time is not long (I am sure) that I shall be with you; for the Bp. said unto me that I should be soon dispatched.

Then said Alexander unto him, what is that to me? and with that he departed from him, and commanded him to be had into Limbo, and so his commandment was fulfilled; but before he could be taken from the block, this Clerk would have a groat.

Then one Witterence, Steward of the House, took him on his back, and carried him down, his man knew not whether. Wherefore Mr. Philpot said to his man, go to Mr. Sheriff, and shew him how I am used, and desire Mr. Sheriff to be good unto me; and so his Servant went straight way, and took an honest man with him.

And when they came to Mr. Sheriff, (which was Mr. Macnam) and shewed him how Mr. Philpot was handled in Newgate, the Sheriff hearing this, took his Ring off from his finger, and delivered it unto that honest man which came with Mr. Philpot's man, and bad him go unto Alexander the Keeper, and commanded him to take off his Irons, and to handle him more gently, and to give his man again that which he had taken from him. And when they came again to the said Alexander, and told them messlage from the Sheriff, Alexander took the Ring, and said, Ah, I perceive that Mr. Sheriff is a bearer with him, and all such Hereticks as he is, therefore to morrow will shew it to his betters: Yet at ten of the Clock he went into Mr. Philpot, where he lay, and took off his Irons, and gave him such things as he had taken before from his Servant.

Upon Tuesday at Supper, being the seventeenth day of December, there came a Messenger from the Sheriffs, and bade Mr. Philpot make him ready, for the next day he should suffer, and be burned at a stake with fire. Mr. Philpot answered and said, I am ready; God grant me strength, and a joyful Resurrection. And so he went into his Chamber, and poured out his spirit unto the Lord God, giving him most hearty thanks that he of his mercy had made him worthy to suffer for his truth.

In the morning the Sheriffs came according to the order, about eight of the Clock, and called for him, and he most joyfully came down unto them. And there his man did meet him, and said, Ah dear Master, farewell: His Master said unto him, Serve God, and he will help thee. And so he went with the Sheriffs to the place of Execution; and when he was entering into Smithfield, the way was foul, and two Officers took him up to bear him to the Stake. Then he said merrily, What? will ye make me a Pope? I am content to go to my journeys end on foot. But first coming into Smithfield, he kneeled down there, saying these words, I will pay my vows in thee, O Smithfield.

And when he was come to the place of Suffering, he kissed the Stake, and said, Shall I disdain to suffer at this Stake, seeing my Redeemer did not refuse to suffer most vile death upon the Cross for me? And then with an obedient heart full meekly he said the Cvi. Cviij. and Cviij. Psalms: and when he had made an end of all his Prayers, he said to the Officers; What have you done for me; and every one of them declared what they had done; and he gave to every of them money.

The martyrdom of Master John Philpot Archdeacon, with the manner of his kneeling and praying at the Stake.

Then they bound him to the Stake, and set fire unto that constant Martyr: Who the eighteenth day of December, in the midst of the fiery flames, yielding his soul into the hands of Almighty God, and full like a Lamb gave up his breath, his body being consumed into ashes.

Thus hath thou (gentle Reader) the life and doings of this learned and worthy Souldier of the (Lord, John Philpot; with all his Examinations that came to our hands first penned and written with his own hand, being marvelously reserved from the light and hand of his enemies; who by all manner of means sought not only to stop him from all writing, but also to spoil and deprive him of that which he had written. For the which cause he was many times stripped and searched in the Prison of his Keeper: but yet so happily these his writings were conveyed and hid in places about him, or else his Keepers eyes so blinded, that notwithstanding all this malicious purpose of the Bishops, they are yet remaining, and come to light.

A Prayer to be said at the Stake, of all them that God shall account worthy to suffer for his sake.

The writings and examinations of Mr. John Philpot, by the Providence of Almighty God, preserved.

A godly prayer to be said at the time of martyrdom.

Merciful God and Father, to whom our Saviour Christ approached in his fear and need by reason of death, and found comfort: Gracious God and most bounteous Christ, on whom Stephen called in his extreme need, and received strength; most benign holy Spirit, which in the midst of all crosses of death didst comfort the Apostles. Paul with more consolations in Christ; then he felt sorrow; and terror; which now draw near the gates of death, deserved both in soul and body eternally, by reason of manifold, horrible, old and new transgressions, which to thine eyes (O Lord) are open and known: Ob be merciful unto me, for the bitter death and blood-shedding of thine own only Son Jesus Christ. And though thy justice doth require (in respect of my sins) that now thou shouldst not bear me, measuring me in the same measure I have measured thy Majesty, contemning thy daily calls; yet let thy mercy which is above all thy works, and wherewith the earth is filled, let thy mercy (I say) prevail towards me, through and for the mediation of Christ our Saviour. And for whose sake in that it hath pleased thee to bring me forth now as one of his witnesses, and a record-bearer of thy verity and truth taught by him, to give my life therefore (to which dignity I do acknowledge, dear God, that there was never any so unworthy and so unmeet, as not the thief that hanged with him on the Cross): I most humbly therefore pray thee that thou wouldst accordingly aid, help, and assist me with thy strength and heavenly grace, that with Christ thy Son I may find comfort, with Stephen I may see thy presence, and gracious power, with Paul, and all others, which for thy Names sake have suffered affliction and death, I may find so present with me thy gracious consolations, that I may by my death glorify thy holy Name, propagate, and raise thy verity, comfort the hearts of the heavy, confirm thy Church in thy verity, convert some that are to be converted, and so depart forth of this miserable world, where I do nothing but daily heap sin upon sin, and so enter into the fruition of thy blessed mercy; whereof now give and increase in me a lively trust, sense, and feeling, wherethrough the terrors of death, the torments of fire, the pangs of sin, the darts of Satan, and the dolours of Hell may never depress me, but may be driven away through the working of that most gracious Spirit; which now plentifully endue me withal, that through the same Spirit I may offer (as I now desire to do in Christ by him) my self wholly, soul and body, to be a lively Sacrifice, holy and acceptable in thy sight. Dear Father, whose I am, and always have been, even from my mothers womb, yea even before the world was made, to whom I commend my self, soul and body, family and friends, Country and all the whole Church; yea even my very enemies, according to thy good pleasure; beseeching thee intirely to give once more to this Realm of England the blessing of thy Word again, with godly peace, to the teaching and setting forth of the same. O dear Father, now give Letters of Mr. Philpot.

A Letter which he sent to the Christian Congregation, exhorting them to refrain from the idolatrous Service of the Papists, and to serve God after his Word.

A Letter of Mr. Philpot to the Congregation.

Hebr. 6. T is a lamentable thing to behold at this present in England the faithles departing both of men and women, from the true knowledge and use of Christs sincere Religion, which so plentifully they have been taught, and do know, their own Consciences bearing witness to the verity thereof. If that earth be cursed of God, which estoons receiving moisture and pleasant dews from Heaven, doth not bring forth fruit accordingly; how much more grievous judgement shall such persons receive, which having received from the Father of Heaven the perfect knowledge of his word by the ministry thereof, do not shew forth Gods worship after the same? If the Lord will require in the day of judgement a godly usury of all manner of Talents which he lendeth unto men and women, how much more will he require the fame of his pure Religion revealed unto us (which is of all other Talents the chiefest and most pertaining to our exercise in this life) if we hide the same in a Napkin, and set it not forth to the usury of Gods glory, and edifying of his Church by true Confession? God hath kindled the bright light of his Gospel, which in times past was suppressed, and hid under the vile ashes of mans Traditions, and hath caused the brightness thereof to shine in our hearts, to the end that the same might shine before men to the honour of his Name. It is not only given us to believe, but also to confess and declare what we believe in our outward conversation. For as Rom. 10. S. Paul writeth to the Romans, The belief of the heart justifieth, and to acknowledge with the mouth maketh a man safe. It is all one before God, not to believe at all, and not to shew forth the lively works of our belief. For Math. 7. Christ saith, Either make the tree good and his fruits good; or else make the tree evil and the fruits evil; because a good tree bringeth forth good fruits, as an evil tree doth evil fruits. So that the person which knoweth his Masters will, and doth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes. And not all they which say Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of God, but he that doth the will of the Father. And whosoever in the time of trial is ashamed of me (saith Christ) and of my words, of him the Son of Man will be ashamed before his Father. After that we have built our selves into the true Church of God, it hath pleased him by giving us over into the hands of the wicked Synagogues to prove our building, and to have it known as well to the world as to our selves, that we have been wise builders into the true Church of God upon the Rock, and not on the Sand, and therefore now the Tempest is risen, and the Storms do mightily blow against us, that we might notwithstanding stand upright, and be firm in the Lord, to his honour and glory, and to our eternal felicity. There is no new thing happened unto us, for with such Tempests and dangerous Weathers the Church of God hath continually been exercised. Now once again, as the Prophet Aggeus 2. Aggeus tells us, The Lord shaketh the earth, that those might abide for ever, which be not overcome.

Therefore, my dearly beloved, be stable and immovable in the word of God, and in the faithful observation thereof, and let no man deceive you with vain words, saying, that you may keep your Faith to your selves, and dissemble with Antichrist, and to live at rest and quietness in the world, as most men do, yielding to necessity. This is the wisdom of the flesh; but the wisdom of the flesh is death and enmity to God, as our Saviour for example aptly did declare in Peter, who exhorted Christ not to go to Jerusalem to celebrate the Passover, and there to be slain, but counselled him to look better to himself.

Likewise the world would not have us to forsake it, neither to associate our selves to the true Church, which is the Body of Christ, whereof we are lively Members, and to use the Sacraments after Gods word with the danger of our lives. But we must learn to answer the world as Christ did Peter, and say, Go behind me Satan; thou savourest not the things of God. Shall I not drink of the Cup which the Father giveth me? For it is better to be afflicted and to be slain in the Church of God, then to be counted the Son of the King, in the Synagogue of false Religion. Death for righteousness is not to be abhorred, but rather to be desired, which assuredly bringeth with it the Crown of everlasting Glory. These bloody Executioners do not persecute Christs Martyrs, but crown them with everlasting felicity; we were born into this world to be witnesses unto the Truth, both learned and unlearned.

Now since the time is come that we must shew our Faith, and declare whether we will be Gods Servants in righteousness and holiness, as we have been taught, and are bound to follow, or else with hypocrisy to serve unrighteousness: let us take good heed that we be found faithful in the Lords Covenant, and true Members of his Church, in the which through knowledge we are ingrafted; from the which if we fall by transgression with the common sort of people, it will more tragically be required of us, than many yet do make account thereof. We cannot serve two Masters; we may not halt on both sides, and think to please God; we must be fervent in Gods cause, or else he will cast us out from him. For by the first Commandment we are commanded to love God with all our heart, with all our mind, with all our power and strength; but they are manifest transgressors of this Commandment, which with their heart, mind, or bodily power, do communicate with a strange Religion, contrary to the word of God, in the Papistical Synagogue, which calleth it self the Church, and is not. As greatly do they offend God now which so do, as the Israelites did in times past by forsaking Jerusalem, the true Church of God, and by going to Babel to serve God in a Congregation of their own setting up, and after their own Imaginations and Traditions: for the which doing God utterly destroyed all Israel, as all the Prophets almost do testify. This happened unto them for our ensample, that we might beware to have any fellowship with any like Congregation to our destruction.

God hath one Catholick Church dispersed throughout the world, and therefore we are taught in our Creed to believe one Catholick Church, and to have communion therewith: which Catholick Church is grounded upon the foundation of the Prophets, and of the Apostles, and upon none other, as S. Paul witnesseth to the Ephesians. Therefore wherefore we perceive any people to worship God truly after his word, there we may be certain the Church of Christ to be; unto the which we ought to associate our selves, and to desire with the Prophet David, to praise God in the midst of his Church. But if we behold through the iniquity of the time, segregations to be made with counterfeit Religion, otherwise then the word of God doth teach, we ought then, if we be required to be companions thereof, to say again with David, I have hated the Synagogue of the malignant, and will not sit with the wicked. In the Apocalypse the Church of Ephesus is highly commended, because she tried such as said they were Apostles, and were not indeed, and therefore would not abide the company of them. Further, God commanded his People that they should not seek Babel, neither enter into Gilgal where Idolatry was used, by the mouth of his Prophet Amos. Also we must consider that our Bodies be the Temple of God, and whosoever (as S. Paul teacheth) doth profane the Temple of God, him the Lord will destroy. May we then take the Temple of Christ, and make it the Member of an Harlot? All strange Religion and Idolatry is counted whoredom with the Prophets; and more detestable in the sight of God, than the adventurous abuse of the Body.

Therefore the Princes of the earth, in the Revelation of S. John, be said to go a whoring, when they are in love with false Religion, and follow the same. How then by any means may a Christian man think it tolerable to be present at the Popish private Mass (which is the very profanation of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ) and at other idolatrous worshippings and rites, which be not after the word of God, but rather to the derogation thereof, in setting mans Traditions above Gods Precepts, since God by his word judgeth all strange Religion, which which is not according to his institution, for whoredom and adultery?

Some fondly think that the presence of the Body is not material, so that the heart do not consent to their wicked doings. But such persons little consider what S. Paul writeth to the Corinthians, commanding them to glorify God as well in Body as in Soul.

Moreover, we can do no greater injury to the true Church of Christ, then to seem to have forsaken her, and disallow her by cleaving to her adversary: whereby it appeareth to others which be weak, that we allow the same, and so contrary to the word, do give a great offence to the Church of God, and do outwardly slander, as much as Men may, the truth of Christ. But we be unto him by whom any such offence cometh. Better it were for him to have a Millstone tied about his neck, and to be cast into the bottom of the Sea. Such be traitors to the truth, like unto Judas, who with a kiss betrayed Christ. Our God is a jealous God, and cannot be content that we should be of any other then of that unsported Church, whereof he is the head only, and wherein he hath planted us by Baptism. This jealousy which God hath towards us, will cry for vengeance in the day of vengeance, against all such as now have so large Consciences to do that which is contrary to Gods Glory, and the sincerity of his word, except they do in time repent, and cleave unfeignedly to the Gospel of Christ, how much sorer at this present both Men and Women otherwise in their own corrupt judgment, do flatter themselves. God willet us to judge uprightly, and to allow and follow that which is holy and acceptable in his sight, and to abstain from all manner of evil, and therefore Christ commandeth us in the Gospel to beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is Hypocrisie.

St. Paul to the Hebrews saith, if any Man withdraw himself from the Faith, his Soul shall have no pleasure in him: therefore he saith also, That we are none such as do withdraw our selves unto perdition, but we belong unto Faith, for the attainment of Life. St. John in the Apocalypse telleth us plainly that none of those, who are written in the Book of Life, do receive the mark of the Beast, which is of the Papistical Synagogue, either in their foreheads, or in their hands, that is apparently or obediently.

St. Paul to the Philippians affirmeth, that we may not have any fellowship with the works of darkness, but in the midst of this wicked and froward Generation we ought to shine like lights upholding the word of truth. Further he saith, that we may not touch any unclean thing; which signifieth that our outward conversation in foreign things ought to be pure and undefiled as well as the inward, that with a clean Spirit and rectified Body we might serve God justly in Holiness and Righteousness all the days of our Life.

Finally in the 18 of the Apocalypse, God biddeth us plainly to depart from the Babylonical Synagogue, and not to be partakers of her trespasses. S. Paul to the Thess. commandeth us in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, to withdraw our selves from every Brother that walketh inordinately, and not according to the institution which he hath received of him.

Ponder ye therefore well, good Brethren and Sisters, these Scriptures which be written for your erudition and reformation, whereof one jot is not written in vain: which be utterly against all counterfeit illusion to be used of us with the Papists in their phantastical Religion, and be adversaries to all them that have so light Consciences in so doing: and if they do not agree with this adversary (I mean the Word of God) which is contrary to their attempts, he will (as is signified in the Gospel) deliver them to the judge, which is Christ, and the judge will deliver them to the Executioner, that is to the Devil, and the Devil shall commit them to the horrible prison of Hel-Fire (where is the portion of all Hypocrites) with sulphure and brimstone, with wailing and gnashing of teeth World without end. But yet many will say for their vain excuse; God is merciful, and his mercy is over all. But the Scripture teacheth us, That cursed is he that sinneth upon hope of forgiveness: Truth it is, that the mercy of God is above all his works, and yet but upon such as fear him: for it is written in the Psalms, The mercy of God is on them that fear him, and on such as put their trust in him. Where we may learn, that they only put their trust in God, that serve him; and to fear God, is to turn from evil and do that is good. So that such as do look to be partakers in Gods mercy, may not abide in that which is known to be manifest evil and detestable in the sight of God.

Another sort of persons do make them a Cloak for the rain under the pretence of obedience to the magistrates, whom we ought to obey although they be wicked. But such must learn of Christ to give to Cæsar that is Cæsar, and to God that is due to God, and with S. Peter to obey the higher powers in the Lord, albeit they be evil, if they command nothing contrary to Gods Word, otherwise we ought not to obey their commandments, although we should suffer death therefore, as we have the Apostles for our example herein to follow, who answered the Magistrates as we ought to do in this case, not obeying their wicked precepts, saying, Judge ye whether it be more righteous that we should obey Man rather then God.

Also Daniel chose rather to be cast into the Den of Lions to be devoured, then to obey the Kings wicked Commandments. If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the Ditch. There is no excuse for the transgression of Gods Word, whether a Man doth it voluntarily or at Commandment, although great Damnation is to them, by whom the offence cometh. Some others there be that for an extremest refuge in their evil doings, do run to Gods predestination and election, saying, that if I be elected of God to Salvation, I shall be saved, whatever I do. But such be great tempters of God, and abominable blasphemers of Gods Holy Election and cast themselves down from the Pinnacle of the Temple in presumption, that God may preserve them by his Angels through predestination. Such verily may reckon themselves to be none of Gods elect Children, that will do evil that good may ensue; whose damnation is just, as S. Paul saith: Gods predestination and election ought to be with a simple eye considered, to make us more warily to walk in good and Godly conversation according to Gods Word, and not set cock in the hoop, and put all on Gods back to do wickedly at large: for the Elect Children of God must walk in righteousness and holiness after that they be once called to the true knowledge. For so saith Saint Paul to the Ephesians, That God hath chosen us before the Foundations of the World were laid, that we should be holy and blameless in his sight.

Therefore Saint Peter willet us through good works to make our vocation and election certain to our selves, which we know not but by the good working of Gods Spirit in us, according to the rule of the Gospel; and he that conformeth not himself to the same in Godly conversation, may justly tremble, and doubt that he is none of the elect Children of God, but of the viperous generation, and a Child of darkness. For the Children of light will walk in the works of light and not of darkness, though they fall, they do not lie still.

Let all vain excusations be set apart, and whiles ye have light, as Christ commandeth, believe the light and abide in the same, lest eternal darkness overtake you unawares. The light is come into the World, but (alas) Men love darkness more then light. God give us his pure eye-salve to heal our blindness in this behalf. O that Men and women would be healed, and not seek to be wilfully blinded. The Lord open their eyes, that they may see how dangerous a thing it is to decline from the knowledge of truth, contrary to their Conscience.

But what said I, Conscience? many affirm their Conscience will bear them well enough to do all that they do, and to go to the Idolatrous Church to service, whose Conscience is very large to satisfy Man more then God. And although their Conscience can bear them so to do, yet I am sure that a good Conscience will not permit them so to do; which cannot be good, unless it be directed after the knowledge of Gods Word; and therefore in Latin this feeling mind is called Conscientia, which soundeth by interpretation, as much as with knowledge.

And therefore if our Conscience be led of her self, and not after true knowledge, yet we are not to be excused, as Saint Paul beareth witness saying, Although my Conscience accuseth me not, yet in this I am not justified. And he joyneth a good conscience with these three, Sisters, charity, a pure heart, and unfeigned Faith. Charity keepeth

a token of Gods Child.

1st Cor. 4.

This strife against Sin is a sufficient testimony that you are the Child of God: for if you were not, you should feel no such malice as he now troubleth you withal. When this strong Goliath hath the hold, all things are in peace which he possesseth: and because he hath you not, he will not suffer you unassaulted. But stand fast, and hold out the Buckler of Faith, and with the Sword of Gods promises smite him on the scalp: that he may receive a deadly wound, and never be able to stand against you any more. Saint James telleth you that he is but a coward, saying, Resist the Devil, and he will flye from thee. It is the will of God that he should thus long tempt you and not go away as yet, or else he had done with you long ere this. He knoweth already that he shall receive the foil at your hands, and increase the Crown of your glory: for he that overcometh shall be Crowned. Therefore glory in your temptations, since they shall turn to your felicity. Be not afraid of your continual assaults which be occasions of your daily victory. The Word of God abideth for ever. In what hour soever a Sinner repenteth him of his Sins, they be forgiven. Who can lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect? Do you not perceive the manifest tokens of your election? First, your vocation to the Gospel, and after your vocation, the manifest gifts of the Spirit of God given unto you above many other of your condition, with Goodlines which believeth and yieldeth to the authority of the Scriptures, and is zealous for the same? Seeing you are Gods own deareling, who can hurt you? Be not of a dejected mind for these temptations, neither make your unfained friends to be more sorrowful for you then need doth require.

True Christians how

Since God hath willed you at your Baptism in Christ to be careles, why do you make your self careles? Cast all your care on him. Set the Lord before your eyes always, for he is on your right side, that you should not be then moved. Behold the goodness of God toward me. I am careles, being fast clofed in a pair of stocks, which pinch me for very straints; and will you be careles? I would not have that unfeinly addition to your name. Be as your name pretendeth, for doubtless you have no other cause but so to be. Pray, I beseech you, that I may be still careles in my careles estate, as you have cause to be careles in your easier condition. Be thankful, and put away all care, and then I shall be joyful in my strait present care. Commend me to all our Brethren, and desire them to pray for me, that I may overcome my temptations: for the Devil rageth against me. I am put in the stocks in a place alone, because I would not answer to such Articles, as they would charge me withal in a corner at the Bishops appointment, and because I did not come to Mass when the Bishop sent for me. I will lye all the daies of my Life in the stocks by Gods Grace, rather then I will consent to the wicked Generation. Praise God, and be joyful, that it hath pleased him to make us worthy to suffer somewhat for his name sake. The Devil must rage for ten days. Commend me to Master F. and thank him for his Law Books: but neither Law nor Equity will take any place among these Blood-thirsty. I would for your sake the unjust dealing were noted unto the Parliament-House, if it might avail. God shorten these evil days. I have answered the Bishop meety plain already, and I said to him, if he will call me in open judgment, I will answer him as plainly as he will require: otherwise I have refused, because I fear they will condemn me in hagger muggar. The peace of God be with you my dear Brother. I can write no more for lack of light, and that I have written I cannot read my self, and God knoweth it is written far unceasily. I pray God you may pick out some understanding of my mind towards you. Written in a Cole-House of darkness, out of a pair of painful stocks, by thine own in Christ,

Women.

The Spirit of truth, revealed unto you my dearly beloved by the Gospel of our Saviour Jesus Christ, be continually abiding with you, and augmented into a perfect building of you into the lively Temple of God, through the mighty operation of his holy power. Amen. I read in the Evangelists, of certain Godly Women, that ministred unto Christ; following him in the days of his passion, and never forsook him, but being dead in his Grave, brought Oyl to anoint him, until that he had shewed himself unto them after his resurrection, and bidden them shew unto his Disciples, which at his passion were disperfed, and tell them that he was risen, and that they should see him in Galile. To whom I may justly compare you (my loving Sisters in Christ) who of late have seen him suffer in his members, and have ministred to their necessity, anointing them with the comfortable Oyl of your charitable assistance, even to the death: and now since ye have seen Christ to live in the ashes of them, whom the tyrants have slain, he willed you to go away upon just occasion offered you, and to declare to our disperfed Brethren and Sisters, that he is risen, and liveth in his elect members in England, and by death doth overcome infidelity, and that they shall see him in Galile, which is by forsaking this World, and by a faithful desire to pass out of this World by those ways, which he with his holy Martyrs hath gone on before.

God therefore (intire Sisters) direct your way, as he Wholefom did Abraham and Tobias unto a strange Land: God give you health both of Body and Soul, that ye may go from virtue to virtue, and grow from strength to strength, until ye may see face to face the God of Sion in his holy hill, with the innumerable company of his blessed Martyrs and Saints. Let there be continual affections unto Heaven in your hearts. Let there be no decrease of any virtue, which is already planted in you. Be as the light of the just, such as Solomon faith, increaseth to the perfect day of the Lord. Let the strength of God be commended in your weak Vessels, as it is. Be examples of Faith and sobriety, to all that ye shall come in company withal. Let your Godly conversation speak where your Tongue may not, in the Congregation. Be swift to hear, and slow to speak, after the Counsel of Saint James. Be not curious about other Mens doings, but be occupied in Prayer, and continual meditation, with reverent talking of the Word of God, without contentions among the Saints. Let your Faith shine in a strange Country, as it hath done in your own, that your Father which is in Heaven, may be glorified by you to the end.

This farewell I send you, not as a thing needful (which know already what your duty is, and be desirous to perform the same) but as one that would have you understand that he is mindful of your Godly Conversation, whereof he hath had good experience, and therefore writeth this to be a perpetual memorial betwix you and him, until our sheeting together before God, where we shall joy that we have here lovingly put one another in memory of our duty to perform it.

Farewel again mine own Bowels in Christ, and take me with you wheresoever you go, and leave your selves with me, that in Spirit we may be present one with another. Commend me to the whole Congregation of Christ, willing them not to leave their Country without witness of the Gospel, after that we all be slain, which already be stalled up and appointed to the slaughter, and in the mean season to pray earnestly for our constancy, that Christ may be glorified in us and in them, both by Life and Death. Farewel in the Lord.

of Life, he fan'tise you with daily increafe of Vertue and Faith by his Holy Spirit, that you may appear a vessel of Sanctification in the midst of this wicked & perverse Generation, to the laud and praise of the Gospel. Amen.

I have occasion (mine own dear Sister) to praise God in you for two causes: the one, that to your ability you are ready to shew your self a natural loving Sister to me your poor afflicted Brother, as by your gentle tokens you have effusions testified being absent, and also presently visiting me; which well declareth that you be a very natural Sister indeed, and to be praised in this behalf. But in the other, that you be also a Sister to me in Faith after Christs Gospel, I am occasioned to thank God so much the more, how much the one excelleth the other, and the spiritual consanguinity is more perdurable than that which is of Flesh and Blood, and is a worker of that which is by nature for commonly such as be ungodly, be unnatural, and only lovers of themselves, as daily experience teacheth us.

The living Lord, which through the incorruptible seed of his word hath begotten you to be my leige Sister, give you Grace so to grow in that Generation, to that you may increafe to a perfect Age in the Lord, to be my Sister with Christ for ever.

Look therefore that you continue a Faithful Sister as you are called and are Godly entered, not only to me, but to all the Church of Christ, yet to Christ himself, who voucheth you in this your unfained Faith, worthy to be his Sister. Consider this dignity to surmount all the vain dignities of the World, and let it accordingly prevail more with you then all Earthly delights: For thereby you are called to an equal proportion of the Everlasting Inheritance of Christ; if now in no wise you do shew your self an unnatural Sister to him in forsaking him in trouble, which I trust you will never for any kind of Worldly respect do.

You are under dangerous temptations to be turned from that natural love you owe unto Christ, and you shall be tried with Gods people through a sieve of great affliction: for so Satan desireth us to be sifted, that through fear of sharp troubles we might fall from the stables of our Faith, and so be deprived of that honour, joy, and reward, which is prepared for such as continue Faithful Brothers and Sisters in the Lords Covenant to the end. Therefore the Wise Man in the Book of Ecclesiasticians, biddeth them that come to the service of the Lord, To prepare themselves to suffer temptations.

Since then that for the Glory of God and our Faith, we are called now to abide the brunt of them, and that when our adversary hath done all that he can, yet we may be stable and stand; this Christ our first begotten Brother looketh for at our hands, and all our Brethren and Sisters in Heaven desire to see our Faith through afflictions to be perfect, that we might fulfill their number: and the Universal Church here militant, rejoiceth at our constancy, all whom by the contrary we should make sorry, to the danger of the loss both of Body and Soul. Fear not therefore, whatsoever be threatened of the wicked World; prepare your back, and see it be ready to carry Christs Crofs. And if you see any outwardness in you (as the Flesh is continually repugnant to the Will of God) ask with Faithful Prayer, that the good Spirit of God may lead your Sinful Flesh whither it would not: for if we will dwell in the Flesh and follow the Counsel thereof, we shall never do the Will of God, neither work that tendeth to our Salvation.

You are at this present in the confines and Borders of Babylon, where you are in danger to drink of the Whores Cuppels: you be vigilant in Prayer. Take heed the Serpent seduce you not from the simplicity of your Faith, as he did our first Mother Eve. Let not Worldly fellowship make you partaker of iniquity. He that toucheth Tar, cannot but be defiled thereby. With such as be perverse, a Man shall soon be perverted; with the holy you shall be holy. Therefore continually with the Prophet David, Psalm 15. Unto the Saints that be on the Earth, all ye, will ye on them. You have been sanctified and made pure through the truth; take heed you be not unholy, and defiled, lest the last be worse then the first. I write not this because I stand in any doubt of your sincere continuance, of the which I have had so good experience: but because the days be evil, and in the same it is the duty of every of us to exhort and stir up one another; I am bold to put you (my good Sister) in remembrance of that which doth not a little comfort me to remember, in my troubles and daily temptations. Wherefore I doubt not, you will take that in good part which cometh from your Brother both in Spirit and Body, who tendereth your Salvation as earnestly as his own, that we might joy together eternally with such joy as the world shall never be able to take from us. Thanks be unto God, you have begun to run a good and a great time well in the ways of the Lord: Run out the race to the end, which you have begun, and then shall you receive the Crown of Glory. None shall be Crowned, but such as lawfully strive. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good, and the Lord shall make you one of those Faithful Virgins that shall follow the Lamb where ever he goeth: the which Christ grant both you & me, Amen.

Commend me to all them that love me in the Lord unfainedly. God increafe our Faith, and give us never to be ashamed of his Gospel. That same request which I have made to my Brother Thomas, I make also to you, desiring you by all means you can to accomplish my request, that my furies might be satisfied with that mine own, to the contentation of my mind, which cannot be quiet until they be discharged: therefore I pray you help to purchase quietness, that I might depart out of this World in peace. My dissolution I look for daily, but the Lord knoweth how unworthy I am of so high an honour, as to die for the testimony of his truth. Pray that God would vouchsafe to make me worthy, as he hath done, of long Imprisonment, for the which his name be praised for ever. Pray and look for the coming of the Lord, whose wrath is great over us, and I will pray for you as long as I live. The 9. of July in the Kings Bench.

Another Letter of John Philpot to certain Godly Brethren.

The Grace of God the Father, and the peace of our Saviour Jesus Christ his eternal Son, and the consolation of the Holy Ghost our comforter, strengthen your hearts, and comfort your minds, that you may rejoice, and live in the truth of Christs Gospel to the end, Amen.

I do much rejoice, dearly beloved in the Lord, to hear of your constant Faith in the Word of God, which you have so purely received; which do not with the worldlings decline from the purity thereof, albeit you suffer grief and trouble thereby: for the which I praise God most heartily: and the Lord of all strength, who hath begun this good work in you, make it perfect to the end, as I doubt not but he will, for the Faithful zeal ye have to his truth and to his afflicted Church. Therefore that ye may the better stand and bear the brunt of many temptations, which you are all like to be assaulted withal in these wicked and stormy days; I thought it good, as it is the duty of one Christian Man to exhort another in the time of trouble, to put you in remembrance thereof, and to will you with the Wife Man to prepare your selves to temptations; and to beware that ye, which yet do stand by the goodness of God, may not fall from your lively knowledge and hope. It is an easie thing to begin to do well, but to continue out in well doing, is the only property of the Children of God, and such as assuredly shall be saved. For so faith our Saviour in his Gospel, Blessed are they that persevere to the end.

Let not therefore this certainty of your Salvation, which is continuance in the sincerity of Faith, slide from you. Esteem it more then all the riches and pleasures of this World, for it is the most acceptable treasure of eternal life. This is that precious stone, for the which the wise Merchant Man, after the Gospel, doth sell all that he hath, and buyeth the same God in the 3. of the Apocal. doth signify to the Church, that there shall come a time of temptation upon the whole World, to try the dwellers on the earth. From the danger of the which temptation all such shall be delivered as observe his word: which word there is called the word of patience; to give us to understand that we must be ready to suffer all kind of injuries and slanders for the profession thereof.

Therefore God commandeth us there to hold it fast, that no Man might bereave us of our Crown of Glory, and Saint Saint Peter telleth us now we are afflicted with divers affays, as it is need it should so be, That the trial of our Faith bring much more precious then Gold that periseth, and yet is tried by fire, might redound to the laud, Glory, and honour of Jesus Christ. S. Paul to the Hebrews sheweth us; that Christ our Saviour was in his humanity made perfect by afflictions, that we being called to perfection in him, might more willingly sustain the troubles of the World, by the which God giveth all them that be exercised in the same for his sake, his holiness. And in the 12. Chapter of the said Epistle is written, My Son, refuse not the correction of the Lord, nor shrink when thou art rebuked of him: for the Lord doth chastise every Son whom he receiveth, &c. Christ in the Gospel of Saint John biddeth his Disciples to look after afflictions, saying, In the World ye shall have trouble, but in me ye shall have joy. And therefore in the midst of their trouble, in the 21. of Saint Luke he biddeth them look up and lift up their heads, for your redemption, faith he, is at hand. And in the 22. he saith to all such as be afflicted for him, you are those that have abidden with me in my temptations, and therefore I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed for me, to eat and drink upon my Table in my Kingdom.

Oh how glorious be the Crosses of Christ, which bring the bearers of them unto so blessed an end! Shall we not be glad to be partakers of such shame as may bring us to so high a dignity? God open our eyes to see all things as they be, and to judge uprightly. Then doubtless we would think with Moses, that it is better to be afflicted with the people of God, then to be counted the King of Egypt Son. Then should we joyfully say with David in all our adversities and troubles, It is good (O Lord) thou hast brought me low, to the end I might learn thy righteousness. Therefore S. Paul would not glory in any other thing of the World, but in the Cross of Christ, and in other his infirmities: We have the Commandment of Christ, daily to take up his Cross and follow him. We have the Godly ensamples of all his Apostles and Holy Martyrs, which with great joy and exultation have suffered the loss of all Lands, Goods, and Life, for the hope of a better reward: which is laid up for all those in Heaven, that unfeignedly cleave to the Gospel, and never be ashamed thereof.

Great is the felicity of the World to the outward Man, and very pleasant are the transitory delights thereof: but the reward of the righteous after the Word of God, doth incomparably excel them all, inasmuch that S. Paul to the Romans doth plainly affirm, that all the tribulations of this World cannot deserve that Glory which shall be shewed unto us.

Let us therefore (good Brethren and Sisters) be merry and glad in these troublesome days, the which be sent of God to declare our Faith, and to bring us to the end and fruition of that which we hope for. If we would enter into the Lords Sanctuary, and behold what is prepared for us, we could not but desire the Lord to hasten the day of our death, in the which we might set forth by true Confession his Glory. Neither should we be afraid to meet our adversaries, which so earnestly seek our spoil and death, as Christ did Judas and that wicked rout, which came to apprehend him, saying, I am he whom ye seek. It is commanded us by the Gospel, not to fear them that kill the Body, but to fear God, who can cast both Body and Soul into Hell-Fire. So much we are bound to observe this Commandment as any other which God hath given us. The Lord increase our Faith, that we fear God more than Man. The Lord give us such love towards him and his truth, that we may be content to forsake all and follow him. Now will it appear what we love better for to that we love, we will stick. There is none worthy to be counted a Christian, except he can find in his heart for Christs sake, if the confession of his truth doth require, to renounce all which he hath and follow him; and in so doing he gaineth an hundred fold more in this Life (as our Saviour said to Peter) and hereafter is assured of eternal Life. Behold, I pray you, what he loseth which in this Life receiveth an hundred for one, with assurance of eternal Life. O happy Exchange! Perchance your outward Man will say; if I were sure of this great recompence here, could be glad to forsake all; But where is this hundred fold in this Life to be found? yes truly; for in stead of the Worldly Riches which thou dost forsake, which be but temporal, thou hast found the everlasting Riches of Heaven, which be glory, honour, and praise, both before God, Angels, and Men; and for an Earthly habitation, hast an eternal mansion with Christ in Heaven; for even now thou art of the City and Household of the Saints with God, as it is verified in the fourth to the Philippians. For Worldly peace, which can last but a while, thou dost possess the peace of God, which passeth all understanding; and for the loss of a few friends, thou art made a fellow of the innumerable company of Heaven, and a perpetual friend of all those that have died in the Lord, from the beginning of the World. Is not this more then an hundred fold? Is not the peace of God which we in this World have through Faithful imitation of Christ (which the World cannot take from us) ten thousand fold more, then those things that most highly be esteemed in the World, without the peace of God? All the peace of the World is no peace, but a meer anguish and a gnawing fury of Hell. As of late God hath set example before our eyes, to teach us how horrible an evil it is to forsake the peace of Christs truth, which breedeth a worm in conscience that never shall rest.

Oh that we would weigh this indifferent ballance. Then should we not be dismayed of this troublesome time, neither sorrow after a Worldly manner, for the loss which we are now like to sustain, as the weak faithless persons do, which love their goods more then God, and the things visible above those which be invisible: but rather would heartily rejoice and be thankful, that it pleased God to call us to be Souldiers in his cause against the works of Hypocrite, and to make us like unto our Saviour Christ in suffering, whereby we may assure our selves of his Eternal Glory: For blessed are they, faith Christ, that suffer persecution for righteousness sake. 2 Tim. 2. And as S. Paul witnesseth to Timothy; If we die with Christ, we shall live with Christ; and if we deny him, he will deny us.

O that we would enter into the veil of Gods promises. Then should we with S. Paul to the Philippians, reject all, and count all things but for dross, so that we may gain Christ. God which is the lightner of all darkness, and putter away of all blindness, anoint our eyes with the true eyesalve, that we might behold his glory, and our eternal felicity, which is hidden with Christ, and prepared for us that do abide in his Testament: for blessed is that servant, whom the Master when he cometh (as Christ said) doth find faithful. Let us therefore watch and pray one for another, that we yield not in any point of our Religion to the Antichristian Synagogue, and that we be not overthrown of these temptations. Stand therefore, and be no cowards in the cause of your salvation; for his Spirit that is in us, is stronger then he which in the World doth now rage against us. Let us not put out the Spirit of God from us, by whose might we shall overcome our enemies, and then death shall be as great a gain to us as it was to the Blessed Apostle Saint Paul. Why then do ye mourn? Why do ye weep? why be ye so careful, as though God hath forsaken you? he is never more present with us, then when we be in trouble, if we do not forsake him. We are in his hands, and no Body can do us any injury or wrong without his good will and pleasure. He hath commanded his Angels to keep us, that we stumble not at a stone without his divine providence. The Devil cannot hurt any of us, and much less any of his Ministers, without the good will of our eternal Father.

Therefore let us be of good comfort, and continually give thanks unto God for our estate, whatsoever it be; for if we murmur against the same, we murmur against God, who sendeth the same which if we do, we kick but against the prick, and provoke more the wrath of God against us, which by patient suffering, otherwise would sooner be turned into our favour through Faithful Prayer.

I beseech you with Saint Paul, to give your Bodies pure and holy Sacrifices unto God. He hath given us Bodies to bestow unto his glory, and not after our own concupiscence. If many years God hath suffered us to use our Bodies, which be his Temples, after the lust of the Flesh, in vain delights, not according to his glory; is it not our duty

Abraham, commanding him to slay his Son Isaac in Sacrifice to him; which Isaac by interpretation doth signifie mirth and joy. Who by his obedience preserved Isaac unto long life, and offered in his stead a Ram that wastied by the horns in the brambles. Semblably we are all commanded to Sacrifice unto God our Isaac, which is our joy and consolation: the which if we be ready to do, as Abraham was, our joy shall not perish, but live, and be increased, although our Ram be sacrificed for our Isaac; which doth signifie that the pride and concupiscence of our flesh intangled through sin, with the cares of this stinging world, must be mortified for the preservation and perfect augmentation of our mirth and joy, which is sealed up for us in Christ.

And to withstand these present temptations wherewith we are now encombred, ye cannot have a better remedy then to set before your eyes how our Saviour Christ overcame them in the desert, and to follow his example? that if the Devil himself or any other by him, willetth you to make fumes Bread, that is, to take such a worldly wise way, that you may have your fair houses, Lands and Goods to live on still; ye must say, that man liveth not only by Bread, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

Again, if the Devil cancelleth you to cast your selves down to the earth, as to revoke your sincere belief and godly conversation, and to be conformable to the Learned men of the world, pretending that God will be well enough content therewith; ye must answer that it is written, that a man shall not tempt his Lord God.

Further, if the Devil offer you large promises of honour, dignity, and possessions, so that ye will worship Idols in his Synagogue, ye must say, Go behind me Satan, for it is otherwise written, that a man must worship his Lord God, and serve him only.

Finally, if your Mother, Brothers, Sister, Wife, Child, Kinsman, or Friend, do seek of you to do otherwise then the Word of God hath taught you, ye must say with Christ, that they are your Mothers, Brothers, Sisters, Wives, Children, Kinsmen, which do the will of God the Father. To the which will the Lord for his mercy conform us all unfaignedly to the end, Amen.

Your loving and faithful Brother in Christ, in Captivity, John Philpot, Anno 1555.

To his Friend and faithful Brother in the Lord, Master
Robert Harrington

Gentle Mr. Harrington, I cannot tell what condign thanks I may give unto God for you, in respect of the great gentleness and pain which you have taken for the relief of me and of other our afflicted Brethren in Christ. God be praised for his mercy, whose loving providence we have seen towards us by such faithful stewards as you have been towards a great many. Blessed be you of God for the loving care which you have taken for his poor flock. God hath reserved your reward of thanks in Heaven, and therefore I go not about to render you any, lest I might seem to judge that you looked for that here, which is reserved to a better place. I thank God for that I have found by your faithful and diligent industry, and God forgive me my unworthiness for so great benefits. God gave me grace to serve him faithfully, and to run out my race with joy. Glorious is the course of the Martyrs of Christ at this day. Never had the elect of God a better time for their glory than this is. Now may they be assured under the Cross, that they are Christs Disciples for ever.

Me think I see you desiring to be under the same.

The flesh draweth back, but the Spirit saith, it must be brought whither it would not. Here is the victory of the World: here is true faith and everlasting glory. Who is he which desireth not to be found faithful to his Master? And now is the time that every faithful Servant of Christ hath just opportunity to shew himself a glorious Souldier in the Lords fight. Now do the Amalekites invade the true Israelites, that the Israelites might with speed be glorified, I need not for want of understanding to admonish you hereof, but as a willing Souldier in Christ, to exhort you so to run as you may get the victory, and that speedily with us. A man that is bid to a glorious feast, witheth his Friend to go with him, and be partaker thereof. God doth call me most unworthy; among other, to drink of the Bride-Cup of his Son, whereby we shall be made worthy (as many of our Brethren have been before us) to sit at the right hand and at the left hand of Christ. O what unpeakeable condition is that? May any worldly thing stay us from the desire thereof? Since we seek the Kingdom of God, why do we not apprehend it, being so near offered unto us?

Let us approach near unto God, and God will draw near unto us. God draw us after him, that we may all run after the favour of his sweet ointments. Christ anoint us, that we may be supplied in these evil days to run lightly unto the glory of the Lord. Shame, imprisonment, loss of goods, and shedding of our Blood, be the just price which we must willingly bestow for the same.

Wherefore (dearly Beloved in the Lord) let not the great charges keep you back from buying this glory: for the reward is ten thousand fold greater then the price.

That you have married a wife, whom God bless, I cannot excuse you from this Mart, but you must bring your wife for an usury to the Lord, whose pleasure is in godly yoke-fellows. I wish you to be as I am, except these horrible bands, but yet most comfortable to the Spirit, assuring you that we are made worthy through Christ of the Kingdom for the which we suffer. Praised be the Lord for the affliction which we suffer, and he give us strength to continue to the end.

Commend me to Mr. Heath, and tell him that I would with him with me, to prove how apt he is to carry the Cross of Christ. I pray for his continuance in Christ, as for mine own. Commend me to his wife, and to Mrs. Hall, certifying them that I am brought to the gates of Hell, that I might never enter into the same, but be raised up from Hell to Heaven, through the word that sanctifieth us. Commend me to Mr. Elsing and his wife, and thank them that they remembered to provide me some ease in Prison, and tell them that though my Lords Cole-house be but very black, yet it is more to be desired of the faithful, than the Queens Palace. God make her a joyful Mother, and preserve them both to the comfort of Gods People. Thus for this time farewell dear Brother. Written in post-hast because of strait keeping.

This day I look to be called before the Commissioners again. Pray (dear Brother) for the Spirit of wisdom to remain with me. Commend me to your wife, and I thank you both for your tokens. Your token I have sent to your wife; and my Token unto you, is my faithful heart with this Letter. Commend me to all my Friends, and tell them, I thank God I am cheerful in Christ, wishing them to fear God more then man, and to learn to despise earnestly the vanities of this World; desiring you all to pray for me, that I may end my journey with fidelity, Amen.

John Philpot.

Here followeth another Letter of Mr. Philpot to the Lady Vane: which because for the length I could not wholly insert, I have excerpted certain specialities thereout as followeth.

The principal Spirit of God the Father, given unto us by Christ our merciful Saviour, confirm, strengthen, and stablish you in the true knowledge of the Gospel, that your faithful heart (worshipful and dear Sister in the Lord) may attain and talk with all the Saints what is the height, the depth, the length, and the breadth of the sweet Cross of Christ, Amen, &c.

Others seek worldly goods, honours, and delights; but you seek with a good understanding to serve God in Spirit and verity. This is the gate that leadeth to Heaven, this is your portion for ever. By this you shall see God face to face (which sight is unspeakable joy) and by this shall ye see a full sight of all the beautiful Heavenly Powers, and of all the celestial Paradise. By this shall you know them that you never knew, and be joyous and glad with those which you have known here in God, world without end, &c.

Ah, I lament the infidelity of England, that after so great light is steeped into so huge darkness again. The Servant that knoweth his masters will and doth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes. Ah, great be the plagues that hang over England, yea though the Gospel should be restored again. Happy shall that person be whom the Lord shall take out of this world, not to see them. Ah the great perjury which men have run into so wilfully against God by receiving Antichrist again and his wicked Laws? which do threaten a great ruine unto England. Oh that the Lord would turn his just judgments upon the Authors of the truce breaking between God and us, that they might be brought low (as Nabuchadonisor was) that his People might be delivered, and his glory exalted. God grant that that good luck which you hope shortly to come upon the house of God, be a true prophesie, and not a well wishing only. Ah Lord, take away thy heavy hand from us, and stretch it out upon thine enemies those hypocrites, as thou hast begun, that they may be confounded. O let not the weak perish for want of knowledge through our sin. Although thou kill us, yet will we put our trust in thee.

Thus (dear heart) you teach me to pray with you in writing. God hear your prayers, and give us the Spirit of effectual Prayer, to pour out our hearts continually before God, that we may find mercy both for our selves, and for our afflicted Brethren and Sisters. I cannot but praise God in you, for that pitiful heart that taketh other folks calamities to heart, as your own. Blessed be they that mourn, for such shall be comforted. God wipe away all tears from your pitiful eyes, and forrow from your merciful heart, that you may (as doublets you shall do shortly) rejoice with his elect for ever. You have fo armed me to the Lords battle both inwardly and outwardly, that except I be a very Coward, I cannot faint, but overcome by death. You have appointed me to so good and gracious a General of the field, to so victorious a Captain, and to so favourable a Marshall, that if I should not go on lustily, there were no spectacle of heavenly manhood in me. I will present your Coat-armour before my Captain, and in the same I trust by him to overcome. The Scarf I desire as an outward sign to shew our enemies, who see not our glorious end, neither what God worketh inwardly in us, through the blindness of their hearts, that they persecute Christs Crofs in us, whereby he hath sealed up the Truth of his Gospel by his death unto us, that we by our death (if need be) might confirm the same, and never be ashamed whatsoever torment we do suffer for his Names sake; and our weak Brethren seeing the same might be more encouraged to take up Christs Crofs, and to follow him. God give us grace to do all things to his glory, Amen, &c.

The world wondereth how we can be merry in such extreme misery, but our God is Omnipotent, which turneth misery into felicity. Believe me (dear Sister) there is no such joy in the world as the People of Christ have under the Crofs. I speak by experience; therefore believe me, and fear nothing that the world can do unto you. For when they imprison our bodies, they set our Souls at liberty with God. When they cast us down, they lift us up; yea, when they kill us, then do they bring us to everlasting life. And what greater glory can there be, than to be at conformity with Christ? which afflictions do work in us.

God open our eyes to see more and more the glory of God in the Crofs of Jesus Christ, and make us worthy partakers of the same. Let us rejoice in nothing with St. Paul but in the Crofs of Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto us, and we to the world. The Crofs of Christ be our standard to fight under for ever. Whiles I am thus talking with you of our common consolation, I forget how I trouble you with my rude and unordained tediousness; but you must impute it to love which cannot quickly depart from them whom he loveth, but desireth to pour himself into their bosoms.

Therefore though your flesh would be offended (as it might justly be) at such rudeness, yet your Spirit will say nay, which taketh all things in good part that cometh of love. And now I am departing yet will I take my leave ere I go, and would fain speak somewhat that might declare my sincere love to you for ever: Farewell O elect vessel of the Lords, to the comfort of his afflicted flock, farewell on earth, whom in Heaven I am sure I shall not forget. Farewell under the Crofs most joyfully and until we meet, always remember what Christ saith; Be of good cheer, for I have overcome the world, &c.

God pour his Spirit abundantly upon you, mine own dear bowels in Christ, until you may come to see the God of all Gods with his elect in the everlasting Stem. I send to you the kiss of Peace, with the which I do most entirely take my leave of you at this present. It is necessary we depart hence, or else we could not be glorified. Your heart is heavy because I say I must depart from you: It is the calling of the merciful Father, wherewithal you are content, and so am I. Be of good comfort, hold our buckler of Faith: for by the strength thereof we shall shortly meet in eternal glory: to the which Christ bring both us Amen, Amen. The 10. of December. 1555.

Death why should I fear thee? since thou canst not hurt me, but rid me from misery unto eternal glory.

Dead to the world, and living to Christ, your own Brother, sealed up in the verity of the Gospel for ever.

Another Letter of Mr. Philpot written to the same Lady, being a great supporter of him.

I Cannot but most heartily give God thanks for these his gifts in you, whose brightness many beholding that are weak, are much encouraged to seek God likewise, and to cleave to him, having the example of so faithful and constant a Gentlewoman before their eyes. If the Queen of the South shall rise with the men of Christs generation, and condemn them, for that she came from the end of the world to hear the wisdom of Solomon? than shall your sincere and godly conversation, thus shining in this dangerous time of the trial of Christs People (being a woman of worshipful estate and wealthy condition) condemn in the latter day a great many of these faint-hearted Gospellers, which so soon be gone back and turned from the truth, at the voice of a hand-maiden; seeing that neither the fear of imprisonment, neither the possession of the world, (wherewithal you are sufficiently induced above a great many) can separate you from the love of the truth, which God hath revealed unto you, whereby it appeareth that the seed of Gods Word which was sown in you, fell neither in the high way, neither among the thorns, neither upon the stones, but upon a good ground, which is blessed of God, and bringeth forth fruit with great affliction, an hundred fold to the glory of God, and the increase of his Church, &c.

In consideration whereof St. James biddeth us highly to rejoice, whensoever we fall into many temptations, knowing that it is but the trial of our Faith, that we might bring forth that excellent virtue Patience, by the which we are made like to our Redeemer Christ, with whom we here being like in suffering, assuredly shall hereafter be partakers of his eternal glory. Therefore St. Paul saith; God forbid that I should glory in any thing but in the Crofs of our Lord Jesus Christ. I that am under the Crofs with you (thanks be given to God therefore) have felt in the same more true joy and consolation, then ever I did by any benefit that God hath given me in my life before. For the more the world doth hate us, the higher God is unto us, and there is no perfect joy but in God. Wherefore Christ said; In me ye shall have joy, but in the World affliction. Blessed be God which sendeth us this affliction, that we might perfectly joy in him. For this cause in the ripest time of iniquity, and in the most fervent season of persecution of the True Church, which Christ in the 21. of Luke prophesied to come, he willeth us to be of good cheer, and to lift up our heads, for our redemption is at hand.

Oh that the Lord would come and deliver us from this World, which is a vale of misery, unto his own Kingdom, where floweth perpetual joy and Consolation. And verily that is the true and only joy which is conceived, not of the Creature, but of the Creator, the which when we do possess, no body can take away from us. To the which joy all other joys being compared, are but mournings, all delights sorrow, all sweetnesses sowe, all beauty filth, and finally all other things that be counted pleasant, are tediousness. Your own self is better witness of this then I: Ask your self, with whom you are best acquainted. Doth not the Holy Ghost speak the same in your heart? Have you not perished your self this to be true, before I wrote thereof? For how should you being a Woman, and a young Gentlewoman, beautiful, and at your own liberty, have overcome this your frail kind and age, and despised your excellent beauty and estate, unless all those things which be subject to the senses had been counted of you vile, and little to be esteemed in comparison of those things which inwardly do comfort you to overcome the Flesh, the World, and the Devil?

God increase your joy in all spiritual things, and stablish your hope to the day of eternal rest. You have forsaken darkness, and are entered into light, God grant the same may thine fill in you, until the perfect day come of the Lord, in the which is all our Consolation. Here we must be darkened, that there we may appear as bright as the Sun in the face of the whole World, and of all them that now condemn us for our well-doing; whose Judges then we shall be, to their horrible grief, though now wrongfully they judge us. Pray heartily, and that often, that God once again for his Christs sake would be merciful to his afflicted Church in England. Faithful prayer is the only remedy that we have against the fiery darts of the Devil, that be kindled against us. By prayer the Amalekites shall be overcome, and the roarings of the Lion, which seeketh still to devour us, shall be stopped and put to silence. The Lord stop Leviathans mouth, that he swallow not up Gods filly People, according to his expectation.

Praise the Lord for the faithful Testimony and Sacrifice which two of our Brethren of late have through fire rendered to the Truth of the Gospel, which now triumpheth by the death of godly Martyrs. The Lord is at hand, therefore watch and pray. The last of May. 1555. Captive in the Kings Bench.

Yours with heart in Christ,
John Philpot.

ANOTHER LETTER OF MR. PHILPOT TO THE GODLY LADY VANE.
God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ increase in your godly heart the faith of the Gospel, which is your eternal inheritance, and the Holy Ghost comfort your Spirit with all Spiritual Consolation, to the day of the Lord, Amen.

I cannot but praise God most highly and earnestly (my dear and faithful Lady) for the great and unfained love which you bear unto me in Christ, declared oftentimes, as well now as of late, by manifest and liberal tokens. Blessed be God that hath made you so worthy a member in his Kingdom. For it cannot be but such shall reap with abundance in time of reward, that here do sow so plentifully in well doing; Albeit I am most unworthy to receive any such benefit at your hands, as in respect of a pillar of Christs Church, which am scarce a shadow thereof. But the zeal of Christs Church in you willeth me to be such a one as the time doth require. God fulfil your desire of me, that I may be found constant, and no wandering star. I am not worthy of the name of a Prophet, or of a Minister of Gods Word, for that I have (being letted by the iniquity of the time) little or nothing laboured therein. I am a friend of our common Spouse Iesus, and do rejoyce of the verity of his word; for the which (praised be his name) he hath counted me worthy to suffer: and indeed who that giveth a draught of water in the name of a Disciple (as Christ promised) shall not lose his reward. Therefore that your gentleness doth in the name of him, which I am not, the Lord recompence unto you in all his blessings, which he is accustomed to pour on them which love his flock unfainedly.

Good Lady, you have to joy that the Kingdom of God is thus continually before your eyes, and that you are not ashamed of the bands of Christ, which you with his People in part do suffer. They may be assured of the glory everlasting, which here are not ashamed to take up the Cross of Christ, and to follow him. Here we must weep and lament, whilst the World laugheth and triumpheth over us; but our tears shall shortly be turned into unspeakable joy, and we shall eternally be merry together, when the World shall lament their infidelity without end, &c.

I would I were able to do any thing that might these condign thanks for that sincere love you bear unto me in Christ: you adjure me (as it were) by your gentle letters to be bold on you in all my needs. I thank God which ceaseth not to provide for his, I lack nothing at this present, but only habitude to thank your faithful heart for your goodness towards me. I love you and not yours, as it is meet Christians to love one another in God; and your faith which I behold in you, is more worth unto me then all your possessions. And I think I shall not need long to be chargeable unto you, for that this week I look for Commissioners to sit on me, and my fellow-prisoners in prison, lest the Spirit of our breath might blow further abroad. The will of God be done. We are not so good as John the Baptist which was beheaded in prison. Darkness cannot abide the light. Therefore their doings must declare what they are. We are as sheep appointed for a sacrifice to the Lord. We must not fear the fire for our Lord is a consuming fire, which will put out the fierceness of raging torments from us. Be not afraid of them that can kill the body, but fear him that can cast both body and soul into hell fire. God forbid that we should rejoyce otherwise then in the Cross of Christ, and pray that he would make us worthy to suffer for his sake. God will have our faith tried and known; and therefore let us willingly humble our selves under the mighty hand of God, that he may gloriously lift us up in his good time. There is none perfectly faithful indeed till he can say with S. Paul, I am persuaded that neither death, neither life, neither angels, neither princes or powers, neither things present, neither things to come, neither highness, neither lowness, neither any other creature is able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Iesus our Lord. This faith God plant both in you and me unmovably. In this faith we have to rejoyce, and in none other.

All the tribulations of the World are not worthy of the eternal weight of glory which is prepared for them, that here do with patience abide the Cross. Wherefore let us be strong with the strength in him, that is able to make us strong, and lament the weakness, I might say the infidelity of our faint Gospellers. Christ whom we would pretend to have put upon us the strength of God, and how then may they be weak where Christ is? We have more to be glad, touching our selves, of this time, then we have had of any time before, in the which we have so ready away to go unto God, and so good occasion to shew our duty in glorifying his holy name. For if we be imprisoned in this cause, we are blessed. If we lose all that we have, we are blessed an hundred fold. If we die, we are blessed eternally; so that in suffering of persecutions, all is full of blessings. Be blessed therefore (O elect Lady) of God, with the blessed of God, and therefore (O elect Lady) of the conspience of the World. Embrace that which is perfect, and joyfully look for the coming and Cross of our Lord Iesus Christ, &c. Thus desiring God to preserve you to his true peace, and to give you victory of that temptation which now is come to try our faith, Christ be with you, and bless you both in Body and Soul; and my prayer shall follow you whosoever you go, as I desire that yours may be with me. The last week I sent your benediction to Oxford, I could not before have a Convenient messenger,

THe mercy of God the Father, and the consolation of the Holy Ghost through Jesus Christ, be with you, and strengthen you my dear Mother and Sister in the Lord, in these dangerous days, to the Crown of eternal Glory, which is now offered to all faithful Soulers in the Gospel, Amen.

As your good Ladyship doth desire to hear from me, so am I desirous to write, as your gentleness and daily goodness bindeth me. But Satan of late hath letted me, who envying all good exercises which I have had and received by mine ease imprisonment in times past, hath brought me out of the Kings Bench into the Bishop of London's Cole-houfe, a dark and an ugly Prison as any is about London, (but my dark Body of sin hath well deserved the same, and the Lord now hath brought me into outward darkness, that I might the more be lightened by him, as he is most present with his Children in the midst of darkness,) where I cannot be suffered to have any Candle-light, neither Ink nor Paper, but by stealth. Wherefore I cannot write to you as I would, neither as my duty is. As Christ, my Master, was sent from Annas to Caiaphas, so am I sent from Winchester Diocese to London, I trust to make a speedy end of my course; God give me grace and patience to be a faithful follower of my Master. I have been already this Seven-year in his Cole-houfe, and have of late been four times called to mine Answer, but hitherto not called to Judgment which I do daily look for; but I fear they will prolong me, and try me by strict Imprisonment a while, in the which Gods will be done.

Pray (dear Lady) that my Faith faint not, which I praise God is presently more lively with me than it hath been in times past. I taste and feel the faithfulness of God in his promise, who hath promised to be with his in their trouble, and to deliver them. I thank the Lord, I am not alone, but have six other faithful Companions; who in our darkness do cheerfully sing hymns and praises unto God for his great goodness. We are so joyful, that I with you part of my joy. For you that are so careful of my bodily relief, how can I but with your spiritual consolation, and that abundantly? Let not (dear Heart) my strict Imprisonment any thing molest you: for it hath added and daily doth unto my joy; but rather be glad and thankful unto God with me, that it hath pleased him to make me, most wretched sinner, worthy to suffer any thing for his sake. Hitherto we have not resisted unto blood. God make us never to count our blood more precious in our eyes than his Truth.

Ah, my dear Sister, I thank you again for the last Letter you sent me; it is a singular comfort unto me, as oft as I read the same. I have it in my bosom, and will carry the same even to the Stake with me, in witness that Christ hath so constant and faithful a Lady in England. God succour and keep that spirit in you; for it is the very Spirit of Adoption of the Child of God. Such cheerful and holy Spirits under the Cross be acceptable Sacrifices in the sight of God; for Christ came to cast fire into the Earth, and looketh that it should be kindled. Be you fervent in spirit in our Christs cause, as you have begun, for that is the principal spirit wherewith David desired to be confirmed. O, how do I rejoice, your Ladyship to go arm in arm with me unto Christ, or rather before me? I cannot but joy of such a worshipful Fellow. Me thinketh I see you to mourn, and desire to be loosed out of the earthly and frail habitation of this Body. O, how amiable and pleasant is it to dwell in the Lords Tabernacle? Our Christ and his heavenly company look for us; let us hasten and run thereto, for behold the Lord is ready to embrace us. Mine own bowels in the Lord, be merry in the Lord with your afflicted Brother, who daily offereth your merciful alms, which most unworthily I do receive still of you, unto the Lord. But now (dear Mother) you need not to burthen so much your self (as my last Letters did signify) for that my chargeable Imprisonment is cut off, and a little now serveth me; wherefore I pray you send no more until I send to you, for I have sufficient and abound. Gods peace be with you for ever. Out of my Lord of London's Cole-houfe, the last of October.

Your own, John Philpot.

Another Letter of Mr. Philpot to the said Lady, wherein partly he complaineth of the dissimulation and perjury of Englishmen, falling again to the Pope, and partly he expresseth his joy in his afflictions.

I Cannot but joy with you (my heartily Beloved in Christ) of the fall of Senacherib: since it is to the glory of God, and to the consolation of his Church, to see the fall of their enemies before their face, according as it is written, The just shall rejoice, when he seeth the vengeance of the wicked. God make this your joy perfect; for as concerning my self, I count not to see those good days whereof you have a glimmering in this life. For although the Cockatrice be dead, yet his pestilent Chickens, with the Whore of Babylon, still liveth. But a great hope there is of their short confusion, because God doth not prosper their doings according to their expectation. Most happy shall be, whom the Lord shall soonest take out of this life, that he may not see the plagues which the manifest perjury, and the manifold Idolatry and detestable dissimulation, and that of such as do know the Truth, do threaten to come.

The Lord is just, and all unrighteousness displeaseth him, and either here or else in another world he will punish this gross Infidelity of the world: but his elect, and such as he loveth, will be punished here, that they should not be condemned hereafter with the world eternally: we have nothing so much to rejoice in, as in the Cross of Jesus Christ, and in that we are partakers of his afflictions, which be the earnest-penalty of that eternal Kingdom, which he upon the Cross for us hath purchased. For as Paul his faithful witness saith, If we suffer with him, we shall reign with him. If we die with him, we shall live with him.

Wherefore (mine own dear Bowels) praise God with me most intirely, that it hath pleased him now mercifully to visit the sins of my youth, and my huge unthankfulness, and by the same doth give me much consolation, that he assureth me of his great goodness and mercy, and turneth his Fatherly caitigation into my Crown of glory. O good God! what am I on whom he should shew this great mercy? To him that is immortal, invincible, and only wise, be all honour, praise, and glory therefore, Amen.

This is the day that the Lord hath made, let us rejoice and be glad in the same. This is the way, though it be narrow, which is full of the Peace of God, and leadeth to eternal Bliss. O how my heart leapech for joy, that I am so near the apprehension thereof! God forgive me mine unthankfulness and unworthiness of so great glory. The Swords which pierced Maries heart in the Passion of our Saviour, which daily also go through your faithful heart, be more glorious and to be desired than the golden Scepters of this World. O blessed be they that mourn in this world to Godward, for they shall eternally be comforted! God make my stony heart to mourn more than it doth. I have so much joy of the reward that is prepared for me most wretched Sinner, that though I be in place of darkness and mourning, yet I cannot lament, but both night and day am so joyful, as though I were under no Cross at all: yea, in all the days of my life I was never so merry, the Name of the Lord be praised therefore for ever and ever, and he pardon mine unthankfulness. Our enemies do fret, fume, and gnash their Teeth to see and hear that we, under this grievous affliction in the world, can be so merry. We are of them counted as desperate persons, for the certain salvation: and it is no marvel, for the worldly men cannot perceive the things of God, it is meer foolishness and abomination to them.

Anno 1556. Be thankful unto our God (mine own dear helper) for his wonderful working in his chosen People. Pray instantly that this joy be never taken from us, for it palleth all the delights of this World. This is the peace of God which surmounteth all understanding: this peace the more his chosen be afflicted, the more they feel, and therefore cannot faint, neither for fire, neither for water. Let us pray for our weak Brethren and Sisters sake, that it may please God to alleviate the grievous and intolerable burden of these cruel days. But touching our selves, let us heartily beseech our Saviour to vouchsafe to give us this glorious gift to suffer for his Gospels sake, and that we may think the shame of the World to be our glory, as it is indeed. God increase our Faith, and open our eyes to behold what is prepared for us. I lack nothing, praise be to God. I trust my Marriage Garment is ready. I will send you my examinations as soon as I can get them written, if you be desirous of them.

A Letter of Mr. Philpot to a friend of his, prisoner the same time in Newgate, wherein is debated and discussed the matter or question of Infants to be Baptized.

A Letter of Mr. Philpot, Establishing a certain Brother in the matter of Baptizing of Infants.

THe God of all light and understanding lighten your heart with all true knowledge of his word, and make you perfect to the day of our Lord Jesus Christ, wherunto you are now called, through the mighty operation of his Holy Spirit, Amen.

I received yesternight from you (dear Brother, Saint, and fellow-prisoner for the truth of Christs Gospel) a Letter, wherein you gently require my judgment concerning the Baptism of Infants, which is the effect thereof. And before I do heere you what I have learned out of Gods Word and of his true and infallible Church touching the same, I think it not out of the matter first to declare what vision I had the same night whilst musing on your Letter. I fell asleep, knowing that God doth not without cause reveal to his People who have their minds fixed on him, special and spiritual Revelations to their comfort, as a taste of their joy and Kingdom to come, which Flesh and Blood cannot comprehend.

A vision revealed to M. Philpot upon a Letter to be answered.

Being in the midst of my sweet rest, it seemed me to see a great beautiful City, all of the colour of azure, and white, four square in a marvellous beautiful composition in the midst of the sky, the sight whereof so inwardly comforted me, that I am not able to express the Consolation I had thereof, yea the remembrance thereof causeth as yet my heart to leap for joy: and as charity is no churl, but would others to be partakers of his delight, so me thought I called to others (I cannot tell whom) and whilst they came and we together beheld the same, by and by to my great grief it vaded away.

The vision expounded.

This dream I think not to have come of the illusion of the senses, because it brought with it so much spiritual joy, and I take it to be of the working of Gods Spirit for the contentation of your request, as he wrought in Peter to satisfy Cornelius. Therefore I interpret this beautiful City to be the glorious Church of Christ, and the appearance of it in the sky, signifieth the Heavenly State thereof, whose Conversation is in Heaven, and that according to the Primitive Church which is now in Heaven, men ought to measure and judge the Church of Christ now in earth, for as the Prophet David saith; The foundations thereof be in the holy hills, and glorious things he spoken of the City of God. And the marvellous quadrature of the same, take to signify the universal agreement in the same, and that all the Church here militant ought to consent to the Primitive Church throughout the four parts of the World, as the Prophet affirmeth, saying; God maketh us to dwell after one manner in one house. And that I conceived so wonderful joy at the contemplation thereof, I understand the unspeakable joy which they have that be at unity with Christs Primitive Church: For there is joy in the Holy Ghost, and peace, which palleth all understanding, as it is written in the Psalms; As of joyful persons the dwelling of all them that be in thee. And that I called others to the fruition of this vision, and to behold this wonderful City, I construe it by the will of God this Vision to have come upon me musing on your Letter, to the end, that under this figure I might have occasion to move you with many others, to behold the Primitive Church in all your opinions concerning faith, and to conform your self in all points to the same, which is the pillar and stablishment of truth, and teacheth the true use of the Sacraments, and having with a greater fulness then we have now, the first fruits of the Holy Ghost, did declare the true interpretation of the Scriptures according to all verity, even as our Saviour promised to send them another Comforter, which should teach them all truth.

And since all truth was taught and revealed to the Primitive Church, which is our Mother, let us all that be obedient Children of God, submit our selves to the judgment of the Church for the better understanding of the Articles of our faith, and of the doubtful sentences of the Scripture. Let us not go about to shew in us, by following any private mans interpretation upon the Word, another Spirit then they of the Primitive Church had, lest we deceive our selves. For there is but one Faith and one Spirit, which is not contrary to himself, neither otherwise now teacheth us then he did them. Therefore let us believe as they have taught us of the Scriptures, and be at peace with them, according as the true Catholick Church is at this day: and the God of peace assuredly will be with us, and deliver us out of all our Worldly troubles and miseries, and make us partakers of their joy and bliss, through our obedience to faith with them.

Therefore God commandeth us in Job, to ask of the elder generation, and to search diligently the memory of the Fathers. For we are but yesterdays Children, and be ignorant, and our days are like a shadow, and they shall teach thee (saith the Lord) and speak to thee, and shall utter words from their hearts. And by Solomon we are commanded, not to reject the direction of our Mother. The Lord grant you to direct your steps in all things after her, and to abhor contention with her. For as S. Paul writeth; If any man be contentious, neither we, neither the Church of God hath any such custom.

Hitherto I have shewed you (good Brother S.) my judgment generally of that you stand in doubt and dissent from others, to the which I wish you as mine own heart to be conformable, and then doubtless you cannot err, but boldly may be glad in your troubles, and triumph at the hour of your death, that you shall dy in the Church of God a faithful Martyr, and receive the Crown of eternal glory. And thus much have I written upon the occasion of a Vision before God unfained. But that you may not think that I go about to satisfy you with uncertain Visions only, and not after Gods Word, I will take the ground of your Letter, and specially answer to the same by the Scriptures, and by infallible reasons deduced out of the same, and prove the Baptism of Infants to be lawful, commendable, and necessary, whereof you seem to stand in doubt.

Indeed if you look upon the Papistical Synagogue onely, which had corrupted Gods Word by false interpretations, and hath perverted the true use of Christs Sacraments, you might seem to have good handfull of your opinion against the Baptism of Infants. But for as much as it is of more antiquity, and hath his beginning from Gods Word, and from the use of the Primitive Church, it must not in respect of the abuse in the Popish Church be neglected, or thought not expedient to be used in Christs Church. Auxentius, one of the Arrians sect, with his adherents, was one of the first that denied the Baptism of Children, and next after him Pelagius, the Heretic, and some other there were in S. Bernards time, as it doth appear by his writings, and in our days the Anabaptists, an inordinate kind of men stirred up by the Devil, to the destruction of the Gospel. But the Catholick truth delivered unto us by the Scriptures, plainly determineth, that all such are to be Baptized, as whom God acknowledgeth for his People, and voucheth them worthy of Sanctification or remission of their sins. Therefore since that Infants be in proof by the Scriptures and Scriptures.

Baptism of Infants of old antiquity in the Church.

Every thing abused in the Popish Church is not to be rejected, but the antiquity thereof to be feared and to be reduced again to the same.

the number or scroll of Co. is People, and be partakers of the promise by their purification in Christ, it must needs follow thereby, that they ought to be baptized as well as those that can profess their faith. For we judge the People of God as well by the free and liberal promise of God, as by the Confession of Faith. For to whomsoever God promisseth himself to be their God, and whom he acknowledgeth for his, those no man without great impiety may exclude from the number of the faithful. But God promisseth that he will not only be the God of such as do profess him, but also of infants, promising them his grace and remission of sins, as it appeareth by the words of the Covenant made unto Abraham. I will set my Covenant between thee and me (saith the Lord) and between thy seed after thee in their generations, with an everlasting Covenant, to be thy God, and the God of thy seed after thee. To the which Covenant Circumcision was added to be a sign of sanctification as well in Children as in men; and no man may think that this promise is abrogated with Circumcision and other Ceremonial Laws. For Christ came to fulfil the promises, and not to dissolve them. Therefore in the Gospel he saith of Infants, that is, of such as yet believed not; Let the little ones come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven. Again, It is not the will of your Father which is in Heaven, that any of these little ones do perish. Also, He that receiveth me, receiveth those that are with me, and he that receiveth those that are with me, receiveth me. Take heed therefore that ye despise not one of these babes, for I tell you their Angels do continually see in heaven my Father's face. And what may be said more plainer then this? It is not the will of the Heavenly Father, that the Infants should perish; whereby we may gather that he receiveth them freely unto his grace, although as yet they confess not their faith. Since then that the word of the promises, which is contained in Baptism, pertaineth as well to Children as to men, why should the sign of the promise, which is Baptism in water be withdrawn from Children, when Christ himself commandeth them to be received of us, and promisseth the reward of a Prophet to those that receive such a little infant, as he for an Example did put before his Disciples?

Now will I prove with manifest Arguments that Children ought to be Baptized, and that the Apostles of Christ did Baptize Children. The Lord commanded his Apostles to Baptize all Nations; therefore also Children ought to be Baptized, for they are comprehended under this word, All Nations.

Further, whom God doth account among the faithful, they are faithful, for it was said to Peter, That thing which God hath purified, thou shalt not say to be common or unclean: But God doth repute Children among the faithful: Ergo, they be faithful, except we had rather to resist God, and seem stronger and wiser then he.

And without all doubt the Apostles Baptized those which Christ commanded: but he commanded the faithful to be Baptized, among the which infants be reckoned: The Apostles then Baptized infants.

The Gospel is more then Baptism, for Paul said; The Lord sent me to preach the Gospel, and not to Baptize: not that he denied absolutely that he was sent to Baptize, but that he preferred Doctrine before Baptism, for the Lord commanded both to the Apostles: but Children be received by the Doctrine of the Gospel of God, and not refused: therefore what person being of reason may deny them Baptism, which is a thing lesser then the Gospel? for in the Sacraments be two things to be considered, the thing signified, and the sign, and the thing signified is greater then the sign, and from the thing signified in Baptism, Children are not excluded, who therefore may deny them the sign, which is Baptism in water?

Saint Peter could not deny them to be Baptized in water, to whom he saw the Holy Ghost given, which is the certain sign of Gods People: For he saith in the Acts, May any body forbid them to be Baptized in water who have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? Therefore S. Peter denied not Baptism to infants, for he knew certainly both by the Doctrine of Christ, and by the Covenant which is everlasting, that the Kingdom of Heaven pertained to infants.

None be received into the Kingdom of Heaven, but such as God loveth, and which are indured with the Spirit: for who hath not the Spirit of God, he is none of his. But infants be beloved of God, and therefore want not the Spirit of God: wherefore if they have the Spirit of God as well as men, if they be numbered among the People of God as well as we that be of age, who (I pray you) may well withstand Children to be Baptized with water, in the name of the Lord?

The Apostles in times past being yet not sufficiently instructed, did murmur against those which brought their Children unto the Lord, but the Lord rebuked them, and said; Let the Babes come unto me. Why then do not these Rebellious Anabaptists obey the Commandment of the Lord? For what do they now adays else that bring their Children to Baptism, then that they did in times past, which brought their Children to the Lord, and our Lord received them, and putting his hands on them, blessed them, and both by words and by gentle behaviour towards them, declared manifestly that Children be the People of God, and entirely beloved of God. But some will say, Why then did not Christ Baptize them? Because it is written, Iesus himself Baptized not, but his Disciples.

Moreover, Circumcision in the old Law was ministered to infants; therefore Baptism ought to be ministered in the new Law unto Children. For Baptism is come in the stead of Circumcision, as Saint Paul witnesseth, saying to the Colossians; By Christ ye are Circumcised with a Circumcision which is without hands, when ye put off the Body of sin of the Flesh, by the Circumcision of Christ, being buried together with him through Baptism. Behold, Paul calleth Baptism the Circumcision of a Christian man, which is done without hands, but that which hands no man any longer ought to be Circumcised, albeit the mystery of Circumcision do still remain in faithful People.

To this I may add, that the Servants of God were always ready to minister the Sacraments to them, for whom they were instituted. As for an example, we may behold Iesus, who most diligently procured the People of Israel to be Circumcised before they entered into the land of promise; but since the Apostles were the Preachers of the word, and the very faithful Servants of Iesus Christ, who may hereafter doubt that they Baptized Infants, since Baptism is in place of Circumcision?

Item, the Apostles did attemperate all their doings to the shadows and figures of the old Testament: therefore it is certain that they did attemperate Baptism accordingly to Circumcision, and Baptized Children because they were under the figure of Baptism; for the People of Israel passed through the Red Sea, and the bottom of the water of Jordan, with their Children. And although the Children be not always expressed, neither the Women in the Holy Scriptures, yet they are comprehended and understood in the same.

Also the Scripture evidently telleth us, that the Apostles Baptized whole Families or households: But the Children are comprehended in Family or household, as the chiefest and dearest part thereof. Therefore we may conclude, that the Apostles did Baptize Infants or Children, and not only men of lawful age. And that the house or household is taken for Man, Woman, and Child, it is manifest in the 17. of Genesis, and also in that Joseph doth call Jacob with all his House, to come out of the Land of Canaan into Egypt.

Finally, I can declare out of ancient Writers, that the Baptism of Infants hath continued from the Apostles time unto ours, neither that it was instituted by any and of ancient Councils, neither of the Pope, nor of other men, but commanded from the Scripture by the Apostles themselves. Origen upon the declaration of Saint Pauls Epistle to the Romans, expounding the sixth Chapter, saith, That the Church of Christ received the Baptism of Infants from the very Apostles. Saint Hierome maketh mention of the Baptism of Infants, in the third book against the Pelagians, and in his Epistle to Laeta. Saint Augustine reciteth for this purpose a place out of John Bishop of Constantinople, in his first Book againſt Julian, Chap. 2. and he again writing to St. Hierom, Epiſt. 28. ſaith, That St. Cypryan not making any new Decree, but ſtirmly obſerving the Faith of the Church, judged with his fellow Biſhops, that as ſoon as one was born; he might be lawfully baptized. The place of Cypryan is to be ſeen in his *Epiſt*le to Fidus.

Alfo S. Augustine in writing 'againſt the Donatiſts in the 4th Book, Chap. 23, and 24. ſaith, That the Baptiſm of Infants was not derived from the authority of man, neither of Councils, but from the tradition or doctrine of the Apoſtles.

Cyprianus Lewisius, Chap.8. approveth the Baptism of Children, and condemneth the iteration of Baptism. These Authorities of men I do alledge, not to tye the Baptism of Children unto the Testimonies of men, but to shew how Mens Testimonies do agree with Gods Word, and that the verity of Antiquity is on our side, and that the Anabaptists have nothing but Lyes for them, and new imaginations, which feign the baptism of Children to be the Pones commandment.

After this I will answer to the sum of your Arguments for the contrary. The first, which includeth all the rest, is, It is written, Go ye into all the world, and preach the glad tidings to all Creatures. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved: but he that believeth not, shall be damned, &c.

To this I answer, That nothing is added to Gods Word by baptism of Children, as you pretend, but that is done which the fame Word doth require, for that Children are accounted of Christ in the Gospel among the number of such as believe, as it appeareth by these words; He that offendeth one of these little Babes which believe in me, it were better for him to have a Mill-gone round about his neck, and to be cast into the bottom of the Sea. Where plainly Christ calleth such as be not able to confess their Faith, Believers, because of his meere grace he reupeth them for Believers. And this is no wonder to be taken, since God imputeth Faith for Righteousness unto Men that be of ripe age: for both in Men and Children, righteousness, acceptation, sanctification is of meere grace, and by imputation, that the glory of Gods grace might be praised.

g. And that the Children of faithful Parents are sanctified, and among such as do believe, is apparent in the 1 Cor. 7. And whereas you do gather by the order of the words in the fifth commandment of Christ, that Children ought to be taught before they be baptized, and to this end you alleadge many places out of the Ath., proving that such as confessed their Faith first, were baptized: I answer, that if the order of words might weigh any thing in this cause, we have the Scripture that maketh as well for us. For in St. Mark we read, that John did baptize in the Desert, preaching the baptism of Repentance. In the which place we see baptizing go before, and preaching to follow after.

And also I will declare this place of Matthew, exactly confidered, to make for the use of baptifm in Children; for St. Matthew hath it written in this wife, All power is given me (saith the Lord) in heaven and in earth, therefore giving forth mattheus, that is, Disciple ye, (as I may exprels the fignification of the word;) that is, make or gather to me Difciples of all Nations. And following, he declareth the way how they fhould gather to him Difciples out of all Nations, baptizing them and teaching; by baptizing and teaching ye fhall procure a Church to me. And both thefe aptly and briefly ferverally he fet forth, faying, Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoft, teaching them to obferve all things whatfoever I have commanded you. Now then Baptifm goeth before Doctrine.

Mark 8:16
is opened.

But hereby I do not gather, that the Gentiles, which never heard any thing before of God, and of the Son of God, and of the Holy Ghost, ought to be baptized, neither they would permit themselves to be baptized before they knew to what end. But this I have declared to shew you upon how feeble foundation the Anabaptists be grounded. And plainly it is not true which they imagine of this Text, that the Lord did only command such to be baptized whom the Apostles had first of all taught. Neither here verily is signified who only be to be baptized, but he speaketh of such as be at perfect age, and of the first foundations of Faith, and of the Church to be planted among the Gentiles, which were as yet rude and ignorant of Religion.

Such as be of age may hear, believe and confesse that which is preached and taught, but so cannot Infants; therefore we may justly collect, that he speaketh here nothing of Infants or Children. But for all this they ought not to be excluded from baptisim.

It is a general Rule, He that doth not labour, must not eat. But who is so barbarous that might think hereby, that Children should be famished?

The Lord lent his Apologies at the beginning of his setting up of his true Religion unto all Nations, unto such as were both ignorant of God, and were out of the Covenant of God; and truly such persons it behoved not first to be baptized, and afterward taught; but first to be taught, and after baptized. If at this day we should go to the Turks to convert them to the Faith of Christ, verily first we ought to teach them, and afterward baptize such as would yield to be the Servants of Christ. Likewise the Lord himself in time past did, when first he renewed the Covenant with Abraham, and ordained Circumcision to be a Seal of the Covenant after that Abraham was circumcised. But he, when he perceived the Infants also to be circumcised to the Covenant, that Circumcision was the sealing up of the Covenant, did not only circumcise Ishmael his Son, that was 13. years of age, but all other Infants that were born in his house, among whom we reckon Isaac.

Even so faithful People which were converted from Heathen Idolatry, by the preaching of the Gospel, and confesting the Faith, were baptized; when they understood their Children to be counted among the People of God, and that Baptism was the token of the People of God, they procured also their Children to be baptized. Therefore, as it is written, Abraham circumcised all the male Children of his house. Scrambly we read in the acts and writings of the Apostles, that after the Master of the house was turned to the Faith, all the whole house was baptized. And as concerning those which of old time were compelled to confess their Faith before they received Baptism, which were called Catechumens, they were such as with our Fore-fathers came from the Gentiles into the Church, who being yet rude of Faith, they did instruct in the principles of their Belief, and afterward they did baptize them; but the same ancient Fathers notwithstanding did baptize the Children of Faithful men, as I have already partly declared.

And because you do require a hasty answer of your Letter of one that is but a dull writer, I am here enforced to censure particularly to go through your Letter answering thereto, knowing that I have fully answered every part thereof in that I have already written, although not in such order as it had been met, and as I purpose. But so far as I understand that you will be no Contentious man, neither in this matter, neither in any other, contrary to the judgment of Christs Primitive Church, which is the body and fulness of Christ, I desire you in the entire love of him, or rather Christ desireth you by me (that your joy may be perfect, whereto you are now called) to submit your judgment to that Church, and to be at peace and unity in the same; that the Coast of Christ which ought to be without feame, but now also most miserably is torn in pieces by many dangerous Sects and damnable Opinions, may appear by you in no part to have been rent, neither that any giddy head in these Dog-days, might take an ensamble by you to dissent from Christs true Church: I beseech, dear Brother in the Gospel, follow the steps of the Faith of the glorious Martyrs in the Primitive Church, and of such as at this day follow the same; decline from them neither to the right hand nor to the left. Then shall Death, be it never so bitter, be more sweeter than this life; then shall Christ with all the Heavenly Jerusalem triumphantly embrace your spirit with unspeakable gladness and exaltation, who in this Earth was content to joyne your spirit with their Imitations, according as it is commanded by the Word, that the spirit of the Prophets should be subject to the Prophets. One thing ask with David ere you depart, and require the same, that you may dwell with a full accord in his House, for there is glory and worship: and so with Simoon in the Temple embracing Christ, depart in peace: to the which Peace Christ bring both you and me, and all our loving Brethren that love God in the unity of Faith, by such ways as shall please Him, to his glory. Let the bitter passion of Christ, which he suffered for your sake, and the horrible torments which the godly Martyrs of Christ have endured before us, and also the inestimable reward of your life to come, which is hidden yet a little while from you with Christ, strengthen, comfort, and encourage you to the end of that glorious race which you are in, Amen.

Concerning the party to whom this Letter was written, note that he was converted and afterward died in the same Faith as this Letter did persuade him.

Your Take-fellow in Captivity for the verity of Christ's Gospel, to love and dye with you in the unity of Faith.

John Philpot.

Divers other Letters were written by Mr. Philpot to divers, but these are most principal I have excerpted and inserted. Amongst which I thought here not much impertinent to the place, to adjoin another certain Letter of a godly and zealous Gospeller (whose name in her writing doth not appear) who in defending and commending the quarrel of this Mr. John Philpot, Christ's most famous and worthy Martyr, was therefore troubled and brought before Bishop Boner. And therefore being appointed by the said Bishop to appear upon a certain day to answer for her self; indeed kept not her day with the Bishop, but instead of her appearance sent him this Letter here following.

We be unto the Idolatrous Shepherds of England, that feed themselves. Should not the Shepherds feed the Flock? but ye have eaten the fat, ye have clothed you with the wool; the best fed have ye slain, but the Flock have ye not nourished, the weak have ye not holden up, the sick have ye not healed, the broken have ye not bound together, the cut-cast, have ye not brought again, the lost have ye not sought, but charitably and cruelly have ye ruled them, Ezek.

FOrasmuch (my Lord) as my business is such that I cannot come to your Lordship, according to my promise, I have been so bold to write these few words unto you, partly to excuse mine absence, and partly to answer your Lordships demands at my last most happy departure from you. As touching the breach of my Promise with you in not coming again at the hour appointed, your Lordship shall understand that I take the counsel of the Angel, which warned the Wife men not to come again to Herod according to their promise, but to turn home again another way. Now, my Lord, I perceiving your Lordship to be a more cruel Tyrant than ever was Herod, and more desirous to destroy Christ in his poor Members than ever he was, which to destroy Christ killed his own Son, I thought good to take the Angels counsel, and to come no more at you; for I see that you are set all in a rage like a ravening Wolf against the poor Lambs of Christ, appointed to the slaughter for the testimony of the Truth. Indeed you are called the common Cut-throat and general Slaughter-house to all the Bishops of England; and therefore it is wisdom for me and all other simple Sheep of the Lord, to keep us out of your Butchers-hall as long as we can: especially seeing that you have such store already, that you are not able to drink all their Blood, lest you should break your Belly; and therefore let them lye still and dye for hunger. Therefore (my Lord) I thought it good to tarry a while until your Lordships stomach were come to you a little better; for I do perceive by your great fat Cheeks, that you lack no Lambs-flesh yet, and believe you are almost glutted with supping so much Blood, and therefore you will let some of the leanest dye in Prison, which will then be meat good enough for you:

barking Beagles, Harpfield and his Fellows: but yet, my Lord, it were a great deal more for your Lordships Honour, if your Chaplains might have the meat roasted in Smithfield at the fire of the Stake, yea, and when it is something fat and fair-looking; for now they have nothing but skin and bones, and if the Dogs come hastily to it, they may chance shortly to be choked, and then your hunting will be hindered greatly, if it be not altogether marred. I hear say, my Lord, that some of the butcherly Curs came of late to my house to seek their Prey, and that they go round about the City (as David saith) grinning and grudging that they have not meat enough; therefore believe they have killed my poor Brethren and Sisters that have lain so long upon the Butcherly-Stall, and eaten them up: for I hear say their Friends could not be suffered to see them these three days and more; therefore I perceive now that if I had come again according to my promise, your Lordship, like a ravening Wolf, or else some of your Hell-hounds would quickly have worried me: but I see well my appointed time is not yet come, therefore I will yet live and thank him for my deliverance, with continual Songs of laud and praise. Thus have I been bold to trouble your Lordship with telling you the truth, and the very cause that I came not to you again according to my unpurposed Promise. I trust your Lordship will take this in good part; and accept it as a lawful excuse, and not doubting but your Lordship would have done the like, if you had been in my case.

Now as concerning the second part that caused me to write unto your Lordship, which is to answer unto your subtle or rather cruel demand of my judgment of the death of that blessed Martyr of Christ Jesus, good Master John Philpot, I will answer your Lordship simply and plainly, what peril forever shall come thereof. Truly, my Lord, I do not only think, but I am also most certain and sure, that he as a very man of God, died a true Martyr and constant Confessor of his dear Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to whom he did most faithfully commit his sweet Soul, who will surely keep the same with him in joy for evermore. Alas, my Lord, I do verily believe and know that your Lordship hath committed an horrible and most cruel murder in the unjust condemning and killing of him, and that you shall make as heavy an account for his Blood, which shortly shall be required at your hand, as ever your great Grandfather cruel Cain did or shall do for his innocent Brother Abel. Moreover, because I am credibly informed that your Lordship doth believe, and have in secret said, that there is no Hell, I certify you, that your Lordship did never any thing in all your life that so much did redound to your Lordships dishonour, and perpetual shame and infamy, as your killing the Body of this blessed Prophet doth; especially seeing that he was none of your Dioceses, nor had offended any of your Lordships devilish and cruel Laws. Verily I hear almost every Body say in all places where I come, that your Lordship is made the common Slaughter-house to all your Fellows, Bishops, Bishops I would say; yea, the very Papists themselves begin now to abhor your blood-thirstiness, and speak shame of your Tyranny. Like Tyranny, believe me my Lord, every Child that can any whit speak, can call upon by your name and say, Bloody Boner is Bishop of London, and every man hath it as perfectly upon his fingers ends, as his Paternoster, how many you for your part have burned with fire, and famished in prison; they say the whole sum furmounteth to forty Persons within this three quarters of this year. Therefore, my Lord, though your Lordship believeth that there is neither Heaven nor Hell, nor God nor Devil: yet if your Lordship love your own honesty, which was lost long ago, you were best to surcease from this cruel burning of true Christian men, and also from murdering of some in Prison; for that indeed offendeth mens minds most; yea, even your old friends the rankest Papists that be. For, say they, Felix the Heathen Ruler did not forbid Paul's Friends to visit him in Prison, and to bring him necessary relief; and therefore it is a very great shame and fin, to see a Bishop that beareth the name of a Christian, to be more cruel upon his poor Brethren, than an Heathen, Turk, or Indian.

This is mens sayings in every place, not only of this Realm, but also of the most part of the World, and the common talk they have of your Lordship; Therefore I thought to be bold so with your Lordship, as to tell you of it, though perchance you will give me but small thanks for my labour. Well, as for that, I put it to your Lordships choice, for I have as much already as I look for: Finally, my Lord, I will give you to understand, that the death of this constant Martyr and valiant Souldier of Jesus Christ hath given a greater shake towards the overthrowing of your Papistical Kingdom, than you shall ever be able to recover again these seven years, do the best you can, and let as many crafty dawblers to patch it up with untimpered Clay as you will; yea, though prating Pendleton, that wicked Apollata, apply all his wily wits to help them. Verily, my Lord, by all mens reports, his blessed life could never have done the like forrow to Satans Synagogue, whereof some say your Lordship is a mighty Member, as his happy death hath done. You have broken a Pot indeed, but the precious Word contained therein is so notably therewithall shed abroad, that the sweet favour thereof hath wonderfully well refreshed all the true Household or Congregation of Christ, that they cannot abide any more the stinking favour of your filthy Ware that came from the dunghill of Rome, though your Lordships Judas do set them to file every where to fill your Bags. I put your Lordship out of doubt, that if you do break any more such Pots, you will mar your own Market altogether: for I promise you, most men begin to mislike your devilish doings, and wonderfully to loath your Popish Pedlary Wares.

Thus have I (according to your Lordships commandment) shewed you simply what I think of that good mans death, whose Blood crieth for vengeance against your Lordships butcherly bloody proceedings in the cars of the Lord of Hosts, who will shortly revenge the fame upon your pillid Pate, and upon the rest of all your Poll-thorn Brethren, the very marked Cattel of the great Antichrist of Rome. The measure of his Iniquity is filled up to the brim, therefore will God shortly pour in double unto your deserved destruction. And then I when your new made Profelytes will be glad to cover their Crowns with a Cow-turd (savouring your Lordships Reverence I should have said first.) Well, I rather desire their conversion than confusion, the Lord send the one of them shortly, as may be most to his glory, Amen.

I signifie also unto your Lordship, that the railing words which your lying Preacher shewed forth of his filthy Fountain upon Sunday against the dear Servant of God, good Master Philpot, do greatly redound to your Lordships dishonour, and much deface your spiritual Honour. Verily I see that the great wrath of God hath so blinded your eyes, that you see not what is with you, nor what is against you, but still you vomit out your own shame, and make all the world wonder upon you. Was it not enough for you to condemn him most unjustly, yea contrary to your own Laws, and to kill his innocent Body most tyrannously, but you must also set a lying Limb of the Devil to blaspheme, slander, and belye him now he is dead? Oh Viperous generation, feed of the Serpent, and right Children of the Devil! Full well do you counterfeit your Fathers steps, whom Christ calleth a Murderer, and a Lyar from the beginning; which two things be the only weapons of your War, wherewith you maintain all your mischief, that is to say, Lying and Murder; for those whom ye cannot overcome with your lying persuasions, them you kill most cruelly, and then blaspheme and belye them with railing Sentences when they are dead. But all this will not blind the People of God, nor yet make them any whit the less believe the Truth, nor abate their love from the true Preachers thereof, yea, it is a true sign and a token that they are the very Disciples of Christ; for he hath said, Blessed are ye when men revile you, and say all manner of evil sayings against you for my Names sake. Rejoyce and be glad, for great is your reward in Heaven. And doubtless great is the good mans reward in Heaven by this time, as your Lordships damnation shall be great in Hell, except you repent and surcase from shedding innocent Blood. But it is to be feared your heart is hardened as *Pharao*s was, seeing that with Judas ye have sold and betrayed your Master. Take heed, my Lord, lest you come to the same end or a worse than he did. For verily I cannot perceive how you should escape it long; therefore say not, but a Woman gave you warning, if you list to take it. And as for the obtaining of your Popish purpose in suppressing the Truth, I put you out of doubt, you shall not obtain it so long as you go this way to work as ye do; for verily I believe that you have lost the hearts of 10000. that were rank Papists within this twelve Months.

It is found very true that one holy Doctor saith: The Blood of the Martyrs is the Seed of the Gospel; when one is put to death a thousand doth rise for him. And that this is true, you may well perceive by the heavy love that the People shewed unto good Master Philpot at his going to his death. They went not about to make an Idol of him, as your Address-brood would bear men in hand; but they worshipped God which gave such strength to his dear Child, to dye so constantly for the testimony of his Truth, unto the utter destruction of that detestable Idolatry which your Lordship doth most devilishly maintain with the force of Fire, Faggots, and Sword: yea, and rather than fail, to famish Men in Prison again, as ye have done already. It is reported of your own Tormentors, that the six Prisoners that you have in your Prison, be put in six several places all the day, and every night brought together, and set in the Stocks. Forsooth, my Lord, this doth get you a foul name all abroad the Countrey, and yet all will not help your Lordships pestilent purpose, but every way hinder the same. For Zorobabel will be found no Lyar, which said, The Truth shall have victory. You do but strive against the stream, and kick against the prick; the Lord doth laugh your doings to scorn, and will bring all your counsels and devices to nought (as knoweth the Lord God) who of his great mercy shortly convert your Lordship, or utterly confound you, and get his Name a glory over you, Amen.

Your Lordships Orator, who prayeth daily to God that he may reward you according to your deeds, Anno 1556.

The Story of seven Martyrs suffering together at London, for the testimony of Christs Gospel.

THE Catholic Prelates of the Popes band being as yet not satisfied with this their one years bloody murdering of the Reverend, Learned, and principal Members of Christs Church (whereof there were now very few, which either were not consumed by most cruel fire, or else, for the avoiding of their Popish rage, compelled to flee their natural Country) continued still this next year also, which was Anno 1556. in no less cruelty towards the poor, simple and inferior sort of People (I mean in degree, though God be praised, not in steadfastness) having yet sometimes amongst them such as were both learned and of good estimation, as in continuance of this story shall appear.

Wherefore (as the first Fruits thereof) to begin this year withal, about the 27 day of January were burned in Smithfield at London these seven persons hereafter following, to wit:

Thomas Whittle, Priest.
Bartlet Green, Gentleman.
John Tudson, Artificer.
John Went, Artificer.
Thomas Browne.
Isabel Foster, Wife.
Joan Worne, alias Lashford, Maid.

Smithfield,
Anno 1556:
January 27.

All which Seven, as they were burned together in one fire, so were they likewise all upon one sort and form of Articles condemned in one day. Howbeit, forasmuch as the gifts of God in them were diverse (some more abounding in knowledge than others) their dealings withal were also diverse, as shall be more plainly perceived in the discoursing of their several processes hereafter following. And therefore for the better understanding hereof, I will first (by the leave of the Lord) passing over their private Articles and Examinations had at sundry times in the Bishops house, set forth their general Examinations in the publick Consistory, upon the Bishops Articles there ministred unto them, with their Answers also unto the same, according as they all agreed after one manner and sort together, as here by the words both of the Articles, and their Answers under-written, may appear.

The form and words of Boners Articles ministred to the seven Persons above-mentioned in his Consistory.

And first to behold the manner of speech in these Bishops, sitting in their Majesty to terrifie the ears of the simple withal, let us hear the Pontifical phrase of this Bishop, beginning in this sort.

The within written Articles, and every of them, and every part and parcel of them, we Edmund, by the permission of God, Bishop of London, do object and minister to thee Thomas Whittle, &c. of our meere Office, for thy Soules health, and for the reformation of thine offences and misdemeanours, monishing thee in the vertue of obedience, and under the pains of both censures of the Church, and also of other pains of the Law, to answer fully, plainly, and truly to all the same.

First, that thou N. hast firmly, stedfastly, and constantly believed in times past, and so dost now believe at this present, that there is here in Earth a Catholick Church, in the which Catholick Church the Faith and Religion of Christ is truly professed, allowed, received, kept and retained of all faithful and true Christian People.

Seven Sacraments.

2. Item, That thou the said N. in times past hast also believed, and so dost believe at this present, that there are in the Catholick Church seven Sacraments, instituted and ordained by God, and by the consent of the holy Church allowed, approved, received, kept, and retained.

The God-fathers Faith.

3. Item. That thou the said N. wast in times past baptized in the Faith of the said Catholick Church, professing by thy Godfathers and Godmother, the Faith and Religion of Christ and the observation thereof, renouncing there the Devil and all his pomps and works, and was by the said Sacrament of Baptism incorporate to the Catholick Church, and made a faithful Member thereof.

4. Item, That thou the said N. coming to the age of fourteen years, and so to the age of discretion, didst not depart from the said Profession and Faith, nor didst mislike any part of the same Faith or doings, but didst like a faithful Christian person abide and continue in all the same by the space of certain years, ratifying and confirming all the same.

Sacrifice of the Mass.

5. Item, That then the said N. notwithstanding the premises, hast of late, that is to say, within these two years last past, within the City and Diocess of London, swerved at the least way from some part of the said Catholick Faith and Religion: and amongst other things thou hast misliked and earnestly spoken against the Sacrifice of the Mass, the Sacrament of the Altar, and the Unity of the Church, railing and maligning the Authority of the See of Rome, and the Faith observed in the same.

See of Rome.

6. Item, That thou the said N. hast heretofore refused, and dost refuse at this present to be reconciled again to the unity of the Church, not acknowledging and confessing the Authority of the said See of Rome to be lawfull.

7. Item, That thou the said N. misliking the Sacrifice of the Mass, and the Sacrament of the Altar, hast refused to come to thy Parish Church to hear Mass, and to receive the said Sacrament, and hast also expressly said, that in the said Sacrament of the Altar, there is not the very Body and Blood of our saviour Christ, really, substantially, and truly, but hast affirmed expressly, that the Mass is Idolatry and abomination, and that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is none other substance, but only material Bread, and material Wine, which are tokens of Christs Body and Blood only, and that the substance of Christs Body and Blood is in no wise in the said Sacrament of the Altar.

Anno 1556.

The Sacrament of the Altar.

8. Item, That thou the said N. being convented before certain Judges or Commissioners, for thy disorder herein, and being found obstinate, wilful and heady, wast by their commandment sent unto me and my Prison, to be examined by me, and process to be made against thee for thy offence herein.

9. Item. That all and singular the premises have been, and be true and manifest, and thy self not only inflamed and suspected thereof, but also culpable therein; and by reason of the same, thou wast and art of the Jurisdiction of me Edmund, Bishop of London, and before me, according to the order of the Ecclesiastical Laws, are to be convented, and also by me to be punished and reformed.

Here follow likewise their Answers, in general, made to the Articles above rehearsed.

And first concerning the first Article, in believing there is a Catholick Church.

TO the first Article they altogether agreeing, affirmed the same to be true: John Tudsom, and Thomas Broun, further adding, that the Church of England, as it was at that present used, was no part of the true Catholick Church.

Answer to the 1. Article.

Concerning the second Article, that there be in the Church seven Sacraments.

To the second Article they answered, that they acknowledged but only two Sacraments in Christs Catholick Church, that is to say, Baptism, and the Supper of the Lord: John Went and Tudsom affirming, that the Sacrament of the Altar, as it is used, is an Idol, and no Sacrament at all.

To the 2. Article.

Concerning the third Article, that they were first baptized in the Faith of the Catholick Church, professing by their Godfathers the profession of the same, &c.

To the third Article they all agreed, and confessed it to be true, that they were baptized in the Faith of Christ, and of the Church then taught; and afterward during the time of King Edward the sixth, they hearing the Gospel preached, and the Truth opened, followed the order of the Religion and Doctrine then used and set forth in the reign of the said King Edward.

To the 3. Article.

Concerning the fourth Article, that they for the space of certain years did ratifie or allow, and not depart from any part of the profession of the same Church.

To this fourth Article they granted also and agreed; John Went adding moreover, that about seven years past, he then being about twenty years of age, began to mislike certain things used in the Church of England, as the ministrations of the Sacrament of the Altar; likewise all the Ceremonies of the said Church, and did likewise at that present time mislike the same as they were used, although his Godfathers and Godmother promised for him the contrary.

To the 4. Article.

John Tudsom added also in much like sort, and said, that when he came to the years of discretion, that is about nine years past, being about eighteen years of age, he did mislike the Doctrine and Religion then taught and set forth in the Church of England, saving in King Edwards time, in whose time the Gospel was truly set forth: and further said, that the Doctrine set forth in the

Queens

Anno 1556. Queens reign was not agreeable to Gods Word, nor yet to the true Catholick Church that Christ speaketh of, &c.

The Faith which they were baptised in, was in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, believing the Articles of the Creed, with promise made to abrenounce the Devil, the Flesh, and the World, of the which Faith their Godfathers and Godmothers were Sureties for them, and in this Faith they continue still. As for other Ceremonies and abuses of the Church, they never made any promise in their Baptism. To weare from the corruptions of the See of Rome, and heretics of the Mass, is not to go from the Catholick Church or Christi.

Isabel Foster with other granted, adding likewise, and saying to the said four Articles, that she continued in the same Faith and Religion which she was baptized in, after she came to the years of discretion as other Common People did; howbeit, blindly and without knowledge, till the reign of King Edward the sixth: at which time she hearing the Gospel truly preached and opened to the People, received thereupon the Faith and Religion then taught and set forth, &c.

Concerning the fifth Article, that they of late years have swerved and gone away, misliked, and spoken against the profession of the same Church, at least some part thereof, especially the Sacrifice of the Mass, the Sacrament of the Altar, and the Authority of the Church of Rome.

To the fifth Article, they answered the same to be true, according to the contents thereof: Thomas Whittle adding moreover, that he had swerved and gone away, and not in whole but in part, not from the whole Catholick Church, but from the Church of Rome, in speaking against the Mass, the Sacrifice thereof, and the See of Rome.

Joan Lashford (alias Joan Warr) granting with the other the said Articles, addeth moreover, that she never hitherto swerved or went away, nor yet doth, from any part of Christs Catholick Faith and Religion: but faith, that from the time she was Eleven years of age, she hath misliked the sacrifice of the Mass, the Sacrament of the Altar, and the Authority of the See of Rome, with the Doctrine thereof, because they were against Christs Catholick Church, and the right Faith of the same.

Barlet Green answering with the other to this Article, addeth and faith, that he swerved not from the Catholick Faith, but only from the Church of Rome, &c.

Concerning the sixth Article, that they refuse to be reconciled to the unity of the said Church of Rome.

To the sixth Article they answer and confesse the same to be true, rendering the cause thereof, because (say they) the same Church and Doctrine therein set forth and taught, disagree with the unity of Christs Word, and the true Catholick Faith, &c.

Whereunto Barlet Green answered that he is contented to be reconciled to the unity of Christs Catholick Church, but not of the Church of Rome. In like manner added also Joan Went.

Concerning the seventh Article, that they refuse to come to bear Mass, and to receive the said Sacrament, calling it an Idol, &c.

To the seventh Article they answer, and confesse the contents thereof to be true, giving withal the reason and cause of this their so doing, for that the Mass with the Sacrament thereof, as it was then used and set forth in the Church of England, is dissonant to the word and teaching of the People, &c.

Joan Went furthermore said, as concerning the Mass, that he believeth no less, but the Mass which he calleth the Supper of the Lord, as it is now used in the Realm of England, is naught, full of Idolatry, and against Gods Word so far as he seeth it; howbeit, he faith that since the Queens Coronation by chance he hath been present where the Mass hath been said, whereof he is sorry.

Isabel Foster also answering to the said Articles, with the other before, confessed moreover, that since Queen Maries reign she hath not heard Mass, nor received the Sacrament, but hath refused to come in place where it was ministered: for the knoweth no such Sacrament to be. And being demanded of her Belief in the same, she faith, that there is but only material Bread, and material Wine, and not the real substance of the Body of Christ in the same Sacrament: for so she hath been taught to believe by the Preachers in the time of King Edward, whom she believeth to have preached the Truth in that behalf.

Concerning the eighth Article, that they were sent by the Commissioners to the Bishop to be examined and imprisoned.

To the eighth Article they grant the same and the contents thereof to be so.

Thomas Whittle adding and affirming that the Lord Chancellor that then was, sent him up to the Bishop there present.

Barlet Green added, that he was sent up to the said Bishop, but for no offence herein Articulate.

Joan Went said, that Dr Story, Queen Maries Commissioner, examined him upon the Sacrament and because he denied the Real presence, he presented this Examine to the Bishop.

Joan Tudson likewise examined by Mr. Cholmley and Doctor Story, upon the same matters, and for not coming to the Church, and accused by the same, because he would not agree to them, was sent to the Bishop.

Thomas Brown also said, that he for not coming to the Church of St. Bridet, was brought by the Constable to the Bishop, &c.

Joan Warr confessed that she was sent by Doctor Story to the Bishop of London, about twelve weeks ago, since which time she hath continued with the said Bishop.

Concerning the ninth Article.

To the ninth Article they confesse and say; that as they believe the premises before by them confessed to be true, so they deny not the same to be manifest, and that they be of the jurisdiction of London.

And thus having exprest their Articles, with their answers jointly made unto the same, it remaineth further more fully to discourse the stories, and handling of all the seven aforesaid Martyrs severally and particularly by themselves, first beginning with Thomas Whittle.

The Story of all these seven Martyrs, particularly described, in order here followeth, and first of Thomas Whittle, who first recanting, then returning again, with great constancy and fortitude stood to the defence of Christs Doctrine against the Popes, to the first.

The story of Mr. Philpot, mention was made before, of a married Priest, whom he found in the Colchouse at his first coming thither, in heaviness of mind and great sorrow, for recanting the Doctrine which he had taught in King Edwards days, whose name was Thomas Whittle of Essex; and thus lieth his story. This Thomas Whittle, after he had been expelled from the place in Essex where he served, went abroad where he might, now here and there, as occasion was minifred, preaching and sowing the Gospel of Christ. At length being apprehended by one Edmond Alabaster, in hope of reward and promotion, which he miserably gaped after, he was brought first as prisoner before the Bishop of Winchester, who then was fallen lately sick of his disease, whereof not long after he died most strangely. But the apprehender for his profered service was highly checked and rated of the Bishop, asking if there were no man unto whom he might bring such Rascals, but to him. Hence (quoth he) out of my sight thou Varlet, what dost thou trouble me with such matters? The greedy Cormorant being thus defeated of his desired prey, yet thinking to seek and to hunt further, carried his Prisoner to the Bishop of London, with whom what an evil mess of handling this Whittle had, and how he was by the Bishop all to beaten and buffeted about the face, by this his own narration in a Letter sent unto his Friend, manifestly may appear.

Upon Thursday which was the tenth of January, the Bishop of London sent for me Thomas Whittle Minister, reporter out of the Porters-lodge, where I had been all night, lying upon the earth upon a Paller where I had as painful handling a night of sickness as ever I had, God be thanked. And when I came before him, he talked with me many things of the Sacrament so grossly, as is not worthy to be rehearsed. And amongst other things he asked me if I would have come to Mass that morning if he had sent for me. Where-

When I answered, that I would have come to him at his commandment, but to your Mass (said I) I have small affection. At which answer he was displeased fore, and said, I thought I had with Bread and Water. And as I followed him through the great Hall, he turned back and beat me with his Fist, first on the one Cheek, and then on the other, as the sign of my beating did many days appear. And then he led me into a little Salt-house, where I had no Straw nor Bed, but lay two nights on a Table, and slept soundly, I thank God.

Then, upon the Friday next after, I was brought to my Lord, and he then gave me many fair words, and said he would be good to me. And so he going to Fulham, committed me to Dr. Harpsfield, that he and I in that Afternoon should commune together, and draw out certain Articles, whereunto if I would subscribe, I should be dismissed. But Dr. Harpsfield sent not for me till night, and then perwaded me very sore to forsake my Opinions. I answered, I held nothing but the Truth, and therefore I could not so lightly turn therefrom. So I thought I should at that time have had no more ado: but he had made a certain Bill, which the Register pulled out of his bosom, and read it. The Bill indeed was very easily made, and therefore more dangerous: for the effect thereof was, to detect all Errors and Heresies against the Sacrament of the Altar, and other Sacraments, and to believe the Faith of the Catholic Church, and live accordingly.

The Copy of this Bill here mentioned, if it please the gentle Reader to peruse, so as it came to our hands we have hereunto adjoined, written, and contained in their own words, as followeth to be seen.

The Bill of Submission, offered to Thomas Whittle to subscribe.

I Thomas Whittle Priest, of the Diocese of London, knowledge and confess with my mouth, agreeing with my heart before you Reverend Father in God, Edmund Bishop of London, my Ordinary, that I do detest and abhor all manner of Heresies and Errors against the Sacrament of the Altar, or any of the Sacraments of the Church, which Heresies and Errors have heretofore been committed in any wise by the Catholic Church: and I do protest and declare by these presents, that I do both now hold, and also intend by Gods grace always hereafter to hold, observe and keep, in all points the Catholic Faith and Belief of Christs Church, according as this Church of England, being a member of the said Catholic Church, doth now profess and keep, and in no wise to swerve, decline, or go from the said Faith, during my natural life, submitting my self fully and wholly to you, Reverend Father, my said Ordinary, in all things concerning my reformation and amendment at all times. In witness whereof I the said Thomas Whittle Priest, have herewith subscribed my name, written, &c.

To this Bill I did indeed set my hand, being much desired and counselled so to do; and the flesh being always desirous to have liberty, I considered not thoroughly the inconvenience that might come thereupon; and respect I desired to have had, but earnestly they desired me to subscribe. Now when I had so done, I had little joy thereof. For by and by my Mind and Conscience told me by Gods Word that I had done evil, by such a sleight means to shake off the sweet Cross of Christ: and yet it was not my seeking, as God he knoweth, but altogether came of them. Oh the crafty subtilty of Satan in his Members! Let every man that God shall deliver into their hands, take good heed, and cleave fast to Christ: for they will leave no corner of his Conscience unsought, but will attempt all guileful and subtle means to corrupt him, to fall both from God and his Truth. But yet let no man despair of Gods help, for Peter did fall and rise again. And David faith, A righteous man though he fall, he shall not be cast away: for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand. For I for my part have in my infirmities, and yet have I found Gods present help and comfort in time of need, I thank him therefore.

The night after I had subscribed, I was sore grieved, and for sorrow of Conscience could not sleep. For in the deliverance of my Body out of bonds, which I might have had, I could find no joy nor comfort, but still was in my Conscience tormented more and more, being assured by Gods Spirit and his Word, that I through evil counsel and aduilement had done amiss. And both with disquietness of mind, and with my other cruel handling, I was sickly, lying upon the ground when the Keeper came and so I desired him to pray Dr. Harpsfield to come to me, and so he did.

And when he came, and the Register with him, I told him that I was not well at ease, but especially I told him I was grieved very much in my Conscience and mind, because I had subscribed. And I said, that my Conscience had so accused me, through the just judgment of God and his Word, that I had felt Hell in my Conscience, and Satan ready to devour me: and therefore I pray you Mr. Harpsfield (said I) let me have the Bill again, for I will not stand to it. So he gently commanded it to be fetched, and gave it me, and suffered me to put out my name, whereof I was right glad when I had so done, although death should follow. And hereby I had experience of Gods providence and mercy towards me, who trieth his people, and suffereth them to fall, but not to be left: for in the midst of this temptation and trouble, he gave me warning of my deed, and also delivered me, his name be praised for evermore, Amen.

Neither Devil nor cruel Tyrant can pluck any of Christs Sheep out of his hand. Of the which flock of Christs Sheep I trust undoubtedly I am one by means of his death and blood-shedding, which shall at the last day stand at his right hand, and receive with other his blessed Benediction. And now being condemned to dye, my Conscience and Mind, I praise God is quiet in Christ, and I by his grace am very well willing and content to give over this Body to the death, for the testimony of his Truth and pure Religion, against Antichrist and all his false Religion and Doctrine. They that report otherwise of me, speak not truly. And as for Fountain, I saw him not all this while.

By me Thomas Whittle, Minister.

Concerning the troubled mind of this godly man, and tearing his name out of the Bill, here followeth the report of the same, written in the Letters both of the said Harpsfield, and also of Johnson the Register, being then present thereat, and reporters of the same unto the Bishop, as in their Letters hereto annexed it to be seen.

The Copy of Nicholas Harpsfields Letter, touching Mr. Whittle, written to Boner Bishop of London.

Please your good Lordship to understand, that yesterday I dined with my Lord of Exeter, who after my first coming to him, asked me what news? I answered, none but good that I had heard. No, faith he. Why, it is a rumor in the City, that to morrow the Queens Grace will take her journey towards the King. I answered, that I thought it not to be any whit true, but an invention of Hereticks: yea, and further, faith he, there is a report made abroad of my Lord your Master, that he is in discomfort, and therefore will suffer no man to come unto him. When I heard thus much, I began to laugh, and to declare how untrue this report was: so that my Lord (who before was very sad) afterward knowing the Truth, rejoiced much to hear that all was well with your Lordship, and desired me to have his hearty Commendations to your Lordship.

One of my Lord of Pembroke's Retinue, a very handsome Man, and as far as I can yet learn, a Catholic, is a suter to your Lordship to have licence to erect a School: and the order which he intendeth to use, is contained in this printed Paper, which I send here inclosed to your Lordship. I would be glad for my Lord of Pembroke's sake, that he understood, that upon my motion your Lordship were content he should teach as he intendeth. Mr. Johnson and I have travelled with the Priest, and he hath subscribed his name to this draught which is herein inclosed, and hath promised he will stand to the same before your Lordship.

When I had written thus much, suddenly came tidings to me, that Jordanis conversus est retrosum. Cluney coming to the Priett, found him lying prostrate, and groaning as though he should have died forthwith. Then Cluney took him up, and set him upon a Stool, and came to me, and told me of this Revel. It chanced that Mr. Johnson was with me, and we went to this fond Hertick, and found him lying all along, holding his hands up, and looking hypocritically towards Heaven. I caused Thomas More and Cluney to set him on the Stool, and with much ado at length he told me, that Satan had been with him in the night, and told him that he was damned, and weeping he prayed Mr. Johnson and me to see the Bill, whereunto he subscribed, and when he saw it, he tore out his name, et libro scilicet riventum. Me thinketh by him he will needs burn a Fagot, neither is there any other likelyhood of the young Woman. I have enquired of the two persons which sue to have a Licence to eat flesh. And the Woman of Christ's Church is indeed very much diseased, and hath been long diseased, and she and her Husband both Catholic of the other yet I can learn nothing. Thus Jesus evermore preserve your good Lordship, and my Mistress your Lordships Sister, with all yours. This present Saturday.

Your Lordships most bounden Servant,

Here followeth another Letter of Robert Johnson Register, touching Thomas Whittle, written to Boner Bishop of London.

My bounden duty premised, pleaseth your Lordship to understand, that this last Friday in the Afternoon, Mr. Archdeacon of London did diligently travel with Sir Thomas Whittle. I being present, and perceiving his conformity, as outwardly appeared, devised this Submission, and he being content therewith did subscribe the same. But now this Saturday morning Mr. Archdeacon and I, upon Cluney's report, declaring that he feigned himself to be distracted of his senses, went unto him, to whom he declared, that Satan in the night time appeared unto him, and said that he was damned, for that he had done against his Conscience in subscribing to the said Submission, with other like words, &c. And then Mr. Archdeacon, at his earnest request, delivered unto him the Submission. And thereupon the said Whittle did tear out his subscription, made in the foot of the same, as your Lordship shall perceive by the Submission first now unto your Lordship by Mr. Archdeacon; wherewith the said Whittle was somewhat quieted.

And as touching Joan Lassford, Mr. Archdeacon did likewise travel with her, and shewing her Sir Thomas Submission, which I read unto her two times, demanded if she could be content to make the like Submission, and she desired respite until this morning. And being now effoons demanded, in like wise faith, that she will not make any thing in writing, nor put any sign thereunto. Mr. Archdeacon and I intend this Afternoon to examine the said Sir Thomas upon Articles: for as yet there doth appear nothing in writing against him, as knoweth Almighty God, who preserve your good Lordship in prosperity long with honour to endure.

From London this Saturday.

By your Lordships daily Beads-man, and bounden Servant,
Robert Johnson.

The Condemnation, Death, and Martyrdom of Thomas Whittle.

Concerning the words and answers of the said Thomas Whittle at his last Examination before the Bishop, upon the 14. day of January, the year aboveexpressed, Boner with other his fellow Bonerings sitting in his Confraternity at Afternoon, first called forth Thomas Whittle, with whom he began in effect as followeth. Because ye be a Priest (saith he) as I and other Bishops here be, and did receive the order of Priesthood, after the right and form of the Catholic Church, ye shall not think but I will minister justice as well unto you as unto other. And then the said Boner in further communication did charge him, that where in times past he had said Mais according to the Order then used, the same Whittle now of late had spoken and railed against the same, saying that it was Idolatry and Abomination. Whereunto Thomas Whittle answering again said, that at such time as he so said Mais, he was then ignorant, &c. adding moreover, that the elevation of the Sacrament at the Mais, giveth occasion of Idolatry to them that be ignorant and unlearned.

After this the Bishop making hast to the Articles (which in all his Examinations ever he harped upon) came to this Article, That thou wast in times past baptized in the Faith of the Catholic Church.

To this the said Whittle inferred again, I was baptized in the Faith of the Catholic Church, although I did forsake the Church of Rome. And yeamy Lord, do call these Heresies, that be no Heresies, and do charge me therewith as Heresies, and ye ground your self upon that Religion, which is not agreeable to Gods Word, &c.

Then the said victorious Souldier and Servant of our Saviour, constant in the Verity received and professed, was again admonished, and with perswasions intreated by the Bishop; who because he would not agree unto the same, the Bishop forthwith proceeded, first to his actual degradation, that is, to unprist him of all his Priestly trinkets and Clerical habit. The order and manner of which their Popish and most vain degradation, before in the story of Bishop Hooper is to be seen. Then Whittle in the midst of the Ceremonies, when he saw them so busie in degrading him, after their Father the Popes Pontifical fashion, said unto them, Paul and Titus had not so much to do with their Priests and Bishops. And farther, speaking to the Bishop, he said unto him, My Lord, your Religion standeth most with the Church of Rome, and not with the Catholic Church of Christ.

The Bishop after this, according to his accustomed formal proceedings, assayed him yet again with words rather than with substantial Arguments, to conform him to his Religion. Who then denying so to do, said, As for your Religion, I cannot be persuaded that it is according to Gods Word.

The Bishop then asked what fault he found in the administration of the Sacrament of the Altar.

Whittle answered and said, it is not used according to Christs Institution, in that it is privately and not openly done. And also for that it is ministered but in one kind to the Lay People, which is against Christs Ordinance. Farther, Christ commanded it not to be elevated nor adored: For the adoration and elevation cannot be approved by Scripture.

Well, quoth Boner, my Lords here and other Learned men have shewed great Learning for thy conversion, wherefore if thou wilt yet return to the Faith and Religion of the Catholic Church, I will receive thee thereunto, and not commit thee to the Secular Power, &c. To make short, Whittle, strengthened with the grace of the Lord, stood strong and unmovable in that he had affirmed. Wherefore the Sentence being read, the next day following he was committed to the Secular Power, and so in few days after brought to the fire with the other six aforementioned, sealing up the testimony of his Doctrine with his Blood, which he willingly and cheerfully gave for witness of the Truth.

The Peace of God in Christ be with you continually, dearly beloved Brother in Christ, with the assistance of Gods grace and Holy Spirit, to the working and performing of those things which may comfort and edifie his Church (as ye daily do) to the glory of his Name, and the increase of your joy and solace of Soul in this life, and also your reward in Heaven with Christ our Captain, whose faithful Souldier ye are, in the life to come, Amen.

A Letter of
T. Whittle
written to John Careless.

I have greatly rejoyced (my dear Heart) with thanks to God for you, since I have heard of your Faith and love which you bear towards God and his Saints, with a most godly ardent zeal to the vertue of Christs Doctrine and Religion, which I have heard by the report of many, but specially by the declaring of that valiant Captain in Christs Church, that stout Champion in Gods cause, that spectacle to the world, I mean our good Brother Philpot, who now lieth under the Altar, and sweetly enjoyeth the promised reward. And specially I and my condemned Fellows give thanks to God for your loving and comfortable Letter in the deepness of our trouble (after the flesh) sent unto us to the consolation of us all, but must specially to me most sinful miser on mine own behalf, but happy, I hope, through Gods loving kindness in Christ shewed unto me; who suffered me to faint and fall through humane infirmity, by the working of the Arch-enemy in his sworn Souldiers the Bishops and Priests. In whom so lively appeareth the very visage and shape of Satan, that a man (if it were not prejudice to Gods Word) might well affirm them to be Devils incarnate, as I by experience do speak. Wherefore, who so shall for Conscience matters come in their hands, had need of the wiliness of the Serpent to save his head, though it be with the wounding of his Body, and to take diligent heed how he consenteth to their wicked writings, or fetcheth his hand to their conveyances.

and experience of Popish Frelates.

So did they assault me and craftily tempt me to their wicked ways, or at least to a denegation of my Faith and true Opinions, though it were but by colour and dissimulation. And (alas) something they did prevail. Not that I did any thing at all like their Opinions and false Papistical Religion, or else doubted of the Truth wherein I stand, but only the infirmity of the flesh beguiled me, desiring liberty by an unlawful means; God lay it not to my charge at that day, and so I heartily desire you to pray. Howbeit, uncertain I am whether more profit came thereby: profit to me, in that God suffered Satan to buffet me by his foresaid minister of mischief, shewing me mine infirmity, that I should not boast nor rejoyce in my self, but only in the Lord? who when he had led me to hell in my Conscience through the respect of his fearful judgments against me for my fearfulness, mistrust, and crasty cloaking in such spiritual and weighty matters (in the which agony and distress I found this old verities true, Non patitur ludam fama, fides, oculus) yet he brought me from thence again to the magnifying of his Name, suspecting of flesh and Blood, and consolation of mine own Soul, or else that I might feel disprofit in offending the Congregation of God, which peradventure will rather adjudge my fall to come of doubtfulness in my Doctrine and Religion, then of humane imbecillity.

The burden of a trou-
science.

Well, of this importune burthen of a troubled Conscience for denying or dissembling the known verity, I by experience could say very much more, which perhaps I will declare by writing, to the warning of others, if God grant time: For now am I and my Fellows ready to go hence even for Christs cause; Gods name be praised, who hath hereto called us. Pray, I pray you, that we may end our course with joy, and at your appointed time you shall come after. But as the Lord hath kept you, so will he preserve your life still, to the intent you should labour (as you do) to appease and convince these ungodly contentions and controversies, which now do too much reign, brawling about terms to no edification. God is dishonoured, the Church disquieted, and occasion to speak evil of the Gospel ministered to our Adversaries. But such is the subtilty of Satan, that whom he cannot win with gross Idolatry in open Religion, them he seeketh to corrupt and deceive in Opinions, in a private profession. But here I will abruptly leave, left with my rude and simple vein I should be tedious unto you, desiring you (my loving Brother) if it shall not seem grievous unto you, to write unto me and my Fellows, yet once again, if you have leisure, and we time to the same.

How wretched for the Examinations of
M. Philpot.

Provide me Mr. Philpots nine Examinations for a Friend of mine, and I shall pay you therefore, by the leave of Almighty God our heavenly Father, who correcteth all his dear Children in this world, that they should not be damned with the world, and trieth the Faith of his Saints through many tribulations, that being found constant to the end, he may crown his own gifts in them, and in Heaven highly reward them; whither I trust to go before, looking for you to follow (my faithful Friend) that we may sing perpetual praise to our loving Lord God for victory over Satan and sin, won for us by Jesus Christ God and Man, our only and sufficient Saviour and Advocate, Amen. Farewel, and pray in Faith.

Yours Thomas Whittle Minister, and now condemned to die for the Gospels sake. 1556. Jan. 21.

All my Fellows salute you. Salute all our faithful Brethren with you.

To my dear Friend and Brother John Went and other his Prison-fellows in Lollards Tower.

HE that preserved Joseph Prisoner in Egypt, fed Daniel in the Lions Den, and delivered Paul, Peter, and the Apostles out of Prison, vouchsafe of his goodness to keep, feed, and deliver you my good Brother Went, with the other our fellow Souldiers your Prison-fellows, as may be most to his glory, to your consolation, and the edification of his Church.

I cannot but praise God most earnestly, when I hear of your constancy in the Faith, and joy in the Cross of Christ, which you now bear and suffer together, with many other good members of Christ, which is taken that by Christ you are counted worthy the Kingdom of God, as Paul saith. And though the world counteth the yoke and Cross of Christ as a most pernicious and hurtful thing, yet we which have tasted how friendly the Lord is, cannot but rejoyce in this persecution as touching our selves; inasmuch as the cause for the which we suffer is the Lords cause and not ours, at whose hand if we endure to the end, we shall receive, through his liberal promise in Christ, not only a great reward in Heaven, but also the Kingdom of Heaven itself, and also in the mean season be sure to be defended and cared for, so that we shall lack no necessary things, neither a hair of our heads shall perish without his knowledge. Oh what is he that would mistrust, or not gladly receive loving a Father? O how unhappy are they that forsake him and put their trust in man; But how blessed are they that for his love and for his holy words sake, in these troublesome days do commit their Souls and Bodies into his hands with well doing, counting it greater happiness and riches to suffer rebuke with Christ and his Church, then to enjoy the pleasures of this life for a little short season?

This Cross that we now bear hath been common to all the faithful from Abel hitherto, and shall be to the end, because the Devil, having great wrath against God and his Christ, cannot abide that he should for his manifold mercies be lauded and magnified, and Christ to be taken and believed upon for our only sufficient Redeemer, Saviour and Advocate: and therefore because we will not deny Christ, nor dissemble with our Faith, but openly protest and profess the same before the world, he seeketh by all means to stir up his wicked members, to persecute and kill the bodies of the true Christians; as St. John saith, The Devil shall cast some of you into Prison. And David saith, I believed, and therefore have I spoken, but I was sore troubled. This notwithstanding, go forward dear Brethren, as ye have begun, to fight the Lords battle, considering Christ the Captain of your war, who will both fight for you, give you victory, and also highly reward your pains. Consider to your comfort the notable and chief Shepherds and Souldiers of Christ, which are gone before us in these days, I mean those learned and holy Bishops, Doctors and other Ministers of Gods Word; whose Faith and examples we that be inferiors ought to follow, as St. Paul saith; Remember them that have declared unto you the Word of God, the end of whose conversation see that ye look upon, and follow their Faith. The grace and blessing of God, with the ministry of his holy Angels, be with you for ever, Amen. All my Prison-fellows greet you.

Luke 1.

The same faith for the which Abraham was counted righteous, and Mary blessed, the Lord God increase and make stable in your hearts, my dear and faithful Brethren and Sisters of London, for ever and ever, Amen.

Four Notes.
Dearly beloved, be not troubled in this heat which is now come amongst you to try you, as though some strange thing had happened unto you, but rejoyce in as much as ye are partakers of Christs passions, that when his glory appeareth, ye may be merry and glad, &c. Out of these words of S. Peter, I gather most specially these four Notes. First, that persecution happeneth to Christs Church for their trial, that is, for the probation and proof of their faith. Which faith, like as it is known with God in the depth of our hearts, so will he have it made manifest to the whole World through persecution; that so it may evidently appear that he hath such a Church and People upon earth, which so trusteth in him and feareth his holy Name, that no kind of persecution, pains, nor death shall be able to separate them from the love of him. And thus was Abraham tried, and Job tempted, that their faith, which before lay hid almost in their hearts, might be made known to the whole World to be so steadfast and strong, that neither the Devil, natural love, nor any other enemy could be able to bereave them thereof. Whereby also God was to be magnified, who hath tried his People by many tribulations, and also sanctified by them in the midst of their troubles, to deliver them by life or death as he seeth best: like as he afflicted Laz, and delivered him out of his enemies hands; Joseph out of the hands of his Brethren and out of prison: Paul from his enemies in Damascus, and the Apostles out of the stocks and prison.

Matth. 17.

These with many more he delivered to life; and also he delivered Abel, Elexazar, Stephen, and John Baptist, with other many by death, and hath also by the trial of their faith made them good Presidents, and examples to us; and all that come after, to suffer affliction in the like cause; as S. James saith, Take, my Brethren (saith he) the Prophets for an example of suffering Adversity and of long patience, which spake unto you in the Name of the Lord: behold we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have known what end the Lord made him, for the Lord is very pitiful and merciful. Also the Lord trieth us, to let us see our own hearts and thoughts, that no hypocrite or ambition deceive us, and that the strong in Christ may pray that he fall not, but endure to the end; and that those that fall through fearful infirmity, might speedily repent and rise again with Peter, and also that the weak ones might bewail their weakness, and cry with David, Psal. 6. Have mercy upon me O Lord, for I am weak: O Lord heal me, for all my bones are vexed.

Of this opening of the heart by persecution spake Holy Simeon to Mary Christs Mother when he said, The Sword, that is, the Crois of persecution, shall pierce thy Soul, that the thoughts of many hearts may be opened. For like as a King, that should go to Battell, is compelled to look in his coffers what treasure he hath, and also what number and puissance of men and weapons he hath, so that if he himself be unready and unarmed to bicker with his enemy, he surceaseth and taketh truce for a time: even so we by persecutions have our hearts opened, that we may look therein to see what faith in Christ we have, and what strength to withstand the enemies, and to bear the Crois, that if we be rich in these Treasures, we might rejoyce, and valiantly go to Battell; or if we want these things, we might with all speed call and cry upon him which giveth all good gifts to those that ask them. Item, the Crois trieth the good People from the bad, the faithful from the worldlings and Hypocrites, and also cleanseth and foureth the faithful hearts from all corruption and filthiness both of the Flesh and the Spirit. And even as Iron, except it be often scoured, will soon wax rusty: so except our sinful hearts and Flesh be often scoured with the whetstone of the Crois, they will soon corrupt and overgrow with the rust of all filthiness and sin. And therefore it is meet and good for us (as the wise man saith, Sy- rach 2.) that as gold and silver is tried in the fire, so should the hearts of acceptable men be tried in the furnace of Adversity. Abide the trial (dear friends) that ye may obtain the Crown of life. Fight manfully in this the Lords cause, that ye may obtain a glorious victory here, and receive a great reward in Heaven hereafter.

As ye are called Christians and would be angry to be called Jews or Turks, so declare your Christianity by following the steps of Christ, whose name ye bear; suffer with him and for his Gospels sake, rather than to deny him or to defile your Faith and Conscience with false worshipping of Romish Religion.

Take up your Crois (my dear hearts) now when it is offered you, and go up with Christ to Jerusalem amongst the Bishops, Priests, and Rulers, if God call you thereto, and they will anon send you to Calvary: from whence (dying in the cause of the Gospel, wherein our good Preachers and Brethren have given their lives) your Souls (I warrant you) through Christ Jesus shall ascend to God that gave them, and that body shall come after at the last day, and so shall ye dwell with the Lord for ever in unspeakable joy and bliss. Oh blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousness sake, as Christs People in this Jewish England now do; for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. O my beloved, set your minds on this Kingdom where Christ our head and King is; considering that as the brute beast looketh down-wards with the face towards the earth: so man is made contrariwise with his face looking upwards towards the Heavens, because his Conversation should be in Heaven and Heavenly things, and not upon the earth and earthly things, as Saint Paul saith, Colo. 3. Set your minds on things which are above, where Christ is. And again he saith, Phil. 3. Our Conversation is in Heaven, from whence we look for our Saviour, who will change our vile Bodies, and make them like to his glorious Body. Oh the glorious estate that we be called unto! The Lord preserve us harmless to his eternal Kingdom through Christs Jesus our Lord, Amen.

The second thing that I note in the foresaid words of Peter, is that he calleth persecution no strange thing. And truth it is: for which of the Prophets were not persecuted with Christ and his Apostles, and some of them in the end cruelly killed for the truths sake? Caine killed Abel, Isaac was persecuted of Ismael, Jacob was hated of Eseu, Joseph was prisoned and set in the stocks, the Prophet Elijah was cut in two with a Saw, Ieremy was stoned, Micheas was buffeted and fed with Bread and Water, Holias was sore persecuted, Elexazar, and the Woman with her seven Sons were cruelly killed. What Christ and the Apostles suffered it is well known. So that by many tribulations (as Paul saith, Acts 14.) we must enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. All the Holy Prophets, Christ, and his Apostles suffered such afflictions not for evil doing, but for preaching Gods Word, for rebuking of the World of sin, and for their faith in Jesus Christ.

This is the ordinance of God (my friends) this is the high-way to Heaven, by corporal death to eternal life; as Christ saith, Job. 5. He that heareth my words and believeth in him that sent me, hath eternal life, and shall not come into judgment, but is escaped from death to life. Let us never fear death which is killed by Christ, but believe in him and live for ever, as Paul saith, Rom. 8. There is no damnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, which walk not after the Flesh, but after the Spirit. And again Paul saith, 1 Cor. 15. Death where is thy sting? Hell where is thy victory? Thanks be to God which hath given us victory through Jesus Christ.

Besides this, ye have seen and daily do see the Blood of your good Preachers and Brethren, which hath been shed in the Gospels cause in this sinful Sodom, this Bloody Jerusalem, this unhappy City of London. Let not their Blood be forgotten, nor the Blood of your good Bishop Ridley, who like a shepherd, to your comfort and example hath given his life for his sheep. Good S. Paul saith, Heb. 13. Remember them that have spoken to you the Word of God, and look upon the end of their Conversation, and follow their faith.

The Devil ever stirreth up false Teachers, as he hath done now over all England, as Peter, Paul, and Jude prophesied it should be, to poison and kill our Souls with the false doctrine. And where he faileth of his purpose purpose that way, then moveth he his members to persecute the silly carcases of the Saints, because they will not deny nor dissemble their pure faith in our living Christ, and confesse a dead breadie Christ, and honour the same as CHRIST God and Man, contrary to Gods Commandment, Exod. 10.

This is the working of Satan, who knowing his own just damnation, would all mankind to be partakers with him of the same; such a mortal hatred beareth he against God and his People. And therefore when this wicked tempter could not kill Christ, with subtil temptation to fall down and worship him, then he stirred up his Servants the Bishops, and Pharisees to kill his Body, whereby notwithstanding the Devil lost his title and interest which he had to mans Soul, and man by his precious passion and death was ransomed from the Devil, Death and hell, to immortality and life everlasting: and so when Satan thought to have wonne all in killing of Christ, he lost all: and so shall he do in us if we abide constant and strong in the faith of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ unto the end. God grant it for his mercys sake in Christ. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him, Amen.

Wherefore (my hearty beloved Brethren and Sisters) be of good comfort through Jesus Christ, for he that is in us is stronger then he that is in the World. Therefore draw ye near to God, and he will draw near to you. Resist the Devil, and he will (as James faith) flee from you. Beware of the heaven of the Pharisees. Touch not pitch left you be defiled therewith. Eat no swines flesh, for it is against the law; I mean defile not your selves either inwardly or outwardly with this false and wicked Religion of Antichrist: for it is nothing else but pitch and swines flesh. Beware of the Beasts mark, lest ye drink of the cup of Gods wrath. If God have given you knowledge and faith, dissemble not therewith. Deny not the known verity before men, lest Christ deny you before his Father. Come away from Babylon, as John biddeth you, Apos. 18. and touch no unclean thing, but separate your selves from the company of the ungodly, as Paul commandeth you. Whatsoever you have done amiss heretofore, now repent ye and amend; for with the Lord there is mercy and plentiful redemption, Psal. 126.

The third thing and note which I gather out of the foresaid words of Peter, is this, that he faith, Rejoyce because ye are partakers of Christs passion. Our sufferings, (my welbeloved) are Christs sufferings, and that injury that is done to us for his sake, he reckoneth it to be done to himself, as he said to Saint Paul, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? Therefore we ought to rejoyce in our sufferings, as Paul writeth, which we suffer with Christ and one with another, as Peter faith, and so to fulfil that which is behind of the passions of Christ in our flesh; which Christ hath, by his passion, fully redeemed and saved us in his own person: howbeit his Elect must suffer with him and for him unto the Worlds end, that he may be glorified in them, and they thereby corrected and cleansed from sin in this World, and also obtain a great reward in heaven for their suffering for righteousness sake, according to his promise. And therefore I say (my Brethren) rejoyce in the Lord always, and again I say rejoyce. Let us rejoyce in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, whereby the World is crucified to us, and we to it.

And why should we so greatly rejoyce in the Cross of Christ, which we now suffer? Because (faith Peter) when his glory appeareth, we may be merry and glad. And this is the fourth note that I gather out of his words above written. Wherein is set out the reward of suffering, not to be had in this World; but at his coming to judgment when we shall be raised again: and then shall they that have sown in tears, reap in joy, as Christ faith, Blessed are they that weep here: for they shall laugh. Blessed are ye when men hate you, and thrust you out of their company, railing on you, and abhorring your names as an evil thing for the Son of mans sake: rejoyce in that day and be glad, for your reward is great in Heaven.

Wherefore (my dearly beloved) through the hope of this Heavenly Joy and Reward, which he that cannot lie hath promised (which joy is so great that no car hath heard, no eye hath seen, nor the heart can think, where we shall dwell forever in the Heavenly City, the celestial Jerusalem, in the presence of God the Father, and Jesus Christ our Mediator, as Paul faith, and in the company of innumerable Angels, and with the Spirits and Souls of all faithful and just men) rejoyce and be glad: and seeing ye be called to so great glory, see that you make your election and vocation sure by good works, and specially by suffering adversity for the Gospels sake: for it is given us of God (faith Paul) not only to believe in Christ, but also to suffer for his sake. Continue in prayer, and pray for me that I may end my course with joy. Have Brotherly love amongst your selves, which is a token that ye be Christs Disciples. Edifie and comfort one another in the Word of the Lord, and the God of peace and love be with you always, Amen. For your liberality and kindness shewed upon the prisoners and afflicted People of God in this time of persecution, the Lord will reward you when he cometh to reward every man according to their deeds, and will not leave a cup of cold water bestowed upon his faithful People unrewarded. God make you rich in all grace, that ye always having sufficient, may be rich unto all manner of good works.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost, be with you always. Amen.

Your Brother now in bonds for the Gospel,

Thomas Whittle.

To my loving and faithful Brother, J. Careles, prisoner in the King Bench.

The same faith, for the which Abraham was accounted just, and Mary blessed, whereby also all just men live, the Lord God our loving Father increaseth and stablish in you and me, to the obtaining of eternal life in our alone and sweet Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

I cannot worthily and sufficiently praise God (my heartily beloved Brother) for the consolation and joy that I have received by reason of your loving Letters, repenting me much that I being so long so near you, did not enterprise to stir up Familiarity and Communication between us by writings, to mutual consolation in Christ. For what is there upon earth wherein to rejoyce (where all things are transitory and vain, yea man himself, respecting this life: but (as David faith, Psal. 16.) the Saints that dwell upon the earth, and such as excel in vertue? But here now I consider, that if the fellowship, love, and joy of faithful Men and Children of God being as we now be in double Bondage, the Body within clay walls, and the Soul within these frail earthly Bodys, be so great and comfortable; how unspeakable will these joys be, when we shall be delivered from all corruption into the glorious liberty of the Sons of God? Where we shall be present together continually in our glorified Bodys, beholding the face of our Father presently (whom now we see but in the glass of Faith) with his dear Son Christ our Redeemer and Brother, and the blessed company of Angels and all faithful saved Souls.

Oh the incomparable good things and Heavenly treasures laid up for us in Heaven by Christ Jesus! For the obtaining whereof, we ought to set light by all temporal grief and transitory afflictions, so much the more, in that our good God is faithful, and will not suffer us to be tempted above our strength, and that namely in the end of our life, when the tree where it falleth lyeth still, as the Preacher faith, Eccles. 11. when every one, causa sua dormit, & causa sua resurgit: for else before the Gods Saints had he suffered his sometime to fall, but not finally to suffer perill: as Peter sunk upon the sea, but yet was not drowned; and sinned grievously upon the land through infirmity denying his Master, but yet found mercy: for the righteous falleth often times. And Christs Holy Apostles are taught to say, Remitte nobis debita nostra, yea though the righteous fall, faith David, he shall not be cast away: for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand. Oh the bottomless mercy of God towards us miserable Sinners! He vouchsafe to plant in my heart true repentance and faith, Oh my dearly Beloved, it grieveth me to see the spoyl and havock that Saul maketh with the Congregation of Christ: but what remedy? This is Gods will and ordinance, that his People shall here both be punished in the flesh and tryed in their Faith: as it is written, Many are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth them out of all; for by a strait path and narrow door must we enter. Whither? Into the joyfull Kingdom of Heaven: therefore blessed are you and others that suffer persecution for Christs sake, for the profession of the same. Pray for me and my Fellows (good Brother) that we may fight a good fight, that we may keep the Faith, and end our course with joyfull gladness, for now the time of our deliverance is at hand. The Lord guide, defend, and keep us and you, and all his People in our journey, that we may safely through a short death, pass to that long lasting life.

T Whittle
to certain of his Friends
Welshers of Welshers of Body.

MY dear and welbelovd Brethren in Christ, Mr. Filles and Curbert, I wish you all welfare of Soul and Body. Welfare to the Soul, is repentance of sin, faithful affiance in Christ Jesus, and a godly life. Welfare to the Body, is the health of the same, with all necessary things for this Body life. The Soul of man is immortal, and therefore ought to be well kept, left immortality to joy should turn to immortality of sorrow. As for the Body be it never so well kept and much made of, yet shortly by nature will it perish and decay: But those that are ingrafted and incorporated into Christ by true Faith, feeling the motion of Gods holy Spirit as a pledge of their election and inheritance, exciting and stirring them not only to seek heavenly things, but also to hate vice, and embrace virtue, will not only do these things, but also if need require, will gladly take up their Cross and follow their Captain, their King, and their Saviour Jesus Christ (as his poor afflicted Church of England now doth) against that false and Antichristian Doctrine and Religion now used, and specially that blasphemous Mass, wherein Christs Supper and holy Ordinance is altogether perverted and abused, contrary to his institution and to Pauls proceedings: so that that which they have in their Mass, is neither Sacrament of Christ, nor yet Sacrifice for sin, as the Priests falsely pretend. It is a Sacrament, that is, as Saint Augustine saith, a visible signe of invisable grace, when it is ministred to the Communicants according to Christs example, and as it was of late years in this Realm. And as for Sacrifice, there is none to be made now for sin: for Christ with one Sacrifice hath perfected for ever those that are sanctified.

Beware of false Religion, and mens vain Traditions, and serve God with reverence and godly fear according to the Doctrine of his Gospel, whereto cleave ye that ye may be blessed, though of wicked me ye be hated and accursed. Rather drink of the Cup of Christ with his Church than of the Cup of that Rose coloured whore of Babylon, which is full of abominations. Rather strive ye to go Heaven by the path which is strait to flesh and Blood, with the little flock, then to go in the wide way, following the innumerable of the world and the flesh, which leadeh to damnation.

Like as Christ suffered in the flesh, saith Saint Peter, so arm ye your selves with the same mind: for Christ suffered for us, leaving us example to follow his footsteps. Blessed are they that suffer for his sake, great is their reward in Heaven. He that overcometh (saith St. John, Apoc. 2. 3.) shall eat of the Tree of life; he shall have a Crown of life, and not to be hurt of the second death? he shall be clothed with white array, and not be put out of the Book of life; yea, I will confesse his name, saith Christ, before my Father and before his Angels, and he shall be a pillar in the house of God, and sit with me on my seat. And thus I bid you farewell, mine own Brethren and dear Fellows in Christ. Whose grace and peace be alway with you, Amen.

*This world I do forsake,
To Christ I me sake,
And for his Gospels sake, Patiently death I take.
My Body to the dust,
Now to return it must:
My Soul I know full well,
With my God it shall dwell.*

Thomas Whittle.

Another Letter of Thomas Whittle written to a certain godly Woman.

OH my dear and loving Sister in Christ; be not dismayed in this storm of persecution: for Paul calleth the Gospel the word of the Cross, because it is never truly taught, but the Cross and cruel Persecution immediately and necessarily doth follow the same, and therefore it is a manifest token of Gods Truth and hath been here and is still abroad, and that is the cause of the rage and cruelty of Satan against Christ and his members, which must be corrected for their sins in this world: their Faith must be tryed, that after tryal and patient suffering the Faithful may receive the Crown of glory. Fear not therefore, my welbelovd, but proceed in the knowledge and fear of God, and he will keep you from all evil. Call upon his holy name, and he will strengthen you and assist you in all your ways: and if it please him to lay his Cross upon you for his Gospels sake, refuse it not, neither shake it off by unlawful means, lest you should (as God forbid) find a more grievous Cross and torment of Conscience, if you should dissemble and deny the known verity, than is any persecution or death of Body. Oh how happy are they that suffer persecution for righteousness sake? their reward is great in Heaven. The momentary afflictions of this life are not worthy of the glory that shall be shewed upon us. Oh remember the godly women of the old Testament and new, which lived in Gods service and fear, and therefore are now in bliss and commended for ever: and namely Judith, Hester, Abigail, the Mother of the seven Sons, Mary Elizabeth, Susanna, Lidia, and Phoebe, and others. Set their examples before your eyes, and fear nothing, for Satan is conquered by our Saviour Christ: sin is put to flight, and the gate of immortality and eternal life is set wide open; God grant we may enter therein through the door Jesus Christ, Amen.

as God of his mercy had opened his eyes, by his often repairing unto the common Lectures of Peter Martyr Reader of the Divinity Lecture in the same University so that thereby (as by Gods instrument) he saw the true light of Christs Gospel.

John 4.

Whereof when he had once tasted, it became unto him as the fountain of lively water, that our Saviour Christ spake of to the Woman of Samaria so as he never thirsted any more, but had a Well springing unto everlasting life. Inasmuch as when he was called by his friends from the University, and was placed in the Temple at London, there to attain to the knowledge of the Common Laws of the Realm, he yet continued still in his former study and earnest profession of the Gospel; wherein also he did not a little profit. Howbeit (such is the frailty of our corrupt nature, without the special assistance of Gods Holy Spirit) through the continual accompanying, and fellowship of such Worldly (I will not say too much youthful) young Gentlemen, as are commonly in that and the like houses, he became by little and little a companion of their fond follies and youthful vanities, as well in his apparel as also in banqueting, and other superfluous excesses: which he afterwards (being again called by Gods merciful correction) did fore lament and bewail, as appeareth by his own testimony notified, and left in a book of a certain friend of his, a little before his death, written with his own hand, in manner as followeth.

Mr. Green's friend in the Temple at London.

This did Mr. Bartlet Green write in Mr. Bartram Calthrop's Book.

A good note on the letter of young Lawrence's mark and house.

Two things have very much troubled me whilest I was in the Temple, Pride and Gluttony; which under the colour of glory and good fellowship, drew me almost from God. Against both there is one remedy, by prayer earnest, and without ceasing. And forasmuch as vain-glory is so subtle an Adversary, that almost it woundeth deadly, ere ever a man can perceive himself to be snared, therefore we ought so much the rather by continual prayer, to labour for humbleness of mind. Truly gluttony begetteth under a charitable pretence of mutual love and society, and bath in it most uncharitableness. When we seek to refresh our bodies, that they may be the more apt to serve God, and perform our duty towards our neighbours, then stealeth it in as a privy thief, and murdereth both Body and Soul, that now it is not apt to pray, or serve God, apt to study, or labour for our neighbour. Let us therefore watch and be sober: For our Adversary the Devil walketh about like a roaring Lion, seeking whom he may devour. And remember what Solomon saith, Melior est pateris viro forti, & qui dominatur animo expugnatore urbium. A patient man is better then a strong warrior, and he that conquereth his own Stomach, is better then he that Conquereth Towns and Cities.

What's said concerning doth.

Thus we see the fatherly kindness of our most gracious and merciful God, who never suffereth his elect Children so to fall, that they lie still in security of sin, but oftentimes quickeneth them up by some such means, as perhaps they think least of, as he did here this his strayed sheep. And now therefore to return to our history: for the better maintenance of himself in these his studies, and other his affairs, he had a large exhibition of his Grandfather, Mr. Doctor Bartlet, who during the time of Greens imprisonment made unto him large offers of great livings, if he would recant, and (forsaking the truth, and Gospel of Christ) come home again to the Church and Synagogue of Rome. But those his persuasions (the Lord be therefore praised) took little effect in his faithful heart, as the sequel did declare. He was a man beloved of all men, except of the Papists, who love none that love the truth) and so he well deserved: for he was of a meek, humble, discreet, and most gentle behaviour to all. Injurious he was to none, beneficial to many, especially to those that were of the household of Faith; as appeareth amongst other, by his friendly dealing with Mr. Christopher Goodman, being at that present a poor exile beyond the Seas. With whom this Bartlet Greene (as well for his toward learning as also for his sober and godly behaviour) had often society in Oxford, in the days of good King Edward: which now, notwithstanding his friends misery and Banishment, he did not lightly forget; and that turned as it chanced (not without the providence of Almighty God) to the great grief of both; the one of heart, for the loss of his friend, and the other of Body in suffering the cruel and murdering rage of Papists.

Friendship between Christopher Goodman and Mr. Green.

The cause hereof was a Letter which Green did write unto the said Goodman, containing as well the report of certain demands or questions, which were cast abroad in London (as appeareth hereafter in a Letter of his own penning, which he sent to have sent unto Mr. Philpott, wherein he declareth his full usage before the Bishop of London and others) as also an answer to a question made by the said Christopher Goodman, in a Letter written unto him, in which he required to have the certainty of the report which was spread amongst them on the other side of the Seas, that the Queen was dead. Whereunto Mr. Green answered simply, and as the truth then was, that she was not dead.

Occasion of apprehending Mr. Green came by Letters intercepted.

These Letters with many other, written to divers of the godly exiles, by their friends here in England, being delivered to a messenger to carry over, came by the apprehension of the said bearer, unto the hands of the King and Queens Council. Who at their convenient leisure (which in those days by some of them was quickly found out for such matters) perused the whole number of the said Letters, and amongst them spied this Letter of Mr. Greens, written unto his friend Christopher Goodman: in the Contents whereof (amongst other news and private matters) they found these words; the Queen is not yet dead. Which words were only written as an answer, to certify Mr. Goodman of the truth of his former demand. Howbeit (to some of the Council) they seemed very heinous words, yea, treason they would have made them, if the Law would have suffered. Which when they could not do (and being yet very loath to let any such depart freely, whom they suspected to be a favourer of the Gospel) they then examined him upon his faith in Religion, but upon what points it is not certainly known.

Mr. Greens examined by the Council of his faith.

Nevertheless (as it seemeth) his answers were such, as little pleased them (especially the appointed fort) and therefore after they had detained him in prison, as well in the Tower of London, as elsewhere, they sent him at last unto Boner Bishop of London, to be ordered according to his Ecclesiastical Law; as appeareth by their Letters sent unto the Bishop, with the said prisoner also: wherein it may appear, that Sir John Bourne (then Secretary to the Queen) was a chief stirrer in such cases, yea and an enticer of others of the Council; who otherwise (if for fear they durst) would have been content to have let such matters alone. The Lord forgive them their weakness (if it be his good pleasure) and give them true repentance, Amen.

John Bourne a stirrer of persecution.

A Letter sent unto Boner Bishop of London, by the Queens Council dated the 11. day of November 1555. but not delivered until the 17. of the same Month.

A Fear our hearty commendations to your good Lordship. We send to the same herewith the Body of one Council to Bartlet Greene, who hath of good time remained in the Tower for his obstinate standing in matters against the Catholic Religion, whom the King and Queens Majesty's pleasures are (because he is of your Lordships Diocese)

A Letter from the Council to Bartlet Greene.

Anno 1556. ye shall cause to be ordered according to the Law in such cases provided. And thus we bid your Lordship heartily farewell. From St. James the 11. of November, 1555.

Your good Lordships loving Friends,

Winchester, William Haward.
Pembroke, John Bourne, Thomas Ely, Thomas Whatton.

Publiscip. I Sir John Bourne will wait upon your Lordship, and signify further the King and Queens Majesties pleasure here.

Now that ye may the better understand the certainty of his handling, after this his coming unto Bowers custody, I have thought it good to put forth his own Letter, containing at large the discourse of the same. Which Letter he wrote, and did mean to have sent unto Mr. Philpot, but was prevented, belike either by Philpots death, or else (and rather) by the wily watching of his Keeper: for it came (by what means I know not certainly) unto the Bishops hands, and being delivered unto his Register, was found in one of his Books of Record. The Copy whereof here followeth.

A Letter of Bartlet Green, written unto John Philpot, containing besides other particular matter betwixt him and Mr. Philpot, a brief rehearsal of his handling, and certain his Confessions with Bower and others, at his first coming to the Bishop.

Mr. Green presented before B. Dean.

Mr. Green was yet under bond of Recognition for the good appearing and forth coming all Christians hereafter.

Mr. Green committed first to the Fleet, and upon what occasion.

That which was wanting in talk (through my default) at your being here, I have supplied by writing in your absence, now at the length getting some opportunity and leisure. The 17. day of November, being brought hither by two of the Clock at Afternoon, I was presented before my Lord of London and other two Bishops, Mr. Deane, Mr. Roper, Mr. Welch, Dr. Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, and other two or three, all sitting at one Table. There were also present Dr. Dale, Mr. George Morant, Mr. Dee. Then after the Bishop of London had read unto himself the Letter that came from the Council, he spake with more words, but (as I remember) to this effect; that the cause of their assembly was, to hear mine Examination, whereunto he had authority by the Council, and had provided Mr. Welch and another, whose name I know not (but well I remember, though he obtained it not, yet desired he my Lord, that I might hear the Councils Letters) to be there if any matters of the Common Law should arise, to discuss them, he intreated my Lord to determine all Controversies of Scriptures; and as for the Civil Law, he and Dr. Dale should take on them.

Wherefore he demanded of me the cause of mine Imprisonment: I said, that the occasion of mine Apprehension was a Letter which I wrote to one Christopher Goodman, wherein (certifying him of such News as happened here) among the rest, I wrote that there were certain printed Papers of Questions scattered abroad. Whereupon, being suspected to be privy unto the devising or publishing of the same, I was committed to the Fleet: but since heard I nothing thereof, after the Commissioners had received my submission. The sum whereof was, that as I was sure there neither could be true witnesses, nor probable conjecture against me in that behalf; so refused I no punishment, if they of their Consciences would judge me privy to the devising, printing, or publishing of those Questions. But my Lord affirming that there was another cause of mine Imprisonment, demanded if I had not after, since I was committed to the Fleet, spoken or written somewhat against the natural presence of Christ in the Sacrament of the Altar.

Then desired I his Lordship to be good unto me, trusting that he would put me to answer to no new matters, except I were first discharged of the old. And when I stood long in that, Mr. Welch answered, that it was procured that I should do so, right well. For albeit I were Imprisoned for Treason, if during the time of endurance I had maintained Heresie, that were no sufficient allegation against the Ordinary; neither whether I were before him acquitted or condemned, should it take away the former fault. Then my Lord affirming that I was not brought before him but for Heresie, and the other Gentlemen saying; that doubtless I was discharged of my former matter; my desire was, that I might be charged according to the order of the Law, to hear my Accusers.

Then Dr. Chessey was sent for; who reported that in the presence of Mr. Mosley and the Lieutenant of the Tower, I spake against the real presence and the sacrifice of the Mass, and that I affirmed that their Church was the Church of Antichrist.

Is not this true, quoth my Lord? I said, Yea. Will you continue therein, quoth he? Yea, said I. Wilt thou then maintain it by Learning, said he? Therein, quoth I, I should shew my self to have little wit, knowing mine own youth and ignorance, if I would take on me to maintain any Controvercie against so many grave and learned Men. But my Conscience was satisfied in the Truth, which was sufficient to my salvation.

Roper. Conscience? (quoth Mr. Roper) so shall every Jew and Turk be saved.

We had hereafter much talk to no purpose, and especially on my part, who felt in my self, through cold and open air, much dulness of wit and memory. At the length I was asked what Conscience was: and I said, the certifying of the Truth.

Mr. Welch. With that Mr. Welch rose up; desiring leave to talk with me alone. So he taking me aside into another Chamber, said that he was sorry for my trouble, and would gladly see me at liberty: he marvelled, that I being a young Man, would stand against all the Learned men of the Realm, yea and contrary to the whole determination of the Catholick Church from Christs time, in a matter wherein I could have no great Learning; I must not think mine own wit better than all mens, but should believe them that were Learned. I promise you (quoth he) I have read all Peter Martyrs Book, and Cranmers, and all the rest of them, and have conferred them with the contrary, as Rosenfis, and the Bishop of Winchester, &c. and could not perceive but that there was one continual Truth, which from the beginning had been maintained; and those that at any time severed from this unity, were answered; and answered again. This was the sum of his Tale, which lacked neither wit nor eloquence.

Mr. Green. Then spake I: Forasmuch as it pleaseth your Mastership to use me so familiarly (for so he behaved himself towards me, as though I had been his equal) I shall open my mind freely unto you, desiring you to take it in good worth. I consider my youth, lack of wit and learning, which would God it were but a little under the opinion that some men have of me. But God is not bound to time, wit, or knowledge, but rather chuseth infirma mundi, ut confunderet fortia, neither can men appoint bounds to Gods mercy: For, I will have compassion (saith he) on whom I will shew mercy. There is no respect of persons with God, whether it be old or young, rich or poor, wife or foolish, Fisher or Basket-maker. God giveth knowledge of his Truth, through his free grace, to whom he list. Neither do I think my self only to have the Truth, but stedfastly believe that Christ hath his Spouse the Catholick and Universal Church, dispersed in many Realms where it pleaseth him, Spiritus ubi vult spirat: no more is he addicted to any one place, than to the person neither in quality of one man. Of this Church I nothing doubt my self to be a member, trusting to be saved by the Faith that is taught in the same. But how this Church is known, is in a manner the end of all Controvercie. And the true marks of Christs Church; is the true preaching of his Word and ministering of his Sacraments. These marks were sealed by the Apostles, and confirmed by the ancient Fathers, till at the length they were, through the wickedness of men and the Devils force worn, and almost utterly taken away. But God be praised that he hath renewed the print, that his Truth may be known in many places. For my self, I call God to witness, I have none hope in mine own wit and learning, which is very small; but I was persuaded thereto by him, as by an * instrument, that is excellent in all good learning and living. And God is my record, that chiefly I fought it of him by continual prayer with tears.

Furthermore, what I have done herein, it is not needful for me to speak: but one thing (I say) I wish of God with all my heart, that all men which are of contrary judgment, would seek the truth in like manner. Now I am brought hither before a great many of Bishops, and learned men, to be made a fool and a laughing stock, but I weigh it not a rush: for God knoweth that my whole study is to please him: Besides that, I care not for mans pleasure, or displeasure.

Mr. Green.

Mr. Welch. No Mr. Green, quoth he, think not so uncharitably of any man, but judge rather that men labour for your Souls health, as for their own. But alas, how will you condemn all our Forefathers? Or how can you think your self to be of the Catholick Church, without any continuance, and contrary to the judgment of all learned men?

Green. Then said I, Sir I have none Authority to judge any man: nevertheless, I doubt not but that I am of the true Catholick Church, howsoever our learned men here judge of me.

Welch. Why then, said he, do you suppose your own wit and learning better then all theirs? if you do not give credit only to them, other learned men shall resort unto you, that shall persuade you by the Scriptures and Doctors.

Green. Sir, quoth I, God knoweth that I refuse not to learn of any Child, but I would embrace the truth from the mouth of a natural fool, in any thing wherein I am Ignorant, and that in all things, saving my faith: But concerning the truth, wherein I am thoroughly perswaded, I cannot submit my self to learn, unless it be, as your Master ship said, that I perused to books on both sides. For so might I make my self an indifferent judge; otherwise I may be seduced.

And here we fell out again in a long talk of the Church wherein his learning and wit was much above mine: but in the end I told him I was perswaded, and that he did but lose his labour.

Welch. Why then (quoth he) what shall I report to my Lord?

Green. As pleaseth you, quoth I, or else you may say that I would be glad to learn, if I had books on both sides. So he going in, the Bishops (even then risen, and ready to depart) asked how he liked me? He answered, In faith my Lord, he will be glad to learn. Which words when they were taken, lest they should mistake his meaning and mine, I said, yea my Lord, so that I may have books on both sides, as Calum, and my Lord of Canterburie books, and such other. Well, quoth my Lord, I will satisfie thy mind therein also; and they all were in great hope, that shortly I should become a good Catholick as they call it.

Friendly con-

Mr. Green
in B. Bessers house for a time.

Then was I brought into my Lords inner Chamber (* where you were) and there was put in a Chamber with Master Dee, who intreated me very friendly. That night I supped at my Lords table, and lay with Master Dee in the Chamber you did see. On the morrow I was served at dinner from my Lords Table, and at night did eat in the Hall with his Gentlemen; where I have been placed ever since, and fared wonderfully well. Yea to say the truth, I had my liberty within the bounds of his Lordships house: for my lodging and fare, scarce have I been at any time abroad in better case so long together, and have found so much gentleness of my Lord, and his Chaplains, and others Servants, that I should easily have forgotten that I was in prison, were it not that this great cheer was often powdered with unfavoury fauces of examinations, exhortations, posings, and disputations.

Mr. Green
urged with the literal sense of the words (as is my Body,

For shortly after supper the first Monday at night, I was had into my Lords Bed-chamber, and there he would know of me how I came first into these Heresies: I said I was perswaded thereto by the Scriptures, and Authorities of the Doctors, alledged by Peter Martyr in his Lectures upon the eleventh Chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians, whiles he intreated there on that place De cana Domini, by the space of a Month together. But then then my Lord informed the plainness of Christs

Words, and his Almighty power, demanding of me, what reason should move me from the literal sense of the words: but I having no lust to those matters, would have alledged that there were books sufficient of that matter, as Peter Martyr, Crammer and Oecolampadius: nevertheless when this shift would not serve, but I was constrained to say somewhat, I said I was moved from the literal sense by the manner of speaking by the Circumstance, and by Conference of other places of the Scriptures. It is evident that Christ took bread, and that he shewed them (they seeing it) Bread, which he affirmed to be his Body.

Christ affirmed that bread was his Body. Argument:
But that affirmation taken literally, can by no means be true.

Ergo, the words, if they be taken according to the Letter, cannot be true.

For this predication, Panis est corpus Christi, or corpus Christi est panis, is neither identica nor accidentalis, nor essentialis predication. Wherefore of necessity I must say it was spoken in the like sense, as Christ was a door, a vine, and a way. Neither can it serve to say; that it was not of Bread that he affirmed to be his Body, and that for two causes.

For whatsoever he shewed, that was Bread; for nought else was seen.

But that which he shewed he affirmed to be his Body.

Ergo, he Affirmed of Bread that it was his Body. The second reason is; for that it was not changed before, seeing benedixit, is gratia ergo, or else Christ affirmed no true propolition, and you are without Authority.

In the end of this Letter, there were noted these sentences following, collected for Confirmation of his former assertions, videlicet, Eadem locutio potius, i. The same phrase is used and spoken upon the cup.

Dicitur postea panis. It is called Bread in the same place afterward.

Eadem ratione rejecero corpus, qua tu panem, i. By the same reason as it may be denied to be Bread, it may be denied to be the Body.

Ascendit in calum, i. His Body ascended into Heaven.

Corpori nobis factus est similis in omnibus post natiuitatem. At nostrum corpus non potest esse in duobus locis.

Ergo, &c. In Body he was like to us in all things after his nativity (sin excepted.) Seeing then our Body cannot be two places at once: Ergo, neither his.

Discipuli non frangebant, &c. His Disciples took it as no miracle nor wonder.

The last Examination and Condemnation of Mr. Green.

Thus (as it seemeth) for this time they left off. But not long after the Bishop perceiving Greens learning and constancy to be such, as neither he, nor any of his Doctors and Chaplains could by the Scriptures re-fell, began then to object and put in practice his chief and strongest argument against him; which was the rigour of the Law, and cruelty of Execution: an argument I ensure you, which without the special grace of our God to flesh is importable. And therefore using Laws a cloak of his tyranny, the 28. day of November, the said Bp. examined him upon certain points of Christian Religion. Whereunto when he had answered, the Bishop appointed the Register (as their most common manner is) to draw thereout an order of confession. Which being afterwards read unto Green, was also subscribed by him, as a confirmation of his former assertions: The tenour whereof here ensueth.

Maf by him was put down, neither in the time of Queen Mary after the Maf was reformed again, he hath heard any Maf at all; but he saith that in the reign of the said Queens Majesty he the said Bartlet, two times, to wit, at two Easter-tides or days, in the Chamber of John Pulline, one of the Preachers in King Edwards time, within the parish of St. Michaels Cornhil of the Diocess of London, did receive the communion with the said Pulline and Christopher Goodman, some time Reader of the Divinity Lecture in Oxford, now gone beyond the Sea; and the second time with the said Pulline and with one Rimneger, Master of Arts of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford: and this Examinee also saith, that at both the said Communions he, and the other before named, did take and receive Bread and Wine; which Bread and Wine he called Sacramental Bread, and Sacramental Wine, which he saith were used there by them, Pulline only reading the words of the institution, expressed in the Book of Communion.

In which receiving and using, this Examinee saith, that the other aforementioned did receive the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and that they received material Bread and material Wine, no substance thereof changed, and so no real presence of the Body and Blood of Christ there being, but only grace added thereto. And further, this Examinee saith, that he had heretofore, during the Reign of the Queens Majesty aforesaid, refused, and so now doth refuse to come and hear Maf, and to receive the Sacrament of the Altar, as they are now used and ministered in this Church of England, because he saith, that concerning the Maf, he cannot be persuaded in his Conscience, that the Sacrifice pretended to be in the same, is agreeable to Gods Word, or maintainable by the same? and that without deadly offence he cannot worship the Body and Blood of Christ, that is pretended to be there. And as concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, this Examinee saith, that he heretofore during the said Reign hath refused, and now doth refuse to receive the same, as is now used in this Church of England, because it is not used according to the institution of Christ, but both in a strange Tongue, and also not ministered in both kinds; and besides that, contrary to Gods Word it is there taught, that the thing there ministered is to be adored, as the real and true Body of Christ. And furthermore this Examinee saith, that during the said Reign he hath not been confessed to the Priest, nor received Absolution at his hands, because he is not bound by Gods Word to make auricular Confession.

Bartlet Green.

Many other Conferences and publick Examinations they brought him unto. But in the end (seeing his steadfastness of Faith to be such, against the which neither their threatnings, nor yet their flattering promises could prevail) the 15 day of January the Bishop caused him with the rest above-named, to be brought into the Confraternity in Pauls; where being set in his Judgment Seat, accompanied with Fecknam, then Dean of the same Church, and other his Chaplains, after he had condemned the other Six, he then calling for Bartlet Green, began with these, or the like words:

Honourable Audience, I think it best to open unto you the Conversation of this man, called Bartlet Green. And because you shall not charge me, that I go about to seek any mans Blood, here you shall hear the Councils Letters, which they sent with him unto me. The effect whereof is; that whereas he had been of long time in the Tower of London for Heresie, they have now sent him unto me to be ordered, according to the Laws therefore provided. And now to thee Bartlet Green I propose these nine Articles. Then he read the Articles above mentioned, which were generally objected to all these seven Prisoners, to wit, Thomas Whittle, John Tushon, John Went, Thomas Brown, Isabel Esquer, Joan Lashford, Bartlet Green.

But when Master Green would have answered them particularly, he was put to silence, with promise that he should have time to answer sufficiently, and therefore the Bishop proceeding said, that when Green came first to his house, he desired to have the Books of the ancient Doctors of the Church to read; which he said he granted him.

Whereunto Green answered and said, that if the Doctors were with indifferent judgment weighed, they made more a great deal with him, then they did with them.

Feck. Upon which words Fecknam, Dean of Pauls, stood up; and marveling why he said so, asked him if he would be content to stand to the judgment of the Doctors.

Green. Green then said, that he was content to stand to the Doctors judgment.

Feck. I will then propound unto you (quoth Fecknam) the Doctors, and interpret them your self. So he alleged a place of Chrysostom, Ad Popul. Antioch. Which was this, Elias ascendens melosum suum post se reliquit: Christus vero ascendens carnem suam assumpsit, & eandem post se reliquit. Elias going up, left his Cloak behind him: but Christ ascending up took his flesh, and also left it behind him. And he demanded Green, how he understood the place.

Green. Then Green prayed him that he would confer the Doctors sayings together, and therefore alleged the same Doctor again, writing upon the 1 Cor 10. An non est panis quem nos benedicimus, communicatio corporis Domini? Nonne est calix, &c. i. Is not the Bread which we bless the Communication of the Lords Body? Whereby he proved that this Doctor called this Sacrament but a sign of the Lords Body. Many other words of probation and denial were betwixt them.

Feck. At last Fecknam demanded of him, how long he had been of this Opinion. For Mr. Green (said he) you confessed once to me, that when you were at Oxford at School, you were called the rankest Papist in that House, and being compelled to go to the Lecture of Peter Martyr, you were converted from your old Doctrine.

Green. And Green confessed the same.

Feck. Then again he said, that Green told him that the said Peter Martyr was a Papist in his first coming to Oxford. Whereupon he made an exclamation, and prayed the People to consider how vain his Doctrine that he professed was, which was grounded upon one man, and that upon so unconfront a man as Peter Martyr, which perceiving the wicked intent of the Council, was content to please them, and forsake the true and Catholic Faith.

Green. Green said that he grounded not his Faith upon Martyr, nor any other, nor did believe so because Martyr believed the same? but because that he had heard the Scriptures, and the Doctors of the Church truly and wholly expounded by him; neither had he any regard of the man, but of the word which he spake. And further he said, that he heard the said Mr. Peter say often, that he had not as yet, while he was a Papist, read Chrysostom upon the tenth to the Corinthians, nor many other places of the Doctors: but when he had read them, and well considered them, he was content to yield to the Doctors, having first humbled himself in prayer, desiring God to illuminate him, and bring him to the true understanding of the Scripture. Which thing (said Green) if you my Lord would do, I do not doubt, but God would open your eyes, and shew you his Truth, no more then I do doubt his words to be true that saith; Ask, and it shall be given to you; knock and it shall be opened unto you, &c.

Feck. Then Fecknam asked him, what he thought of this Article; Sanctam Ecclesiam Catholicam.

Green. And Green answered, that he did believe one holy and universal Church throughout all the world.

Feck. Then Fecknam said, that he would fain have a sure mark and token, whereby he might know this Church? and therefore he prayed Green to define unto him this Church.

Green. Green answered, that this Church did agree in verity of the true Doctrine of Christ, and was known by the true administration of his Sacraments.

Feck. Whereupon Fecknam said, that he would prove the Church whereof he was, to be never agreeing in his Doctrine, but always to have been in Controversie in their Religion. For (said he) Luther and Zuinglius could never agree in their writings or sayings, nor Oecolampadius with Carlostadius, nor Carlostadius with Fecknam, either either Zuinglius or Luther, &c. for Luther writing upon the Sacrament of the Altar, said, that in hoc pane, vel sub hoc pane corpus Domini accipimus. Zuinglius controlling him, said, Sub signo panis corpus Domini accipimus. And the other controlled him in like case.

The Gospelers in words seem to dissent, but in effect do agree with the Word.

Green. Then Mr. Green proved their opinions of the Sacrament to be one in effect, being rightly weighed: and though their words did not found all one, yet they meant one thing; and their Opinions were all one, as he proved by divers other examples.

Pecknam. Then Pecknam desired him that he would not so wilfully cast himself away, but to be rather conformable to reason, and that my Lord Bishop there present would be good unto him, and would grant him respite (if he would demand it) for a fortnight or three weeks, and that he should chuse any Learned man whom he would, and should go with him home to his house, and that he whom he would chuse, would willingly take the pains to read and confer the Doctors with him, and open the Doctors minds and meanings unto him.

Thus for biddeth Mr. Green to be called Master.

Boner. Then Boner said, that he was proud, and an obstinate Boy; and therefore he bade Pecknam to hold his peace, and to call him no more Mr. Green: for (said he) you ought not to call an Heretic Master.

Note the blind ignorance of Pecknam, as though the Kingdom of Christ was not gotten at the death of Christ.

Pendleton. After this Dr. Pendleton alleged to him this Text out of the 22. of Luke; Ex hoc non manducabo illud donec impleatur in regno Dei. Here (said he) you must confess your Opinion to be false, else you must say that Christ was a liar: for Christ said, I will eat no more of this, while it is fulfilled in my Father's Kingdom. If Christ did eat no more the Bread when he spake these words, then must you say that he was a liar: for he did eat Bread after with his Disciples before he ascended. But if you say he did eat his Body then, and after but Bread, it will not agree with the Scriptures, nor with good reason.

This Bishop beate was the Bishop of Windsor at.

Green. Then Green answered and said, that this was spoken by an anticipation, as one of their own Bishops, (which is now dead) did say.

Pendleton. Then Dr. Pendleton said, that that was no sufficient discharge, nor no sufficient answer for him in this case; for (said he) it is well known that the Bishop was of a contrary Opinion to you, and that he died a good Christian man.

Green. To which words Green said, I do not call him to witness in this case, as though he were a sufficient man, to prove my saying to be true in this matter: but I doallege him against you, as Paul did the Scripture, which he found graven in the Altar of the Athenians, against themselves, ignoto Deo.

In the old time Excommunication was the greatest penalty in nature of Fitch and Confession.

These with many other words were between them, which I do overpass, because it were too long to stand upon recital of every thing. Last of all the Bishop asked him, if he would recant. He said nay, he would not. But my Lord (said he) in old time there were no men put to death for their Conscience, until such time as Bishops found the means to make it death to believe contrary to them; but Excommunication (my Lord) was the greatest penalty which men had for their Conscience; yea, inasmuch that S. Augustine wrote, and commanded that no man should be put to death for his Opinion.

Boner. Then Boner said, that when S. Augustine saw what inconveniences followed of that Commandment, he wrote again to the temporal Rulers, commanding them to punish their Bodies also.

Green. But, said Green, he bade not put them to death.

Bon. He bade punish them, quoth Boner.

Green. Yea, said Green, but not put them to death.

Boner. That they should be punished, quoth Boner again.

Sentence given against Mr. Green.

This talk ended, he asked Green if he would recant, and return to their Romish Mother. Which when he denied, the Bishop pronounced the Sentence definitive against him, and so committed him to the Sheriffs of London, who caused him to be carried to Newgate.

And as he was going thither, there met with him two Gentlemen, being both his special Friends, minding belike to comfort their persecuted Brother: but at their meeting, their loving and friendly hearts (not able any longer to hide themselves) were manifested by the abundance of their pitiful tears. To whom, when Green saw them, he said in these or like words, Ah my Friends, is this your comfort you are come to give me, in this my occasion of heaviness? Must I, who needed to have comfort ministered to me, become now a comforter of you? And thus declaring his most quiet and peaceable Mind and Conscience, he cheerfully spake to them and others, until he came to the Prison door, into the which he joyfully entered, and there remained always either in Prayer (whereunto he much gave himself) or else in some other godly meditations and exercises, unto the 28. day of January, when he with his other above-mentioned Brethren went most cheerfully unto the place of their torments, often repeating, as well by the way, as also at the Stake, these Latin Verses following.

*Christe Deus, sine te spes est mihi nulla salutis:
Te duce vera sequor, te duce falsus a nego.*

Anno 1555.
The words of Mr. Green to his Friends, by the way going to Newgate.

Verses of Mr. Green written in his Friends Book.

In English thus,

*O Christ, my God, sure hope of health,
Beside thee have I none:
The truth I love, and falsehood hate,
By thee my Guide alone.*

During the time of his Imprisonment in Newgate, divers of his Friends had access unto him, to whom he gave sundry godly Exhortations, wherewith they were not only well contented, but for better remembrance as well of the same his instructions, as also of his own good and godly person, they desired him to write somewhat in their Books, which request he willingly granted, as in manner here ensueth.

These Verses were written in a Book of M. Hussey of the Temple.

*Behold thy self by me,
Such one was I, as thou:
And thou in time shalt be,
Even dust as I am now.*

Bartlet Green.

These Verses were also written in a Book of Mr. William Fleetwood, of the same House.

*My Resting-road is found,
Vain hope and hap adieu:
Love whom you list with change,
Death shall me rid from you.*

Bartlet Green.

Amongst other divers and singular good virtues of this good man, specially in him was to be noted such a modest nature, so humbly thinking of himself, as in few men is to be found, ever dejecting himself under that was in him, and ever seeming to be less than he was, so that nothing less he could abide, than to hear of his praise or commendation; as well declareth not only his Letter written to Mr. Philpot, wherein he doth earnestly expostulate with him, for slandering him with praise of his wit and learning, and other manifold virtues of great excellency; but also by his own speech and answers in his Examination, wherein he casteth from him all knowledge of learning and cunning, when notwithstanding he had more in him, than to any mans eyes did appear.

The singular modesty and humble nature of Mr. Green.

So great and admirable was this gift of modesty grafted in the nature of him, so far abhorring from all pride and arrogance, that as he could not abide any thing that was spoken to his advancement or praise; so neither did there appear in him any stew or brag in those things wherein he might justly glory, which were his punishments and sufferings for the cause and quarrel of Christ. For when he was beaten and scourged with rods by Bishop Boner (which scarce any man would believe, nor I neither, but that I heard it of him, which heard it out of his mouth) and he greatly rejoiced in the same, yet his shamefast modesty was such, that never he would express any mention thereof, lest he should seem to

Anno 1556, to glory too much in himself, save that only he opened the fame to one Mr. Coston of the Temple, a friend of his, a little before his death.

Theophilus

Moreover, to his rare and maidenly modesty in him was also adjoined the like nature of mercy and pitiful compassion; which affection though it seemeth to be little regarded of some, yet in my mind is there no other thing wrought in nature, wherein man resembleth more truly the image of the high Majesty of Almighty God, then this. And as in this respect of merciful tenderness, man only excelleth all other beasts; so almost no less may this man seem to pass many other men, whose customable property and exercise was to visit the poor Prisoners with him in Prison both with Bodily relief, and also with Spiritual comfort: and finding many of them (I mean such as were there for theft and other naughty facts) very penitent and sorry for their evil demeanours, in hope of their amendment, did not only by mouth, but also by his Letters require, yea, as it were of duty in love, did charge his Friends to travel for their deliverances; such was the pity and charitable mercy of this godly and most true member of Christs Church, as appeareth by this Letter here following.

Tommy very loving Friends and Masters Mr. Goring, Mr. Fernham, Mr. Fleetwood, Mr. Ruffwel, Mr. Bell, Mr. Huley, Mr. Caldhop, Mr. Bowyer, and other my Masters of the Temple, Bartlet Green willeth health of Body and Soul.

A Letter of
Mr. Bartlet
Green to certain of his loving Friends in the Temple.
What true friendship is.
True friendship is not measured by distance of place or of persons.

Very Friends are they which are knit together with the knot of Charity; Charity doth not decay, but increaseth in them that do faithfully: whereof it followeth, that though we be absent in body, yet are we present in the spirit, coupled together with the unity of Faith in the bond of peace, which is love. How is he worthy the name of a Friend, that measureth his Friendship with the distance of a place, or parting of persons? If thy friend be out of sight, is thy friendship ended? If he be gone into the Country, wilt thou cease to love him? If he be passed the Seas, wilt thou forsake him? If he be carried into Heaven, is charity hindered thereby? On the one side we have the use of the Fathers from the Primitive Church, that gave thanks for their friends that died in the Faith, to prove that Charity did not with death. On the other side (saith Horace) Caelum non animus mutant, qui trans mare currunt.

What speak I of Horace? Saith not St. Paul the same thing? For we are members of his Body, of his flesh, and of his Blood, yea, we are members one of another. Is the hand or arm, foot or leg a member, when it is dismembered from the Body? How can we be members, except we be joynted together? What is the line that coupleth us, but love? When all things shall fail, love faileth never. Hope hath his end, when we get that he hoped for. Faith is finished in Heaven, love endureth for ever: Love (I say) that proceedeth of Charity; for carnal love, when that which he loveth is lost, doth perish with the flesh. Neither was that ever but fleshly love, which by distance of place, or severing of bodies is parted asunder. If love be the end or sum of the Law, if Heaven and Earth shall perish, yet one jot of Gods Word shall not decay, why should we think that love lieth not for ever?

I need not to write much to you my friends, neither can I have leisure now that the Keepers are risen: but this I say; If we keep Christs Commandment in loving each other, as he loved us, then should our love be everlasting. This friendship Paul felt when it moved him to say, that neither length nor breadth (meaning no distance of place) neither height nor depth should sever him from the love of Christ. Weigh well this place, and mete it with Pauls measures; so shall we find that if our love be untainted, it can never be ended. Now may you say, Why writest thou this? certainly to the end that if our Friendship be stable, you may accomplish this the last request of your friend, and perform after my death the friendship we began in our life, that amity may increaseth until God make it perfect at our next meeting together.

Mr. Fleetwood, I beseech you remember Wistrance and Cook, two singular men among common Prisoners.

Mr. Fernham and Mr. Bell, with Mr. Huley (as I hope) will dispatch Palmer and Richardson with his Companion: I pray you Mr. Palmer think on John Grove, an honest poor man Traiford and Rice Apprice his Accomplishes. My Cousin Thomas Wiston (a Scrivener in Lombard Street) hath promised to further their delivery: at the least he can instruct you which way to work, I doubt not but that Mr. Bowyer will labour for the good wife Cooper for she is worthy to be holpen) and Berard the Frenchman. There be also divers other well disposed men, whose deliverance if ye will not labour for, yet I humbly beseech you to seek their relief, as you shall see cause: namely, of Henry Apprice, Lancelot Hobbes, Laber, Homes, Carre, and Bockingham, a young man of goodly gifts in Wit and learning, and (saying that he is somewhat wild) likely to do well hereafter. There be also two women, Cunningham and Alice Alexander that may prove honest. For these and all other poor Prisoners here I make this my humble suite and prayer to you all my Masters, and especially good friends, beseeching you of all bonds of amity, for the precious Blood of Jesus Christ, in the bowels of mercy, to tender the causes of miserable Captives; help to clothe Christ, visit the afflicted, comfort the sorrowful, and relieve the needy. The very God of peace guide your hearts to have mercy on the poor, and love faithfully together, Amen. This present Monday when I look to die, and live for ever.

Yours as ever, Bartlet Green.

Another Letter of Mr. Green to Mrs. Elizabeth Clark.

Would God (fit were his pleasure) that with this Letter I might send you my heart and mind, and whatsoever there is in me else, that pertaineth to God: So should I think it the best message, and happiest Letter that ever I could write. But though I obtain not my desire, yet shall I not cease with continual Prayer to labour for you, desiring Almighty God to increase that which he hath long since begun in you, of sister like, and earnest zeal towards his Religion. In Faith (as faith St. Paul) the that is a true widow and friendless, putteth her trust in God, continuing day and night in supplication and Prayer; but she that liveth in pleasure is dead, even yet alive. And verily a true widow is she that hath married Christ, forsaking the vanities of the world, and lust of the flesh. For as the married woman careth how to love, please, and serve her husband; so ought the widow to give all her heart and Soul, thoughts and words, studies and labours, faithfully to love God, veruoli to bring up her Children and household, and diligently to provide for the poor and oppressed.

Therefore St. Paul first instructeth a widow how to behave herself, that is, Not to live in pleasure, then to watch unto prayer, is the only means to obtain all our desires, steadfastly laying up all our trust in God, as David right well saith, First eschew evil, then do good. Of Anna, the prisme was written, that she never went out of the Temple, but served God with fasting and prayer night and day; so well had the espoused Christ, Judith wore a Smock of hair, continuing in fasting, and had good report of all men.

The next care that belongeth to a widow, is, that she bring up her Children and household godly in the nurture and information of the Lord. Whereof St. Paul saith; If any have Children or Nephews, let them learn first to rule their own house godly, and to recompence their elders. The incontinency and covetousness of Phineas and Ophim, corrected by Ely their Father, provoked Gods vengeance upon him and all his kindred. The over tender love of Abalom expelled David from his Kingdom. The unrebuked sins of Ammon encouraged Abalom to slay his Brother; most manifest examples against the Parents, for the offences of their Children.

Contrariwise, how greatly might Hannah rejoice over Samuel her Son, whom she had brought up in the House of the Lord? What thanks might Tobias wife give for her Son Toby? How happy was Solomon to be taught by the Prophet Nathan? But above all widows, thrice blessed was the happy Mother of the seven Sons, that is, had instructed them by the fear of God, that by no torments they would shrink from the love of his truth?

Of the last part Saint Paul sheweth that a widow should be chosen, If she have nourished her Children, if she have been liberal to strangers, if she have walked the Saints feet, and if she have ministered to them in Adversity. Herein it is evident how earnestly Saint Paul would have widows bent towards the poor; for that (as though they only had been therefore meet) he appointed only widows to minister to the Saints, and to gather for the poor. Which use also continued almost throughout the Primitive Church; that widows had the charge and gathering for the poor men and strangers.

Of your neighbours I need not to put you in Remembrance, seeing you daily feed them with good Hospitality by which means also many foreigners are of you relieved: but of the poor Almshouses, and miserable prisoners here in London, many lacking their liberty without cause, some under the Colour of Religion, some only kept for fees, and some on private mens displeasure. Alas that Christ so hungereth, and no man will feed him; is sore oppressed with thirst, and no man will give him drink; destitute of all lodgings, and not relieved; naked, and not clothed; sick, and not visited; imprisoned, and not seen.

In times past men could bestow large sums of money on copes, vestments, and ornaments of the Church. Why rather follow we not * St. Ambroses example, which fold the same for the relief of the poor, or Chrysostoms Commandment, which willed first to deck and garnish the living Temple of God? But alas, such is the wickedness of these our last days, that nothing moveth us; neither the pure Doctrine, the godliness of life, nor good examples of the Ancient Fathers. If in any thing they erred, if they have written any thing that serveth for sects and dissension, that will their charitable Children imbrace, publish and maintain with sword, flagot, and fire! But all in vain; they strive against the stream. For though in despite of the truth, by force of the cares of crafty persuasion, they may bring themselves into the Haven of Hell: yet can they not make all men believe that the banks move whilest the ship saileth, nor ever shall be able to turn the direct course of the stream of Gods Truth. Our Lord Jesus Christ strengthen you in all pure Doctrine and upright living, and give you grace virtuously to bring up your Children and Family, and carefully to provide for the poor and oppressed, Amen. At Newgate the 20. of January. Anno 1556.

Another certain writing of Mr. Bartlet Green.

Another certain writing of Mr. Bartlet Green. Better is the day of death (saith Solomon) then the day of birth. Man that is born of a Woman liveth but a short time, and is replenished with many miseries; but happy are the dead that die in the Lord. Man of woman is born in travel, to live in misery; man through Christ doth dy in joy, and live in felicity. He is born to dy, and dieth to live. Straight as he cometh into the World, with cries he uttereth his miserable estate; straight as he departeth, with songs he praiseth God for ever. Scarce yet in his cradle, three deadly enemies assault him; after death no Adversary may annoy him. Whilest he is here, he displeaseth God; when he is dead, he fulfilleth his will. In this life here he dieth through sin; in the life to come he liveth in righteousness. Through many tribulations in earth he is still purged; with joy unspeakable in Heaven is he made pure for ever. Here he dieth every hour; there he liveth continually. Here is sin; there is righteousness. Here is time; there is eternity. Here is hatred; there is love. Here is pain; there is pleasure. Here is misery; there is felicity. Here is corruption; there is immortality. Here we see vanity; there shall we behold the Majesty of God with triumphant and unspeakable joy in glory everlasting. Seek therefore the things that are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God the Father; unto whom, with the Son and the Holy Ghost, be all honour and glory, World without end, Amen.

Yours in Christ, Bartlet Green.

Divers other Letters and matters there were before which this Servant of God did write, as namely certain notes and extracts in Latine out of the Doctors and other Authors for his memory, whereby is declared how studious he was in the searching and knowledge of the Law of God, although his profession was the temporal Law. Where I would to God he were not among the Lawyers such a Phenix, that he had very few or no fellows to flie with him, or to follow his steps. But God is to be praised, that although we read of few or none among that sort that died as he did, yet good witness doth spring up daily of the same profession, to such towards and godly zeal, that some hope already appeareth shortly to come to pass, that this godly Phenix shall not flie alone. These aforesaid notes and gatherings of his out of the Doctors were taken from him by Boner, being found about him, which was to him no little grief. He among the rest was first apprehended, but last of them condemned, which was the fifteenth day of January, and afterward burned with the other Martyrs, the 27. of the same Month.

3. Thomas Brown, Martyr.

Thomas Brown, born in the Parish of Histon within the Diocess of Ely, came afterwards to London, where he dwelled in the Parish of Saint Brides in Fleetstreet, a Married Man, of the age of thirty seven years, who because he came not to his Parish Church, was presented by the Constable of the Parish to Boner. As touching whole Articles, whereupon he was examined by the said Boner, with his answers also annexed to the same, mention goeth before, as in the general process of him and of the rest may appear. This Thomas Brown being had to Fulham, with the other there to be examined was required upon Thursday, being the 26. day of September, to come into the Chappel to hear Mass, which he refusing to do, went into the Warren, there kneeled among the trees. For this he was greatly charged of the Bishop, as for an hainous matter, because he said it was done in despite and contempt of their Mass; which seemed to the Bishop and his Chaplains no small offence. At length being produced to his last examination before the said Bishop the fifteenth day of January, there to hear sentence definitive against him; first he was required with many fair words and glowing promises to revoke his Doctrine, to whom the foresaid Bishop speaking these words, said, Brown, ye have been before me many times and oft, and I have travelled with thee, to win thee from thine errors; yet thou, and such like, have and do report that I go about to seek thy Blood &c.

To whom the said Thomas Brown answered again; Yea, my Lord (saith he) indeed ye be a Bloodfucker, and I would I had as much Blood as is water in the Sea, for you to suck.

Boner then proceeding to the Articles, when he had read them unto him again, as he had done divers times before, asked him whether he was content and willing to relinquish those his Heresies and erroneous opinions (as he called them) and return again unto the Unity of the Catholick Faith. Whereunto he made answer again, saying, if they were Heresies, he would forsake them. They be Heresies (quoth the Bishop.) How will ye prove it, said Brown? for I will not go from mine answer, except you can prove them to be Heresies, which ye shall never do. For that which you call Heresie, is no Heresie. With that Boner, not able, or else not disposed to supply the part of a sufficient teacher, in proving that which the other had denied by good Authority and Doctrine of the Scriptures, went about with words and promise of pardon to allure him to renounce those his Heresies, as he called them, and to return unto the Unity of his Mother the Catholick Church, &c.

To whom the said Thomas inferred again, as follows; ch; Prove it (said he) to be Heresie, that I do hold and maintain, and I will turn to you. But you condemn me, because I will not confesse and believe the Bread in the Sacrament of the Altar (as you call it) to be the Body of Christ, and therefore ye spill mine and such like innocents Blood, and therefore ye Queens true Subjects, for which you shall answer, and that shortly.

After this being spoken, Boner (as he had done to the other before) read in writing the Sentence definitive against him. The Copy and Form of which Sentence wherewith the Papists were wont to condemn all the innocent Saints of Christ, is above expressed. And so this done, he was committed to the Sheriffs to be had away, and burned the 27th day of the said Month of January, constantly abiding with the other the Popes torments for the true Confession of his Christian Faith.

4. John Tufdon, Martyr.

John Tufdon, Martyr, January 27.

The same day and time, when the foresaid Thomas Brown with his Fellows was condemned (as is above rehearsed) being the fifteenth day of January, was also produced John Tufdon, with the rest of the said Company, unto the like Condemnation. This John Tufdon was born in Ipswich, in the County of Suffolk, after that Apprentice in London, dwelling with one George Goodgear of the Parill of S. Mary Botolph, within the Diocese of London, who being complained of to Sir Richard Cholmley and Dr. Story, was by them sent unto Boner Bishop of London, and was divers times before him in Examination.

The Articles and Interrogatories ministred unto him, as unto the rest, before are specified, with his Answers also to the same annexed, &c. After this he was brought unto the open Confession; where the said blessed and true Servant of the Lord John Tufdon, appearing before the said Bishop and his Complices, was moved with sundry perswasions (as their manner is) to go from his opinion (which they named Herefie) and to persist in the unity of the Church which they were of; but he constantly persisting in that which he had received by the Preachers in King Edward's times, refused to do so, saying, there was no Herefie in his Answers. For I, said he, desire all Herefie. The Bishop yet still used his old accustomed perswasions to remove him; promising moreover all his offences and errors (as he called them) to be forgiven him, if he would return, &c. Then said Tufdon, Tell me where in I have offended, and I will return. Then said the Bishop, In your Answers. No, said Tufdon again, I have not therein offended; and ye (my Lord) pretend Charity, but nothing thereof appeareth in your works. Thus after a few words, the Bishop did likewise promulgate against him Sentence of Condemnation; which being read, the godly and constant Martyr was committed to the Secular Power, and so with much patience finished this life with the other above named, the 27th day of January.

5. John Went, Martyr.

John Went, Martyr, January 27.

John Went born in Langham in Essex, within the Diocese of London, of the Age of 27, and a Sheerman by Occupation, first was examined (as partly is touched before) by Dr. Story upon the Sacrament of his Popish Altar; and because the poor man did not accord with him thoroughly in the Real Presence of the Body and Blood of Christ, the said Story did send him up to Boner B. of London. Who likewise, after divers Examinations upon the Articles aforesaid in the Consistory, attempted the like manner of perswasions with him, as he did to the other, to recant and return. To whom, in few words, the said Went answered again, He would not, but that by the leave of God, he would stand firm and constant in that he had said. And when the Bishop yet notwithstanding did still urge and call upon him with words and fair glosses, to give over himself to their opinion, he could have no other answer of him but this, No, I say as I have said, &c. Whereupon being condemned by the Bishops Sentence, he was committed unto the Sheriffs (whom that shameless Shaveling at that time abused for his Servile Butchers) and so brought to his Martyrdom, which he with no less constancy suffered to the end, with the rest of that blessed Society of Martyrs above named.

6. Isabel Foster, Martyr.

Isabel Foster, Martyr, January 27.

With these five Persons above recited and condemned, were also two Women in the said Company condemned the same time and likewise burned for the same cause; the one a Wife, called Isabel Foster, the other a Maid, named Joan Warne, or otherways, Lashford.

This foresaid Isabel was born in Graysesham in the Diocese of Carlisle, and afterwards married to one John Foster, Cutler, of the Parill of Sr. Brades in Essex, being of the Age of five and fifty years. She likewise, for not coming unto the Church, being sent unto Boner, and so imprisoned, was sundry times examined by the said Bishop, but never overcome, nor removed from the constant Confession of Christs Gospel.

At length, coming unto her final Examination before the Bishop in the Consistory the fifteenth day of the said Month of January, she was moved again, whether she would yet go from her former Answers. Whereunto she gave a resolute Answer in few words; I will not (saith she) go from them by Gods grace; and thereunto did adhere, neither being cask down by the menacing threats of the Bishop, nor yet yielding through his alluring inticements, promising both life and liberty, if she would associate her self in the Unity of the Catholic Church. Whereunto the said again in this wise, That she trusted she was never out of the Catholic Church, &c. and so persisting in the same, continued constant till the Sentence definitive was pronounced, and then she was committed by commandment of the Bishop to the Secular Power, and so brought a few days after to the Stake, the 7th and twentieth day of the foresaid Month; where she like a faithful Witness of the Lords Truth (with the other five aforesaid) ended her troubles here, to find a better rest in the Kingdom of Christ our Saviour.

7. Joan Lashford, alias Joan Warne, Martyr.

In a certain place of these Acts and Monuments heretofore, mention was made of one Elizabeth Warne, who with her Husband John Warne (as is aforesaid) in the beginning of Queen Marias Reign, was apprehended in Bowe Church-yard for being there at a Communion; and both suffered for the same, first the Man in the Month of May, then the Wife in July after; and now the Daughter in the Month of January followed her Parents in the same Martyrdom. Furthermore, in the same place following mention was made also of Dr. Story, who there (we said) was somewhat near unto the said Parties, either in Kindred or Alliance; albeit, as I understand since of some, there was no Kindred between them, but only that she was his Servant. Yet notwithstanding, the said Dr. Story (as it is above specified) before he was Commissioner, made intercession for the Parties to Dr. Mariyn then Commissioner; he but afterward being placed in Commission himself, he so far forgot himself, and his old Servant, that he became no small Proucer of their deaths. I will not here expostulate with the hard heart of that man, nor with his inconstancy: who yet notwithstanding, after he had brought them to death, was arrested himself for three-score pounds, charged with Debt in their behalf; which if it be true, it may thereby appear that he was in some piece of kindred joyed or allied unto them. But leaving that person unto the good pleasure of the Lord, let us return unto that we have in hand.

This Joan Lashford, born in the Parill of Little Alhallowes in Thames-street, was the Daughter of one Robert Lashford Cutler, and of the foresaid Elizabeth Warne, who afterward was married to John Warne Upholster, who (as is said) was persecuted for the Gospel of God to the burning fire; and after him his Wife; and after her, this Joan Lashford her Daughter; who, about the Age of twenty years, ministering to her Father and Mother in Prison, suspected and known to be of the same Doctrine and Religion, was sent to Boner Bishop of London, by Dr. Story, (as is above in her Answers to the Articles declared) and so committed to the Compter in the Powltrey, where she remained the space of five weeks, and from thence had to Newgate, where she continued the space of certain Months.

After that, remaining Prisoner in the Custody of the said Boner, her Confession was, being examined, that the whole twelve month before, and more, she came unto no Popish Mals Service in the Church, neither would she do, either to receive the Sacrament of the Altar, or to January 27.

And thus the constantly persevering in the Lords holy truth, was by the sentence definitive condemned and committed unto the Sheriffs, by whom the fore said seven and twentieth day of January she with the rest being brought unto the Stake, there washed her Clothes in the Blood of the Lamb, dying most constantly for his Word and Truth, to whom most lovingly she espoused her self.

And thus much concerning the Life, Story, and Condemnation of these seven Martyrs, afore specified.

Five other Martyrs in Canterbury, four Women and one Man, at two Stakes and one fire, altogether burned.

After these seven before rehearsed, martyred together in Smithfield, shortly after in the same Month, the 31. day of January, followed another like fellowship of Godly Martyrs at Canterbury, four Women and one Man, whose names be these:

1. John Lomas, Martyr.

John Lomas of the Parish of Tenderden, detected and presented of that Religion which the Papists call Heretic, and cited upon the same to appear at Canterbury, examined there of the first Article, whether he believed the Catholick Church or no, answered thus; that he believed so much as is contained in Gods Book, and no more.

Martyr.

Then being assigned to appear again under the pain of the Law the next Wednesday evening after, which was the 17. day of January, the said Lomas examined whether he would be confessed of a Priest or no, answered and said, that he found it not written that he should be confessed to any Priest in Gods Book, neither would be confessed, unless he were accused by some Man of Sin. Again, examined whether he believed the Body of Christ to be in the Sacrament of the Altar really under the forms of Bread and Wine after the Consecration or no, he answered that he believed no reality of Christs Body to be in the Sacrament, neither found he written, that he is there under form or tressel, but he believed so much as is written. Being then demanded whether he believed that there is a Catholick Church or no, and whether he would be content to be a member of the same, he answered therunto, that he believed so much as was written in Gods Book, and other answer then this he refused to give, &c. Whereupon the sentence was given and read against him the 18. day of January, and so committed to the secular power, he constantly suffered for the Conscience of a True Faith, with the other four Women here following.

2. Agnes Snot, Martyr.

Agnes Snot Widow, of the Parish of Smarden, likewise accused and cited for the true profession of Christs Religion, was divers times examined before the Pharisaical Fathers. Who, there compelled to answer to such Articles and inuogatories as should be ministered unto her, first denied to be confessed to a Priest; notwithstanding, the denied not to confess her offences as one to another, but not auricularly to any Priest. And as touching the Sacrament of the Altar, she protested that if the or any other did receive the Sacrament so as Christ & his Apostles after him did deliver it, then she and they did did receive it to their comfort: but as it is now used in the Church, the said that no man could otherwise receive it than to his damnation, as the thought. Afterward being examined again concerning Peance, whether it were a Sacrament or no, the plainly denied the same, and that the Popish manner of their Absolution was not consonant to the Word, nor necessary to be taken; with such other like, agreeing with the Answers and Confession of John Lomas before mentioned. Whereupon the Sentence being likewise read, she was committed to the Sheriffs of Canterbury, and so suffering Martyrdom with the rest, declared her self a perfect and constant witness of Christ and of his truth the 31 day of January.

3. Anne Albright, alias Champnes, Martyr.

Anne Albright, likewise appearing before the Judge and his Colleagues, it it was also objected concerning the same matter of Confession. Whereunto she answered in these words, saying, That she would not be confessed of a Priest, and added moreover, speaking unto the Priests, You Priests (said she) are the Children of Perdition, and can do no good by your Confession. And likewise speaking unto the Judge and his Assistance, she told them that they were Subverters of Christs Truth.

And as touching the Sacrament of the Altar, she said it was a naughty and abominable Idol, and so utterly denied the same Sacrament. Thus persisting and persevering in her former sayings and answers, she was condemned the said eighteenth day of the said Month, with the other above mentioned; with whom also she suffered quickly, and with great comfort, for the right of Christs Religion.

4. Joan Sole.

In the like manner Joan Sole, of the Parish of Horton, was condemned of the same Pharisees and Priests, for not allowing Confession Auricular, and for denying the Real Presence and Substance of Christ to be in the Sacrament of the Altar. Who, after their Pharisaical Sentence being promulgate, was brought by the Sheriffs to the Stake with the other four, and sustained the like Martyrdom with them, through the assistance of Gods holy Grace and Spirit mightily working in her, to the glory of his Name, and confirmation of his Truth.

5. Joan Catmer.

The fifth and last of this heavenly Company of Martyrs, was Joan Catmer of the Parish of Hibb, wife (as it should seem) of George Catmer burned before. Who being asked what she said to Confession made to a Priest, denied to be confessed to any such Priest. And moreover, the Judge speaking of the Sacrament of the Altar, she said and affirmed, That she believed not in that Sacrament, as it was then used, for that it was made, said she, a very Idol. In this her Confession the remaining and persisting, was by the like Sentence cruelly of them condemned, and so suffered with the foresaid Thomas Lomas, and the other three fellow Martyrs, ratifying and confessing with their blood the true knowledge and doctrine of the glorious Gospel of Christ Jesus our Saviour.

These five persons were burnt at two Stakes, and one fire, together at Canterbury, as is before said: Who, when the fire was flaming about their ears, did sing Psalms. Whereat the good Knight, Sir John Norton, being there present, wept bitterly at the sight thereof.

The Judges and other Assistants which fate upon her, and the other four above mentioned, were Richard Faucet, John Warren, John Mills, Robert Collins, and John Baker the Notary.

The life, State, and story of the Reverend Pastor and Prelate, Thomas Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, Martyr, burned at Oxford, for the Confession of Christs true Doctrine under Queen Mary, An. 1556. March 21.

AS concerning the life and estate of that most reverend Father in God, and worthy Prelate of godly memory, Thomas Cranmer late Archbishop of Canterbury, and of the original cause and occasion of his perferment unto his Archiepiscopal Dignity, who of many hath been thought to have purchased the time by friendship only, and of some other esteemed unworthy so high a Vocation: It is thus more to be noted and considered, that the same Thomas Cranmer coming of an ancient Parentage, from the Conquest to be dequed, and continuing since in the name and family of a Gentleman, was born in a Village called Wolshulen in Nottinghamshire, of whose old name and name there remaineth at these days one Manor and Mansion-house in Lincolnshire, called Cranmer Hall, &c. Some times of Heritage of the said stock and family. Who being from his Infancy kept at School, and brought up not without much good Civility, came in process of time unto the University of Cambridge, and there prospering in right good knowledge amongst the better sort of Students, was chosen Fellow of Jesus College in Cambridge. And so being Master of Art, and Fellow of the same Colledge, it chanced him to marry a Gentlemans Daughter: by means whereof he lost and gave over his Fellowship there, and became the Reader in Buckingham Colledge; and for that he would with more diligence apply that his Office of Reading, he placed his said Wife in an Inn, called the Dolphin in Cambridge, the Wife of the House being of Affinity unto her. By reason whereof, and for that his often resort unto his Wife in that Inn, he was much marked of some Popish Merchants; whereupon rose the slanderous noise and report against him, after he was preferred to the Archbishopric of Canterbury, raised up by the malicious disdain of certain malignant Adversaries to Christ and his Truth, brutting abroad every where, that he was but an Hostler, and therefore without all good learning. Of whose malicious reports, one of their practices in that behalf shall hereafter be declared, as place and time shall serve.

But in the mean time to return to the matter present: Whilst this said Mr. Cranmer continued as a Reader in Buckingham Colledge, his Wife died in Childbed. After whose death, the Masters and Fellows of Jesus Colledge desirous again of their old Companion, namely, for his forwardness in learning, chose him again Fellow of the same Colledge. Where he remaining at his Study, became in few years after the Reader of Divinity Lecture in the same Colledge, and in such special estimation and reputation with the whole University, that being Doctor of Divinity, he was commonly appointed one of the Heads of Divinity (which are two or three of the chiefest learned men) to examine such as yearly proceed in Commencement, either Bachelors or Doctors of Divinity, by whose approbation the whole University licenseth them to proceed unto their degree; and again by whose disallowance the University also rejecteth them for a time to proceed, until they be better furnished with more knowledge.

Now Doctor Cranmer, ever much favouring the knowledge of the Scripture, would never admit any to proceed in Divinity, unless they were substantially seen in the story of the Bible: by means whereof certain Priests, and other religious persons, who were principally brought up in the study of School Authors, without regard had to the Authority of Scriptures, were commonly rejected by him; so that he was greatly, for that his severe examination, of the religious sort much hated, and had in great indignation: and yet it came to pass in the end, that divers of them being thus compelled to study the Scriptures, became afterwards very well learned and well affected; inasmuch, that when they proceeded Doctors of Divinity, they could not overmuch extoll and commend Mr. Doctor Cranmers goodness towards them, who had for a time put them back, to aspire unto better knowledge and perfection. Among whom Dr. Barret a white Friar, who afterwards dwelt at Norwich, was after that sort handled, giving him no less commendation for his happy rejecting of him for a better amendment. Thus much I repeat, that our apostish and Popish sort of ignorant Priests, may well understand that this his exercise, kind of life, and vocation was not altogether Hostler like.

Well, to go forwards; Like as he was neither in fame unknown, nor in knowledge obscure, so was he greatly solicited by Dr. Capon, to have been one of the Fellows in the foundation of Cardinal Wolsey's College in Oxford, which he utterly refused, not without danger of indignation. Notwithstanding foreseeing that which after chanced, to the utter confusion of many well affected learned men there, without consideration (because mans glory was there more fought for than Gods) he stood to the danger of the said indignation, which chanced more prosperously unto him within few years after than he looked for. For whilst he thus continued in Cambridge, the great and weighty Cause of King Henry the Eighth, his Divorce with the Lady Katherine Dowager of Spain, came into question; which being many ways by the space of two or three years amongst the Canonists, Civilians, and other learned men diversely disputed and debated, it came to pass that this said Dr. Cranmer, by reason that the Plague was in Cambridge, resorted to Walsham Abbey, to one Mr. Cressley's House there, whose Wife was of kin to the said Mr. Cranmer. And for that he had two Sons of the said Cressley with him at Cambridge as his Pupils, he resided at Walsham Cressley, at the House of the said Mr. Cressley, with the said two Children, during that Summer time whilst the Plague reigned.

In this Summer time Cardinal Campeius and Cardinal Wolsey, being in Commission from the Pope, to hear and determine that great Cause in controversy between the King and the Queen, his pretended Wife, dallied and delayed all the Summer time until the Month of August came, in hearing the said Cause in controversy debated. When August was come, the said Cardinals little minding to proceed to Sentence giving, took occasion to finish their Commission, and not further to determine therein, pretending that it was not permitted by the Laws to keep Courts of Ecclesiastical matters in Harvest time: which sudden stay and giving over of the said Commission by both the Cardinals, being unknown to the King, it so much moved him, that he taking it as a mock at the Cardinals hands, commanded the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk to dispatch forthwith Cardinal Campeius home again to Rome; and so in haste removed himself from London to Walsham for a night or twain, whilst his Household removed to Greenwich:

by means whereof it chanced that the Harbengers lodged Doctor Stephens, Secretary, and Doctor Foxe, Almoner (who were the chief furtherers, preferers, and defenders on the Kings behalf of the said Cause) in the House of the said Mr. Cressley, where the said Dr. Cranmer was also lodged and resident. When Supper time came, they all three Doctors met together; Doctor Stephens and Doctor Foxe much marveling of Doctor Cranmers being there. Who declared to them the cause of his there being, namely, for that the Plague was in Cambridge. And as they were of old Acquaintance, so the Secretary and the Almoner right well entertained Doctor Cranmer, minding to understand part of his Opinion touching their great business they had in hand. And so as good occasion served, whilst they were at Supper, they conferred with Dr. Cranmer concerning the Kings Cause, requesting him of his Judgment and Opinion what he thought therein.

of the Kings divorce.

Whereto Dr. Cranmer answered, That he could say little to the matter, for that he had not studied nor looked for it. Notwithstanding he said to them, that in his Opinion they made more ado in prosecuting the Law Ecclesiastical than needed. It were better, as I suppose, quoth Dr. Cranmer, that the question, Whether a man may marry his Brothers wife, or no? were decided and discussed by the Divines, and by the Authority of the Word of God, whereby the Confidence of the Prince might be better satisfied and quieted, then thus from year to year by fruitless delays to prolong the time, leaving the very truth of the matter unboulded out by the Word of God. There is but one truth in it, which the Scripture will soon declare, make open and manifest, being by learned men well handled, and that may be as well done in England in the Universities here, as at Rome, or elsewhere in any foreign Nation, the Authority whereof will compel any Judge from to come to a definitive Sentence: and therefore, as I take it, you might this way have made an end of this matter long since. When Dr. Cranmer had thus ended his tale, the other two well liked of his device, and wished that they had so proceeded aforetime, and thereupon conceived some matter of that device to instruct the King withal, who then was minded to send to Rome again for a new Commission.

Now the next day, when the King removed to Greenwich, like as he took himself not well handled by the Cardinals in thus deferring his Cause, so his mind being unquieted, and desirous of an end of his long and tedious Sute, he called unto him these his two principal doers in his said Cause, namely, the said Dr. Stephens and Dr. Foxe, saying unto them, What now my Masters (quoth the King) shall we do in this infinite Cause of mine? I see by it there must be a new Commission procured from Rome, and when we shall have an end, God knoweth, and not I.

When the King had said somewhat his mind herein, the Almoner, Dr. Foxe, said unto the King again, We trust that there shall be better ways devised for your Majesty, then to make travel so far as to Rome any more in your Highnesses Cause, which by chance was put into our heads this other night being at Walsham. The King being very desirous to understand his meaning, said, Who hath taken in hand to instruct you, by any better or shorter way to proceed in our said Cause? Then said Dr. Foxe, It chanced us to be lodged at Walsham in Mr. Cressley's House this other night, your Highness being there, where we met with an old Acquaintance of ours, named Doctor Cranmer, with whom having Conference concerning your Highnesses Cause, he thought that the next way were, first to instruct and quiet your Majesties Confidence by trying your Highnesses Question out by the Authority of the Word of God, and thereupon to proceed to a final Sentence. With this Report the Secretary was not content with the Almoner, for that he did not utter this device as of their own invention. And when the Secretary would have seemed by colourable words to make it appear to the King, that they of themselves had devised that means; the King then said, Where is this Dr. Cranmer? Is he still at Walsham? They answered, that they left him there. Marry (said the King) I will surely speak with him, and therefore let him be sent for out of hand. I perceive (quoth the King) that man hath the Sow by the right ear. And if I had known this device but two years ago, it had been in my way a great piece of money, and had also rid me out of much disquietness.

Whereupon Dr. Cranmer was sent for, and being removed from Walsham to Cambridge, and so towards his Friends in Nottinghamshire, a Post went for him. But when he came to London, he began to quarrel with these two his Acquaintances, that he by their means was thus troubled and brought thither to be troubled in a matter, wherein he had nothing at all travelled in study; and therefore most instantly intreated them that they would make his excuse in such sort, that he might be dispatched away from coming in the Kings presence. They promised and took the matter upon them so to do, if by any means they might compass it. But all was in vain; for the more they began to excuse Dr. Cranmers absence, the more the King chid with them, for that they brought him not out of hand to his presence, so that no excuse serving, he was fain undelaidly to come to the Court unto the King, whom the gentle Prince benignly accepting, demanded his name, and said unto him, Were you not at Walsham such a time, in the company of my Secretary and my Almoner? Doctor Cranmer affirming the same; the King said again, Had you not conference with them concerning our matter of Divorce now in question after this sort, repeating the manner and order thereof? That is right true, if it please your Highness, quoth Doctor Cranmer. Well (said the King) I will perceive that you have the right scope of this matter. You must understand (quoth the King) that I have been long troubled in Confidence, and now I perceive that by this means I might have been long ago relieved one way or other from the same, if we had this way proceeded. And therefore, Master Doctors, I pray you, and nevertheless because you Anno 1556. you are a Subject, I charge and command you (all your other business and affairs set apart) to take some pains to see this my cause to be furthered according to your device, as much as it may lie in you, so that I may shortly understand whereunto I may trust. For this I protest before God and the World, that I seek not to be divorced from the Queen, if by any means I might justly be perswaded that this our Matrimony were inviolable, and not against the Laws of God; for otherwise there was never cause to move me to seek any such extremity. Neither was there ever Prince had a more gentle, a more obedient and loving Companion and Wife than the Queen is, nor did I ever fancy woman in all respects better, if this doubt had not risen; assuring you that for the singular virtues wherewith she is indued, besides the consideration of her noble stock, I could be right well contented still to remain with her, if so it would stand with the will and pleasure of Almighty God. And thus greatly commending her many and singular qualities, the King said, therefore pray you with an indifferent eye, and with as much dexterity as lieth in you, that you for your part do handle the matter for the discharging of both our Consciences.

Dr. Cranmer excusing and discharging himself to the King.

Dr. Cranmer alleged by the King to search the Scriptures in the cause of his divorce.

The King first given to understand that the Pope hath no authority to dispense with the Word of God.

The Kings matter removed from the Pope's Canon Law, to the trial of the Scriptures. The Kings marriage found by Gods Word unlawful.

Dr. Cranmer with others sent to Rome Ambassadors to the Pope.

The English Ambassadors not hasty to kiss the Popes foot.

The unmanly nature of a Dog presuming to kiss the Popes foot.

of God to shew some token by a Dog unto the Bishop of his inordinate pride, that his feet were more meet to be bitten of Dogs, then kissed of Christian men; the Spaniel (I say) when the Bishop extended his foot to be kissed, no man regarding the same, straight-way (as though he had been of purpose appointed thereunto) went directly to the Popes feet, and not only kissed the same unmanly with his mouth, but as some plainly reported and affirmed, took fast with his mouth the great toe of the Pope, so that in haste he pulled in his glorious feet from the Spaniel. Whereat our men smiling in their sleeves, what they thought, God knoweth. But in fine, the Pontifical Bishop after that, fought no more at that present for kissing his feet, but without any further Ceremony gave ear to the Ambassadors what they had to say.

Who entering there before the Bishop, offered on the Kings behalf to be defended, that no man fere Divina, could or ought to marry his Brothers wife, and that the Bishop of Rome by no means ought to dispense to the contrary: Divers promises were made, and sundry days appointed, wherein the question should have been disputed, and when our part was ready to answer, no man there appeared to dispute in that behalf. So in the end, the Bishop making to our Ambassadors good Countenance, and gratifying Dr. Cranmer with the Office of the Penitentiary, dismissed them undisturbed withal.

Whereupon the Earl of Wiltshire, and the other Commissioners, saving Dr. Cranmer, returned home again into England. And forthwith Dr. Cranmer went to the Emperor, being in his Journey towards Vienna, in Expedition against the Turk, there to answer such learned men of the Emperours Council, as would or could say any thing to the contrary part. Where amongst the rest, at the same time was Cornelius Agrippa, an high Officer in the Emperours Court, who having private Conference with Dr. Cranmer in the question, was so fully resolved and satisfied in the matter, that afterwards there was never disputation openly offered to Dr. Cranmer in that behalf. For through the perswasion of Agrippa, all other learned men there were much discouraged: Insomuch, that after Dr. Cranmer was returned into England, Agrippa fell into such displeasure with the Emperor, as some men thought, that because of the hindering and discouraging so much the contrary part, he was committed to Prison, where he forrow ended his life, as it was reported. In the mean space, while the Emperor returned home from Vienna thorow Germany, Dr. Cranmer in that Voyage had conference with divers learned men of Germany concerning the said question, who very ambiguously heretofore conceiving the cause, were fully resolved and satisfied by him.

This matter thus prospering on Dr. Cranmers behalf, as well touching the Kings question, as concerning the invalidity of the Bishop of Romes Authority, Bishop Warham, then Archbishop of Canterbury, departed this transitory life, whereby that Dignity then being in the Kings gift and disposition, was immediately given to Dr. Cranmer, as worthy for his Travel of such a Promotion. Thus much touching the preferment of Dr. Cranmer unto his Dignity, and by what means he achieved unto the same: not by flattery, nor by bribes, nor by any other unlawful means; which thing I have more at large discoursed, to stop the railing mouths of such, who being themselves obscure and unlearned, flame not to detract so learned a man most ignominiously with the surname of an Hostler, whom for his godly zeal unto sincere Religion, they ought with much humility to have had in regard and reputation.

Now as concerning his behaviour and trade of life towards God and the World, being now entered into his said Dignity, and soformuch as the Apostle S. Paul writing to two Bishops, Timothy and Titus, setteth out unto us a perfect description of a true Bishop, with all the properties and conditions belonging to the same, unto the which exemplar it shall be hard in these strange days to find the Image of any Bishop correspondent; yet for example sake let us take this Archbishop of Canterbury; and try him by the rule thereof, to see either how near he cometh to the description of S. Paul, or else how far off he fwereth from the common course of other in his time, of his calling. The rule of S. Paul is to be found, 1 Tim. 3. also in his Epistle to Titus, chap. 1. in these words :

Thereof of a true Bilhop
ep.

A Bilhop must be faultles, as becometh the Minister of God. Not stubborn, nor angry, no drunkard, no fighter, nor given to filthy lucre ; but barbarous, one that loveth goodness, sober-minded, righteous, holy, temperate, and such as cleaveth unto the true Word and Doctrine, that he may be able to exhort, &c.

A Minister
faultles.

Unto this rule and touch-stone, to lay now the life and conversation of this Archbishop, we will first begin with that which is thus written ; A Bilhop must be faultles, as becometh the Minister of God. Like as no man is without sin, and every man carrieth with him his especial vice and fault : so yet nevertheless, the Apostle meaneth, that the Bilhop and Minister must be faultles, in comparison of the common conversation of men of the world, which seem more licentiously to live at their own liberties and pleasures, then the Bilhop or Minister ought to do, having small regard unto good example giving : which a Bilhop and Minister must carefully ought to consider, lest by his dissolute life the word of God be slandered and evil spoken of. Which thing to avoid, and the better to accomplish this Precept of the Apostle, this worthy man evermore gave himself to continual study, not breaking that order that he in the University commonly used, that is, by five of the clock in the morning at his Book, and so consuming the time in study and prayer until nine of the clock ; he then applied himself (if the Princes affairs did not call him away) until dinner time to hear Suters, and to dispatch such matters as appertained unto his special cure and charge, committing his temporal affairs, both of his household and other foreign business, unto his Officers. So that such things were never impediments either to his study, or to his Pastoral Charge, which principally consisted in reformation of corrupt Religion, and in setting forth of true and sincere Doctrine. For the most part always being in Communion, he associated himself with learned men for lifting and bolting out of one matter or other, for the commodity and profit of the Church of England. By means whereof, and what for his private study, he was never idle ; besides that, he accounted it no idle point to bestow one hour or twain of the day in reading over such works and books as daily came from beyond the Seas.

After dinner, if any Suters were attendant, he would very diligently hear them, and dispatch them in such sort as every man commended his lenity and gentleness, although the case required that some whiles divers of them were committed by him to Prison. And having no Suters after dinner, for an hour or thereabout he would play at the Chess, or behold such as could play. That done, then again to his ordinary study, at the which commonly he for the most part stood, and seldom sate ; and there continuing until five of the clock, bestowed that hour in hearing the Common Prayer, and walking or using some honest pastime until Supper time. At Supper, if he had no appetite (as many times he would not sup) yet would he sit down at the Table, having his ordinary provision of his Meats furnished with expedient Company, he wearing on his hands his gloves, because he would (as it were) thereby wean himself from eating of meat, but yet keeping the Company with such fruitful talk as did repaite and much delight the hearers, so that by this means Hospitality was well furnished, and the Alms-chest well maintained for relief of the Poor. After Supper, he would consume one hour at the least in walking, or some other honest pastime, and then again until nine of the clock, at one kind of study or other. So that no hour of the day was spent in vain, but the same was so bestowed, as tended to the glory of God, the service of the Prince, or the commodity of the Church. Which his well bestowing of his time procured to him most happily a good report of all men, to be in respect of other mens conversation faultles, as it became the Minister of God.

The temperate diet at Dinner
Cranmer.

That a Bilhop ought not to be stubborn.

Secondly, it is required, That a Bilhop ought not to be stubborn. With which kind of vice, without great wrong, this Archbishop in no wise ought to be charged : whole Nature was such, as none more gentle, or fofter won to an honest suit or purpose, specially in such things, wherein by his word, writing, counsel, or deed, he might gratifie either any gentle or noble man, or do good to any mean person, or else relieve the needy and poor. Only in causes pertaining to God or his Prince, no man more stout, more constant, or more hard to be won ; as in that part his earnest defence in the Parliament House, above three days together, in disputing against the six Articles of Gardiners device, can testify. And though the King would needs have them upon some politick consideration to go forward, yet he so handled himself as well in the Parliament House, as afterwards by writing, so obediently and with such humble behaviour in words towards his Prince, protesting the cause not to be his, but Almighty Gods, who was the Author of all truth, that the King did not only well like his defence (willing him to depart out of the Parliament House, into the Council Chamber, whilst the Act should pass and be granted for safeguard of his Conscience ; which he with humble protestation refused, hoping that his Majesty in process of time would revoke them again) but also after the Parliament was finished, the King perceiving the zealous affection that the Archbishop bare towards the defence of his cause, which many ways by Scriptures and manifold Authorities and Reasons he had substantially confirmed and defended, sent the Lord Cromwel, then Vicegerent, with the two Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, and all the Lords of the Parliament, to dine with him at Lambeth ; where it was declared by the Vicegerent, and the two Dukes, that it was the Kings pleasure, that they all should in his Highness behalf, cherish, comfort, and animate him, as one that for his (well in that Parliament had shewed himself both greatly learned, and also discreet and wife, and therefore they willed him not to be discouraged for any thing that was passed contrary to his allegations. He most humbly thanked the Kings Majesty of his great goodness towards him, and them for all their pains, saying, I hope in God, that hereafter my allegations and authorities shall take place to the Glory of God and the commodity of the Realm ; in the mean time I will satisfie my self with the honourable consent of your Honours, and the whole Parliament.

Here is to be noted, that this Mans stout and Godly defence of the truth herein so bound the Princes Conscience, that he would not permit the truth in that Man to be clean overthrown with Authority and Power ; and therefore this way God working in the Princes mind, a plain token was declared hereby, that all things were not so sincerely handled in the confirmation of the said six Articles as it ought to have been ; for else the Prince might have had a just cause to have born his great indignation towards the Archbishop. Let us pray that both the like stoutness may be perceived in all Ecclesiastical and learned Men where the truth ought to be defended and also the like relenting and flexibility may take place in Princes and Noble Men ; when they shall have occasion offered them to maintain the same, so that they utterly overwhelm not the truth by self-will, power and Authority. Now in the end this Archbishops constancy was such towards Gods Cause, that he confirmed all his doings by bitter death in the fire, without respect of any Worldly Treasure or pleasure. And as touching his stoutness in his Princes cause, the contrary resistance of the Duke of Northumberland against him proved right well his good mind that way ; which chanced by reason that he would not consent unto the dissolving of Chantries, until the King came of age, to the intent that they might then better serve to furnish his Royal Estate, then to have so great Treasure consumed in his nonage. Which his stoutness ; joyned with such simplicity, surely was thought to divers of the Council, a thing incredible, specially in such sort to contend with him, who was so accounted in this Realm, as few or none would or durst gainstand him.

So dear was to him the cause of God, and of his Prince, that for the one he would not keep his Confidence clogged, nor for the other lurk or hide his head. Otherwise (as it is said) his very enemies might easily entreat him in any cause reasonable; and such things as he granted, he did without any suspicion of upbraiding or meed therefore: So that he was altogether void of the vice of stubbornness, and rather culpable of overmuch facility and gentleness.

Not angry.

The singular patience of this Archbishop.

Then followeth, Not angry. Surely if overmuch patience may be a vice, this Man may seem peradventure to offend rather on this part than on the contrary. Albeit for all his doings I cannot say: for the most part, such was his mortification that way, that few we shall find in whom the saying of our Saviour Christ so much prevailed as with him, who would not only have a Man to forgive his enemies, but also to pray for them; that lesson never went out of his memory. For it was known that he had many cruel enemies, not for his own defects, but only for his Religion sake: and yet whatsoever he was that fought his hinderance, either in goods, estimation or life, and upon conference would seem never so slenderly any thing to relent or excuse himself, he would both forget the offence committed, and also evermore afterwards friendly entertain him, and shew such pleasure to him, as by any means possible he might perform or declare: in so much that it came into a common Proverb: Do unto my Lord of Canterbury displeasure, or a throwed turn, and then you may be sure to have him your friend whiles he liveth. Of which his gentle disposition in abstaining from revengement, amongst many examples thereof, I will repeat here one.

A story between the Archbishop of Canterbury and a Popish Priest his enemy.

It chanced an ignorant Priest and Parson in the North parts (the town is not now in remembrance, but he was a kinsman of one Chersey a Grocer, dwelling within London, being one of those priests that use more to study at the Alehouse, than in his Chamber or in his study) to sit on a time with his honest neighbours at the Alehouse within his own Parish, where was communication mingled in commendation of my Lord Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury. This said Parson, envying his name only for Religion sake, said to his neighbours; what make you of him, quoth he, he was but an hostler, and hath no more learning than the Goslings that go yonder on the green, with such like slanderous and uncomely words. These honest neighbours of his, not well bearing those his unseemly words, arising against him, and sent their complaint to the Lord Cromwell, then Vicegerent in causes Ecclesiastical; who sent for the Priest, and committed him to the Fleet, minding to have had him recant those his slanderous words at Pauls Cross. Howbeit the Lord Cromwell, having great affairs of the Prince then in hand, forgot his Prisoner in the Fleet. So that this Chersey the Grocer, understanding that his kinsman was in durance in the Fleet, only for speaking words against my Lord of Canterbury consulted with the Priest, and between them devised to make sure rather unto the Archbishop for his deliverance, than to the Lord Cromwell, before whom he was accused: understanding right well that there was great diversity of natures between those two Estates, the one gentle and full of clemency, and the other severe and somewhat intractable, namely, against a Papist: So that Chersey took upon him first to try my Lord of Canterbury; benignity, namely, for that his counsils accusation touched only the offence against him, and none other. Whereupon the said Chersey came to one of the Archbishops Gentlemen (whose Father bought yearly all his Spices and Fruit of the said Chersey, and so thereby of familiar acquaintance with the Gentleman) who opening to him the trouble wherein his kinsman was, requested that he would be a means to my Lord his Master, to hear his suit in the behalf of his kinsman.

Chersey suing for his kinsman to the Archbishop.

The matter was moved. The Archbishop like as he was of nature gentle, and of much clemency, so would he never shew himself strange unto suitors but incontinently sent for the said Chersey. When he came before him, Chersey declared, that there was a kinsman of his in the Fleet, a Priest of the North Country, and as I may tell your Grace the truth (quoth Chersey) a Man of small civility, and of less learning. And yet he hath a Parsonage there, which now (by reason that my Lord Cromwell hath laid him in Prison) being in his Cure, is unfurled; and he hath continued in durance above two months, and is called to no answer, and knows not when he shall come to any end, so that this his imprisonment consumeth his substance, and will utterly undo him, unless your Grace be his good Lord. I know not the Man (said the Archbishop) nor what he hath done why he should be thus in trouble.

Said Chersey again, he only hath offended against your Grace, and against no Man else, as may well be perceived by the Articles objected against him, the Copy whereof the said Chersey then exhibited to the said Archbishop of Canterbury. who well perusing the said Articles said, This is the common talk of all the ignorant papistical Priests in England against me. Surely, said he, I was never made privy to this accusation, and of his indurance I never heard before this time. Notwithstanding, if there be nothing else to charge him withal against the Prince or any of the Council, I will at your request take order with him, and send him home again to his cure to do his duty; and so thereupon sent his ring to the Warden of the Fleet, willing him to send the prisoner unto him, with his keeper at afternoon.

The Priest sent for to the Archbishop.

When the keeper had brought the prisoner at the hour appointed, and Chersey had well instructed his cousin in any wise to submit himself to the Archbishop, confessing his fault, whereby that way he should most easily have an end and win his favour; thus the Parson being brought into the garden at Lambeth, and there the Archbishop sitting under the vine demanded of the Parson, what was the cause of his indurance, and who committed him to the Fleet. The Parson answered and said, that the Lord Cromwell sent him thither, for that certain malicious parishioners of his parish had wrongfully accused him of words which he never spake nor meant; Chersey hearing his foolish cousin so far out of the way from his former instruction, said, Thou dastardly dolt and varlet, is this thy promise that thou madest to me? Are there not a great number of thy honest neighbours hands against thee, to prove thee a liar? Surely my Lord (quoth Chersey) it is pity to do him good. I am sorry that I have troubled your Grace thus far with him.

Well, said the Archbishop unto the Parson, if you have not offended me, I can do you no good: for I am intreated to help one out of trouble that hath offended against me. If my Lord Cromwell hath committed you to prison wrongfully, that lieth in himself to amend and not in me. If your offence only hath touched me, I will be bold to do somewhat for your friends sake here. If you have not offended against me, then have I nothing to do with you, but that you may go and remain from whence you came. Lord what ado his kinsman Chersey made with him, calling him all kind of opprobrious names? In the end my Lord of Canterbury seeming to rise and go his ways, the fond Priest fell on his knees, and said, I beseech your Grace to forgive me this offence, assuring your Grace that I spake those words being drunk and not well advised. Ah, said my Lord, this is somewhat, and yet it is no good excuse: for drunkenness evermore uttereth that which lieth hid in the heart of Man when he is sober, alleging a Text or twain out of the Scriptures concerning the vice of drunkenness, which cometh not now to remembrance.

The Archbishop words to the Parson.

Now therefore (said the Archbishop) that you acknowledge somewhat your fault, I am content to commune with you, hoping that you are at this present of an indifferent sobriety. Tell me then, quoth he, did you ever see me, or were you ever acquainted with me before this day? The Priest answered and said, that never in his life he saw his Grace. Why then (said the Archbishop) what occasion had you to call me an hostler, and that I had not so much learning as the Goslings which then went on the green before you face? If I have no learning you may now try it, and be out of doubt thereof: therefore I pray you appose me, either in Grammar or in other liberal Sciences, for I have at one time or other tasted partly of them. Or else if you are a Divine, say somewhat that way.

The priest being amazed at my Lords familiar talk, made answer and said, beseech your Grace to pardon me. I am altogether unlearned, and understand not the Latin Tongue.

The Priest confesseth his fault to the Archb.

The Priests answer.

Tongue, but very simply. My only study hath been to say my service and Mass, fair and deliberate, which I can do as well as any Priest in the Countrey where I dwell, I thank God. Well, said the other, if you will not appoofe me, I will be so bold to appoofe you, and yet as easily as I can devise, and that only in the story of the Bible now in English, in which I suppose that you are daily exercised. Tell me therefore who was King David's Father, said my Lord. The Priest stood still pausing a while, and said, In good faith my Lord, I have forgotten his name. Then said the other again to himself you cannot tell that, I pray you tell me then, who was Solomon's Father? The fond foolish Priest without all consideration what was demanded of him before, made answer, Good my Lord bear with me, I am no further seen in the Bible, then is daily read in our service in the Church.

The Miss Priest, ignorant in the Scripture.

The Archbishop then answering, said, this my question may be found well answered in your service. But I now well perceive, howsoever ye have judged heretofore of my learning, sure I am that you have none at all. But this is the common practice of all you that be ignorant and superstitious Priests, to slander, backbite, and hate all such as are learned and well affected towards Gods Word and sincere Religion. Common Reason might have taught you what an unlikely thing it was, and contrary to all manner of reason, that a Prince having two Universities within his Realm of well learned Men, and desirous to be resolved of as doubtful a question as in these many years the like was not moved within Christendom, should be driven to that necessity for the defence of his cause, to send out of his Realm an Hostler, being a Man of no better knowledge then is a Golling, in an Embassage to answer all learned Men, both in the Court of Rome, and the Emperours Court, in so difficult a question as toucheth the Kings Matrimony, and the divorce thereof. I say, if you were Men of an y reasonable consideration, you might think it both unseemly and uncomely for a Prince so to do. But look where malice reigneth in Man, there reason can take no place: and therefore I see by it, that you all are at a point with me, that no reason or authority can persuade you to favour my name, who never meant evil to you, but your both commodity and profit. Howbeit, God amend you all, forgive you, and send you better minds.

The Archbishop forgives and dismisseth
the Priest.

With these words the Priest seemed to weep, and desired his Grace to pardon his fault and frailty, so that by this means he might return to his Cure again, and he would sure recant those his foolish words before his Parishioners so soon as he came home, and would become a new Man. Well, said the Archbishop, so had you need and giving him a godly admonition to refuse the haunting of the Alehouse, and to bestow his time better in the continual reading of the Scriptures, he dismissed him from the Elect.

The Lord
Cromwel intended with the Archbishop in forgiving
the foolish
Priest.

The Lord Cromwel, perceiving within a fortnight after that his prisoner was sent home without any open punishment, came to Lambeth unto the Archbishop, and in a great heat said to him, My Lord, I understand that you have dispatched the Northern Priest, that I of late sent to the Elect, home again, who dishonestly railed of you, and called you an Hostler.

Indeed I have so done (said he again) for that in his absence the people of his Cure wanted their Divine Service. It is very devout Divine Service that he saith, quoth the Lord Cromwel, it were more meet for him to be an Hostler then a curate, who flicked not to call you an Hostler. But I thought so much what you would do, and therefore I would not tell you of his knavery when I sent him to prison. Howbeit henceforth, they shall cut your throat before that I say any thing more to them on your behalf. Why? What would you have done with him, quoth the Archbishop? there was nothing laid to his charge, other then words spoken against me, and now the Man is repentant and well reconciled, and hath been at great charges in prison: it is time therefore that he were rid out of his trouble. Well, said my Lord Cromwel, I meant that he should have preached at Pauls Cross a recantation before he had gone home. That had been well done, quoth the other, for then you would have had all the World as well to wonder at me as at him. Well, well, said the Lord Cromwel, we shall so long bear with these Popish knaves, that at length they will bring us indeed to Anno

This example among other, ferveth to declare that thereremained small desire of revenging in the said Archbishop. But what should I say more? His quietness and mortification this way was such, that it is reported of all ver heard to call any of his household that knew him, that he never raged so far with any of his household Servants, as once to call the meanest of them varlet, or knave in anger, much less to reprove a stranger with any reproachful words. Much unlike in this part to the property (as it seemeth) of some other inferior Bishops of this Realm, which have not spared to file in the faces, to pluck off the beards, to burn the hands, to beat and scourge with rods the Bodies of both Gentlemen, married Men and other, having almost nothing else in Mouth, but fools and knaves, &c. and yet after all this, think themselves good perfect Bishops, after the rule which followeth and saith.

No striker, no fighter.

No striker, no fighter. From which kind of vice, the nature of this Archbishop was so far off, as was his Doctrine which he professed, and death which he suffered, far off from all condition and example of blind Popery. After the prohibition of these foresaid vices, succedeth the Mother of all good vertues necessarily required of all true Christians, but chiefly of a Spiritual Prelate, which is,

Not given to filthy lucre, but barborous.

Not given to filthy lucre, but barborous, &c. The contrary whereof, was so odious unto St. Paul, that he esteemed the same no less then a kind of Idolatry, and that it maketh Men forget their duty to God so far, and in stead of him to worship their Treasure. How little this Prelate we speak of was infected with this vice, and how he was no niggard, all kind of people that knew him, as well learned beyond the Seas and on this side, to whom yearly he gave in exhibition no small sums of money, as other, both Gentlemen, mean Men, and poor Men, who had in their necessity that which he could conveniently spare, lend, or make, can well testify. And albeit such was his liberality to all sorts of Men, that no Man did lack whom he could do for, either in giving or lending; yet nevertheless such was again his circumspection, that when he was apprehended and committed by Queen Mary to the Tower, he owed no Man living a penny that could or would demand any duty of him, but satisfied every Man to the uttermost; whereas no small sums of Money were owing him of divers persons, which by breaking their bills and obligations he freely forgave, and suppressed before his attainer. Inasmuch that when he perceived the fatal end of King Edward should work to him no good success touching his Body and Goods, he incontinently called for his Officers, his Steward and others, commanding them in any wife to pay where any penny was owing, which was out of hand dispatched. And then he said, now der.

doings of this Archbishop.

I thank God I am mine own Man, and in Confidence with Gods help able else to answer all the World and Worldly Adversities, which some Men suppose he might also have avoided, if he would have been Counsell'd by some of his Friends. It followeth moreover:

Barborous.

And as touching this word Barborous, whereby is meant the good maintenance of Hospitality; so little was this property lacking in him, that some Men mistaking the same, thought it rather a house of overmuch lavishing and unprofitable expence. But as nothing can be so well done, which by some other shall not be maligned and detracted; so neither did this Man lack his Cavaliers, some finding fault with his overmuch prodigality, some on the contrary part repining and complaining of his spare house, and straight order, much under the state of his revenues and calling. Of which two, the first sort must consider the causes which moved him to that liberal and large kind of expences. Wherein here cometh to be considered, the time wherein he served; which was when reformation ANNO 1556. formation of Religion first began to be advanced. In which time the whole weight and care of the same most chiefly depended upon his hand. During which season, almost for the space of sixteen years together, his house was never lightly unfurnished of a number both of learned Men and Commissioners, from time to time appointed for deciding of Ecclesiastical affairs.

And thus as he seemed to some over-large and lavishing more then needed in hospitality; so on the other side there wanted not some, of whom he was much noted and accused again, yea and also complained of to King Henry the eighth for too slender and niggardly house-keeping, as not worthy to be accounted the hospitality of a mean Gentleman, as here following shall appear.

After that the ample and great possessions, revenues, jewels, rich ornaments, and other treasures of the Abbeyes were dissolved and brought into the Kings hands, in the dissolving whereof many comorants were fed and fatished, and yet not so fully satisfied, but that within a few years they began to wax hungry again: and for so much as no more could be scraped now out of Abbeyes, they began to seek how by some other prey to satisfy their appetites, which was to tickle the Kings Ears with the rich revenue of the Bishops Lands. And to bring this devise to pass, they procured Sir Thomas Seimour Knight of the privy Chamber, to be a promoter of the matter, who not in all points much favouring the Archbishop, having time and a convenient occasion, declared to the King that my Lord of Canterbury did nothing else but sell his woods, and let his Leases by great and many fines, making havock of all the Royalties of the Archbishoprick, and that only to the intent to gather up treasure for his wife and Children, keeping no manner of Hospitality in respect of so great a revenue; advertising the King further, that it was the opinion of many wise Men, that it were more meet for the Bishops to have a sufficient yearly stipend in money out of the Exchequer, then to be cumbered with those temporal affairs of their Royalties, being impediments unto their study, and pastoral charge, and his Highness to have their Lands and Royalties converted to his proper use, which besides their honest stipends would be unto his Majesty no small commodity and profit.

When the King had heard his fair tale, he said little thereunto, other then this. Well (quoth he) we will talk more of this matter at another time. Now, within a fortnight after or thereabout (whether by chance, or of set purpose, it is not known) it came to pass, that one day his Highness going to dinner had washed, Sir Thomas Seimour then holding the Ewer, and said to the said Sir Thomas, Go you out of hand to Lamberth unto my Lord of Canterbury, and bid him to be with me at two of the Clock at afternoon, and fail not. Sir Thomas straightways went to Lamberth, and as he came to the gate the Porter being in the lodge, came out, and conveyed him to the Hall, which was thoroughly furnished and set, both with the household servants and strangers, with four principal head messes of officers, as daily it was accustomed to be. When Sir Thomas Seimour saw that stately large Hall so well set and furnished, being therewith abashed, and somewhat guilty of an untruth told to the King before, he retired back, and would needs have gone to the Archb. of Canterbury by the Chappell, and not through the Hall. Richard Nevell Gentleman, then Steward of the Household, perceiving his retire, came by and by unto him, and after gentle entertainment demanded of him whether he would speak with my Lord or no? Sir Thomas said, that he must needs do so from the Kings Highness, saying unto him, and this way I am going to my Lords Grace. Sir, said the Steward, you cannot go that way, for the door is fast shut, in the dinner time; and so by gentle means brought him up to my Lords Chamber thorow the Hall, who then was at dinner: with whom he dined after he had done his message, whose ordinary fair night always well befell a right honourable personage. When dinner was scarce done, Sir Thomas took his leave of my Lord, and went again to the Court.

So soon as the Kings Highness saw him, he said to him, have you been with my Lord of Canterbury? Sir Thomas answered, That I have if it please your Majesty, and he will be with your Highness straightways. Dined you not with him, said the King? Yes Sir (said he) that have I done. And with that word, whether he espied by the Kings countenance, or by his words any thing tending to displeasure, he straightway without delay kneeled down upon his knee, and said, I beseech your Majesty to pardon me: I do now well remember and understand, that of late I told your Highness a great untruth concerning my Lord of Canterburys house-keeping; but from henceforth I intend never to believe that person which did put that vain tale into my head: For I assure your Highness that I never saw so honourable a Hall set in this Realm (besides your Majesties Hall) in all my life, with better order, and so well furnished in each degree. If I had not seen it my self, I could never have believed it, and himself also so honourably served.

Al Sir, quoth the Kings Highness, Have you now espied the truth? I thought you would tell me another tale when you had been there. He was a very varlet (quoth the King) that told you that tale: for he spendeth (ah good Man said the King) all that he hath in house-keeping. But now I perceive which way the wind bloweth. There are a sort of you to whom I have liberally given of the possessions and revenues of the suppressed Monasteries, which like as you have lightly gotten, so have you more unthrifely spent, some at dice, other some in gay apparel, and other ways worse: I fear me now that all is gone you would fain have me make another chavance with the Bishops Lands, to accomplish your greedy appetites. But let no other Bishops below their revenues would then my Lord of Canterbury doth, then shall you have no cause to complain of their keeping of house.

And thus the tale being shut up, and ended by the Kings Highness, neither Sir Thomas Seimour, nor any other on his behalf ever after durst renew, or revive that tale or any more in King Henries days; so that it may be evident to all indifferent Men, the liberality of the Archbishop in house-keeping what it was, which being defended, and commended by the Prince himself, rather may give a good example to his posterity to follow, then was then to be depraved of any private Subject, such as knew him not.

In which Archbishop this moreover is to be noted, with a memorandum touching the relief of the poor, the impotent, sick, and such as then came from the wars at Bullen, and other parts beyond the Seas, lame, wounded, and destitute: for whom he provided, besides his mansion house at Beckisborn in Kent, the Parsonage Barn well furnished with certain lodgings for the sick and maimed Soldiers. To whom were also appointed the almoner, a Physician, and a Surgeon to attend upon them, and to dress and cure such as were not able to resort to their Countreys, having daily from the Bishops kitchen hot broth and meat: for otherwise the common alms of the household was bestowed upon the poor neighbours of the Shire. And when any of the impotent did recover and were able to travel, they had convenient money delivered to bear their charges, according to the number of miles from that place distant. And this good example of mercy and liberal benignity, I thought here good not in silence to be suppressed, whereby other may be moved according to their vocation, to walk in the steps of no less liberality, then in him in this behalf appeared.

One that loveth goodness, sober minded, righteous, holy, and temperate.

Now followeth together these virtues, One that loveth goodness, sober minded, righteous, holy, and temperate. As concerning these qualities, the trade of his life before joynted with his benign and gentle disposition, do testify that he could not be void of these good virtues reigning in him, which was so abundantly adorned with the other, which above we have declared.

To cleave fast unto the true word of Doctrine, that he may be able to exhort with wholesome learning, and to reprove them that say against it.

Then concludeth Saint Paul with the most excellent virtue virtue of all other to be wished in a Prelate of the Church. For if this constancy be not in him to this end, that is, To cleave fast unto the true word of Doctrine, that he may be able to exhort with sublimed learning and to improve them that say against him he be void (I say) of these gifts and graces, he is worthy of no commendation, but that. Next an Idol, and a deceiver of the World. Neither shall he deserve the name of a Bishop, if either for dread or mercy, affection or favour, he do at any time or in any point swerve from the truth. As in this behalf the worthy constancy of this said Archbishop never, for the most part, shrunk for any manner of storm; but was so many ways tried, that neither favour of his Prince, nor fear of the indignation of the same, nor any other worldly respect could alienate or change his purpose, grounded upon that infallible Doctrine of the Gospel. Notwithstanding, his constant defence of Gods truth was ever joyed with such meekness toward the King, that he never took occasion of offence against him.

At the time of setting forth the six Articles, mention was made before in the story of King Henry the eighth, how adventurously this Archbishop Thomas Crammer did oppose himself, standing as it were, post alone, against the whole Parliament disputing and replying three days together against the said Articles. Inasmuch, that the King, when neither he could mislike his reasons, and yet would needs have these Articles to pass, required him to absent himself for the time out of the Chamber, while the Act should pass, and so he did, and how the King afterward sent all the Lords of the Parliament unto the Archbishop to Lambeth to cheer his mind again, that he might not be discouraged, all which appeareth above expressed: And this was done during yet the state and time of the Lord Cromwells Authority. And now that it may appear likewise, that after the decay of the Lord Cromwell, yet his constancy in Christs cause did not decay, you shall hear what followeth after.

For after the apprehension of the Lord Cromwell, when the Adversaries of the Gospel thought all things sure now on their side, it was so appointed amongst them, that ten or twelve Bishops, and other learned Men, joyed together in Communion, came to the said Archbishop of Canterbury for the establishing of certain Articles of our Religion, which the Papists then thought to win to their purpose against the said Archbishop. For having now the Lord Cromwell fast and sure, they thought it had been safe, and sure for ever: as indeed to all Mens reasonable consideration, that time appeared so dangerous, that there was no manner of hope that Religion reformed should any one week longer stand, such account was then made of the Kings untowardness thereunto. Inasmuch, that of all those Commissioners there was not one left to stay on the Archbishops part but he alone against them all stood in the defence of the truth; and those that he most trusted to, namely, Bishop Heath, and Bishop Skip left him in the plain field, who then so turned against him, that they took upon them to persuade him to their purpose: and having him down from the rest of the Commissioners into his Garden at Lambeth, there by all manner of effectual persuasions intreated him to leave of his overmuch constancy, and to incline unto the Kings intent, who was fully set to have it otherwise then he then had penned, or meant to have set abroad. When those two his familiars, with once or two others his friends, had used all their eloquence and policy, he little regarding their inconstancy and remissness in Gods cause or quarrel, said unto them right notably.

You make much ado to have me come to your purpose, alledging that it is the Kings pleasure to have the Articles, in that sort you have devised them, to proceed, and now that you do perceive his Highness by sinister information to be bent that way, you think it a convenient thing to apply unto his Highness mind. You be my friends both, especially the one of you I did put to his Majesty as of trust. Beware (I say) what you do: There is but one truth in our Articles to be concluded upon, which if you do hide from his Highness by consenting unto a contrary Doctrine, and then after in process of time, when the truth cannot be hidden from him, his Highness shall perceive how that you have dealt colourably with him, I know his Graces nature so well (quoth the Archbishop) that he will never after trust and credit you, or put any good confidence in you. And as you are both my friends, so therefore I will you to beware thereof in time, and discharge your Conscience in maintenance of the truth. But all this would not serve, for they still swerved; and in discharging of his Conscience and declaring the truth unto the King, GOD so wrought with the King, that his Highness joyed with him against the rest, so that the Book of Articles passing on his side, he was the Gole from them all, contrary to all their expectations, when many wagers would have been laid in London, that he should have been laid up with Cromwell at that time in the Tower for his stiff standing to his tackle. After that day there could neither Councillour, Bishop, nor Papist win him out of the Kings favour.

Notwithstanding, not long after that, certain of the Papists, the Council, whose names need not to be repeated, by bringing the inticement and provocation of his ancient enemy the Archbishop of Winchester, and other of the same sect, attempted the King against him, declaring plainly, that the Realm was so infected with Heresies and Hereticks, that it was dangerous for his Highness further to permit it unreformed, lest peradventure by long suffering, such contention should arise, and ensue in the Realm among his Subjects, that thereby might spring horrible commotions, and uproars, like as in some parts of Germany it did not long ago. The enormity whereof they could not impute to any so much, as to the Archbishop of Canterbury, who by his own Preaching, and his Chaplains, had filled the whole Realm full of divers pernicious Heresies. The King would needs know his accusers. They answered that forasmuch as he was a Councillour, no Man durst take upon him to accuse him; but if it would please his Highness to commit him to the Tower for a time, there would be accusations and proofs enow against him: for otherwise, just testimony and witness against him would not appear, and therefore your Highness (said they) must needs give us the counsel, liberty and leave to commit him to durance.

The King perceiving their importunate suite against the Archbishop (but yet meaning not to have him wronged, and utterly given over into their hands) granted unto them that they should the next day commit him to the Tower for his trial. When night came, the King sent Sir Anthony Denny about midnight to Lambeth to the Archbishop, willing him forthwith to resort unto him at the Court. The message done, the Archbishop speedily addressed himself to the Court, and coming into the Gallery where the King walked, and tarried for him, his Highness said, Ah, my Lord of Canterbury, I can tell you news. For divers weighty considerations it is determined by me, and the Council, that you to morrow at nine of the Clock shall be committed to the Tower, for that you and your Chaplains (as information is given us) have taught and Preached, and thereby sown within the Realm such a number of execrable Heresies, that it is feared, the whole Realm being infected with them; no small contentions, and commotions will rise thereby amongst my Subjects, as of late days the like was in divers parts of Germany: and therefore the Council have requested me, for the trial of the matter, to suffer them to commit you to the Tower, or else no Man dare come forth, as witness in these matters, you being a Councillour.

When the King had said his mind, the Archbishop kneeled down and said, I am content, if it please your Grace, with all my heart, to go thither at your Highness commandment, and I most humbly thank your Majesty that I may come to my trial; for there be that have many ways slandered me, and now this way I hope to try my self not worthy of such report.

The King perceiving the Mans uprightness, joyed with such simplicity, said; O Lord, what manner of Man be you? What simplicity is in you? I had thought that you would rather have fled to us to have taken the pains to have heard you and your accusers together for your trial, without any such indurance. Do you not know, what state you be in with the whole World, and how many great enemies you have? Do you not consider what an ease thing it is, to procure three or four false knaves to witness against you? Think you to have better luck that way, then your Master Christ had free by it you will run head-long to your undoing, if I would suffer you. Your enemies shall not so prevail against you, for I have otherwise devised with my self to keep you out of their hands. Yet notwithstanding to morrow when the Council shall sit, and send for you, resort unto them, and if in charging you with this matter, they do commit you to the Tower, require of them, because you are one of them, a Counsellor, that you may have your accusers brought before them without any further indurance, and use for your self as good persuasions that way as you may devise; and if no intreaty or reasonable request will serve, then deliver unto them this my ring (which then the King delivered unto the Archbishop) and say unto them, if there be no remedy my Lords, but that I must needs go to the Tower, then I revoke my cause from you, and appeal to the Kings own person by this his token unto you all; for (said the King then unto the Archbishop) so soon as they shall see this my ring, they know it to be well, that they shall understand that I have refused the whole cause unto mine own hands and determination, and that I have discharged them thereof.

The Archbishop perceiving the Kings benignity, so much to himwards, had much ado to forbear tears. Well said the King, Go your ways my Lord, and do as I have bidden you. My Lord humbling himself with thanks, took his leave of the Kings Highness for that night.

On the morrow about nine of the clock before noon, the Council sent a Gentleman Usher for the Archbishop who when he came to the Council Chamber door, could not be let in but of purpose (as it seemed) was compelled there to wait among the Pages, Lackies and Serving-men all alone. Doctor Buis the Kings Physician reporting that way, and spying how my Lord of Canterbury was handled, went to the Kings Highness, and said, My Lord of Canterbury, if it please your Grace, is well promoted: for now he is become a Lackey or a Serving Man, for yonder he hath stood this half hour at the Council Chamber door amongst them. It is not so (quoth the King) I trow; the Council hath not so little discretion as to use the Metropolitan of the Realm in that sort, specially being one of their own number. But let them alone (said the King) and we shall hear more soon.

Anon the Archbishop was called into the Council Chamber, to whom was alledged, as before is rehearsed. The Archbishop answered in like sort, as the King had advised him and in the end when he perceived that no manner of perswasion or intreaty could serve, he delivered them the Kings Ring, revoking his cause into the Kings hands. The whole Council being thereat somewhat amazed the Earl of Bedford with a loud voice, confirming his Words with a Solemn Oath, said, When you first began the matter my Lords, I told you what would come of it. Do you think that the King will suffer this Mans finger to take? Much more (I warrant you) will he defend his life against brabbling varlets? You do but cumber your selves to hear tales and fables against him. And so conveniently upon the receipt of the Kings token, they all arose and carried the King his ring, surrendering that matter as the order and use was, into his own hands.

Council.

When they were all come to the Kings presence, his Highness with a severe countenance said unto them; Ah my Lords, I thought I had had wiser Men of my Council then now I find you. What discretion was this in you, thus to make the Primate of the Realm, and one of you in Office, to wait at the Council Chamber door amongst serving Men? You might have considered that he was a Counsellor as well as you, and you had no such Commission of me so to handle him. I was content that you should try him as a Counsellor, and not as a mean Subject. But now I well perceive that things be done against him maliciously, and if some of you might have had your minds, you would have tried him to the uttermost. But I do you all to wit, and protest, that if a Prince may be beholding unto his Subject (and so, solemnly laying his hand upon his Breast, said) by the Faith I owe to God, I take this Man here, my Lord of Canterbury, to be of all other a most Faithful Subject unto us, and one to whom we are much beholdings, giving him great commendations otherwise. And with that one or two of the chieft of the Council, making their excuse, declared, that in requesting his indurance, it was rather meant for his trial, and his pargation against the common Treacon and slander of the World, than for any malice conceived against him. Well, well, my Lords (quoth the King) take him and well use him, as he is worthy to be, and make no more ado. And with that every Man caught him by the hand, and made fair weather of all together, which might easily be done with that Man.

And it was much to be marvelled, that they would go so far with him, thus to seek his undignified understanding this well before, that the King most entirely loved him, and always would stand in his defence who ever spake against him; as many other times the Kings patience was by sinister informations against him tried. Inasmuch that the Lord Cramwell was ever more wont to say unto him, My Lord of Canterbury, you are most happy of all Men: for you may do and speak what you list; and say what all Men can against you, the King will never believe one word to your detriment or hindrance. I am sure I take more pains than all the Council doth, and spend more largely in the Kings affairs, as well beyond the Seas as on this side: yea I assure you, even very spies in other foreign Realms, at Rome and elsewhere, cost me above 1000. marks a year: and do what I can to bring matters to knowledge, for the commodity of the King and the Realm, I am every day chidden, and many false tales now and then believed against me; and therefore you are most happy, for in no point can you be discredited with the King. To this the Archbishop again answering, if the Kings Majesty were not good to me that way, I were not able to stand and endure one whole week, but your Wisdom and Policy is such, that you are able to shift well enough for your self.

Now when the Kings Highness had thus benignly and mercifully dispatched the said Archbishop from this fore accusation by the Council laid against him, all Wife Men would have thought that it had been meer folly afterwards to have attempted any matter against him: but yet look where malice reigneth, there neither reason nor honesty can take place. Such therefore as had conceived deep rancor and displeasure against him, ceased not to persecute him by all possible means. Then brought they against him a new kind of accusation, and caused Sir John Goswike Knight, a Man of a contrary Religion, to accuse the Archbishop openly in the Parliament House, laying to his charge his Sermons Preached at Sandwich, and his Lectures read at Canterbury, wherein should be contained manifest Heresies against the Sacrament of the Altar, &c. Which accusation came to the Kings ear. Why (quoth the King) where dwelleth Goswike? As I take it, either in Bedfordshire or Buckinghamshire, and hath he so open an ear that he can hear my Lord of Canterbury Preaching out of Kens? This is very likely, said the King. If he had been a Kentishman, there had been something worthy of consideration: but as for Goswike, I know him well enough, and what good Religion he is of. Go to him and tell him, said the King to one of his privy Chamber, if he go not to my Lord of Cant. and so reconcile himself to him, that he may become his good Lord, I will pull the Gossings Feathers so, that hereafter he shall have little lust to slander the Metropolitan, or any other learned Man. When Sir J. Goswike heard these words, it was no need to bid him halt himself to Lambeth unto the Metropolitan, making to him as many friends as possibly he might. When he came to the Archbishop, he was fain to disclose unto him, by what means he was procured to do that he did, requesting his clemency to be his good Lord, or else he took himself utterly undone, being so in the Kings indignation, as he understood he was by that afore declared, which fute was soon won at his hand, and so the Archb. calling into the fatchel behind him all those Sir J. Goswikes ingratitude, went to the King, and wane to Sir John his Princes favour again. And thus the King made a short end of this accusation.

Well, here you may perceive that malicious invention went not the wisest way to work, to procure a stranger dwelling a far off, to accuse the Archb. of his Doctrines Preached in his Diocess: and therefore hath this malice learned some more wisdom now to accuse their Archbishop in a letter as he had never be able to avoid it. And articles were procured by his ancient enemies, that the Prelates of his Cathedral Church in Canterbury, but also the most famous Justices of Peace in the shire should accuse him, article against him; which in very good was most substantially brought to pass, and the Articles both well written and subscribed, were delivered to the Kings Highness, as a thing of such effect, that there must needs follow to the said Archbishop, both indignation of the Prince, and condign punishment for his grievous offence committed by him and his Chaplains, in Preaching such erroneous Doctrine as they did within his Diocess of Canterbury; whereof they being such witnesses of credit, no Man had cause to doubt of their circumspet doings. This accusation particularly sent out was delivered to the King by some of the Councils means: When the King had perused the Book, he wrapt it up, and put it in his sleeve; and finding occasion to solace himself upon the Thames, came with his Barge furnished with his Musicians a long by Lambeth Bridge towards Chulsey. The noise of the Musicians provoked the Archbishop to resort to the Bridge to do his duty, and to salute his Prince. Whom when the King had perceived to stand at the Bridge, effoons he commanded the Watermen to draw towards the shoar, and so came straight to the Bridge.

Altho my Chaplain, said the King to the Archbishop, come into the Barge to me. The Archbishop declared to his Highness, that he would take his own Barge and wait upon his Majesty. No said the King, you must come into my Barge, for I have to talk with you. When the King and the Archbishop all alone in the Barge were set together, said the King to the Archbishop, I have news out of Kent for you my Lord. The Archbishop answered, good I hope, if it please your Highness. Marry, said the King, they be so good, that I now know the greatest Heretick in Kent, and with that pulled out of his sleeve the Book of Articles against both the said Arch. and his Preachers, and gave the Book to him, willing him to peruse the same. When the Archb. had read the Articles, and saw himself so uncourtously handled of his own Church whereof he was head, I mean of the Prelates of his Cathedral Church, and of such his neighbours as he had many ways gratified, I mean the Justices of the Peace, it much grieved him. Notwithstanding he kneeled down to the King, and besought his Majesty to grant out a Commission to whomsoever it pleased his Highness, for them to try our the truth of this accusation.

In very deed (quoth the King) I do so mean, and you yourself shall be chief Commissioner, to adjoyn to you such two or three more as you shall think good your self. Then it will be thought (quoth the Archb. to the King) that it is not indifferent, if it please your Grace, that I should be mine own judge, and my Chaplains also. Well, said the King, I will have none other but your self, and such as you will appoint. For I am sure that you will not halt with me in any thing, although you be driven to accuse your self, and I know partly how this gear proceedeth, and if you handle the matter wisely, you shall find a pretty conspiracy devised against you. Whom will you have with you, said the King? Whom I shall please your Grace to name, quoth the Archbishop. I will appoint D. Belbourn for one, name you the other, said the King, meet for that purpose. My Chancellor, Doct. Cox, and Hulsey my Register, said the Archbishop are Men expert to examine such troublesome matters. Well, said the King, let there be a Commission made forth, and out of hand get you into Kent, and advertise me of your doings.

They came into Kent, and there they fate about three weeks to bout out who was the first occasion of this accusation, for thereof the King would chiefly be adver-
 sed. Now the Inquisition being begun by the Commissioners, every Man thrunk in his horns, and no Man would confess any thing to the purpose. For Doctor Cox and Hulsey, being friendly unto the Papists, handled the matter so, that they would permit nothing material to come to light. This thing being well perceived by one of the Archbishops Servants, his Secretary, he wrote inconti-nently unto Doctor Butts and Master Deny, declaring that if the Kings Majesty did not fend some other to assilt my Lord, than those that then were there with him, it were, not possible that any thing should come to light: and therefore wished that Doctor Lee or some other stout Man that had been exercised in the Kings Ecclesiastical affairs in his Visitations, might be sent to the Archbishop. Upon these Letters Dr. Lee was sent to York by the King, and having the Kings farther mind declared unto him, when he came to the Court, he resorted incontinently into Kent, so that on All-hallow even he delivered to the Archbishop the Kings Ring, with a declaration of his Highness farther pleasure: and by and by upon his message done, he appointed the Archbishop aforesaid to name him a dozen or sixteen of his Officers and Gentlemen, such as had both discretion, wit, and audacity, to whom he gave in Commission from the King, to search both the purses, chests, and Chambers of all those that were deemed suspected to be of this confederacy, both within the Cathedral Church and without, and such Letters or writings as they could find about them, to bring them to the Archbishop and him.

These Men thus appointed, went in one hour and instant to the persons houses and places, that they were appointed unto; and within four hours afterwards the whole conspiracy was disclosed by finding of Letters, some from the Bishop of Winchester, some from Doctor London at Oxford, and from Justices of the Shire, with other; so that the first beginning, the proceeding, and what should have been the end of their conspiracy, was now made manifest. Certain Chambers and Chests of Gentlemen of the Shire were also searched, where also were found Letters serving to this purpose. Amongst all other, came to my Lords hands two Letters, one of the Suffragan of Dover, and another of Doctor Barber a Civilian, whom continually the Archbishop retained with him in household for expedition of matters in sute before him, as a Counsellor in the Law when need required. These two Men being well promoted by the Archbishop, became in such familiarity, that when the Suffragan, being a Prebend of Canterbury, came to him, he always set him at his own mess, and the other never from his table, as Men in whom he had much delight and comfort, when time of care and penitence chanced. But that which they did, was altogether counterfeit, and the Devil was turned into the Angel of light, for they were both of this confederacy.

When my Lord had gotten these their Letters into his hands, he on a day, when it chanced the Suffragan to come to him to his house at Bekiburn, called to him into his study the said Suffragan of Dover and Doctor Barber, saying, Come, your ways with me, for I must have your advice in a matter. When they were with him in his study altogether, he said to them, you twain be Men in whom I have had much confidence, and trust, you must now give me some good Counsel, for I am shamefully abused with one or twain to whom I have shewed all my secrets from time to time, and did trust them as my self. The matter is so now fallen out, that they not only have disclosed my secrets, but also have taken upon them to accuse me of Heresie and are become witnesses against me. I require you therefore of your good advice how I shall behave myself towards them. You are both my friends, and such as I always have used when I needed Counsel. What say you to the matter, quoth the Archbishop?

Marry, quoth Doctor Barber, such villains and knaves The Suffra(serving your honor) were worthy to be hanged out of hand without any other Law. Hanging were too good quoth the Suffragan, and if there lacked one to do Execution, I would be hangman my self

At these words, the Archbishop cast up his hands to Heaven, and said, Oh Lord most merciful God, whom may a Man trust now adays? It is most true which is said, Maledictus qui confisat in homine, & ponit carnem brachium suum. There was never Man handled as I am:
 but O Lord thou hast evermore defended me, and lent me one great friend and Master (meaning the King) without whose protection I were not able to stand upright one day unoverthrown, I praise thy holy name therefore: and with that he pulled out of his bosom their two Letters, and said, Know ye these Letters my Masters?
 With that they fell down upon their Knees, and desired forforgiveness, declaring how they a year before were attempted to do the same, and so very lamentably weeping and bewailing their doings, besought his Grace to pardon and forgive them. Well, said the gentle Archbishop, God make you both good men, Inever defrauded this at your hands. but ask God forgiveness, against whom you have rightly offended. If such men as you are not to be trusted, what should I do alive? I perceive now, that there is no fidelity or truth amongst men. I am brought to this point now, that I fear my left hand will accuse my right hand. I need not much marvel hereat, for our Saviour Christ truly prophesied of such a world to come in the latter days. I beseech him of his great mercy to finish that time shortly; and so departing, he dismissed them both with gentle and comfortable words, in such sort that never after appeared in his countenance or words any remembrance thereof.

Now, when all those Letters and Accusations were found, they were put into a Chest, the Kings Majesty minding to have perused some of them, and to have partly punished the Principals of it. The Chest and Writings were brought to Lambeth; At what time began the Parliament Lord what ado there was to procure the King a Subsidy, to the intent that thereupon might ensue a Pardon, which indeed followed, and so nothing was done, other than their falsehood known. This was the last puff of the Pike that was inferred against the said Archbishop in King Henry the Eighth his days: for never after durst any man move matter against him in his time.

At last, I have ye both the working and disclosing of this Popish Conspiracy against this worthy Archbishop and Martyr of Christ, Thomas Cranmer. In the which Conspiracy, for so much as complaint was also made unto the King of his Chaplains and good Preachers in Kent, it shall not be out of the story something likewise to touch thereof, especially of Richard Turner, then Preacher the same time in this Archbishopps Diocess, and Curate to Mr. Morice the Archbishopps Secretary, in the Town of Chartham, by whose diligent preaching a great part of this heart-burning of the Papists took his first kindling against the Archbishop. Touching the description of which story, because by me nothing shall be said, either more or less, than is the truth, ye shall hear the very certainty thereof truly compiled in a Letter sent the same time to Dr. Bus and Sir Anthony Deny, to be shewed unto the King, and so it was, written by the foresaid Mr. Morice, Secretary then to the Archbishop, Favourite of the same Benefice of Chartham, and Patron to Mr. Turner, there Minister and Preacher aforesaid.

A Letter or Apology of Mr. Morice, sent to Sir William Butts, and Sir Anthony Deny, defending the Cause of Mr. Richard Turner Preacher, against the Papists.

The Letter first beginning in these words; I am certain (Right worshipful) that it is not unknown to your discret wisdom, &c. And after a few lines, coming to the matter, thus the said Letter proceedeth.

As your Worships well know, it was my chance to be brought up under my Lord of Canterbury, my Master, in writing of the Ecclesiastical Affairs of this Realm, as well touching reformation of corrupt Religion, as concerning the advancement of that pure and sincere Religion received by the Doctrine of the Gospel; which I take to be so substantially handled and builded upon the Doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles, That Hell-gates shall never prevail against it. The consideration whereof compelled me, being a Farmer of the Parsonage of Chartham in Kent, to retain with me one named Mr. Richard Turner, a man not only learned in the Scriptures of God, but also in Conversation of life towards the world, irreprehensible, whom for discharging of my Conscience I placed at Chartham aforesaid, to be Curate there. This man, because he was a stranger in the Country there, and so thereby void of grudge or displeasure of any old rancor in the Country, I thought it had been a mean to have gotten him the better credit in his Doctrine; but where malice once taketh fire against truth, no policy I see is able to quench it. Well, this man as he knew what appertained to his Office, so he spared not weekly both Sundays and Holydays to open the Gospel and Epistle unto his audience after such a sort, (when occasion served) that as well by his vehement inveighing against the Bishop of Rome usurped Power and Authority, as in the earnest setting forth and advancing of the Kings Majesties Supremacy, innumerable of the People of the Country resorting unto his Sermons, changed their opinions, and favoured effectually the Religion received. The confluence of the People so daily increased, that the Church being a fair, ample, and large Church, was not now and then able to receive the number. The fame of this new instruction of the People was so blazed abroad, that the popish Priests were wonderfully amazed and displeased, to see their Pope so to be defaced, and their Prince so highly advanced.

Now thought they it is high time for us to work, or else all will here be utterly lost by this mans preaching: some of them went with Capons, some with Hens, some with Chickens, some with one thing, some with another, unto the Justices, such as then favoured their Cause and Faction, and such as are no small fools, as Sir John Baker, Sir Christopher Hale, Sir Thomas Maile, Knights, with other Justices. The Prebendaries of Christi Church in Canterbury were made privy hereof, giving their succour and aid thereunto. So that in conclusion poor Turner, and other Preachers, were grievously complained of unto the Kings Majesty. Whereupon my Lord of Canterbury, and certain other Commissioners, were appointed at Lambeth to sit upon the Examination of these Seditious Preachers. Howbeit, before Turner went up to his Examination, I obtained of Sir Thomas Maile, that he in Easter week was content to hear Turner preach a rehearsal Sermon in his Parish Church at Westwell, of all the Doctrine of his Sermons preached at his Cure in Chartham: which he most gently granting, heard Turner both before noon and after noon on the Wednesday in Easter week last past, and (as it seemed) took all things in good part, remitting Turner home to his said Cure with gentle and favourable words. I supposed by this means to have stayed Mr. Turner at home from further Examination, hoping that Sir Thomas Maile would have answered for him at Lambeth before the Commissioners. Notwithstanding, after Mr. Mailes coming to London, such Information was laid in against Turner, that he was sent for to make answer himself before the said Commissioners; and there appearing before them, he made such an honest, perfect, and learned answer unto the Articles objected, that he was with a good Exhortation discharged home again, without any manner of Recantation or other Injunction.

Now when the Pope-Catholick Clergy of Kent understood of his coming home without controulment, so that he preached as freely as he did before, against their blind and dumb Ceremonies, straightway by the help of the Bishop of Winchester, Stephen Gardiner, they found a new means to put him to utter confusion, devising that he came home from Examination in such glorious pomp of by the High-ways side in the Woods adjoining, that five hundred persons met him then with banquetting dishes to welcome him home, stirring the People rather lies to an Uproar and Commotion, than to keep them in any quiet Obedience: when in very deed, contrary to this purpose, (as God would) on this side Rochester a mile or two, for avoiding all such light and glorious talk with any his Familiars or Acquaintance, he of purpose left the Highway, and came throw the woods all alone above 18 miles together on foot, so wearied and maged for want of sustenance, that when he came into my House at Chartham, he was not well able to stand or speak for faintness & thirst.

This malicious tale being reported to the Kings Highness, his Majesty was so fore aggrieved therewith, that he sent for the Archbishop of Canterbury, willing him to cause Turner to be whipped out of the Country. By means whereof, the Archbishop of Canterbury sent again for Turner: I hearing thereof made incontinent report by my Letters, with such vehemency proving it meet malice, that the Archbishop understanding the truth, pacified again the Kings Majesties wrath. Home cometh Turner once again to his Cure without blot. Which I wrung the Papists, in that they could not prevail, that they thought it all in vain further to attempt a gainst him concerning any accusation for matters in Kent, the Archbishop of Canterbury being his Ordinary. Well, yet would they not thus leave him undisturbed. Then was there one new matter devised, how that he had Preached erroneous Doctrine in other Countries before he came into Kent, laying to his charge that he had both translated the Mass into English, and said, or ministered the same, and that he had Preached against Purgatory, Pilgrimages, and praying for the dead, &c. By means whereof, he was now convened before the whole Council by the Bishop of Winchester, who sent Syriake Petre Gentleman for him, who brought him up to London bound (as I heard say) and being examined before the said Bishop of Winchester and others, he was committed to ward for a season.

Conspiracy against the Archbishop concerning the Justice
at Kent.

In the which mean time, the Archbishop of Canterbury, being in Kent about the trial of a conspiracy purposed against himself by the Justices of the Shire, and the Prelates of Christs Church: Turner is now sent down to the Archbishop, to the intent he should recant that Doctrine which long ago he in other places out of Kent had Preached, to the utter subversion and defacing of all that he had most Godly and earnestly here in Kent taught both to the Glory of God, and the furtherance and setting forth of the Kings Highness proceedings. If his Majesty will thus permit learned honest Men thus daily to be overcrowded and trodden under foot with a sort of tyrannous, or rather traitorous Papists. (who cannot abide to hear his Majesties Supremacy advanced, nor the sincere Word of God Preached) it were better for Men to dwell amongst the Infidels and miscreants than in England.

What reason is this, that Turner should recant here in Kent the Doctrine which in other Countries he hath taught, to the wounding and overthrowing most desperately of five hundred Mens Consciences and above, (I dare say) who lately by his sincere Preaching have embraced a right good opinion both of the Kings Supremacy, and also of the reformed Religion received? All good Subjects may well lament the Kings Majesties estate in this behalf, that no Man may dare to be so bold to advance his Highness Title, but that every ignorant and malicious Papist shall spurn against him, seeking his utter undoing, and that by the ayd of Papistical Justices set in Authority. I beseech your Worships to pardon me of my rude and homely terms. They herein deserve worse, if worse may be devised. For what honest Man can bear with this, that so Noble a Princes ears shall be thus impudently abused with manifest lies and fables, as this one is of Turners coming home in such a Triumph as they craftily and falsely had devised? It is easily to be suspected what they mean and go about, that, the Prince being alive, dare take in hand so uncourtiously to abuse both the gentle nature of the Prince, and his Godly Preacher, the advancer and extoller of his just Authority.

What think your Worships they would attempt if his Majesty were at Gods mercy (as God foretold that ever any of us should see that day, without better reformation) that can thus dally with his Highness, blinding his Eyes with mists, whilst he liveth and reigneth amongst us in most prosperity? As for my L. of Cam. he dare nothing do for the poor Mans delivery, he hath done so much for him already. And his Grace hath told me plainly, that it is put into the Kings Head, that he is the maintainer and supporter of all the Hereticks within the Realm; nor will he permit me or my neighbors to resort unto the Council for his purgation while he was at Chartham, saying only I have obtained this at his hand, that I may become a siter in writing to my friends and good Masters in the Court for his delivery.

And therefore it is (Right Worships) that I have now taken pen in hand, thus to discourse and open our misery unto you concerning the extrem handling of this honest poor Man Master Turner, that if it may possibly be brought to pass by your Godly Wisdom, the poor Man may be released and discharged of his recantation; you cannot do to God and your Prince a more acceptable service in my poor opinion. For otherwise if he should be driven to recant (as I am sure he will sooner dye) both Gods cause and the Kings shall suffer no small detriment amongst his poor loving Subjects here. For if there be no better stay for the maintenance of these Godly Preachers, the Kings Authority concerning his Supremacy shall lye still alone hidden in the Act of Parliament, and not in the Hearts of his Subjects.

If they can bring to pass that Turner may recant, to the defacing of his good Doctrine Preached here, then have they that for which they have thus long travelled. And yet in effect shall not Turner recant, but King Henry the 8. in Turners person shall most odiously recant, to the wounding of all Mens Consciences here. If the Kings Majesty do not esteem his Authority given to his Highness by Gods Word and his Parliament: it were well done, that the Preachers had good warning to talk no more to the people thereof, rather than thus to be tossed and troubled for doing their duties, by the members of Antichrist.

And now to the intent that they might effectually for ever slander Turners Doctrine here, they have indicted him for offending against the six Articles, this last Sessions, by the witness of two Papists of the Parish of Chartham his utter enemies, Sanders and Brown by name, for a Sermon Preached at Chartham, on Passion Sunday, which chanced on S. Gregories even, they both being absent that day at Wye Fair, as it is well proved, namely, for that he Preached against the Mass: saying, that our Saviour Christ was the only sole Priest, which sung Mass on the Altar of the Crose, there sacrificing for the Sins of the World once for ever, and that all other Masses were but remembrances and thanksgiving for that one Sacrifice, or such words in effect.

Wherefore, to conclude (Right Worships) knowing your Godly zeals, as well towards the preferment of sincere Religion, as your no less affection towards the King his Majesties person and his Godly proceedings, I most humbly beseech you, in the Bowels of our Saviour Christ, to ponder the weighty consideration of the premises, as by your travels unto the Kings Majesty or to the Honourable Council, we here in Kent that have now of late our hearts bent towards the observation of the Law of God and the Prince through Turners Godly persuasions, may receive from your Worships some comfortable words of his deliverance, or else certainly many an honest and simple Man, lately embracing the truth, may perhaps fall away desperately from the same, not without danger of their souls. In accomplishing whereof your Worships shall not only do unto Almighty God and the Prince most true and acceptable service, but also bind the said M. Turner, with all other to whom this cause doth appertain, both daily to pray for your properties, and also to be at your commandments during their lives. From Canterbury the second day of November.

Your worships evermore at commandment, R. M.

And thus much containeth the Letter sent (as is said) by Master Admirer to Doctor Buts and Sir Anthony Deny. Now, what success and speed this Letter had, it followeth to be declared. For Doctor Buts the Kings Physician afore said, after the receipt of these Letters, considering the weighty contents of the same, as he was ever a forward friend in the Gospels cause, so he thought not to forelack this matter to the uttermost of his diligence, and so spying his time, when the King was in trimming and in walking (as his manner was at certain times to call for his Barber) Doctor Buts (whose manner was at such times ever to be present, and with some pleasant conceits to refresh and solace the Kings mind) brought with him in his hand this Letter. The King asking what news, Doctor Buts pleasantly and merrily beginneth to insinuate unto the King the effect of the matter, and so at the Kings Commandment read out the Letter; which when the King had heard, and paused a little with himself upon the same, commanded again the Letter to be read unto him. The hearing and consideration whereof so altered the Kings mind, that where as before he commanded the said Turner to be whipped out of the Country, he now commanded him to be retained as a faithful Subject. And here of that matter an end. Let us now return to the Archbishop again.

1556.

The Kings favour reconciled us again to the Turner.

Who

Who although he was compassed about (as is said) with mighty enemies, and by many crafty trains impugned, yet through Gods more mighty Providence, who king in the Kings heart so to favour him, he rubbed out all K. Henries time without blemish or foil, by means of the Kings supposition; who not only defended the said Archbishop against all his conspired Adversaries, but also extended such special favour unto him in such sort, that he being not ignorant of his wife, whom he had married before at Nuremberge, (being Niece to the wife of Olander) keeping her also their fix Articles time contrary to the Law, notwithstanding he both permitted the same, and kept his counsel.

Then after the death of K. Henry, immediately succeeded his Son K. Edward, under whose government and protection the state of this Archbishop being his Godfather, was nothing impaired, but rather more advanced.

During all this mean time of K. Henry aforesaid, until the entring of K. Edward, it seemed that Cranmer was scarcely yet thoroughly perswaded in the right knowledge of the Sacrament, or at least, was not yet fully ripened in the same: wherein shortly after he being more groundedly confirmed by conference with Bishop Ridley, in process of time did so profit in more ripe knowledge, that at last he took upon him the defence of that whole Doctrine, that is, to refute and throw down first the Corporal Presence; secondly, the fantastical Transubstantiation; thirdly, the idolatrous adoration; fourthly, the false error of the Papists, that wicked men do eat the natural Body of Christ; and lastly, the blasphemous Sacrifice of the Mass. Whereupon in conclusion he wrote five Books for the publick instruction of the Church of England, which instruction yet to this day standeth, and is received in this Church of England.

Against these five Books of the Archbishop, Stephen Gardiner, the Arch-enemy to Christ and his Gospel, being then in the Tower, subbereth up a certain Answer, such as it was, which he in open Court exhibited up at Lambeth, being there examined by the Archbishop aforesaid, and other the Kings Commissioners in King Edward days, which Book was intitled, An explication and assertion of the true Catholick Faith, touching the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, with a Confutation of a Book written against the same.

Against this Explication, or rather a cavilling Sophistication of Stephen Gardiner Dr. of Law, the Archbishop of Canterbury learnedly and copiously replying again, maketh answer, which also he published abroad to the eyes and judgments of all men in print. All which Writings and Books, as well of the one part as of the other, our present story would require here to be inserted, but because to prosecute the whole matter at length will not be comprehended in a small room, and may make too long tarrance in our story, it shall therefore be best to put off the same unto the place of the Appendix following, wherein (the Lord willing) we intend to close up both these, and divers other Treatises of these learned Martyrs, as to this our story shall appertain.

The unquiet spirit of Stephen Gardiner being not yet contented, after all this thrusteth out another Book in Latin of the like Popish Argument, but after another Title, named Marcus Antonius Constantinus. Whereunto first the Archbishop again intending a full Confutation, had already abolved three parts of his Answer lying in Prison. Of the which parts two perished in Oxford; the other yet remaineth in my hands ready to be seen and set forth, as the Lord shall see good. Also Bishop Ridley lying likewise the same time in Prison, having there the said Book of Marcus Antonius, for lack of Pen and Paper, with a Lead of a Window, in the Margent of the Book wrote Annotations, as straightness of time would serve him, in refutation of the same Book. And finally, because these worthy Martyrs had neither liberty nor leisure to go through with that travel, that which lacked in them, for accomplishment of that behalf, was supplied shortly after by Peter Martyr, who abundantly and substantially hath overthrown that Book in his learned Defense of the Truth, against the false Sophistication of Marcus Antonius aforesaid.

Besides these Books above cited of this Archbishop, divers other things there were also of his doing, as the Book of the Reformation, the Catechism, with the Book of Homilies, whose part was by him contrived, part by his procurement approved and published. Whereunto also may be adjoynd another Writing or Confutation of his against 88. Articles by the Convocation devised and propounded, but yet not ratified nor received in the reign and time of King Henry the Eighth.

And thus much hitherto concerning the doings and travels of this Archbishop of Canterbury, during the lives both of K. Henry; and of K. Edward his Son. Which two Kings so long as they continued, this Archbishop lacked no stay of maintenance against all his maligners.

Afterward, this King Edward, a Prince of most worthy towardsness, falling sick, when he received that his death was at hand, and the force of his painful Disease would not suffer him to live longer, and knowing that his Sister Mary was wholly wedded to Popish Religion, bequeathed the Succession of this Realm to the Lady Jane (a Lady of great Birth, but of greater Learning, being Niece to King Henry the Eighth by his Sister) by consent of the Council and Lawyers of this Realm. To this Testament of the Kings, when all the Nobles of the Realm, States and Judges had subscribed; they sent for the Archbishop, and required him that he also would subscribe. But he excusing himself on this manner, said, That it was otherwise in the Testament of King Henry his Father, and that he had sworn to the Succession of Mary, as then the next Heir, by which Oath he was so bound, that without manifest Perjury he could not go from it. The Council answered, that they were not ignorant of that, and that they had Conscience as well as he; and moreover, that they were sworn to that Testament, and therefore he should not think there was any danger therein, or that he should be in more perill of Perjury than the rest.

To this the Archbishop answered, that he was judge of no mans Conscience but his own: and therefore as he would not be prejudicial to others, so he would not commit his Conscience unto other mens facts, or cast himself into danger, seeing that every man should give account of his own Conscience, and not of other mens. And as concerning Subscription, before he had spoken with the King himself, he utterly refused to do it.

The King therefore being demanded of the Archbishop concerning this matter, said, That the Nobles and Lawyers of the Realm counselled him unto it, and perswaded him that the Bond of the first Testament could nothing let, but that this Lady Jane might succeed him as Heir, and the People without danger acknowledge her as their Queen. Who then demanding leave of the King, that he might first talk with certain Lawyers that were in the Court; when they all agreed that by Law of the Realm it might be so, returning to the Kings, with much ado he subscribed.

Well, not long after this King Edward died, being almost sixteen years old, to the great sorrow, but greater calamity of the whole Realm. After whose decease immediately it was commanded that the Lady Jane (which was unwilling thereunto) should be proclaimed Queen. Which thing much disliked the Common People, not that they did so much favour Mary, before whom they saw the Lady Jane preferred, as for the hatred conceived against some, whom they could not favour.

Besides this, other Causes there happened also of Discord between the Nobles and the Commons the same time: for what injuries of Commons and Enclosures wrongfully holden, with other inordinate pollings and uncharitable dealing between the Landlords and Tenants, I cannot tell. But in fine, thus the matter fell out, that Mary hearing of the death of her Brother, and shuffling for her self, was so assisted by the Commons, that citizens she prevailed. Who, being established in the possession of the Realm, not long after came to London, and after she had caused first the two Fathers, the Duke of Northumberland, and the Duke of Suffolk, to be executed, (as is above remembered) likewise she caused the Lady Jane, being both in Age tender, and innocent from this Crimes, after she could by no means be turned from the constancy of her Faith, together with her Husband, to be beheaded.

The rest of the Nobles, paying fines, were forgiven, the Archbishop of Canterbury only excepted. Who though he desired pardon (by means of his friends) could obtain none; informuch that the Queen would not once vouchsafe to see him. For as yet the old grudge against the Archbishop for the divorcement of her Mother, remained hid in the bottom of her heart. Besides this Divorce, she remembered the state of Religion changed; all which was imputed to the Archbishop as the cause thereof.

While these things were in doing, a rumor was in all mens mouths, That the Archbishop, to curry favour with the Queen, had promised to say a Dirge Mass after the old custom, for the Funeral of King Edward her brother. Neither wanted there some which reported that he had already said Mass at Canterbury; which Mass indeed was said by Dr. Thornen. This rumor Cranmer thinking speedily to stay, gave forth a writing of his Purgation: the tenor whereof being before expressed, I need not here again to recite.

Thus Doctor Thornen was after the B. et Divor, a craed and
w. sed perfection.

This Bill being thus written, and lying openly in a Window in his Chamber, cometh in by chance Mr. Story, Bishop then of Rocheſter, who after he had read and perused the same, required of the Archbishop to have a Copy of the Bill. The Archbishop when he had granted and permitted the same to Mr. Story, by the occasion thereof Mr. Story lending it to some friend of his, there were divers Copies taken out thereof, and the thing published abroad among the common people; infomuch that every Scriveners Shop almost, was occupied in writing and copying out the same: and so at length some of these copies coming to the Bishops hands, and so brought to the Council, and they lending it to the Commissioners, the matter was known, and so he commanded to appear.

The Bishop
was D. Head Bishop after of York.

Whereupon D. Cranmer at his day prefixed, appeared before the said Commissioners, bringing a true Inventory, as he was commanded, of all his goods. That done, a Bishop of the Queens Privy Council, being one of the said Commissioners, after the inventory was received, bringing in mention of the Bill; My Lord, (said he) there is a Bill put forth in your name, wherein you seem to be aggrieved with saying up the Mass again; we doubt not but you are forry that it is gone abroad.

To whom the Archbishop answered again, saying, as I do not deny my self to be the very Author of that Bill or Letter, so must I confesse here unto you, concerning the same Bill, that I am forry that the said Bill went from me in such fort as it did. For when I had written it, Mr. Story got the copy of me, and it is now come abroad, and as I understand, the City is full of it. For which I am forry, that it is passed my hands: for I had intended otherwise to have made it in a more large and ample manner, and minded to have set it on Pauls Church door, and on the doors of all the Churches in London, with mine own Seal joynted thereto.

At which words, when they saw the constantness of the Man, they dismissed him, affirming they had no more at that present to say unto him, but that shortly he should hear further. The said Bishop declared afterward to one of Doctor Cranmers friends, that notwithstanding his attainder of Treason, the Queens determination at that time was, that Cranmer should only have been deprived of his Archbishoprick, and have had a sufficient living assigned him, upon his exhibiting of a true inventory, with commandment to keep his house without meddling in matters of Religion. But how true that was, I have not to say. This is certain, that not long after this, he was sent to the Tower, and soon after Condemned of Treason. Notwithstanding the Queen, when she could not honestly deny him his pardon, seeing all the rest were discharged, and specially, seeing he left (of all other) subscribed to King Edwards request, and that against his own will, released to him his action of Treason, and accused him only of Heresie; which liked the Archbishop right well, and came to pass as he wished, because the cause was not his own, but Christs; not the Queens, but the Churches. Thus stood the cause of Cranmer, till at length it was determined by the Queen and the Council, that he should be removed from the Tower where he was prisoner, to Oxford, there to dispute with the Doctors and Divines. And privily word was sent before to them of Oxford to prepare themselves, and make them ready to dispute. And although the Queen and the Bishops had concluded before what should become of him, yet it pleased them that the matter should be debated with Arguments, that under some honest shew of dispute the matter of the Man might be covered. Neither could their hasty speed of revengement abide any long delay; and therefore in all haste he was carried to Oxford.

What this disputation was, and how it was handled, what were the questions and reasons on both sides, and also touching his Condemnation by the University and the Prolocutor, because sufficiently it hath been declared, we mind to now therefore proceed to his final Judgment and order of Condemnation, which was the 12. day of September, Anno 1555. and seven days before the Condemnation of Bishop Ridley and Master Latimer, as is above foretouched. The Story whereof here followeth, faithfully corrected by the report and narration (coming by chance to our hands) of one who being both present thereat, and also a devout favourer of the See and Faction of Rome, can lack no credit (I trow) with such which seek what they can to discredit whatsoever maketh not with their phantastical Religion of Rome.

After the Disputations done and finished in Oxford between the Doctors of both Universities, and the three Worthy Bishops, Doctor Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, ye heard then how sentence condemnatory immediately upon the same was miniftered against them by Doctor Weston and other of the University; whereby they were judged to be Hereticks and so committed to the Major and Sheriffs of Oxford. But forasmuch as the Sentence given against them was void in Law (for at that time the Authority of the Pope was not yet received into the Land) therefore was a new Commission sent from Rome, and a new Process framed for the conviction of these reverend and Godly learned Men aforesaid. In which Commission, first was Doctor James Brooks Bishop of Gloceſter the Popes Subdelegate, with Doctor Martin, and Doctor Story, Commissioners in the King and Queens behalf, for the Execution of the same. Of the which three Commissioners above named, as touching Doctor Martin, this by the way is to be understood, that although he was used for an instrument of the Popes side, to serve a turn (whose Book also is extant against the lawful Marriage of Priests) yet notwithstanding neither was he so bitter an enemy in this perfection, as other Commissioners were; and also in this time of Queen Elizabeth, where divers other Doctors of the Arches refused to be sworn against the Pope, he denied not the Oath; and yet notwithstanding not altogether here to be excused. But to the purpose of this Story. Whereof first it shall be requisite to declare the circumstance, and the whole state of the matter, as in a general description, before we come to their Orations, according as in a parcel of a certain Letter touching the same, it came to our hands.

Imprimis, here is to be understood, that at the coming down of the foresaid Commissioners, which was upon Thursday, the 12. of September, Anno 1555. in the Church of S. Mary, and in the East end of the said Church at the High Altar, was erected a solemn Scaffold for Bishop Brooks aforesaid, representing the Popes person, ten foot high. The feat was made that he might sit under the Sacrament of the Altar. And on the right hand of the Popes Delegate beneath him fate Doctor Martin, and on the left hand fate Doctor Story the King and Queens Commissioners, which were both Doctors of the Civil Law, and underneath them other Doctors, Scribes, and Pharisees also, with the Popes Collector, and a rabblement of such other like.

And thus these Bishops being placed in their Pontificalibus, the Bishop of Canterbury was sent for to come before them. He having intelligence of them that were there, thus ordered himself. He came forth of the prison to the Church of S. Mary, fit forth with Bills and gyleses for fear he should start away, being clothed in a fair black gown, with his hood on both shoulders, such as Doctors of Divinity in the University use to wear. Who after he was come into the Church, and did see them sit in their Pontificalibus, he did not put off his cap to any of them, but stood still till that he was called. And anon one of the Proctors for the Pope, or else his Doctor, called Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, appear here and make answer to that shall be laid to thy charge; that is to Upon this being brought more near unto the Scaffold, where the foresaid Bishop sat, he first well viewed the place of Judgment, and spying where the King and Queens Majesties Proctors were, putting off his Cap, he first humbly bowing his knee to the ground, made reverence to the one, and after to the other.

That done, beholding the Bishop in the face, he put on his Bonet again, making no manner of token of obedience towards him at all. Whereat the Bishop being offended, said unto him, that it might becom him right well, weighing the authority he did represent, to do his duty unto him. Whereunto Dr. Cranmer answered and said, That he had once taken a solemn Oath, never to consent to the admitting of the Bishop of Rome Authority into this Realm of England again; and that he had done it advisedly, and meant by Gods grace to keep it; and therefore would commit nothing either by sign or token, which might argue his consent to the receiving of the same, and so he desired the said Bishop to judge of him, and that he did it not for any contempt to his person, which he could have been content to have honoured as well as any of the other, if his Commission had come from as good an Authority as theirs. This answered he both modestly, wisely, and patiently, with his Cap on his head, not once bowing or making any reverence to him that represented the Popes person, which was wonderously of the people marked that was there present and saw it, and marked it as nigh as could be possible.

The Oration of Dr. Brooks Bishop of Gloucester, unto Dr. Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, in the Church of S. Mary at Oxford, Anno 1556. March 12.

The Oration
of Dr.
Brooks.

When after many means used, they perceived that the Archbishop would not move his Bonet, the Bishop proceeded in these words following.

My Lord, at this present we are come to you as Commissioners, and for you, not intruding our selves by our own Authority, but sent by Commission, partly from the Popes holiness, partly from the King and Queens most excellent Majesties, not to your utter discomfort, but to your comfort if you will your self. We come not to judge you, but to put you in remembrance of that you have been, and shall be. Neither come we to dispute with you, but to examine you in certain matters; which being done, to make relation thereof to him that hath power to judge you. The first being well taken, shall make the second to be well taken. For if you, of your part be moved to come to a conformity, then shall not only we of our side take joy of our Examination, but also they that have sent us.

And first, as Charity doth move us, I would think good somewhat to exhort you, and that by the second Chapter of S. Iohn in the Apo. *Memor esto unde excideris, & age penitentiam, & prima opera fac. Sin minus; i. Remember from whence thou art fallen, and do the first works, or if not, and so as ye know what followeth. Remember your self from whence you have fallen. You have fallen from the Universal and Catholick Church of Christ, from the very true and received Faith of all Christians, and that by open Heresie. You have fallen from your promise to God, from your fidelity and allegiance, your promise to God, from your fidelity and allegiance, and that by open preaching, marriage, and adultery. You have fallen from your Sovereign Prince and Queen by open Treason. Remember therefore from whence you are fallen. Your fall is great, the danger cannot be seen. Wherefore when I say, remember from whence you are fallen, I put you in mind, not only of your fall, but also of the state you were in before your fall. You were sometimes as I and other poor men, in a mean estate, God I take to witness, as I speak it to no reproach or abatement of you, but to put you in memory, how God hath called you from a low to an high degree, from one degree to another, from better to better, and never gave you over, till he had appointed you Legatum natum, Metropolitanum Anglie, Patrem ergo sui. Such great trust did he put you in, in his Church; What could he do more? for even as he ordained Moses to be a Ruler over his Church of Israel,* and gave him full authority upon the same: so did he make you over his Church of England. And when did he this for you? forsooth when you gave no occasion or cause of mistrust either to him, or to his Magistrates. For although it be conjectured, that in all your time ye were not upright in the honour and faith of Christ, but rather set up of purpose as a fit Instrument, whereby the Church might be spoiled and brought into ruin; yet may it appear by many your doings otherwise, and I for my part, as it becometh each one of us, shall think the best. For who was thought as then more devout? who was more religious in the face of the world? Who was thought to have more confidence of a Vow making, and observing the order of the Church, more earnest in the defence of the Real Presence of Christs Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar then ye were? and then all things prospered with you; your Prince favoured you; yea, God himself favoured you; your Candlestick was set up in the highest place of the Church, and the light of your Candle was over all the Church; I would God it had so continued still.

But after ye began to fall by Schism, and would not acknowledge the Popes Holiness as Supreme Head, but would stoutly uphold the unlawful Requests of K. Henry the Eighth, and would bear with that should not be born withal, then began you to fanthe unlawful liberty, and when you had exiled a good Conscience, then ensued great shipwreck in the Sea, which was out of the true and Catholick Church cast into the Sea of Desperation; for as he saith, Extra Ecclesiam non est salus; i. Without the Church there is no Salvation. When ye had forsaken God, God forsook you, and gave you over to your own will, and suffered you to fall from Schism to Apostasie, from Apostasie to Heresie, and from Heresie to Perjury, from Perjury to Treason, and so in conclusion, into the full indignation of our Sovereign Prince, which you may think a just punishment of God, for your other abominable Opinions.

After that, ye fell lower and lower, and now to the lowest degree of all, to the end of honour and life. For if the light of your Candle be as it hath been hitherto dusky, your Candlestick is like to be removed, and have a great fall, so low, and so far out of knowledge, that it be quite out of Gods favour, and past all hope of recovery; Quia in inferno nulla est redemptio; i. For in Hell there is no redemption. The danger whereof being so great, very pity causeth me to say, Memor esto unde excideris; i. Remember from whence thou hast fallen. I add also, and whither you fall.

But here peradventure you will say to me, What Sir? my fall is not so great as you make it. I have not yet fallen from the Catholick Church. For that is not the Catholick Church that the Pope is Head of. There is another Church. But as touching that, I answer, You are sure of that as the Donatists were, for they said they had the true Church, and that the name of true Christians remained only in Africa, where only their seditious Sect was preached: and as you think, so thought Novatus. That all they that did acknowledge their Supreme Head at the See of Rome, were out of the Church of Christ. But here S. Cypprian defending Cornelius against Novatus, Libro secundo, Epistola sexta, saith on this wise, Ecce clesia una est, quae cum sit una, inuis & foris esse non potest. So that if Novatus were in the Church, then was not Cornelius, who indeed by lawful Succession succeeded Pope Fabian. Here Saint Cypprian intendeth by the whole Process to prove, and concludeth thereupon, that the true Church was only Rome. Gather you then what will follow of your fall. But you will say peradventure, that you fell not by Heresie, and so said the Arrians, alledging for themselves that they had Scripture, and going about to persuade their Schism by Scripture; for indeed they had more places by two and forty, which by their torture seemed to depend upon Scripture, than the Catholicks had.

So did the Martians provoke their Heresie to Scripture. But those are no Scriptures; for they are not truly alledged, nor truly interpreted, but untruly wrested and wrong, according to their own fancies. And therefore were they all justly condemned for their wrong taking of the Scriptures, and the Church replieth against them, saying, Qui estis vos? quando? quid agitis?

The high priest
Cranmer, surrendering Archb.
Canterbury.

tu in meo, non mei? The Church said, What make you here in my Heritage? from whence came you? The Scripture is mine Inheritance? I am right Heir thereof: I hold it by true Succession of the Apostles; for as the Apostles required me to hold, so do I hold it. The Apostles have received me, and put me in my Right, and have rejected you as Bastards, having no Title therunto.

Also ye will deny that ye have fallen by Apostasie, by breaking of your Vow; and so Vigilantius said, inasmuch that he would admit none to his Ministry, but those that had their Wives bagged with Children. What now? Shall we say that Vigilantius did not fall therefore? Did not Donatus and Novatus fall, because they said so, and brought Scripture for their defence? Then let us believe as we list, pretending well, and say so; nay, there is no man so blind that will say so: For except the Church, which condemneth them for their say so, do approve us for to do so, then will she condemn you also. So that your denial will not stand. And therefore I tell you, remember from whence ye are fallen, and how long ye shall fall, if ye hold on as you do begin. But I trust you will not continue, but revoke your self in time, and the remedy followeth.

* Age penitentiam, & prima opera fac, for by such means as ye have fallen, ye must rise again. First, your heart hath fallen, then your tongue and your pen, and besides your own damage, hath caused many more to fall. Therefore, first your heart must turn, and then shall the tongue and the pen be quickly turned; Sin minus, veniam tibi cito, & movebo Candelabrum tuum de loco suo.

I need not to teach you a method to turn; you know the ready way your self. But I would God I could but exhort you to the right and truth, then the way should soon be found out. For if ye remember how many ye have brought by abominable Heresie into the way of Perdition, I doubt not but very Conscience would move you, as much for them as for your self, to come again. And so would you spare neither tongue nor pen, if heart were once reformed; for as touching that point, the Holy Ghost toucheth their hearts very near by the mouth of his holy Prophet Ezekiel, when he requireth the blood of his flock at the Priests hands, for lack of good and wholsom food. How much more should this touch your guilty heart, having over much diligence to teach them the way of Perdition, and feeding them with baggage and corrupt food, which is Heresie. Qui convertere fecerit peccatorem ab errore vite sue, salvam faciet animam suam a morte, & operiet multitudinem peccatorum suorum; i. He that shall convert a sinner from his wicked life, shall save his soul from death, and shall cover the multitude of sins. So that if it be true that he, who converteth a sinner, saveth a soul; then the contrary must needs be true, that he that perverteth a soul, and teacheth him the way of Perdition, must needs be damned.

Origenes super Paulum ad Romanos; The damnation of those that preach Heresie doth increase to the day of Judgment. The more that perish by heretical doctrine, the more grievous shall their torment be, that minister such doctrine. Berengarius, who seemed to fear that danger, provided for it in his life time, but not without a troubled and disquiet Conscience. He did not only repent, but recant, and not so much for himself, as for them whom he had with most pestilent Heresies infected. For as he lay in his Death-bed upon Epiphany-day, he demanded of them that were present, Is this (quoth he) the day of Epiphany, and appearing of the Lord? They answered him, Yea. Then (quoth he) this day shall the Lord appear to me, either to my comfort, or to my discomfort. This remorse argueth, that he feared the danger of them whom he had taught, and led out of the Faith of Christ. Origenes upon him saith in this wise; Although his own blood was not upon his head, for that he did repent, and was sorry for his former errors, yet being converted, he feared the blood of them whom he had infected, and who received his doctrine.

Let this move you even at the last point. Inasmuch as your case is not unlike to Berengarius, let your repentance be like also. And what should stay you (tell me) from this godly return? Fear that ye have gone so far, ye may not return? nay, then I may say as David said, Thi crepiderunt ubi non erat timor, Ye fear where ye have no cause to fear. For if ye repent and be heartily sorry for your former Heresie and Apostasie, ye need not to fear. For as God of his part is merciful and gracious to the repentant sinner, so is the King, so is the Queen merciful, which ye may well perceive by your own case, since ye might have suffered a great while ago for Treason committed against her Highness, but that ye have been spared and referred upon hope of amendment, which the conceived very good of you, but now (as it seemeth) is but a very desperate hope. And what do you thereby? Secundum duritiam cordis thesaurizas tibi iram in die ire; i. According to the hardness of your heart ye treasure up to your self anger in the day of wrath.

Well, what is it then, if fear do not hinder you? Shame, to unsay that that you have said? Nay, it is no shame, unless you think it shame to agree with the true and the Catholick Church of Christ. And if that be shame, then blame S. Paul, who persecuted the Disciples of Christ with the Sword; then blame S. Peter, who denied his Master Christ with an Oath, that he never knew him. S. Cyprian before his return being a Witch; S. Austin being nine years out of the Church: They thought it no shame after their return of that they had returned. Shall it then be shame for you to convert and consent with the Church of Christ? No, no.

What is it then that doth let you? Glory of the world? nay, as for the vanity of the world, I for my part judge not in you, being a man of learning, and knowing your estate.

And as for the loss of your estimation, it is ten to one that where you were Archbishop of Canterbury, and Metropolitan of England, it is ten to one (I say) that ye shall be as well still, yea, and rather better.

And as for the winning of good men, there is no doubt but all that be here present, and the whole Congregation of Christs Church also will more rejoice of your return, than they were sorry for your fall. And as for the other, ye need not to doubt, for they shall all come after; and to say the truth, if you should lose them for ever it were no force, ye should have no less thereby at all. I do not here touch them which should confirm your estimation. For as S. Paul, after his Conversion, was received into the Church of Christ, with wonderful joy to the whole Congregation, even so shall you be. The fame of your return shall be spread abroad throughout all Christendom, where your face was never known.

But you will say perhaps, your Conscience will not suffer you. My Lord, there is a good Conscience; and there is a bad Conscience. The good Conscience have not they, as S. Paul declareth to Timothy concerning Hymeneus and Alexander. The evil and bad Conscience is (saith S. Cyprian) well to be known by his mark. What mark? This Conscience is marked with the print of Heresie. This Conscience is a naughty, filthy, and a branded Conscience, which I trust is not in you. I have conceived a better hope of you then so, or else would I never go about to persuade or exhort you. But what Conscience should stay you to return to the Catholick Faith and universal Church of Christ? What Conscience doth separate you to that devilish and several Church? to a liberty which never had ground in the holy Scriptures? If you judge your liberty to be good, then judge you all Christendom to do evil besides you.

O what a presumptuous persuasion is this, upon this utterly to forsake the Church of Christ? Under what colour or pretence do you this? for the abuses? as though in your Church were no abuses: Yes that there were. And if you forsake the Universal Church for the abuses, why do you not then forsake your particular Church, and so be flitting from one to another? That is not the next way, to slip from the Church for the abuses; for if you had seen abuses, you should rather have endeavoured for a reformation than for a defection. He is a good Chirurgion, who for a little pain in the toe will cut off the whole leg. He helpeth well the tooth-ach, which cutteth away the head by the shoulders. It is meer folly to amend abuses by abuses. Ye are like Diogenes; for Diogenes on a time envying the cleanliness of Plato, said on this wise, Ecce calco fastum Platonis. Plato answered, Sed alio fastu. So that Diogenes seemed more faulty of the two.

But when we have said all that we can, peradventure you will say, I will not return. And to that I say, I will not answer. Nevertheless, hear what Christ saith to such obdurate and stiffnecked people in the Parable of the Supper. When he had sent out his Men to call them in that were appointed, and they would not come, he bade his Servants go into the ways and streets, to compel Men to come in Cogite intrare. If then the Church will not leave any member that may be compelled to come in, ye must think it good to take the compulsion, lest you lose your part of the Supper which the Lord hath prepared for you; and this compulsion standeth well with Charity.

But it may be perhaps, that some hath animated you to stick to your tackle, and not to give over, bearing you in hand that your opinion is good, and that ye shall die in a good quarrel, and God shall accept your oblation. But hear what Christ saith of a meaner gift; if thou come to the Altar to offer thy oblation, and knowest that thy Brother hath somewhat to say against thee, leave there thy gift, and go and be reconciled to thy Brother, and then come and offer up thy gift, or else thy Brother will make thy offering unfavoury before God. This he said unto all the World, to the end they should know how their offerings should be received, if they were not according.

Remember you therefore before you offer up your offering, whether your gift be qualified or no. Remember the Church of Rome, and also of England, where not one only Brother, but a number have matter against you, so just that they will make your burnt offering to stink before God, except you be reconciled. If you must needs appoint upon a Sacrifice, make yet a mean first to them that have to lay against you. I say no more then the Church hath allowed me to say. For the Sacrifice that is offered without the Church is not profitable. The premises therefore considered, for Gods sake, I say, Memor esto unde exideris; & age paenitentiam; & prima opera fac. Sin minus, &c. Cast not your self away, spare your Body, spare your Soul, spare them also whom you have seduced, spare the shedding of Christs Blood for you in vain. Harden not your heart, acknowledge the truth, yield to the precript Word of God, to the Catholick Church of Rome, to the received verity of all Christendom. Wed not your self to your own self-will. Stand not too much in your own conceit, think not your self wiser then all Christendom is besides you. Leave off this unjust cavil. How? leave what? leave reason, leave wonder, and believe as the Catholick Church doth believe and teach you. Perswade with your self, that Extra Ecclesiam non est salus, i. Without the Church there is no salvation. And thus much have I said of Charity. If this poor simple exhortation of mine may sink into your head, and take effect with you, then have I said as I would have said, otherwise not as I would but as I could for this present.

And thus Bishop Brooks finishing his Oration, fate down. After whom, Doctor Martin, taking the matter in hand, beginneth thus.

The Oration of Doctor Martin.

Albeit there be two Governments, the one, spiritual, and the other temporal, the one having the Keys, the other the Sword, yet in all ages we read that for the Honour and Glory of God both these powers have been adjoynd together. For if we read the Old Testament, we shall find that so did Josias and Ezekias. So did the Kings of the Nimivites compel a general fast through all the whole City. So did Darius in breaking the great Idol, Beli, and delivered Godly Daniel out of the Den of Lions. So did Nebuchodonosor make and institute Laws against the Blasphemers of God. But to let pass these examples, with a great number more, and to come to Christs time, it is not unknown what a great travel they took to set forth Gods Honour: and although the rule and Government of the Church did only appertain to the spirituality, yet for the suppression of Heresies and Schisms, Kings were admitted as aiders thereunto. First, Constantine the great called a Council at Nice for the suppression of the Arrians Sect, where the same time was raised a great contention among them. And after long disputation had, when the Fathers could not agree upon the putting down the Arrians, they referred their judgment to Constantine. God forbid, quoth Constantine; You ought to rule me, and not I you. And as Constantine did, so did Theodosius against the Nestorians, so did Marcianus against Manicheus. Jovianus made a Law, that no Man should marry with a Nun, that had wedded her self to the Church.

So had King Henry the eighth the Title of Defender of the Faith, because he wrote against Luther and his complices. So these 900. years the King of Spain had that Title of Catholick, for the expulsion of the Arrians, and to say the truth, the King and Queens Majesties do nothing degenerate from their ancillors, taking upon them to restore again the Title to be Defender of the Faith, to the right heir hereof, the Popes Holiness.

Therefore these two Princes, perceiving this noble Realm, how it hath been brought from the unity of the true and Catholick Church, the which you and your confederates do, and have renounced; perceiving also that you do persist in your detestable errors, and will by no means be revoked from the same, have made their humble Request and Petition to the Popes Holiness, Paulus the fourth, as suprem head of the Church of Christ, declaring to him, that where you were Archbishop of Canterbury and Metropolitan of England and at your Consecration took two solemn Oaths, for your due obedience to be given to the See of Rome, to become a true Preacher or Pastor of his Flock, yet contrary to your Oath and allegiance, for unity have sowed discord, for chastity, Marriage and Adultery; for obedience, contention; and for Faith, ye have been the Author of all Mischief. The Popes Holiness considering their Request and Petition, hath granted them, that according to the censure of this Realm process should be made against you.

And whereas in this late time, you both excluded Charity and justice, yet hath his Holiness decreed, that you shall have both Charity and Justice shewed unto you. He willesh you should have the Laws in most ample manner to answer in your behalf, and that you shall here come before my Lord of Glocester, as High Commissioner from his Holiness, to the Examination of such Articles as shall be proposed against you, and that we should require the Examination of you, in the Kings and Queens Majesties behalf. The King and Queen as touching themselves, because by the Law they cannot appear personally, Quia sunt illibris; persona, have appointed as their Attorneys, Doctor Story and me. Wherefore here I offer to your good Lordship our Proxy, Sealed with the Broad Seal of England, and offer my self to be Proctor in the King Majesties behalf. I exhibit here also certain Articles, containing the manifest adultery and perjury: Also Books of Heresie made partly by him, partly set forth by his authority. And here I produce him as party principal, to answer to your good Lordship.

Crammer. Shall I then make my answer?

Martin. As you think good, no Man shall let you.

And here the Archbishop kneeling down on both knees towards the West, said first the Lords Prayer. Then rising up he recited the Articles of the Creed. Which done, he entred with his protestation in form as followeth.

The Faith and profession of Doctor Crammer, Archbishop of Canterbury, before the Commissioners.

This I do profess as touching my Faith, and make my protestation, which I desire you to note. I will never consent that the Bishop of Rome shall have any jurisdiction within this Realm.

Story. Take a note thereof.

Martin. Mark, Mr. Crammer, how you answer for your self. You refuse and deny him, by whose Laws ye do remain in Life, being otherwise attainted of High Treason, and but a dead Man by the Laws of the Realm.

Cran. I protest before God I was no Traitor but indeed I confessed more at my arraignment then was true.

Martin. That it is not to be reasoned at this present. Ye know ye were Condemned for a Traitor, and Res judicata judicata pro veritate accipitur. But proceed to your matter.

Cramer. I will never consent to the Bishop of Rome, for then should I give my self to the Devil; for I have made an Oath to the King, and I must obey the King by Gods Laws. By the Scripture the King is chief, and no foreign person in his own Realm above him. There is no Subject but to a King. I am a Subject, I owe my fidelity to the Crown. The Pope is contrary to the Crown. I cannot obey both; for no Man can serve two masters at once, as you in the beginning of your Oration declared by the Sword and Keyes, attributing the Keyes to the Pope, and the Sword to the King. But I say the King hath both. Therefore he that is subject to Rome, and the Laws of Rome, he is perjured; for the Popes and the Judges Laws are contrary, they are uncertain and confounded.

Causes assigned why Dr. Cramer cannot receive the Pope. The Law of this Realm, and the Popes contrary.

A Priest indebted by the Laws of the Realm, shall be sued before a temporal Judge; by the Popes Laws contrary.

The Pope doth the King injury in that he hath his Power at the last the King got the upper hand, and so are all Bishops perjured, first to the Pope, and then to the King.

Again, by the Laws of Rome the Benefice must be given by the Bishop, by the Laws of the Realm, the Patron giveth the Benefice. Herein the Laws be as contrary as Fire and Water.

No Man can by the Laws of Rome proceed in a præsumptio, and so is the Law of the Realm expelled, and the King standeth accused in maintaining his own Lands. Therefore in consideration that the King and the Queen take their power of him, as though God should give it to them, there is no true subject, unless he be abrogate, seeing the Crown is holden of him being out of the Realm.

The Popes proceedings contrary to God.

The Bishop of Rome is contrary to God, and injurious to his Laws; for God commanded all Men to be diligent in the knowledge of his Law; and therefore hath appointed one Holy Day in the week or the least, for the people to come to the Church and hear the Word of God expounded unto them, and that they might the better understand it, to hear it in their Mother Tongue which they know. The Pope doth contrary; for he willeth the Service to be had in the Latin Tongue, which they do not understand. God would have it to be perceived; the Pope will not. When the Priest giveth thanks, God would that the people should do so too; and God will them to confess altogether; the Pope will not.

The Real Presence is not to be proved by any Doctor above a thousand years since Christ.

Now as concerning the Sacrament, I have taught no false Doctrine of the Sacrament of the Altar: For it can be proved by any Doctor above a thousand years after Christ, that Christs Body is there really, I will give over my Book was made even years ago, and no Man hath brought any Authors against it. I believe that who eateth and drinketh that Sacrament, Christ is within them, whole Christ, his Nativity, Passion, Resurrection and Ascension; but not that corporally that sitteth in Heaven.

Now Christ commanded all to drink of the Cup; The Pope taketh it away from the Lay Men, and yet one faith, that if Christ had died for the Devil, that he should drink thereof. Christ biddeth us to obey the King, etiam discolor. The Bishop of Rome biddeth us to obey him; therefore unless he be Antichrist, I cannot tell what to make of him. Wherefore if I should obey him, I cannot obey Christ.

The Pope likened to the Devil, and sheweth.

He is like the Devil in his doings; for the Devil said to Christ; If thou wilt fall down and worship me, I will give thee all the kingdoms of the World. Thus he took upon him to give that which was not his own. Even so the Bishop of Rome giveth Princes their Crowns, being none of his own; for where Princes either by election, either by succession, either by inheritance obtain their Crown, he saith that they should have it from him.

The Pope proved Antichrist.

Christ saith, that Antichrist shall be. And who shall he be? Forsooth he that advanceth himself above all other Creatures. Now if there be none already that hath advanced himself after such sort besides the Pope, then in the mean time let him be Antichrist.

Story. Pleaseth it you to make an end?

Cramer. For he will be the Vicar of Christ, he will dispense with the Old and New Testament also, yea and with Apostles.

Now I have declared why I cannot with my conscience obey the Pope. I speak not this for hatred I bear to him that now supplieth the room, for I know him not. I pray God give him Grace not to follow his Ancestors. Neither say I this for my defence, but to declare my Conscience for the zeal that I bear to Gods Word trodden under foot by the Bishop of Rome. I cast fear apart, for Christ said to his Apostles, that in the latter days they should suffer much sorrow, and be put to death for his names sake: fear them not (saith he) but fear him which when he hath killed the Body, hath power to cast the Soul into fire everlasting. Also Christ saith, that he that will live shall die, and he that loseth his life for my Names sake, he shall find it again. Moreover he said, confesse me before Men, and be not afraid; for if you do so, I will stand with you; if you shrink from me I will shrink from you. This is a comfortable and terrible saying, this maketh me to set all fear apart. I say therefore, the Bishop of Rome treadeth under foot Gods Laws and the Kings.

Anno 1556.

Meth. 17.

The Pope would give Bishoppicks; so would the King. But at the last the King got the upper hand, and so are all Bishops perjured, first to the Pope, and then to the King.

The Crown hath nothing to do with the Clergy. For if a Clerk come before a judge, the judge shall make process against him, but not to execute any Laws. For if the judge should put him to Execution, then is the King accused in maintaining his own Laws. And therefore say I, that he is neither true to God, neither to the King, that first received the Pope. But I shall heartily pray for such Counsellors, as may inform her the truth; for the King and Queen, if they be well informed, will do well.

The Popes Lawes against the Laws of this Realm.

Martin. As you understand, then if they maintain the Supremacy of Rome, they cannot maintain England too.

Cramer. I require you to declare to the King and Queen what I have said, and how their Oaths do stand with the Realm and the Pope. St. Gregory saith, he that taketh upon him to be head of the Universal Church, is worse than the Antichrist. If any Man can shew me, that it is not against Gods Word to hold his stirrup when he taketh his horse, and kiss his feet (as Kings do) then will I kiss his feet also.

To be called Universal Head is a mark of Antichrist. Gregory.

And you for your part, my Lord, are perjured; for the Bishop now ye sit Judge for the Pope, and yet you did receive of Gloucester your Bishoppick of the King. You have taken an oath perjured Oath to be adversary to the Realm; for the Popes Laws are contrary to the Laws of the Realm.

Glocester. You were the cause that I did forsake the Pope, and did swear that he ought not to be Suprem Head, and gave it to King Henry the eighth, that he ought to be it, and this you made me to do.

Cramer. To this I answer, said he; You report me ill, and say not the truth, and I will prove it here before you all. The truth is, that my Predecessor, Bishop Warham, gave the Supremacy to King Henry the eighth, and said that he ought to have it before the Bishop of Rome, and that Gods Word would bear him. And upon the same was there sent to both the Universities Oxford and Cambridge, to know what the Word of God would do touching the Supremacy, and it was reasoned upon, and argued at length. So at the last both the Universities agreed, and set to their Seals, and sent it to King Henry the eighth to the Court, that he ought to be Suprem Head, and not the Pope. Whereupon you were then Doctor of Divinity at that time, and your consent was thereunto, by your hand doth appear. Therefore you misreport me, that I was the cause of your falling away from the Pope, but it was your self. All this was in Bishop Warhams time, and whilst he was alive, so that it was three quarters of a year after ere ever I had the Bishoppick of Canterbury in my hands, and before I might do any thing. So that here ye have reported of me that which ye cannot prove, which is evil done. All this while his cap was on his head.

Warham Archbishop gave up first the Supremacy to the King.

Both the Universities subscribed to the Kings Supremacy, before Cranmer was Archbishop.

Glocester. We come to examine you, and you, methinks, examine us.

Story. Pleaseth it your good Lordship, because it hath pleased the King and Queens Majesties to appoint my companion and me to hear the Examination of this Man before your good Lordship, to give me leave somewhat to talk in that behalf. Although I know that in talk with Heretics there cometh hurt to all Men; for it wearieth the steadfast, troubleth the doubtful, and taketh in fiare the weak and simple: yet because he faith, he is not bound to answer your Lordship sitting for the Popes Holiness, because of a Premunire, and the Word of God as he termeth it; I think good somewhat to say, that all Men may see how he runneth out of his Race of Reason into the rage of common talk, such as here I trust hath done much good. And as the King and Queens Majesties will be glad to hear of your most charitable dealing with him; so will they be weary to hear the blundering of this stubborn Heretic. And where he alledgeth Divinity, mingling sanctasque together, he should not have been heard. For shall it be sufficient to him to alledge, the Judge is not competent? Do we not see that in the Common Law it is not lawful for a Man in Westminster-Hall to refuse his Judge? And shall we dispute contra eum qui negat principia? Although there be here a great company of learned Men, that know it unmeet so to do, yet have I here a plain Canon, wherein he declareth himself convicted ipso facto. The Canon is this; Sis ergo ruina suo dolore prostratus quisquis Apostolicis volueris contraire decretis, nec locum deinceps inter Sacerdotes habeat, sed exors a sancto fiat minister, nec de eo ejus judicio quisquam posthac curam habeat, quin jam damnatus a sancta & Apostolica Ecclesia sua inobedientia ac presumptione a quaquam esse non dubietur. Quin majoris excommunicationis dejectione est abiciendus, cui sancta Ecclesia commissa fuerit disciplina, qui non solum justissimis prelati sancta Ecclesie parere debuit, sed etiam alios ne praeterirent insinuare. Sitque alienus a divinis & pontificalibus officiis, qui noluerit praeceptis Apostolicis obtemperare.

He hath alledged many matters against the Supremacy, but maliciously. Ye say that the King in his Realm is suprem head of the Church. Well Sir, you will grant me that there was a perfect Catholick Church before any King was christened. Then if it were a perfect Church, it must needs have a head, which must needs be before any Man was member thereof; for you know Constantinus the Emperour was the first christened King that ever was. And although you are bound (as Saint Paul faith) to obey your Rulers, and Kings have rule of the people, yet doth it not follow that they have cure of Soules for a fortiori, the head may do that the Minister cannot do, but the Priest may consecrate, and the King cannot, therefore the King is not head.

It was licensed by Christ to every Man to bring into the sheepfold, and to augment the flock, but not to rule, for that was only given to Peter.

And where the Apostles do call upon Men to obey their Princes, cui tributum, tributum, cui veltigal, veltigal; they perceiving that Men were bent to a kind of liberty and disobedience, were enforced to exhort them to obedience and payment of their tribute, which exhortation extendeth only to temporal matters.

And again, where you say that the Bishop of Rome maketh Laws contrary to the Laws of the Realm, that is not true; for this is a maxim in the Law; Quod in particulari excipitur, non facit universale falsum.

Now as touching that monstrous talk of your Confidence, that is no Confidence that ye profess; it is but privata scientia, electio and scilicet. And as yet for all your glorious babble, you have not proved by Gods Laws that ye ought not to answer the Popes Holiness.

The Canons which be received of all Christendom compel you to answer, therefore you are bound so to do. And although this Realm of late time, through such Schismatics as you were, hath exiled and banished the Canons, yet that cannot make for you. For you know your self, that Par in parem, nec pars in totum aliquid statuere potest. Wherefore this Ile, being indeed but a member of the whole, could not determine against the whole. That notwithstanding the Five Laws, being put away by Parliament, are now received again by a Parliament, and have as full authority now as they had then, and they will now that ye answer to the Popes Holiness; therefore by the Laws of this Realm ye are bound to answer him. Wherefore, my good Lord, all that this Thomas Cranmer (I cannot otherwise term him, considering his disobedience) hath brought for his defence, shall nothing prevail with you, nor take any effect. Require him therefore to answer directly to your good Lordship; command him to set aside his trifles, and to be obedient to the Laws and Ordinances of this Realm. Take witness here of his stubborn contempt against the King and Queens Majesties, and compel him to answer directly to such Articles as we shall here lay against him, and in refusal, your good Lordship is to excommunicate him.

As soon as Doctor Story had thus ended his tale, begetteth Doctor Martin again to enter speech with the Archbishop; which talk I thought here likewise not to let pass, although the report of the same be full, as the Author thereof seemeth in his writings very partial; for as he expresseth the speech of Dr. Martin at full, and to the uttermost of his diligence, leaving out nothing in that part, that either was or could be said more, so again on the other part, how raw and weak he leaveth the matter, it is easy to perceive, who neither comprehendeth all that Doctor Cranmer again answered for his defence, nor yet in those short speeches which he expresseth, seemeth to discharge the part of a sincere and faithful reporter. Notwithstanding such as it is, I thought good to let the Reader understand, who in pursuing the same, may use therein his own judgment and consideration.

Talk between Doctor Martin and the Archbishop.

Martin. After Cranmer, ye have told here a long glorious tale, pretending some matter of Confidence in appearance, but in verity you have no Confidence at all. You say that you have sworn once to King Henry the eighth against the Popes jurisdiction, and therefore you may never forfeit the same; and so ye make a great matter of Confidence in the breach of the said Oath. Here will I ask you a question or two. What if ye made an Oath to an Harlot, to live with her in continual adultery, ought you to keep it?

Cran. I think no.

Martin. What if you did swear never to lend a poor Man one penny, ought you to keep it?

Cran. I think not.

Martin. Herod did swear whatsoever his Harlot asked of him he would give her, and he gave her John Baptists head; Did he well in keeping his Oath?

Cran. I think not.

Martin. Jephthe the one of the Judges of Israel did swear unto God, that if he would give him victory over his enemies, he would offer unto God the first Souldier that came forth of his house; it hapned that his own Souldier came first, and he slew her to save his Oath. Did he well?

Cran. I think not.

Martin. So faith Saint Ambrose de officiis, Miserabilis necessitas, qua solvitur parricidia, id est, It is a miserable necessity, which is paid with parricide. Then Master Cranmer you can no less confess by the premises but that you ought not to have Confidence of every Oath, but if it be just, lawful, and advantage taken.

Cran. So was that Oath.

Martin. That is not so, for first it was unjust, for it tended to the taking away of another mans right. It was not lawful, for the Laws of God and the Church were against it. Besides, it was not voluntary; for every Man and Woman were compelled to take it.

Cran. It pleaseth you to say so.

Martin. Let all the World be Judge. But Sir, you that pretend to have such a Confidence to break an Oath, I pray you did you never swear and break the same?

Cran. I remember not.

Martin. I will help your Memory. Did you never swear Obedience to the See of Rome?

Cranmer. Indeed I did once swear unto the same.

Martin.

Mart. Yea, that you did twice, as appeareth by records and writings here ready to be shewed.

Cran. But I remember I sware all by protestation that I made by the Couplet of the best learned Men I could get at that time, Mart. Hearken good people what this Man saith. He made a protestation one day, to keep never a whit of that which he would swear the next day; was this the part of a Christian Man? If a Christian Man would bargain with a Turk, and before he maketh his bargain solemnly, before witness readeth in his paper that he holdeth secretly in his hand, or peradventure protesteth before one or two, that he mindeth not to perform whatsoever he shall promise to the Turk; I say, if a Christian Man should serve a Turk in this manner, that the Christian Man were worse then the Turk. What would you then say to this Man that made a Solemn Oath and promise unto God and his Church, and made a protestation before quite contrary?

Cran. That which I did, I did by the best learned Mens advice I could get at that time.

Mart. I protest before all the learned Men here, that there is no learning will save your perjury herein; for there be two Rules of the Civil Law clean contrary against you, and so brought forth his Rules, which being done he proceeded further. But will you have the truth of the matter. King Henry the eighth even then meant the lamentable change which after you see came to pass and to further his pitiful proceedings from the divorcement of his most lawful wife, to the detestable departing from the Blessed Unity of Christs Church, this Man made the foresaid protestation; and on the other side, he letted not to make two Solemn Oaths quite contrary, and why? for otherwise by the Laws and Canons of this Realm, he could not aspire to the Archbishoprick of Canterbury.

Cran. I protest before you all, there was never Man came more unwillingly to a Bishoprick, then I did to that. Infomuch that when King Henry did send for me in post, that I should come over, I prolonged my journey by seven weeks at the least, thinking that he would be forgetful of me in the mean time.

Mart. You declare well by the way that the King took you to be a Man of good Conscience, who could not find within all his Realm any Man that would set forth his strange adultery, but was enforced to find you in post to come out of Germany. What may we conjecture hereby, but that there was a compact between you being then Queen Annes Chaplain, and the King; Give me the Archbishoprick of Canterbury, and I will give you licence to live in adultery.

Cran. You say not true.

Mart. Let your protestation joynd with the rest of your talk, give judgment. Hinc prima mali labes. Of that your execrable perjury, and his coloured and too shamefully suffered adultery, came Heresie and all mischief to this Realm.

And thus have I spoken as touching the Conscience you make for breaking your Heretical Oath made to the King. But to break your former Oath made at two sundry times both to God and his Church, you have no Conscience at all. And now to answer another part of your Oration, wherein you bring in Gods Word, that you have it on your side and no Man else, and that the Pope hath devised a New Scripture contrary to the Scripture of God; ye play herein as the Pharisees did, which cried always, Verbum Domini, Verbum Domini, The Word of the Lord, the Word of the Lord, when they meant nothing so. This bettereth not your cause, because you have Gods Word for you; for Basilides and Plantinus the Hereticks said, that they had Gods Word to maintain their Heresie. So Nistorinus, so Macedonius, so Pelagius, and briefly, all the Hereticks that ever were, pretended that they had Gods Word for them; yea, and so the Devil being the Father of Heresies, alledged Gods Word for him, saying, Scriptum est, It is written: So said he to Christ, Mitte te deorsum, Cast thy self downward, which you applied most falsely against the Pope. But if you mark the Devils Language well, it agreed with your proceedings most truly. For, Mitte te deorsum, Cast thy self downward, said he, and so taught you to cast all things downward. Down with the Sacrament, down with the Mass; down with the Altars, down with the Arms of Christ, and up with a Lion and a Dog, down with the Abbeyes, down with Chauntries, down with Hospitals and Colledges, down with fasting and Prayer, yea down with all that Good and Godly is. All your proceedings and preachings tended no other, but to fulfill the Devils request, Mitte te deorsum. And therefore tell not us that you have Gods Word. For God hath given us by his Word a mark to know that your teaching proceeded not of God, but of the Devil, and that your Doctrine came not of Christ but of Antichrist. For Christ foretold, there should come against his Church, Lupi rapaces, id est, Ravening Wolves, and Pseudoprophetae, id est, False Apostles. But how should we know them? Christ teacheth us, saying, Ex fructibus eorum cognoscetis eos, and whether these be the fruits of the Holy Spirit, or the fruits of the flesh, let the covetousness of them both give judgment.

Why, what be their fruits? Saint Paul declareth; Post carnem in concupiscentia, & inmunditia ambulantes: potestates continentur, &c. After the Flesh they walk in concupiscentie and uncleanness; they contemn Potestates. Again, In diebus novissimis erunt periculosa tempora, erunt scilicet amantes, cupidi, elati, immorigeri parentibus, proditores, &c. In the latter days there shall be perilous times. Then shall there be Men loving themselves, covetous, proud, disobedient to parents, Treason-workers. Whether these be not the fruits of your Gospel, I refer me to this Worshippful Audience; whether the said Gospel began not with perjury, proceeded with Adultery, was maintained with Heresie, and ended in Conspiracy.

Now Sir, two points more I marked in your raging discourse that you made here: the one against the Holy Sacrament; the other against the Popes jurisdiction, and the Authority of the See Apostolicke.

Touching the first, ye say you have Gods Word with you, yea, and all the Doctors. I would here ask but one question of you; whether Gods Word be contrary to it self, and whether the Doctors teach Doctrine contrary to themselves, or not? For you Master Cranmer have taught in this High Sacrament of the Altar three contrary Doctrines, and yet you pretended in every one; Verbum Domini.

Cran. Nay, I taught but two contrary Doctrines in the same.

Mart. What Doctrine taught you when you Condemned Lambert the Sacramentary in the Kings presence in Whitehall.

Cranmer. I maintained then the Papiests Doctrine.

Mart. That is to say, the Catholick and Universal Doctrine of Christs Church. And how when King Henry died? did you not translate Iustus Jonas Book?

Cran. I did so.

Mart. Then there you defended another Doctrine touching the Sacrament, by the same token, that you sent to Lynn your Printer, that whereas in the first print there was an affirmative, that is to say Christs Body really in the Sacrament, you sent then to your Printer to put in a not, whereby it came miraculously to pass, that Christs Body was clean conveyed out of the Sacrament.

Cran. I remember there were two Printers of my said Book, but where the same not was put in, I cannot tell.

Martin. Then from a Lutheran ye became a Swinglian, which is the vilest Heresie of all in the High Mytery of the Sacrament, and for the same Heresie you did helpe burn Lambert the Sacramentary, which you now call the Catholick Faith, and Gods Word.

Cranmer. I grant that then I believed otherwise then I do now, and so I did, until my Lord of London, Doctor Ridley, did confer with me, and by sundry persuasions and authorities of Doctors drew me quite from my opinion.

Martin. Now Sir, as touching the last part of your Supremacy Oration, you denied that the Popes Holiness was Supreme Head of the Church of Christ.

Cran. I did so.

Mart. Who say you then is Supreme Head?

Cran. Christ.

of the Pope.

Anno 1556. Marr. But whom hath Christ left here in Earth his Vicar and head of his Church?

Cran. No body.

Marr. Ah, why told you not King Henry this when you made him Supreme Head and now no body is? This is Treason against his own person as you then made him.

Cran. I mean not but every King in his own Realm and Dominion is Supreme Head, and so was he Supreme Head of the Church of Christ in England.

Marr. Is this always true and was it ever so in Christs Church?

Cran. It was so.

Marr. Then what say you by Nero? He was the mightiest Prince of the Earth after Christ was ascended: Was he Head of Christs Church?

Cran. Nero was Peters Head:

Marr. I ask whether Nero was Head of the Church or no? if he were not, it is false that you said before, that all Princes be, and ever were Heads of the Church within their Realms.

Cran. Nay, it is true, for Nero was Head of the Church: that is, in worldly respect of the temporal Bodies of Men, of whom the Church consisteth; for so he beheaded Peter and the Apostles. And the Turk too is Head of the Church in Turkey.

Marr. Then he that beheaded the Heads of the Church, and Crucified the Apostles, was Head of Christs Church; and he that was never member of the Church, is Head of the Church, by your new found understanding of Gods Word.

¶ It is not to be supposed contrary, but much other matter passed in this Communication between them, especially on the Archbishops behalf. Whole answers I do not think to be so slender, nor altogether in the same form of words framed; if the truth, as it was, might be known: but so it pleased the Notary thereof, being too much partially addicted to his Mother See of Rome in favour of his fiction, to diminish and drive down the other side, either in not flowing all, or in reporting the thing otherwise than it was; as the common guile is of most Writers, to what side their affection most weigheth, their Oration commonly inclineth. But let us proceed further in the Story of this matter.

It followed then (saith this reporter) when the Archbishop thus had answered, and the standers by began to murmur against him; the Judges not content with his Answers, willed him to answer directly to the Interrogatories; which Interrogatories articulated against him in form of Law, were these under following.

Interrogatories objected to the Archbishop, with his Answers annexed to the same.

Interrogatories laid against the Archbishop. 1. Interrog. First was objected, that he the foresaid Thomas Cranmer, being yet free, and before he entered into Holy Orders, married one Joan, surnamed black or brown, dwelling at the sign of the Dolphin in Cambridge.

The first marriage of the Archbishop.

Answer. Whereunto he answered, that whether she was called black or brown, he knew not, but that he married there one Joan, that he granted.

2. Interrog. That after the death of the foresaid wife, he entered into holy Orders, and after that was made Archbishop by the Pope.

Answer. He received (he said) a certain Bull of the Pope, which he delivered unto the King, and was Archbishop by him.

The second marriage of the Archbishop.

3. Inter. Item, that he being in Holy Orders, married another Woman as his second Wife, named Anne, and so was twice married.

Answer. To this he granted.

4. Interrog. Item, in the time of King Henry the eighth, he kept the said wife secretly, and had Children by her.

Answer. Hereunto he also granted; affirming that it was better for him to have his own, than to do like other Priests, holding and keeping other Mens Wives.

5. Inter. Item, in the time of King Edward, he brought out the said Wife openly, affirming and professing publicly the same to be his Wife.

Answer. He denied not but he so did, and lawfully might do the same; forasmuch as the Laws of the Realm did to permit him.

6. Interrog. Item, that he flamed not openly to glory himself to have had his Wife in secret many years.

Answer. And though he so did (he said) there was no cause why he should be ashamed thereof.

7. Inter. Item, that the said Thomas Cranmer falling afterward into the deep bottom of errors, did flie and refuse the Authority of the Church, did hold and follow the heresie concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, and also did compile and caused to be set abroad divers Books.

Answer. Whereunto when the names of the Books were recited to him, he denied not such Books which he was the Author of. As touching the treatise of Peter Martyr upon the Sacrament, he denied that he ever saw it before it was abroad, yet did approve and well like of the same.

As for the Catechism, the Book of Articles, with the other Book against Winchester, he granted the same to be his doings.

8. Inter. Item, that he compelled many against their wills to subscribe to the same Articles.

Answer. He exhorted (he said) such as were willing to subscribe; but against their wills he compelled none.

9. Inter. Item, forasmuch as he surceased not to perpetrate enorm and inordinate crimes, he was therefore cast into the Tower, and from thence was brought to Oxford, at what time it was commonly thought that the Parliament there should be holden.

Answer. To this he said, that he knew no such enorm and inordinate crimes that ever he committed.

10. Inter. Item, that in the said City of Oxford he did openly maintain his heresie, and there was convict upon the same.

Answer. He defended (he said) there the cause of the Sacrament, but that he was convicted in the same, that he denied.

11. Inter. Item, when he persevered still in the same, he was by the publick censure of the University pronounced an Heretick, and his Books to be Heretical.

Answer. That he was so denounced, he denied not; but that he was an Heretick, or his Books Heretical, that he denied.

12. Inter. Item, that he was and is notoriously infamed with the note of Schism, as who not only himself receded from the Catholick Church and See of Rome, but also moved the King and Subjects of this Realm to the same.

Answer. As touching the receding, that he well granted; but that receding or departing (said he) was only from the See of Rome, and had in it no matter of any Schism.

13. Inter. Item, that he had been twice sworn to the Pope; and withal Doctor Martin brought out the instrument of the publick Notary, wherein was contained his protestation made when he should be consecrated, asking if he had any thing else protested.

Answer. Whereunto he answered, that he did nothing but by the Laws of the Realm.

14. Inter. Item, that he the said Archbishop of Canterbury did not only offend in the premises, but also in taking upon him the Authority of the See of Rome, in that without leave or licence from the said See, he consecrated Bishops and Priests.

Answer. He granted, that he did execute such things as were wont to be referred to the Pope, at what time it was permitted to him by the Publick Laws and determination of the Realm.

15. Inter. Item, that when the whole Realm had subscribed to the Authority of the Pope, he only still persisted in his error.

Answer. That he did not admit the Popes Authority, he confessed to be true. But that he erred in the same, that he denied.

16. Inter. Item, that all and singular the premises be true.

Answer. That likewise he granted, excepting those things whereunto he had now answered.

After he had thus answered to the objections aforesaid, and the publick Notary had entred the same, the Judges and Commissioners, as having now accomplished that wherefore they came, were about to rise up and depart. But the Bishop of Gloucester thinking it not the best so to dismiss the people, being somewhat fluried with the words words of the Archbishop, began in this Oration in the hearing of the People, thus to declaim.

The Archbishop charged with his doctrine and Books.

The Oration of Bishp Brooks, in closing up his Examination against Dr. Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury.

Another
Cranmer not to be reasoned
withal.

After Cranmer (I cannot otherwise term you, considering your obstinacy) I am right sorry, I am right heartily sorry to hear such words escape your mouth so unadvisedly. I had conceived a right good hope of your amendment. I suppose that this obstinacy of yours came not of a vain-glory, but rather of a corrupt Conscience, which was the occasion that I hoped so well of your return. But now I perceive by your foolish babble, that it is far otherwise. Ye are so puffed up with vain-glory, there is such a cauteria of Heresie crept into your Conscience, that I am clean void of hope, and my hope is turned into Perdition. Who can save that will be lost? God would have you to be saved; and you refuse it. Perdition tua super te Israel; tantummodo in me salvatio tua, ait Dominus per Prophetam: i. Thy Perdition is only upon thy self O Israel; only in me is thy salvation, saith the Lord by his Prophet. You have uttered so erroneous talk, with such open malice against the Popes Holiness, with such open lying against the Church of Rome, with such open Blasphemy against the Sacrament of the Altar, that no mouth could have expressed more maliciously, more lyingly, more blasphemously.

Mr. Cranmer

To reason with you, although I would of my self to satisfy this Audience, yet may I not by our Commission, neither can I find how I may do it with the Scriptures: For the Apostle doth command that such a one should not only not be talked withal, but also shunned and avoided, saying, Hereticum hominem post unum aut alterum conventum, devota, sciens quid huiusmodi perverfus est & delinquet, quum sit propriis iudicio condemnatus; i. An heretical person after once or twice conferring, shun, knowing that he is perverse and sinfull, being of his own judgment condemned. Ye have been conferred withal not once or twice, but oftentimes, ye have often been lovingly admonished, ye have been oft secretly disputed with. And the last year in the open School, in open Disputations, ye have been openly convicted, ye have been openly driven out of the School with hisses: your Book which ye brag you made seven years ago, and no man answered it, Marcus Antonius hath sufficiently detected and confuted, and yet ye persist still in your wicked herefie.

Wherefore being so oft admonished, conferred withal, and convicted, if ye deny you to be the man whom the Apostle noth, hear then what Origen saith, who wrote above 1300 years ago, and interpreteth the saying of the Apostle in this wise, in Apologia Pamphili. Hereticus est, omnis ille habendus, qui Christo se credere proficitur, & aliter de Christi veritate sentit quam se habet Ecclesiastica traditio. Even now ye professed a kind of Christianity and Holiness unto us, for at your beginning you fell down upon your knees, and said the Lords Prayer (God wot like an Hypocrite) and then standing upon your feet, you rehearsed the Articles of your Faith, but to what end I pray you-else, but to cloak that inward Heresie rooted in you, that you might blind the poor, simple, and unlearned peoples eyes? For what will they say or think, if they do not thus say? Good Lord, what mean these men to say that he is an Heretick, they are deceived, this is a good Christian, he believeth as we believe.

But is this sufficient to escape the name of an Heretick? To the simple and unlearned it is sufficient, but for you that have professed a greater knowledge and higher doctrine, it is not enough to rectify your belief. For unless (as Origen saith) ye believe all things that the Church hath decreed besides, you are no Christian man. In the which because you do halt, and will come to no conformity; from henceforth ye are to be taken for an Heretick, with whom we ought neither to dispute, neither to reason, whom we ought rather to censure and avoid.

Nevertheless, although I do not intend to reason with you, but to give you up as an Abject and Out-cast from Gods favour, yet because ye have uttered, to the annoying of the People, such pestilent Heresies as may do harm among some rude and unlearned, I think meet, and not ab-re, somewhat to say herein; not because I hope to have any good at your hands, which I would willingly wish, but that I may establish the simple People which be here present, lest they being seduced by your Diabolical Doctrine, may perish thereby.

And first (as it behooveth every man to purge himself first before he enter with any other) where you accuse me of an Oath made against the Bishop of Rome, I confess it, and deny it not, and therefore do say with the rest of this Realm, good and catholic men, the saying of the Prophet; Peccavimus cum patribus nostris in iustis operibus, iniquitatem fecimus; i. We have sinned with our Fathers, we have done unjustly and wickedly. Delicta iuventutis meae, & ignorantias meas ne memineris Domine; i. The sins of my youth, and my ignorances, O Lord, do not remember. I was then a young man, and as young a Scholar here in the University.

I knew not then what an Oath did mean, and yet to say the truth, I did it compelled, compelled I say by you Mr. Cranmer, and here were you the Author and Cause of my Perjury, you are to be blamed herein, and not I. Now where you say I made two Oaths, the one contrary to the other, it is not so, for the Oath I made to the Popes Holiness appertaineth only to Spiritual things: The other Oath that I made to the King, pertaineth only to Temporal things; that is to say, that I do acknowledge all my Temporal Livings to proceed only from the King, and from none else. But all men may see, as you agree in this, so ye agree in the rest of your Opinion.

Now Sir, as concerning the Supremacy which is only Supremacy due to the See of Rome, a word or two. Although there be a number of places which do confirm that Christ appointed Peter Head of the Church, yet this is a most evident place. When Christ demanded of his Apostles whom men called him; they answered, Some Elias, some a Prophet, &c. But Christ replied unto Peter, and said, Whom sayest thou Peter that I am? Peter answered, Tu es Christus, Filius Dei: and Christ replied, Tu es Petrus, & super hanc Petram edificabo Ecclesiam meam. The Doctors interpreting this place, Super hanc Petram, expounded it, id est, non solum super fidem Petri, sed super te Petre. And why did Christ change his name from Simon to Peter, which in Latin is a Stone, but only to declare that he was only the Foundation and Head of the Church?

Again, where Christ demanded of Peter, being amongst the rest of his Apostles, three times a-row, Petrus, amas me? he gave him charge over his Sheep, Pasce oves meas, pasce agnos meas. Which place Christus interpreting, saith, Pasce, hoc est, loco mei esto praepositus & caput Praeterea tuorum. To conclude, when they came that required Drachmas of Christ, he commanded Peter to cast his Net into the Sea, and to take out of the Fishes mouth that he took, frateram, hoc est, duplex Drachma, & da, inquit, pro te & me Petre. Which words do signify, that when he had paid for them two he had paid for all the rest. For as in the old Law there were appointed two Heads over the People of Israel, Moses and Aaron; Moses as Chief, and Aaron next Head under him; so in the new Law there were two Heads of the Church, which were Christ and Peter. Christ is Head of all, and Peter next under him. S. Augustin in 75. quest. Veteris & Novi Testamenti, Salvator Aug. quest. (inquit) quum pre se & Petro daret subebat Drachmam, pro totius omnibus ipsum dari censuit, ipsum enim constituit caput eorum; i. Our Saviour Christ (saith S. Augustin) commanding the Tribute to be given for him and for Peter, meant thereby the same to be given for all other, for he appointed him to be Head of them. What can be more plain then this? But I will not tarry upon this matter.

Now as touching the Popes Laws, where you say they be contrary, because the Service which should be (as you say) in English, is in Latin; I answer, Whosoever will take the pains to peruse the Chapter, which is in 1 Cor. 14. shall find, that his meaning is concerning preaching, and obiter only of praying.

Again, where you say, that the Popes Holiness doth take away one part of the Sacrament from the Lay-men, and Christ would have it under both, ye can say no more but this, Bibite ex eo omnes; i. Drink ye all of this. And what followeth, Et biberunt ex eo omnes; i. And all drank thereof. Now if a man would be so proterve with you, he might say that Christ gave it only to his Apostles, in

And admit that Christ commanded it to be received under both kinds, yet the Church hath authority to change that, as well as other. Ye read, that Christ calling his Apostles together, said unto them, Ecce prae-dicatio Evangelium omni Nationi, baptizantes in nomine Patris, & Filii, & Spiritus Sancti, i. Go and preach the Gospel to every Nation, baptizing them in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. But the Apostles, being desirous to publish Christ's Name every where, did baptize only in Christ's name. Again, Christ before his last Supper washed his Apostles feet, saying, Si ego laui pedes vestros Dominus & Magister, & vos debetis alter alterius lavare pedes, i. If I have washed your feet, being your Lord and Master, also you ought to wash the feet one of another. Exemplum dedi vobis, i. I have given you example. This was a Precept, yet hath the Church altered it, left the simple people should not think a rebaptization in it. So because, saith the Apostle, Accepi a Domino quod & tradidi vobis. Dominus noster qua nocte tradidit, &c. i. I have received of the Lord the same which I have delivered to you, that our Lord the same night in which he was betrayed, &c. Notwithstanding that this was a precept that the Sacrament should be ministered after Supper, the Church hath altered it, and commanded it to be received fasting. And where Christ did break the Bread, we receive the whole Host. Christ ministered sitting at the Table, we standing at the Altar.

It was also commanded in Act. 25. that Christian men should abstain a jussuato & sanguine, i. From fringed and blood. But the Church perceiving it to be a precept but for a time, hath altered it. Christ commanded to keep holy, diem Sabbati, The Sabbath-day, and the Church hath altered it to Sunday. If then the Church may change things that be so expressed in the Scriptures, the may also change the form of receiving of Lay-men under both kinds, for divers occasions.

First, that in carrying it to the sick, the blood may not be shed, lost, or misused.

And next, that no occasion might be given to Heretics to think that there is not so much under one kind, as under both.

But why would you have it under both kinds, I pray you else, but only to pervert and contrary the commandment of the Church? For when you had it under both kinds, you believed in neither. And we having but one, believe both kinds. Now Sir, as concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, where you say, you have a number of Doctors of your side, and we none of our side, that is to say, to confirm the real presence of Christ in the Sacrament of the Altar, indeed one to stop your mouth, I think it not possible to find. Nevertheless, where your request is to have one shewed unto you, and then you will recant, I will shew you two.

St. Austin, super Psal. 33. Ferebatur manibus suis, I find not how this is true in David (saith he) literally, that he was born in his own hands; but in Christ I find it literally, when he gave his Body to his Apostles at his last Supper.

Again, St. Cyprian, de Cena Domini, saith, Panis quem Dominus noster Discipulis suis porrigebat, non effugie, sed natura mutatus, omnipotentia verbi factus est caro. What can be more plain than this? yet to your exposition it is not plain enough. But give me your figurative, significant, and other such like terms, and I will defend that Christ hath not yet ascended; no nor yet that he was incarnate, &c. Wherefore I can do no other but put you in the number of them, whom Chrysostom spake of in this wise, saying, Audi, homo fidelis, qui contra hereticum contendis, si Pharisei convites, & non placati & baretici, &c. Hear, O thou Christian man, wilt thou do more than Christ could do? Christ confuted the Pharisees, yet could he not put them to silence; Et fortius est in Christo? And art thou stronger than Christ? Wilt thou go about to bring them to silence that will receive no answer as who should say, thou canst not. Thus much I have said, not for you Mr. Cranmer, for my hope that I conceived of you is now gone and past; but somewhat to satisfy the rude and unlearned People, that they perceiving your arrogant lying and lying arrogancy, may the better chew your detestable and abominable Schism.

And thus ended the Prelate his worshipful Tale. After whom D. Story took the matter, and thus inferred in words, as followeth.

Mr. Cranmer, you have made a goodly proceff concerning your heretical Oath made to the King; but you forget your Oath made to the See Apostolicke. As concerning your Oath made to the King, if you made it to him only, it took an end by his death, and so it is released; if you made it to his Successors, well Sir, the true Successors have the Empire, and they will you to dissolve the same, and become a Member of Christ's Church again, and it standeth well with charity.

To this the Archbishop answered again, saith the Reporter: but what his answer was, that he suppresseth and returneth to the words of Dr. Story, who imperiously turning his speech again to the Archbishop, said as followeth.

Hold your peace Sir, and so shall it right well become you, considering that I gave you licence before to say your phantasie. Your Oath was no Oath: for it lacked the three points of an Oath, that is to say, Judicium, Justitiam, & Veritatem.

These, with the like words to the same effect, being uttered by Dr. Story, seeking to break up and make an end of that Session, he effoons called for witnesses to be produced, who should be sworn upon the Book, to utter and declare the next day whatsoever they knew, or could remember to be inferred against Dr. Cranmer's Heresie. The names of the Witnesses are these:

Dr. Marshall, Commissary, and Dean of Christ's Church.
Dr. Smith, under Commissary.
Doctor Tresham.

Dr. Crooke.
M. London.
M. Curpe.
M. Warde.
M. Serles.

Witnesses sworn against the Archbishop.

After the depositions of which Witnesses being taken, Dr. Story admonished the Archbishop, permitting him to make his exceptions, if he thought any of the said Witnesses were to be refused. Who then would admit none of them all, being men perjured, and not in Christian Religion. For if to swear, said he, against the Pope were unlawful, they should rather have given their lives, than their Oath. But if it were lawful, then they are perjured, to defend him whom they forswore before. Nevertheless, this answer of the Archbishop being lightly regarded, as little to the purpose appertaining, he was commanded again to the place from whence he came. Who at his departing out, like as at his first coming in, shewed low obedience to Dr. Martin, and to Dr. Story, the Queens Commissioners. Then Dr. Story pointing him to the Bishop of Gloucester, said, that he ought rather to give reverence unto him. So the reverend Archbishop departing without any obedience exhibited to the Bishop, all the other rose up, and departed every one to his own.

And thus brake up the Session for that day, about two of the Clock at Afternoon.

And thus much hitherto concerning the summary effect of this Agion or Session, with the Orations, Discourses and Articles commenced against the Archbishop of Canterbury, also with the reasons and answers of the said Archbishop to their Objections and Interrogatories. Touching which his Answers, so far as they are recited by report of a Papist, (as is aforesaid) seem to be not indifferently handled, it shall therefore not greatly be out of our matter, as ye have heard the Orations of Bishop Brooks, with the reasons and talk of the other Commissioners, amplified and set forth at large on the one side, so now in repeating the words and answers of the other parts, to declare and set forth somewhat more amply and effectually, what speech the said Archbishop used for himself in the same action, by the faithful relation and testimony of certain other, who were likewise there present, and do thus report the effect of the Archbishop's words, answering to the first Oration of Bishop Brooks in manner as followeth.

Oration.

My Lord, you have very learnedly and eloquently in your Oration put me in remembrance of many things touching my self, wherein I do not mean to spend the time in answering of them. I acknowledge Gods goodness to me in all his gifts, and thank him as heartily for this state wherein I find my self now, as ever I did for the time of my prosperity; and it is not the loss of my promotions that grieveth me. The greatest grief I have at this time is, and one of the greatest that ever I had in all my life, to see the King and Queens Majesties by their Proctors here to become my accusers; and that in their own Realm and Countrey, before a foreign power. If I have transgressed the Laws of the Land, their Majesties have sufficient Authority and power both from God, and by the ordinance of the Realm, to punish me, whereunto I both have, and at all times shall be content to submit my self.

Alas! What hath the Pope to do in England? whose jurisdiction is so far different from the jurisdiction of this Realm, that it is impossible to be true to the one, and true to the other. The Laws also are so divers, that whosoever swearth to both, must needs incur perjury to the one. Which as oft as I remember, even for the love that I bear to her Grace, I cannot but be heartily sorry to think upon it, how that her Highness the day of her Coronation, at which time she took a Solemn Oath to observe all the Laws and Liberties of this Realm of England, at the same time also took an Oath to the Bishop of Rome, and promised to maintain that See. The State of England being so repugnant to the Supremacy of the Pope, it was impossible but the must needs be forsworn in the one. Wherein if her grace had been faithfully advertised by her Council, then surely the would never have done it.

The Laws of this Realm are, that the King of England is the suprem and sole Governor of all his Countreys and Dominions: and that he holdeth his Crown and Scepter of himself, by the ancient laws, customs, and descents of the Kings of the Realm, and of none other. The Pope faith, that all Emperors and Kings hold their Crowns and Regalities of him, and that he may depose them when he list; which is high Treason for any man to affirm and think, being born within the Kings Dominions.

The Laws of England are, that all Bishops and Priests offending in cases of felony or treason, are to be judged and tried by the laws and customs of the Realm. The Popes Laws are, that the secular power cannot judge the spiritual power, and that they are not under their jurisdiction; which robbeth the King of the one part of his People.

The laws also of England are, that whosoever hindereth the execution or proceeding of the Laws of England for any other forain Laws Ecclesiastical or Temporal, incurreth the danger of a Præmunire. The Popes Laws are, that whosoever hindereth the proceedings or executions of his laws, for any others laws, of any other King or Countrey, both the Prince himself, his Council, all his Officers, Scribes, Clerks, and whosoever give consent or aid to the making or executing of any such laws, stand accursed. A heavy curse (if his curse were any thing worth) that the King and Queen cannot use their own laws, but they and all theirs must stand accursed. These things and many more examples he alleged, which (he said) stirred him that he could not give his consent to the receiving of such an enemy into the Realm, so subverting the dignity and ancient liberties of the same.

And as for the matter of Heresy and Schism, wherein he was charged, he protested and called God to witness, that he knew none that he maintained. But if that were an Heresy to deny the Popes Authority, and the Religion which the See of Rome hath published to the World these later Years, then all the Ancient Fathers of the Primitive Church, the Apostles and Christ himself taught Heresy; and he desired all then present to bear him witness, that he took the Traditions and Religion of that Usurping Prelate to be most erroneous, false, and against the Doctrine of the whole Scripture; which he had oftentimes well proved by writing, and the Author of the same to be very Antichrist, so often preached of by the Apostles and Prophets, in whom did most evidently concur all signs and tokens whereby he was painted out to the World to be known.

For it was most evident that he had advanced himself above all Emperors and Kings of the World, whom he affirmeth to hold their Estates and Empires of him, as of their chief, and to be at his commandment to depose and erect at his good will and pleasure, and that stories make mention of his intolerable and insolent pride, and tyranny, used over them in such sort, as no King would have used to his Christian subjects, nor yet a good master to his servants, setting his feet on the Emperors neck, affirming that to be verified in him, which was spoken only of our Saviour Jesus Christ, in these words, Super Aspidem & Basiliscum ambulabis, & conculcabis Leones & Draconem. Other some had he made to hold his stirrup, others he had displaced and removed from their Empires and seats royal: and not content herewithal, more insolent then Lucifer, he hath occupied not only the highest place in this World, above Kings and Princes, but hath further perjured to fit in the seat of Almighty God, which only he referred to himself, which is the Confidence of man; and to keep the possession thereof, he hath promised forgiveness of sins gratis quites.

He hath brought in gods of his own framing, and invented a new Religion, full of gain and lucre, quite contrary to the Doctrine of the Holy Scripture, only for the maintaining of his Kingdom, displacing Christ from his glory, and holding his People in a miserable servitude of blindness to the loss of a great number of Souls, which God at the latter day shall exact at his hand; boasting many times in his Canons and Decrees, that he can dispense Contra Petrum, contra Paulum, contra veteris & novum Testamentum and that he Plenitudine potestatis, tantum potest quantum Deus: That is, Against Peter, against Paul, against the old and new Testament: and of the fulness of power may do as much as God. O Lord, who ever heard such Blasphemy? If there be any man that can advance himself above him, let him be judged Antichrist.

This enemy of God and of our redemption, is so evidently painted out in the Scriptures by such manifest signs and tokens, which all so clearly appear in him, that except a man will shut up his eyes and heart against the light, he cannot but know him: and therefore for my part I will never give my consent to the receiving of him into this Church of England. And you my Lord, and the rest that sit here in Commission, consider well and examine your own Consciences; you have sworn against him, you are learned, and can judge of the truth. I pray God you be not wilfully blind. As for me, I have herein discharged mine own Conscience toward the World, and I will write also my mind to her Grace, touching this matter. The copy of which letter sent to the Queen, ye shall find after in the end of his story.

While he in this sort made his answer, ye hear before how Dr. Story and Martin divers times interrupted him with Blasphemous talk, and would fain have had the Bp. of Gloucester to put him to silence: who notwithstanding did not, but suffered him to end his tale at full. After this he heard also how they proceeded to examine him of divers Articles, whereof the chief was, That at the time of his creating Archbishop of Canterbury, he was sworn to the Pope, and had his institution and induction from him, and promised to maintain then the Authority of that See, and therefore was perjured: wherefore he should rather flee to his first Oath and return to his old fold again, then to continue obstinately in an Oath forced in the time of Schism.

To that he answered, saving his protestation (which term he used before all his answers) that at such time Archbishop Warham died, he was Ambassador in Germany for the King, who sent for him thereupon home, and leaving intelligence by some of his friends (who were near about the King) how he meant to bestow the same Bishoprick upon him, and therefore counsell'd him in that case to make hast home, he feeling in himself a great inability to such a promotion, and very sorry to leave his study, and especially considering by what means he Anno 1556. he must have it, which was clean against his Conscience, which he could not utter without great peril and danger, devised an excuse to the King of matter of great importance, for the which his longer abode there should be most necessary, thinking by that means in his absence, that the King would have bestowed it upon some other, and so remained there by that device, one half year after the King had written for him to come home. But after that no such matter fell out, as he seemed to make suspicion of, the King sent for him again. Who after his return, understanding still the Archbishoprick to be reserved for him, made means by divers of his best friends to shift it off, desiring rather some smaller Living, that he might more quietly follow his Book.

To be brief, when the King himself spake with him, declaring that his full intention, for his service sake, and for the good opinion he conceived of him, was to bestow that dignity upon him, after long disabling of himself, perceiving he could by no persuasions alter the Kings determination, he brake frankly his Conscience with him, most humbly craving first his Graces pardon, for that he should declare unto his Highness. Which obtained, he declared, that if he accepted the Office, then he must receive it at the Popes hand, which he neither would nor could do, for that his Highness was only the Supreme Governour of this Church of England, as well in causes Ecclesiastical as Temporal, and that the full right and donation of all manner of Bishopricks and Benefices, as well as of any other Temporal dignities and promotions, appertained to his Grace, and not to any other foreign Authority, whatsoever it was, and therefore if he might in that vocation serve God, him, and his Countrey, seeing it was his pleasure so to have it, he would accept it, and receive it of his Majesty, and of none other stranger, who had no Authority within this Realm, neither in any such gift, nor in any other thing. Whereat the King, said he, staying a while and musing, asked me how I was able to prove it. At which time I alleged many Texts out of the Scriptures, and the Fathers also, approving the Supreme and highest Authority of Kings in their Realms and Dominions, disclosing therewithal the intolerable usurpation of the Pope of Rome.

Afterwards it pleased his Highness (quoth the Archbishop) many and sundry times to talk with me of it, and perceiving that I could not be brought to acknowledge the Authority of the Bishop of Rome, the King himself called Doctor Oliver, who had no civil Lawyers, and devised with him how he might bestow it upon me, enforcing me nothing against my Conscience. Who thereupon informed him, that I might do it by the way of protestation, and so one to be sent to Rome, who might take the Oath, and do every thing in my name. Which when I understood, I said, he should do it Super avimam suam: and I indeed Bona fide made my protestation, that I did not acknowledge his Authority any further, than as it agreed with the express Word of God, and that it might be lawful for me at all times to speak against him, and so to impugn his Errors, when time and occasion should serve me. And this my protestation did I cause to be enrolled, and there I think it remaineth.

They objected to him also that he was married, which he confessed. Whereupon Dr. Martin said, that his Children were Bondmen to the See of Canterbury. At which saying the Archbishop smiled, and asked him if a Priest at his Benefice kept a Concubine, and had by her Bastards, whether they were Bondmen to the Benefice or no, saying, I trust you will make my Childrens causes no worse.

After this Dr. Martin demanded of him, who was Supreme Head of the Church of England? Marry, quoth my Lord of Canterbury, Christ is Head of this Member, as he is of the whole Body of the Universal Church. Why, quoth Dr. Martin, you made King Henry the 8th. Supreme Head of the Church. Yea, said the Archbishop, of all the People of England, as well Ecclesiastical as Temporal. And not of the Church, said Martin? No, said he, for Christ is only the Head of his Church, and of the Faith and Religion of the same. The King is Head and Governour of his People, which are the visible Church. What (quoth Martin) you never durst tell the King so. Yes, that I durst, quoth he, and did in the publication of his file, wherein he was named Supreme Head of the Church, there was never other thing meant. A number of other fond and foolish Objections were made, with repetition whereof I thought not to trouble the Reader.

Thus after they had received his Answers to all their Objections, they cited him (as is aforesaid) to appear at Rome within fourscore days, to make there his personal Answers: which he said, if the King and Queen would send him, he would be content to do, and so thence was carried to Prison again, where he continually remained, notwithstanding that he was commanded to appear at Rome.

Wherein all men that have eyes to see, may easily perceive the crafty practice of these Prelates, and the vizarded face of their Justice, as though the Court of Rome would condemn no man before he answered for himself, as all Law and equity required. But the very same instant time, the holiness of that unholy Father, contrary to all reason and justice, sent his Letter executory unto the King and Queen to degrade and deprive him of his dignity: which thing he did not only before the 80. days were ended, but before there were 20. days spent. Furthermore, whereas the said Archbishop was first detained in strait Prison, so that he could not appear (as was notorious both in England and also in the Romish Court) and therefore had a lawful and most just excuse of his absence by all Laws, both Popish and other: yet in the end of the said fourscore days, was that worthy Martyr decreed Contumax, that is, furdly, frowardly, and wilfully absent, and in pain of the same his absence condemned and put to death.

As touching the said Executory Letters of the Pope sent to the King and Queen, beginning thus, Paulus Episcopus servus servorum Dei, charissimo in Christo filio Philippo Regi, & charissima in Christo filia Marie Regina, &c. Because the full tenour thereof is expressed in our first impression of Acts, it shall not therefore be needful to cumber this Volume in repeating the same again.

Dr. Thurlly, and Dr. Boner, coming with a new Commission to sit upon the Archbishop the 14. day of February.

This Letter or Sentence definitive of the Pope, was dated about the first day of January, and was delivered here in England about the midst of February. Upon the receipt of which Letters another Session was appointed for the Archbishop to appear the 14. day of February, before certain Commissioners directed down by the Queen, the chief whereof was the Bishop of Ely, Dr. Thurlly. Concerning the which Dr. Thurlly by the way here is to be noted, that albeit he was not the said Archbishop household Chaplain, yet he was so familiarly acquainted with him, so dearly beloved, so inwardly accepted and advanced of him (not like a Chaplain, but rather like a natural Brother) that there was never any thing in the Archbishops house so dear, were it Plate, Jewell, Horfe, Maps, Books, or any thing else, but if Thurlly did never so little commend it (a subtle kind of begging) the Archbishop by and by either gave it to him, or else lent it after him to his house. So greatly was the Archbishop enamored with him, that whosoever would obtain any thing of him, most commonly would make their way before by Dr. Thurlly. Which by matter of the said Dr. Thurlly, I thought here to rectify: not so much to upbraid the man with the vice of unthankfulness, as chiefly and only for this, to admonish him of old benefits received, whereby he may the better remember his old Benefactor, and so to favour the cause and quarrel of him whom he was so singularly bounden unto.

With the said Dr. Thurlly Bishop of Ely, was also assigned in the same Commission Dr. Boner Bishop of London, which two coming to Oxford upon St. Valentines day, as the Popes Delegates, with a new Commission from Rome, by the virtue thereof commanded the Archbishop aforesaid to come before them, in the Quire of Christs Church, before the high Altar, where they sitting (according to their manner) in their Pontifical bus, first began as the fashion is, to read their Commission: wherein was contained, how that in the Court of Rome Objections, they cited him (as is aforesaid) to appear at Rome within fourscore days, to make there his personal Answers: which he said, if the King and Queen would send him, he would be content to do, and so thence was carried to Prison again, where he continually remained, notwithstanding that he was commanded to appear at Rome.

all things being indifferently examined, both the Articles laid to his charge, with the answers made unto them, and Witnesses examined on both parts, and Council heard as well on the King and Queens behalf, his Accusers, as on the behalf of Thomas Crammer, the party guilty, so that he wanted nothing appertaining to his necessary defence, &c. Which foresaid Commission, as it was in reading: Oh Lord, said the Archbishop, what Lies be these, that I being continually in Prison, and never could be suffered to have counsel or advocate at home, should produce witnesses and appoint my counsel at Rome? God must needs punish this open and shameless lying. They read on the Commission which came from the Pope, Plenitudine potestatis, supplying all manner of defects in Law or Process, committed in dealing with the Archbishop, and giving them full authority to proceed to deprivation and degradation of them, and so upon Excommunication to deliver him up to the secular Powers, Omni appellatione remissa.

The Pope's Commission pronounced upon Lies.

The order of the Archbishops degradation.

When the Commission was read thus, they proceeding thereupon to his degradation, first clothed and disguised him, putting on him a Surple, and then an Albe; after that the vestment of a Subdeacon, and every other furniture, as a Priest ready to Mass.

When they had apparelled him so far; What, said he, I think I shall say Mass: Yes, said Cosins one of Boner's Chaplains, my Lord, I trust to see you say Mass for all this. Do you fo, quoth he? that shall you never see, nor will I ever do it.

Then they invested him in all manner of robes of a Bishop and Archbishop, as he is at his Installing, saving that as every thing then is most rich and costly, so every thing in this of Canvas and old Clouts, with a Mitre and a Pall of the same fure done upon him in mockery, and then the Crozier-staff was put in his hand.

This done after the Popes Pontifical form and manner, Boner, who by the space of many years had born, as it seemed, no great good will towards him, and now rejoiced to see this day wherein he might triumph over him, and take his pleasure at full, began to stretch out his eloquence, making his Oration to the Assembly after this manner of fort.

F. Boner eloquently reproves the Archbishop Crammer.

This is the Man that hath ever despised the Popes Holiness, and now is to be judged by him. This is the Man that hath pulled down so many Churches, and now is come to be judged in a Church. This is the Man that contemned the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, and now is come to be condemned before that blessed Sacrament hanging over the Altar. This is the Man that like Lucifer fate in the place of Christ upon an Altar to judge other, and now is come before an Altar to be judged himself.

Boner then with an entreaty.

Wherunto the Archbishop interrupting him said, that in that he belied him, as he did in many other things: For that which he would now seem to charge him withal, was his own fault, if it was any, and none of his. For the thing you mean, was in Pauls-Church (said he) where I came to sit in Commission; and there was a Scaffold prepared for me and others, by you and your Officers, and whether there were any Altar under it or not, I could not perceive it, nor once suspected it, wherefore you do wittingly evil to charge me with it.

Unmannerly words of B. Boner to his Brother in time of adversity.

But Boner went on still in his Rhetorical repetition, lying and railing against the Archbishop, beginning every sentence with, This is the Man, this is the Man, till at length there was never a man but was weary of his unmannerly usage of him in that time and place: Inasmuch that the Bishop of Ely aforesaid divers times pulled him by the sleeve to make an end, and said to him afterward when they went to Dinner, that he had broken promise with him: for he had intreated him earnestly to use him with reverence.

After all this done and finished, they began then to bustle toward his degrading, and first to take from him his Crozier-staff out of his hands, which he held fast and refused to deliver, and withal, imitating the example of Martin Luther, pulled an Appeal out of his left Sleeve under the wrist, which he there and then delivered unto them, saying, I appeal to the next General Council; and herein I have comprehended my cause and form of it, which I desire may be admitted; and prayed divers of the standers by, by name to be witnesses, and especially Mr. Carr, to whom he spake twice, &c.

The Copy of which his appealation, because it was not printed before, I thought here to exhibit, ad rememoriam, as in form here followeth.

The tenor of the Appeal of the Archbishop of Canterbury from the Pope, to the next General Council.

IN the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

First, my plain Protestation made; that I intend to speak nothing against one holy Catholic and Apostolical Church, or the Authority thereof (the which Authority I have in great reverence, and to whom my mind is in all things to obey) and if any thing peradventure, either by slipperiness of Tongue, or by indignation of abuses, or else by the provocation of mine Adversaries be spoken or done otherwise than well, or not with such reverence as becometh me, I am most ready to amend it.

Challenge or appeal of the Archbishop from the Pope to a General Council.

Although the Bishop of Rome (whom they call Pope) beareth the room of Christ in Earth, and hath authority of God, yet by that power or authority he is not become unfailable, neither hath he received that power to destroy, but to edifie the Congregation. Therefore if he shall command any thing that is not right to be done, he ought to take it patiently and in good part, in case he be not therein obeyed. And he must not be obeyed, if he command any thing against the Precepts of God: no, rather he may lawfully be refuted, even as Paul withstood Peter. And if he being aided by help of Princes, deceived perchance by false suggestion, or with evil counsel, should be refuted, but the remedies of withstanding him be taken away, there is nevertheless one remedy of appealing (which no Prince can take away) uttered by the very Law of Nature: forasmuch as it is a certain defence, which is meet for every body by the Law of God, of Nature, and of Man.

The Pope not unfailable. The Pope hath no power to destruction, but to edification.

Remedy of appealing from the Law of God and Nature.

And whereas the Laws do permit a man to appeal, not only from the griefs and injuries done, but also from such as shall be done hereafter, or threatened to be done, inasmuch that the inferior cannot make Laws of not appealing to a superior Power; and since it is openly enough confessed, that a holy General Council, lawfully gathered together in the Holy Ghost, and representing the holy Catholic Church, is above the Pope, especially in matters concerning Faith; that he cannot make Decrees that men shall not appeal from him to a General Council: therefore I Thomas Crammer, Archbishop of Canterbury, or in time past Ruler of the Metropolitane Church of Canterbury, Doctor in Divinity, do say and publish before you the publick Notary, and witnesses here present, with mind and intent to challenge and appeal from the persons and griefs underneath written, and to proffer my self in place and time convenient and meet, to prove the Articles that follow. And I openly confess, that I would lawfully have published them before this day, if I might have had either liberty to come abroad my self, or licence of a Notary and Witnesses. But further than I am able to do, I know well is not required of the Laws.

The inferior cannot forbide to appeal to all the Superior.

A General Council is superior to the Pope.

1. First, I say and publish, that James by the mercy of God, Priest, called Cardinal of the Pis, and of the title of our Lady in the way of the Church of Rome, Judge and Commissary specially deputed of our most holy Lord the Pope (as he affirmed) caused me to be cited to Rome, there to appear fourscore days after the Citation served on me, to make answer to certain Articles touching the peril of my state and life: And whereas I was kept in Prison with most strait Ward, so that I could in no wise be suffered to go to Rome, nor to come out of Prison, (and in so grievous causes concerning state and life, no man is bound to send a Proctor,) and though I would never so fain send my Proctor, yet by reason of poverty I am not able (for all that ever I had, where-with I should bear my Proctors costs and charges, is quite taken from me) nevertheless the most reverend Cardinal aforesaid doth fore threaten me, that whether I shall appear or not, he will nevertheless yet proceed in judgment against me. Wherein I feel my self so grieved, that nothing can be imagined more mischievous or fair herefrom reason.

The cause why he doth appeal.

2 Secondly, the reverend Father James Brooks, by the mercy of God Bishop of Glocester, Judge and under-deputy (as he affirmeth) of the most reverend Cardinal; caused me to be cited at Oxford (where I was then kept in prison) to answer to certain Articles, concerning the danger of my state and life. And when I being unlearned and ignorant in the Laws, desired Council of the learned in the Law, that thing was most unrighteously denied me, contrary to the equity of all Laws both of God and Man. Wherein again I feel me most wrongfully grieved.

3 And when I refused the said Bishop of Glocester to be my Judge, for most just causes, which I then declared, he nevertheless went on still, and made process against me, contrary to the rule of the laws of appealing, which say; A Judge that is refused ought not to proceed in the cause, but to leave off. And when he had required of me answers to certain Articles, I refused to make him any answer: I said I would yet gladly make answer to the most renowned Kings and Queens deputies or attorneys then present, with this condition notwithstanding, that mine answer should be extrajudicial, and that was permitted me. And with this my protestation made and admitted, I made answer; but mine answer was sudden and unprovided for: and therefore I desired to have a copy of mine answers, that I might put to take away, change and amend them; and this was also permitted me. Nevertheless, contrary to his promise made unto me, no respect had to my protestation, nor licence given to amend mine answer, the said reverend Father Bishop of Glocester (as I hear) commanded mine answers to be inacted contrary to the equity of the Law. In which thing again I feel me much grieved.

4 Furthermore, I could not for many causes admit the Bishop of Rome usurped Authority in this Realm, nor consent to it: For my Solemn Oath letting me, which I made in the time of King Henry the eighth, of most famous memory, according to the Laws of England: Secondly, because I knew the Authority of the Bishop of Rome which he usurpeth, to be against the Crown, Customs, and Laws of this Realm of England, in so much, that neither the King can be Crowned in this Realm, without the most grievous crime of perjury, nor may Bishops enjoy their Bishopricks, nor judgments to be used according to the laws and customs of this Realm, except by the Bp. of Rome Authority, be accused both the King and Queen, the Judges, Writers, and Executors of the Laws and Customs, with all that consent to them. Finally, the whole Realm shall be accused.

5 Moreover, that hainous and usurped Authority of the Bishop of Rome, through reservations of the Bishopricks, Provisions, Annates, Dispensations, Pardons, Appellations, Bulls, and other cursed merchandise of Rome, was wont exceedingly to spoil and consume the riches and substance of this Realm, all which things should follow again by recognising and receiving of that usurped Authority unto the unmeasurable loss of this Realm.

6 Finally, it is most evident by that usurped Authority, not only the Crown of England to be under yoke, the Laws and Customs of this Realm to be thrown down and troden under foot, but also the most Holy Decrees of Councils, together with the precepts both of the Gospel and of God.

When in times past the Sun of righteousness being risen in the World, Christian Religion by the preaching of the Apostles began to be spread very far abroad and to flourish, in so much that their found went out into all the World; innumerable People, which walked in darkness, saw a great light, Gods glory every where published did flourish, the only care and care of the Ministers of the Church was purely and sincerely to preach Christ the People to imbrace and follow Christ's Doctrine. Then the Church of Rome, as it were Lady of the World, both was, and also was counted worthily the mother of other Churches, for as much as then the first began to Christ, nourished with the food of pure Doctrine, did help them with their riches, succoured the oppressed, and was a sanctuary for the miserable, the rejoiced with them that rejoiced, and wept with them that wept. Then by the examples of the Bishops of Rome, riches were desired, worldly glory and pomp was troden under foot, pleasures and riot nothing regarded. Then this frail and uncertain life, being full all miseries, was laughed to scorn, whiles through the example of Romish Martyrs, men did every where press forward to the life to come. But afterward when the ungraciousness of damnable ambition, never satisfied avarice, and the horrible enormity of vices had corrupted and taken the See of Rome; there followed every where almost the deformities of all Churches, growing out of kind into the manners of the Church their Mother; leaving their former innocence and purity; and slipping into foul and hainous ulcers.

For the aforesaid and many other griefs and abuses (which I intend to prove, and do proffer my self in time convenient to prove hereafter) since reformation of the above mentioned abuses is not to be looked for of the Bishop of Rome, neither can I hope by reason of his wicked abuses and Usurped Authority, to have him an equal judge in his own cause: therefore I do challenge and appeal in these writings from the Pope, having no good Council, and from the above named pretences, commissions, and judges, from their citations, process, and from all other things that have or shall follow thereupon, and from every one of them, and from all their sentences, censures, pains, and punishments of cursing, suspension, and interdicting, and from all others whatsoever their denunciations and declarations (as they pretend) of Schisms, of Heresies, Adultery, deprivation, degrading by them or by any of them, in any manner wise attempted, done and set forward to be attempted, to be done, and to be set forward hereafter (savouring always their honours and reverences) as unequal and unrighteous, most tyrannical and violent, and from every grief to come, which shall happen to me, as well for my self as for all and every one that cleaveth to me, or will hereafter be on my side, unto a free general Council, that shall hereafter lawfully be, and in a free place, to the which place I ora Proctor deputated by me, may freely and with safety come, and to him or them, to whom a man may by the Law, privilege, custom, or otherwise challenge and appeal.

And I desire the first, the second, and third time, instantly, more instantly, and most instantly, that I may have messengers, if there be any man that will and can give me them. And I make open promise of prosecuting this mine appellation, by the way of disannulling, abuse, inequality, and unrighteousness, or otherwise as I shall be better able: choice and liberty reserved to me, to put to, diminish, change, correct, and interpret my sayings, and to reform all things after a better fashion, saving always to me every other benefit of the law, and to them that either be, or will be on my part.

And touching my Doctrine of the Sacrament, and other my Doctrine, of what kind soever it be, I protest that it was never my mind to write, speak, or understand any thing contrary to the most Holy Word of God, or else against the Holy Catholick Church of Christ, but purely and simply to imitate and teach those things only, which I had learned of the sacred Scripture, and of the Holy Catholick Church of Christ from the beginning, and also according to the exposition of the most holy and learned Fathers and Martyrs of the Church.

And if any thing hath peradventure chanced otherwise then I thought; I may erre, but Heretick I cannot be, for as much as I am ready in all things to follow the judgment of the most sacred Word of God, and of the Holy Catholick Church, desiring none other thing, then meekly and gently to be taught, if any where (which God forbid) I have swerved from the truth.

And I protest and openly confess, that in all my Doctrine and preaching, both of the Sacrament, and of other my Doctrine whatsoever it be, not only I mean and judge those things, as the Catholick Church, and the most holy Fathers of old with one accord have meant and judged, but also I would gladly use the same words that they used, and not use any other words, but to fit my hand to all and singular their speeches, phrases, ways and forms new terms of speech, which they do use in their Treatises upon the Sacrament, and to keep still their interpretation. But in this thing I only am accused for an Heretick, because I allow not the Doctrine lately brought in of the Sacrament, and because I consent not to words not accustomed in Scripture, and unknown to the ancient Fathers, but newly invented and brought in by men, and belonging to the destruction of Souls, and overthrowing of the pure and old Religion. Yeven,&c.

This Appeal being put up to the Bishop of Ely, he said, My Lord, our Commission is to proceed against you, Omni appellatone remota, and therefore we cannot admit it.

Talk between the Archbishop and the Appeal.

Why (quoth he) then you do me the more wrong: for my case is not as every private mans case. The matter is between the Pope and me immediat, and none otherwife: and I think no man ought to be a Judge in his own cause.

Well, quoth Ely, if it may be admitted it shall, and so received it of him. And then began he to perswade earnestly with the Archbishop to consider his state, and to weigh it well, while there was time to do him good, promising to become a suter to the King and Queen for him; and so protested his great love and friendship that had been between them, heartily weeping, so that for a time he could not go on with his tale. After going forward, he earnestly affirmed, that if it had not been the King and Queens commandment, whom he could not deny, else no worldly commodity should have made him to have done it, concluding that to be one of the forwardest things that ever happened unto him. The Archbishop gently seeming to comfort him, said, he was very well content withal: and so proceeded they to his degradation: the perfect form whereof, with all the rites and ceremonies thereto appertaining, taken out of the Popes Pontifical, because it is already defcribed at full in our first Book of Monuments, I shall refer the Reader to the same.

Here then to be short, when they came to take off his Pall (which is a solemn vesture of an Archbishop) then said he, Which of you hath a Pall, to take of my Pall? Which imported as much as they being his Inferiours, could not degrade him. Whereunto one of them said, in that they were but Bishops, they were his Inferiours, and not competent Judges: but being the Popes Delegates, they might take his Pall, and so they did, and so proceeding took every thing in order from him, as it was put on. Then a Barber clipped his Hair round about, and the Bishop scraped the tops of his Fingers where he had been anointed, wherein Bishop Boner behaved himself, as roughly and unmannerly, as the other Bishop was to him soft and gentle. Whilst they were thus doing, All this (quoth the Archbishop) needed not: I had my self done with this gear long ago. Last of all they stripped him out of his Gown into his Jacket, and put upon him a poor Yeoman Beadles Gown, full bare and nearly worn, and as evil favouredly made, as one might lightly see, and a Townsmans Cap on his head, and so delivered him to the secular Power.

Lord Boner unfolded the Archb. It is happy this Bishop had so much manners yet to call him Gentleman.

After this pageant of Degradation, and all was finished, then spake Lord Boner, saying to him, Now are you no Lord any more: and so whenever he spake to the People of him (as he was continually barking against him) ever he used this term, This Gentleman here,&c.

And thus with great compassion and pity of every man in this evil favoured Gown was he carried to Prison. Whom there followed a Gentleman of Gloucestershire with the Archbishops own Gown, who standing by, and being thought to be toward one of the Bishops, had it delivered unto him; who by the way talking with him, said, the Bishop of Ely protested his friendship with tears. Yet (said he) he might have used a great deal more friendship towards me, and never have been the worse thought on for I have well deserved it and going into the Prison up with him, asked him if he would drink. Who answered him, saying, if he had a piece of salt Fish, that he had better wile to eat: for he had been that day somewhat troubled with this matter, and had eaten little, but now that it is past, my heart (said he) is well quieted. Whereupon the Gentleman said, he would give him Money with all his heart, for he was able to do it. But he being one toward the Law, and fearing Mr. Farmers case, durst therefore give him nothing, but gave Money to the Bayliffs that stood by, and said, that if they were good men, they would bestow it on him (for my Lord of Canterbury had not one penny in his Purse to help him) and so left him, my Lord bidding him earnestly farewel, commending himself to his Prayers and all his Friends. That night this Gentleman was flaid by Boner and Ely, for giving him this Money: and but for the help of Friends, he had been sent up to the Council. Such was the cruelty and iniquity of the time, that men could not do good without punishment.

1556. The Gentleman in danger for relieving the Archbishop.

In this mean time, while the Archbishop was thus remaining in durance (whom they had kept now in Prison almost the space of three years) the Doctors and Divines of Oxford busied themselves all that ever they could about Mr. Cranmer, to have him recant, assaying by all crafty practices and allurements they might devise how to bring their purpose to pass. And to the intent they might win him easily, they had him to the Deans house of Christs-Church in the said University, where he lacked no delicate fare, played at the Bowls, had his pleasure for walking, and all other things that might bring him from Christ. Over and besides all this, secretly and lightly they fuborned certain men, which when they could not expugn him by Arguments and Disputation, should by intreaty and fair promises, or any other means allure him to recantation; perceiving otherwise what a great wound they should receive, if the Archbishop had stood stedfast in his sentence: and again on the other side, how great profit they should get, if he as the principal Standard-bearer, should be overthrown. By reason whereof the wily Papists flocked about him, with threatening, flattering, intreating and promising, and all other means; specially Henry Sydnall, and Frier John a Spaniard, de Villa Garcina, to the end to drive him, to the uttermost of their possibility, from his former sentence to recantation.

First, they set forth how acceptable it would be both to the King and Queen, and especially how gainful to him, and for his Souls health the same should be. They added moreover, how the Council and the Noble men bare him good will. They put him in hope, that he should not only have his life, but also be restored to his ancient Dignity, saying, it was but a small matter, and so ease that they required him to do, only that he would subscribe to a few words with his own hand; which if he did, there should be nothing in the Realm that the Queen would not easily grant him, whether he would have riches or dignity, or else if he had rather live a private life in quiet rest, in whatsoever place he listed, without all publick Ministry, only that he would set his name in two words to a little leaf of paper; but if he refused, there was no hope of health and pardon: for the Queen was so purposed, that she would have Cranmer a Catholic, or else no Cranmer at all. Therefore he should chuse whether he thought it better to end his life shortly in the flames and fire-brands now ready to be kindled, than with much honour to prolong his life, until the course of nature did call him: for there was no middle way.

Moreover, they exhorted him that he would look to his wealth, his estimation and quietness, saying, that he was not so old, but that many years yet remained in this his so lusty Age; and if he would not do it in respect of the Queen, yet he should do it for respect of his life, and not suffer that other men should be more careful for his health, than he was himself: saying, that this was agreeable to his notable learning and virtues; which being adjoynd with his life would be profitable both to himself and to many other; but being extinct by death, should be fruitfull to no man: that he should take good heed that he went not too far; yet there was time enough to restore all things alive, and nothing wanted, if he wanted not to himself. Therefore they would him to lay hold upon the occasion of his health while it was offered, lest if he would now refuse it while it was offered, he might hereafter seek it when he could not have it.

Finally, If the desire of life did nothing move him, yet he should remember that to die is grievous in all Ages, and especially in these his years and flower of dignity it were more grievous: but to die in the fire and such torments, is most grievous of all. With these and like provocations these fair flatterers could not to solicit and and urge him, using all means they could to draw him to their side; whose force his Manly constancy did a great while resist. But at last when they made no end of calling and crying upon him, the Archbishop being overcome, whether through their importunity, or by his own imbecillity, or of what mind I cannot tell, at length gave his hand.

It might be supposed that it was done for the hope of life, and better days to come. But as we may since perceive by a Letter of his sent to a Lawyer, the most cause why he desired his time to be delayed, was that he would make an end of Marcus Antonius, which he had already begun: but howsoever it was, plain it was, to be against his Confidence. The form of which recantation made by the Friars and Doctors, whereto he subscribed, was this.

The Copy and words of Crammers Recantation.

The Copy of Crammers recantation sparsed abroad by the Papists.

I Thomas Crammer, late Archbishop of Canterbury, do renounce, abhor, and detest all manner of Heresies and Errors of Luther and Zwinglius, and all other teachings which be contrary to found and true Doctrine. And I believe most constantly in my heart, and with my mouth I testify oneholy and Catholick Church visible, without the which there is no salvation; and thereof I acknowledge the Bishop of Rome to be suprem Head in Earth, whom I acknowledge to be the highest Bishop and Pope, and Christs Vicar, unto whom all Christian People ought to be subject.

And as concerning the Sacraments, I believe and worship in the Sacrament of the Altar the very Body and Blood of Christs, being contained most truly under the forms of Bread and Wine; the Bread through the mighty power of God being turned into the Body of our Saviour Iesus Christ, and the Wine into his Blood. And in the other fix Sacraments also (like as in this) I believe and hold as the Universal Church holdeth, and the Church of Rome judgeth and determineth.

Furthermore, I believe that there is a place of Purgatory, where Souls departed be punished for a time, for whom the Church doth godly and wholsomly pray, like as it doth honour Saints and make prayers to them.

Finally, in all things I profess, that I do not otherwise believe, than the Catholick Church and Church of Rome holdeth and teacheth. I am sorry that ever I held or thought otherwise. And I beseech Almighty God, that of his mercy he will vouchsafe to forgive me, whatsoever I have offended against God or his Church, and also I desire and beseech all Christian People to pray for me.

And all such as have been deceived either by mine Example or Doctrine, I require them by the Blood of Iesus Christ, that they will return to the unity of the Church, that we may be all of one mind, without schism or division.

And to conclude, as I submit my self to the Catholick Church of Christ, and to the suprem Head thereof, so I submit my self unto the most excellent Majesties of Philip and Mary, King and Queen of this Realm of England, &c. and to all other their Laws and Ordinances, being ready always as a faithful Subject ever to obey them. And God is my witness, that I have not done this for favour or fear of any person, but willingly and of mine own mind, as well to the discharge of mine own Confidence, as to the instruction of other.

This recantation of the Archbishop was not so soon conceived, but the Doctors and Prelates without delay caused the same to be imprinted, and set abroad in all mens hands. Whereunto for better credit, first was added the name of Thomas Crammer, with a solemn subscription, then followed the witnesses of this recantation, Henry Sydal, and Frier John de villa Garcia. All this while Crammer was in certain assurance of his life, although the same was faithfully promised to him by the Doctors; but after that they had their purpose, the rest they committed to all adventure, as became men of that Religion to do. The Queen, having now gotten a time to revenge her old grief, received his recantation very gladly: but of her purpose to put him to death she would nothing relent.

Now was Crammers cause in a miserable taking, who neither inwardly had any quietness in his own confidence, nor yet outwardly any help in his Adversaries.

Besides this, on the one side was praise, on the other side scorn, on both sides danger, so that neither he could die honestly, nor yet unhonestly live. And whereas he sought profit, he fell into double disprofit, that neither with good men he could avoid secret shame, nor yet with evil men the note of diffimulation.

In the mean time, while these things were adooing (as I said) in the Prison amongst the Doctors, the Queen taking secret counsel, how to dispatch Crammer out of the way (who as yet knew nothing of her secret hate, and looked for nothing less then death) appointed. Dr. Cole, and secretly gave him in commandment, that against the 21. of March, he should prepare a Funeral Sermon for Crammers burning, and so instructing him orderly and diligently of her will and pleasure in that behalf, sendeth him away.

Soon after, the Lord Williams of Tame, and the Lord Shandoy, Sir Thomas Bridges, and Sir John Brown, were sent for, with other worshipsful men and Justices, commanded in the Queens name to be at Oxford at the same day, with their Servants and Retinue, left Crammers death should raise there any tumult.

Cole the Doctor having this Lesson given him before, and charged by her commandment, returned to Oxford ready to play his part; who as the day of execution drew near, even the day before, came into the Prison to Crammer; to try whether he abode in the Catholick Faith wherein before he had left him. To whom, when Crammer had answered, that by Gods grace he would daily be more confirmed in the Catholick Faith; Cole departing for that time, the next day following repaired to the Arch-Bishop again, giving no signification as yet of his death that was prepared: And therefore in the morning, which was the 21. day of March appointed for Crammers execution, the said Cole, coming to him, asked if he had any mony. To whom when he answered that he had none, he delivered him fifteen Crowns to give to the poor to whom he would: and so exhorting him so much as he could to constancy in Faith, departed thence about his business; as to his Sermon appointed.

By this partly, and other like arguments, the Archbishop began more and more to surmise what they went about. Then because the day was not far past, and the Lords and Knights that were looked for were not yet come, there came to him the Spanish Frier, witness of his recantation, bringing a Paper with Articles, which Crammer should openly profess in his recantation before the People, earnestly desiring him that he would write the said instrument with the Articles with his own hand, and sign it with his name: which when he had done, the said Frier desired that he would write another Copy thereof which should remain with him, and that he did also. But yet the Archbishop being not ignorant whereunto their secret devices tended, and thinking that the time was at hand in which he could no longer dissemble the profession of his Faith with Christs People, he put secretly in his bosom his Prayer with his Exhortation written in another Paper, which he minded to recite to the People, before he should make the last profession of his Faith, fearing lest if they had heard the Confession of his Faith first, they would not afterward have suffered him to exhort the People.

Soon after about nine of the Clock, the Lord Williams, Sir Tho. Bridges, Sir John Browne, and the other Justices, with certain other Noblemen, that were sent of the Queens Council, came to Oxford with a great train of waiting men. Also of the other multitude on every side (as is wont in such a matter) was made a great concourse, and greater expectation, For first of all, they that were of the Popes side were in great hope that day to hear something of Crammer that should stablish the vanity of their Opinion: the other part, which were endued with a better mind, could not yet doubt, that he which by continual study and labour for so many years, had set forth the Doctrine of the Gospel, either would or could now in the last Act of his life forsake his part. Briefly, as every mans will inclined, either to this this part or to that, so according to the diversity of their desires, every man wished and hoped for. And yet because in an uncertain thing the certainty could be known of none what would be the end; all their minds were hanging between hope and doubt. So that the greater the expectation was in so doubtful a matter, the more was the multitude, that was gathered thither to hear and behold.

Dr. Cranmer brought to Dr. Cole Sermon.

In this so great frequency and expectation, Cranmer at the length cometh from Becardo Prison unto St. Maries Church, because it was a foul and rainy day, the chief Church in the University, in this order. The Mayor went before, next him the Aldermen in their place and degree; after them was Cranmer brought between two Friars, which mumbling to and fro certain Psalms in the streets, answered one another untill they came to the Church door, and there they began the Song of Simon, Nunc dimittis, and entering into the Church, the Psalmsing Friars brought him to his standing, and there left him. There was a stage set over against the Pulpit, of a mean height from the ground, where Cranmer had his standings, waiting untill Cole made him ready to his Sermon.

Cranmer for up upon a Stage.

The lamentable case and sight of that man gave a sorrowful Spectacle to all Christian eyes that beheld him. He that late was Archbishop, Metropolitan, and Primate of England, and the Kings privy Counsellor, being now in a bare and ragged gown, and ill favouredly clothed, with an old square Cap, exposed to the contempt of all men, did admonish men not only of his own calamity, but also of their state and fortune. For who would not pity his case, and bewail his fortune, and might not fear his own chance, to see such a Prelate, so grave a Counsellor, and of so long continued honour after so many dignities, in his old years to be deprived of his estate, adjudged to die, and in so painful a death to end his life, and now presently from such fresh Ornaments, to descend to such vile and ragged apparel?

Dr. Cole Sermon divided into three parts

In this habit, when he had stood a good space upon the Stage, turning to a pillar neer adjoining thereunto, he lifted up his hands to Heaven, and prayed unto God once or twice, till at the length Dr. Cole coming into the Pulpit, and beginning his Sermon, entered first into mention of Tobias and Zachary. Whom after he had praised in the beginning of his Sermon for their perseverance in the true worshipping of God, he then divided his whole Sermon into three parts (according to the solemn custom of the Schools) intending to speak first of the mercy of God: secondly, of his justice to be shewed: and last of all, how the Princes secrets are not to be opened. And proceeding a little from the beginning, he took occasion by and by to turn his tale to Cranmer, and with many hot words reproved him, that once he being induced with the favour and feeling of wholesom and Catholick Doctrine, fell into the contrary Opinion of pernicious Error; which he had not only defended by writings, and all his Power, but also allured other men to do the like, with great liberality of gifts, as it were appointing rewards for Error; and after he had allured them, by all means did cherish them.

The sum and effect of Dr. Cole Sermon at Oxford. If Cole gave this judgment upon Cranmer when he had repented, what judgment is then to be given of Cole, which always persisted in Error and never yet repented.

It were too long to repeat all things, that in long order were pronounced. The sum of his tripartite declamation was that he said Gods mercy was so tempered with his justice, that he did not altogether require punishment according to the merits of offenders, nor yet sometimes suffered the same altogether to go unpunished yea though they had repented. As in David, who when he was hidden choole of three kinds of punishment which he would, and he had chosen pestilence for three days; the Lord forgave him half the time, but did not release all: And that the same thing came to pass in him also, to whom although pardon and reconciliation was due according to the Canons, seeing he repented him of his Errors, yet there were causes why the Queen and the Council at this time judged him to death: of which, left he should marvel too much, he should hear some.

First, that being a Traitor, he had dissolved the lawful matrimony between the King her Father and Mother; besides the driving out of the Popes Authority, while he was Metropolitan.

Secondly, that he had been an Heretick, from whom as from an Author and only fountain all heretical Doctrine and schismatical Opinions, that so many years have prevailed in England, did first rise and spring; of which he had not been a secret favourer only, but also a most earnest defender even to the end of his life, sowing them abroad by writings and arguments, privately and openly, not without great ruine and decay of the Catholick Church.

Anno 1556. If all Hereticks in England should be burned, where should Dr. Cole have been ere now?

And further, it seemed meet, according to the Law of equality, that as the death of the Duke of Northumberland of late, made even with The Moor Chancellor that died for the Church, so there should be one that should make even with Fisher of Rochester; and because that Ridley, Hooper, Ferrar, were not able to make even with that man, it seemed that Cranmer should be joynted to them to fill up their part of equality.

Lex non equalitatis sed iniquitatis.

Besides these there were other just and weighty causes, which seemed to the Queen and Council, which was not meet at that time to be opened to the Common People.

After this, turning his Tale to the hearers, he bade all men beware by this mans example, that among men nothing is so high, that can promise it self safety on the Earth, and that Gods vengeance is equally stretched against all men and spareth none: therefore they should beware and learn to fear their Prince. And seeing the Queens Majesty would not spare so notable a man as this, much less in the like cause they would spare other men, that no man should think to make thereby any defence of his Error, either in riches or any kind of Authority. They had now an example to teach them all, by whose calamity every man might consider his own fortune; who from the top of dignity, none being more honourable than he in the whole Realm, and next the King, was fallen into so great misery, as they might now see, being a man of so high degree, sometime one of the chiefest Prelates in the Church, and an Archbishop, the chief of the Council, the second person in the Realm of long time, a man thought in greatest assurance, having a King on his side; notwithstanding all his Authority and defence, to be debased from high estate to a low degree, of a Counsellor to become a Caitiff, and to be set in so wretched a state, that the poorest wretch would not change condition with him; briefly so heaped with misery on all sides, that neither was left in him any hope of better fortune, nor place for worse.

No flate in this earth so high nor so sure, but it may fall.

The latter part of his Sermon he converted to the Archbishop, whom he comforted and encouraged to take his death well, by many places of Scripture, as with these and such like; bidding him not to mistrust, but he should incontinently receive that the Thief did, to whom Christ said, Hodie mecum eris in Paradiso. That is, This day thou shalt be with me in Paradise: And out of St. Paul he armed him against the terror of the fire, by this, Dominus fidelis est, non sinit vos tentari ultra quam ferre potestis. That is, The Lord is faithful, which will not suffer you to be tempted above your strength: by the example of the three Children, to whom God made the flame to seem like a pleasant dew, adding also the rejoicing of St. Andrew in his Cross, the patience of St. Lawrence on the fire, assuring him, that God, if he called on him, and to such as die in his Faith, either would abate the fury of the flame, or give him strength to abide it.

1 Cor. 10.

He glorified God much in his conversion, because it appeared to be only his work, declaring what travel and conference had been with him to convert him, and all prevailed not, till that it pleased God of his mercy to reclaim him, and call him home. In discoursing of which place, he much commended Cranmer, and qualified his former doings, thus tempering his judgment and talk of him, that all the time (said he) he flowed in riches and honour, he was unworthy of his life: and now that he might not live, he was unworthy of death. But left he should carry with him no comfort, he would diligently labour (he said) and also he did promise in the name of all the Priests that were present, that immediately after his death there should be Dirges, Masses, and Funerals executed for him in all the Churches of Oxford for the succour of his Soul.

Dr. Cole rejoiced in the Archbishops conversion, but that rejoicing lasted not long.

Dirges and Masses promised for Cranmers Soul.

Anno 1556. Cranmer in all this mean time, with what great grief of mind he flood hearing this Sermon, the outward shews of his Body and countenance did better express, than any man can declare; one while lifting up his hands and eyes unto Heaven, and then again for shame letting them down to the Earth. A man might have seen the very image and shape of perfect sorrow lively in him expell'd. More then twenty several times the tears gush'd out abundantly, dropping down marvelously from his Fatherly Face. They which were present, do testify that they never saw in any Child more tears, then braut out from him at that time, all the Sermon while; but especially when they recited his prayer before the People. It is marvellous what commiseration and pity moved all mens hearts, that beheld so heavy a countenance, and such abundance of tears in an old man of so Reverend Dignity.

The words of the Archb. to the People.

Cole, after he had ended his Sermon, called back the People that were ready to depart, to prayers. Brethren (said he) lest any man should doubt of this mans earnest conversion and repentance, you shall hear him speak before you, and therefore I pay your Master Cranmer, that you will now perform that you promised not long ago; namely, that you would openly expresse the true and undoubted profession of your faith, that you may take away all suspition from men, and that all men may understand that you are a Catholick indeed. I will do it (said the Archbishop) and that with a good will; who by and by rising up, and putting off his cap, began to speak thus unto the People.

I desire you, well beloved Brethren in the Lord, that you will pray to God for me, to forgive me my sins, which above all men, both in number and greatness, I have committed. But among all the rest, there is one offence which most of all at this time doth vex and trouble me, whereof in procees of my talk you shall hear more in his proper place, and then putting his hand into his Bosom, he drew forth his prayer, which he recited to the People in his kense.

The prayer of Doctor Cranmer, Archbishop.

Good Christian People, my dearly beloved Brethren and Sisters in Christ, I beseech you most heartily to pray for me to Almighty God, that he will forgive me all my sins and offences, which be many without number, and great above measure. But yet one thing grieueth my Conscience more then all the rest, whereof, God willing, I intend to speak more hereafter. But how great and how many soever my sins be, I beseech you to pray God of his mercy to pardon and forgive them all. And here kneeling down, he said:

O Father of Heaven, O Son of God Redeemer of the World, O Holy Ghost, three persons and one God, have mercy upon me most wretched sinner and miserable finner. I have offended both against Heaven and Earth, more then my tongue can expresse. Whither then may I goe, or whither shall I flee? To Heaven I may be ashamed to lift up mine eyes, and in Earth I find no place of refuge or succour: To thee therefore, O Lord, do I run; to thee do I humble my self, saying, O Lord my God, my sins be great, but yet have mercy upon me for thy great mercy. The great misery that God became man, was not wrought for little or few offences. Thou didst not give thy Son, O Heavenly Father unto death for small sins only, but for all the greatest sins of the World, so that the sinner return to thee with his whole heart, as I do here at this present. Wherefore have mercy on me, O God, whose property is always to have mercy, have mercy upon me O Lord, for thy great mercy. I crave nothing for mine own merits, but for thy names sake, that it may be hallowed thereby, and for thy dear Son Jesus Christs sake. And now therefore, Our Father of Heaven, be thou as thy name, &c. And then he rising, said:

Every man (good People) desireth at the time of his death to give some good exhortation that others may remember the same before their death, and be the better thereby: so I beseech God grant me grace, that I may speak something at this my departing, whereby God may be glorified, and you edified.

First, it is an heavy cause to see that so many folk so much dote upon the love of this false World, and be so careful for it, that of the love of God, or the World to come, they seem to care very little or nothing. Therefore this shall be my first exhortation: That you set not your minds overmuch upon this glosing World, but upon God, and upon the World to come, and to learn to know what this lesson meaneth, which St. John teacheth, That the love of this World is barred against God.

The second exhortation is, That next under God you obey your King and Queen willingly and gladly, without murmuring or grudging; not for fear of them only, but much more for the fear of God; knowing that they be Gods Ministers, appointed by God to rule and govern you: and therefore whosoever resisteth them, resisteth the ordinance of God.

The third exhortation is, That you love altogether like Brethren and Sisters. For alas, pity it is to see what contention and hatred one Christian man beareth to another, not taking each other as Brother and Sister, but rather as strangers and mortal enemies. But I pray you learn and bear well away this one lesson, To do good unto all men as much as in you lieth, and to hurt no man; no more then you would hurt your own natural loving Brother or Sister. For this you may be sure of, that whosoever hateth any person, and goeth about maliciously to hinder or hurt him, surely, and without all doubt God is not with that man, although he think himself never so much in Gods favour.

The fourth exhortation shall be to them that have great substance and riches of this World, That they will consider and weigh three sayings of the Scripture. One is of our Saviour Christ himself, who saith, Luke 18. It is hard for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. A fore saying, and yet spoken of him that knoweth the truth.

The second is of St. John, 1 John 3. whose saying is this, He that hath the substance of this World, and seeth his Brother in necessity, and shutteth up his mercy from him, how can he say that he loveth God?

The third is of St. James, who speaketh to the covetous rich man after this manner, Weep you and bow for the misery that shall come upon you: your riches do rot, your cloaths be moth-eaten, your gold and Silver doth canker and rust, and they rust shall bear witness against you, and consume you like fire: you gather a hoard or treasure of Gods indignation against the last day. Let them that be rich ponder well these three sentences: for if they ever had occasion to shew their charity, they have it now at this present, the poor People being so many, and victuals so dear.

And now for as much as I am come to the last end of my life, whereupon hangeth all my life past, and all my life to come, either to live with my Master Christ for ever in joy, or else to be in pain for ever with wicked Devils in Hell, and I see before mine eyes presently either Heaven ready to receive me, or else Hell ready to swallow me up: I shall therefore declare unto you my very faith how I believe, without any colour of dissimulation: for now is no time to dissemble, whatsoever I have said or written in times past.

First, I believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of Heaven and Earth, &c. And I believe every Article of the Catholick faith, every word, and sentence taught by our Saviour Jesus Christ, his Apostles and Prophets, in the new and old Testament.

And now I come to the great thing, which so much troubleth my conscience, more then any thing that ever I did or said in my whole life, and that is the setting abroad of a writing contrary to the truth; which now here I renounce and refuse, as things written with my hand, contrary to the truth which I thought in my heart, and written for fear of death, and to save my life if it might be, and that is, all such bills and papers which I have written or signed with my hand since my degradation; wherein I have written many things untrue. And forasmuch as my hand offended, writing contrary to my heart, my hand shall first be punished therefore: for may I come to the fire it shall be first burned.

And

The Archb. declares the true confession of his faith without all colour or dissimulation.

The Archb. revoketh his former excommunication, and repenteth the same.

The Archb. exulteth the Pope as Christs enemy and Antichrist. The Archb. standeth to his book written against Wincester.

And as for the Pope, I refuse him, as Christs enemy and Antichrist, with all his false Doctrine.

And as for the Sacrament, I believe as I have taught in my book against the Bishop of Wincester, the which my book teacheth so true a Doctrine of the Sacrament, that it shall stand at the last day before the Judgment of God, where the Papistical Doctrine contrary thereto shall be ashamed to shew her face.

Here the standers by were all astonished, marvelled, were amazed, did look one upon another, whose expectation he had so notably deceived. Some began to admonish him of his recantation, and to accuse him of falsehood.

The expectation of the Papists deceived.

Briefly, it was a World to see the Doctors beguiled of so great an hope. I think there was never cruelty more notably or better in time deluded and deceived. For it is not to be doubted but they looked for a Glorious Victory, and a perpetual Triumph by this mans recantation.

The Papists in great chafe against the Archb. bishop.

Who as soon as they heard these things, began to let down their ears, to rage, fret, and fume; and so much the more, because they could not revenge their grief: for they could now no longer threaten or hurt him. For the most miserable man in the World can die but once: and whereas of necessity he must needs die that day, though the Papists had been never so well pleased: now being never so much offended with him, yet could he not be twice killed of them. And so when they could do nothing else unto him, yet left they should say nothing, they ceased not to object unto him his falsehood and dissimulation.

Unto which accusation he answered, Ah my Masters (quoth he) do not you take it so. Always since I lived hitherto, I have been a hater of falsehood, and a lover of simplicity, and never before this time have I dissembled; and in saying this, all the tears that remained in his Body appeared in his eyes. And when he began to speak more of the Sacrament and of the Papacy, some of them began to cry out, yelp, and bawl, and specially Cole cried out upon him; Stop the Hereticks mouth, and take him away.

Anno 1556.

Cranmer answered to the Papists.

The burning of D. Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, in London, which at that time with his hand he thrust into the fire, where he suffered.

Cranmer pulled down from the stage, by Friars and Papists, for the true Confession of the faith.

And then Cranmer being pulled down from the stage was led to the fire, accompanied with those Friars, vexing, troubling, and threatening him most cruelly. What madnels (say they) hath brought thee again into this error, by which thou wilt draw innumerable Souls with thee into hell? To whom he answered nothings, but directed all his talk to the People, saying that to one troubling him in the way he spake, and exhorted him to get him home to his study, and apply his book diligently, saying, if he did diligently call upon God, by reading more he should get knowledge.

But the other Spanish barker, raging and fuming, was almost out of his wits, always having this in his mouth, Non fecisti! didst thou it not?

The Archb. brought to the place of execution.

But when he came to the place where the Holy Bishops and Martyrs of God, Hugh Latimer and Ridley were burnt before him for the confession of the truth, kneeling down he prayed to God, and not long tarrying in his prayers, putting off his garments to his shirt, he prepared himself to Death. His shirt was made long down to his feet. His feet were bare. Likewise his head, when both his caps were off, was so bare, that one hair could not be seen upon it. His Beard was long and thick, covering his face with marvellous gravity. Such a countenance of gravity moved the hearts both of his friends, and of his enemies.

The description of his person.

Then the Spanish Friars John and Richard, of whom mention was made before, began to exhort him and play their parts with him awhile, but with vain and lost labour. Cranmer with steadfast purpose abiding in the profession of his Doctrine, gave his hand to certain old men, and other that stood by, bidding them farewell.

And when he had thought to have done so likewise to Mr. Ely, the said Ely drew back his hand and refused, saying, it was not lawful to salute Hereticks, and specially such a one as falsely returned unto the opinions that he had sworn. And if he had known before that he would have done so, he would never have used his company so familiarly, and chid those Sergeants and Citizens, which had not refused to give him their hands. This Ely was a Priest lately made, and student in Divinity, being then one of the fellows of Brasen-nose.

Then was an iron chain tyed about Cranmer, whom when they perceived to be more steadfast then that he could be moved from his sentence, they commanded the fire to be set unto him.

And when the wood was kindled, and the fire began to burn near him, stretching out his Arm, he put his right hand into the flame, which he held so steadfast and immovable (saying that once with the same hand he wiped his face) that all men might see his hand burned before his Body was touched. His Body did so abide the burning of the flame with such constancy and steadfastness, that standing always in one place without moving his Body, he seemed to move no more than the Stake to which he was bound; his eyes were lifted up into heaven, and oftentimes he repeated his unworthy right hand, so long as his voice would suffer him; and using often the words of Stephen, Lord Jesus receive my Spirit, in the greatness of the flame he gave up the ghost.

Mr. Ely refused to give his hand to the Archb. bishop.

The Archb. tyed to the stake.

Cranmer put his right hand into the fire, which he held so steadfast, first upon the fire.

This fortitude of mind, which perchance is rare and not found among the Spaniards, when Frier John saw, thinking it came not of fortitude, but of desperation, although such manner of examples which are of like constancy, have been common here in England, ran to the Lord Williams of Tame, crying that the Archbishop was vexed in mind, and died in great desperation. But he which was not ignorant of the Archbishops constancy, being unknown to the Spaniards, smiled only, and (as it were) by silence rebuked the Friers folly. And this was the end of this learned Archbishop, whom, left by evil subscribing he should have perished, by well recanting God preserved; and left he should have lived longer with shame and reproach, it pleased God rather to take him away, to the glory of his name and profit of his Church. So good was the Lord both to his Church, in fortifying the fame with the testimony and blood of such a Martyr; and so good also to the man with this Cross of Tribulation, to purge his offences in this world, not only of his recantation, but also of his standing against John Lambert and Mr. Allen, or if there were any other, with whose burning and blood his hands had been, before any thing polluted. But especially he had to rejoyce, that dying in such a cause, he was numbered amongst Christs Martyrs, much more worthy the name of St. Thomas of Canterbury, than he whom the Pope falsely before did Canonize.

Archbishop
Cranmer the middle Martyr of tyrs burnt in Queen

Marys time.

And thus have you the full story concerning the life and death of this Reverend Archbishop and Martyr of God, Thomas Cranmer, and also of divers other the learned sort of Christs Martyrs burned in Queen Marys time, of whom this Archbishop was the last, being burnt about the very middle time of the reign of that Queen, and almost the very middle man of all the Martyrs which were burned in all her Reign besides.

Now after the life and story of this forlaid Archbishop discoursed, let us adjoin withal his Letters, beginning first with his famous Letter to Queen Mary, which he wrote unto her incontinent after he was cited up to Rome by Bishop Brooks and his fellows, the tenor whereof here followeth.

Letters of Doctor Thomas Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Archbishop of Canterburys Letter to the Queens Highness.

A writing or Letter of the Archb.
sent to Qu.
Mary.

IT may please your Majesty to pardon my presumption, that I dare be so bold to write to your Highness. But very necessity constraineth me, that your Majesty may know my mind, rather by mine own writing, than by other mens reports. So it is that upon Wednesday, being the 12. day of this Month, I was cited to appear at Rome the 80. day after, there to make answer to such matters as should be objected against me upon the behalf of the King and your most Excellent Majesty, which matters the Thursday following were objected against me by Dr. Martin and Dr. Story, your Majesties Proctors before the Bishop of Gloucester, sitting in Judgment by Commission from Rome. But (alas) it cannot but grieve the heart of a natural Subject, to be accused of the King and Queen of his own Realm; and specially before an outward Judge, or by Authority coming from any person out of this Realm: where the King and Queen, as if they were Subjects within their own Realm, shall complain and require Justice at strangers hands against their own Subject, being already condemned to death by their own Laws. As though the King and Queen could not do or have Justice within their own Realms against their own Subjects, but they must seek it at strangers hands in a strange Land, the like wanted (I think) was never seen.

would have wished to have had some milder Adversaries; and, I think, that death shall not grieve me much more, than to have my most dread and most gracious Sovereign Lord and Lady, to whom under God I do owe all obedience, to be mine Accusers in Judgment within their own Realm, before any stranger and outward power. But inasmuch as in the time of the Prince of most famous memory, King Henry the Eighth your Graces Father, I was sworn never to consent, that the Bishop of Rome should have or exercise any Authority or Jurisdiction in this Realm of England, therefore left I should allow his Authority contrary to mine own Oath, I refused to make answer to the Bishop of Gloucester sitting here in Judgment by the Popes Authority, lest I should run into Perjury.

Another cause why I refused the Popes Authority, is this, that his Authority, as he claimeth it, repugneth to the Crown Imperial of this Realm, and to the Laws of the same; which every true Subject is bound to defend. First, for that the Pope faith, that all manner of Power, as well Temporal as Spiritual, is given next to him of God; and that the Temporal Power he giveth unto Emperours and Kings, to use it under him, but so as it be always at his commandment and beck.

But contrary to this claim, the Imperial Crown and Jurisdiction Temporal of this Realm is taken immediately from God, to be used under him only, and is subject unto none, but to God alone.

Moreover, to the Imperial Laws and Customs of this Realm the King in his Coronation, and all Justices when they receive their Offices, be sworn, and all the whole Realm is bound to defend and maintain. But contrary to this, hereunto, the Pope by his Authority maketh void, and commandeth to blot out of our Books, all Laws and Customs being repugnant to his Laws, and declareth accused all Rulers and Governours, all the makers, writers, and executors of all such Laws or Customs; as it appeareth by many of the Popes Laws, whereof one or two I shall rehearse. In the Decrees, Dist. 10. is written thus, Constitutiones contra Canones & Decreta Præsumptum Romanorum vel bonos mores, nullius sunt momenti. That is, The Constitutions or Statutes enacted against the Canons and Decrees of the Bishops of Rome or their good Customs, are of none effect.

Also, Extra, de sententia Excommunicationis, novum, Excommunicamus omnes Hereticos utriusque sexus, quicumque nomine censentur, & fautores, & receptores, & defensores eorum; nec non & qui de cætero servari fecerint statuta edita & consuetudines contra Ecclesiam liberatam, nisi ea de capitularibus suis intra duos menses post hujusmodi publicationem sententia fecerint amoveri. Item, Excommunicamus statarios, & scriptores statutorum ipsorum, nec non potestates, consules, rectores, & consiliarios locorum, ubi de cætero hujusmodi statuta & consuetudines edita fuerint vel servate; nec non & illi qui secundum ea præsumpserint judicare, vel in publicam formam scribere judicata. That is to say, We Excommunicate all Heretics of both Sexes, what name soever they be called by, and their fautors, and receptors, and defenders; and also them that shall hereafter cause to be observed the Statutes and Customs made against the liberty of the Church, except they cause the same to be put out of their Records and Chapters within two months after the publication thereof. Also we Excommunicate the Statute-makers and writers of those Statutes, and all the Potestates, Consuls, Governours and Counsellors of places, where such Statutes and Customs shall be made or kept; and also those that shall presume to give judgment according to them, or shall notice in publick form the matter so adjudged.

Now by these Laws, if the Bishop of Rome Authority which he claimeth by God, be lawful, all your Graces Laws and Customs of your Realm, being contrary to the Popes Laws, be naught, and as well your Majesty, as your Judges, Justices, and all other Executors of the same, stand accused amongst Heretics, which God forbid. And yet this Curie can never be avoided (if the Pope have such power as he claimeth) until such times as the Laws and Customs of this Realm (being contrary to his Laws) be taken away and blotted out of the Records. And although the records are now Laws of this Realm contrary to the Laws of Rome, yet I named but a few; as to convict a Clerk before any temporal Judge of this Realm for debt, felony, murder, or for any other crime; which Clerks by the Popes Laws be exempt from the Kings Laws, that they can be no where sued, but before their Ordinary.

Cases wherein the Popes pugn against our Laws.

Also the Pope by his Laws may give all Bishopricks and benefices spiritual; which by the Laws of this Realm can be given but only by the King and other Patrons of the same, except they fall into the lapse.

By the Popes Laws, Jus patronatus shall be sued only before the Ecclesiastical Judge; but by the Laws of the Realm it shall be sued before the temporal Judge.

Provision against the Popes Laws
by Præsumptio.

And to be short, the Laws of this Realm do agree with the Popes Laws like fire and water. And yet the Kings of this Realm have provided for their laws by the præsumptio; so that if any man have let the execution of the Laws of this Realm by any Authority from the See of Rome, he talleth into the præsumptio.

The provision of the Popes against our præsumptio.

But to meet with this, the Popes have provided for their laws by cursing. For whosoever letteth the Popes laws to have full course within this Realm, by the Popes power standeth accursed. So that the Popes power treadeth all the laws and customs of this Realm under his feet, cursing all that execute them; until such time as they do give place unto his Laws.

well.

But it may be said, that notwithstanding all the Popes decrees, yet we do execute still the laws and customs of this Realm. Nay, not all quietly without interruption of the Pope. And we do execute them, yet we do it unjustly, if the Popes power be of force, and for the same we stand Excommunicate, and shall do, until we leave the execution of our own Laws and customs. Thus we be well reconciled to Rome allowing such Authority, when they themselves standeth accursed before God, if the Pope have any such Authority.

These things (as I suppose) were not fully opened in the Parliament house, when the Popes Authority was received again within this Realm; for if they had, I do not believe that either the King or Queens Majesty, or the Nobles of this Realm, or the Commons of the same would ever have consented to receive again such a foreign Authority, so injurious, hurtful, and prejudicial as well to the Crown as to the Laws and Customs and state of this Realm, as whereby they must needs acknowledge themselves to be accursed. But none could open this matter well but the Clergy, and such of them as had read the Popes Laws, whereby the Pope had made himself as it were a God. These seek to maintain the Pope whom they desired to have their chief head, to the intent they might have as it were a Kingdom and Laws within themselves, distinct from the Laws of the Crown, and wherewith the Crown may not meddle; and so being exempted from the Laws of the Realm, might live in this Realm like Lords and Kings, without damage or fear of any man, so that they please their high and supreme Head at Rome. For this consideration (I ween) some that knew the truth, held their peace in the Parliament, whereas if they had done their duties to the Crown and whole Realm, they should have opened their mouths, declared the truth, and showed the perils and dangers that might ensue to the Crown and Realm.

The Clergy
in England more added to the Popes than to their country.

And if I should agree to allow such Authority within this Realm, whereby I must needs confess, that your most gracious Highness, and also your Realm should ever continue accursed, until ye shall cease from the execution of your own Laws and customs of your Realm; I could not think my self true either to your Highness, or to this my natural country, knowing that I do know. Ignorance, I know, may excuse other men; but he that knoweth how prejudicial and injurious the power and Authority, which he challengeth every where, to the Crown, Laws, and customs of this Realm, and yet will allow the same, I cannot see in any wise how he can keep his due allegiance, fidelity, and truth to the Crown and state of this Realm.

The third cause why he could not allow the Popes.

Another cause I alleged, why I could not allow the Authority of the Pope, which is this; That by his Authority he subverteth not only the Laws of this Realm, but also the Laws of God: so that whosoever be under his Authority, he suffereth them not to be under Christ's Religion purely, as Christ did command. And for one example I brought forth, that whereas by God Laws all Christian People be bounden diligently to learn his Word that they may know how to believe and live accordingly, for that purpose he ordained Holydays, when they ought, leaving apart all other business, to give themselves wholly to know and serve God. Therefore Gods will and Commandment is, that when the People be gathered together, Ministers should use such language as the People may understand and take profit thereby, or else hold their peace. For as an Harp or Lute, if it give no certain sound that men may know what is stricken, who can dance after it? for all the sound is in vain; so is it in vain, and profiteth nothing, faith Almighty God by the mouth of Saint Paul, if the Priest speak to the People in a language which they know not; For else he may profit himself; but profiteth not the People, faith Saint Paul. But herein I was answered thus; that Saint Paul spake only of preaching, that the Preacher should preach in a tongue which the People did know, or else his Preaching availeth nothing; but if the Preaching availeth nothing, being spoken in a language which the People understand not, how should any other service avail them, being spoken in the same language? And yet that S. Paul meant not only of Preaching, it appeareth plainly by his own words. For he speaketh by name expressly of praying, singing, and thanking of God, and of all other things which the Priests say in the Churches, whereunto the People say Amen; which they use not in Preaching, but in other divine service; that whether the Priests rehearse the wonderful works of God, or the great benefits of God unto mankind above all other creatures, or give thanks unto God, or make open profession of their faith, or humble confession of their sins, with earnest request of mercy and forgiveness, or make sure or request unto God for any thing; then all the People understanding what the Priests say, might give their minds and voices with them, and say Amen, that is to say, allow what the Priests say; that the rehearsal of Gods Universal works and benefits, the giving of thanks, the profession of faith, the confession of sins, and the requests and petitions of the Priests and of the People might ascend upon the Ears of God altogether, and be as a sweet favour, odour, and incense in his nose; and thus was it used many hundred years after Christs Ascension. But the foreaid things cannot be done when the Priests speak to the People in a language not known, and so they (or their Clerk in their name) say Amen, but they cannot tell whereunto. Whereas Saint Paul faith; How can the People say Amen to thy well saying, when they understand not what thou sayest? And thus was Saint Paul understood of all Interpreters, both the Greeks and Latines, old and new, school Authors and other that I have read, until above thirty years past. At which time one Eckius with other of his sort began to devise a new exposition, understanding S. Paul of preaching only.

But when a good number of the best learned men reputed within this Realm, some favouring the old, some the new learning, as they term it, (where indeed that which they call the old, is the new, and that which they call the new, is indeed the old) but when a great number of such learned men of both sorts, were gathered together at Windsor, for the reformation of the service of the Church, it was agreed by both, without Controversie (not one saying contrary) that the service of the Church ought to be in the mother Tongue, and that S. Paul in the fourteenth Chapter to the Corinthians was so to be understood. And so is S. Paul to be understood in the Civil Law, more then a thousand years past, where Justinianus, a most godly Emperour in a Synod writeth on this manner: Tubemus ut omnes Episcopi pariter & presbyteri non tacito modo sed clara voce, quæ a fidei populo exaudiantur, sacram oblationem & precem in sacro Baptismate adhibitis celebrent, quo majori exinde devotione in deprecandis Domini Dei laudibus audientium animi afficiantur. Ita enim & Divus Paulus docet in Epistola ad Corinth. Si solummodo benedicat spiritus, quomodo is qui privati locum tenet, dicet ad gratiarum actionem tuam, Amen? quandoquidem quid dicere non videt. Tu quidem pulchre gratias agis, alter autem non edificatur. That is to say, We command that all Bishops and Priests celebrate the holy ANNO 1556. holy oblation and prayer used in holy Baptism, not after a still and close manner, but with a clear loud voice, that they may be plainly heard of the faithful People, so as the hearers minds may be lifted up thereby with the greater devotion, in uttering the praises of the Lord God. For so Paul teacheth also in the Epistle to the Corinthians; If the Spirit do only bless (or say well) how shall he that occupieth the place of a private person say, Amen, to thy thanksgiving? for he perceiveth not what thou sayest: Thou dost give thanks well, but the other is not edified. And not only the Civil Law, and all other Writers a thousand and five hundred years continually together have expounded St. Paul not of preaching only, but of other service said in the Church; but also reason giveth the fame, that if men be commanded to hear any thing, it must be spoken in a language which the hearers understand, or else (as St. Paul saith) what availeth it to hear? So that the Pope giving a contrary commandment, that the People coming to the Church shall hear they wot not what and shall answer they know not whereto, taketh upon him to command, not only against reason, but also directly against God.

The Pope commandeth both against God and natural reason.

And again I said, whereas our Saviour Christ ordained the Sacrament of his most precious Body and Blood to be received of all Christian People under the forms of Bread and Wine, and said of the Cup, Drink ye all of this: the Pope giveth a clean contrary commandment, that no Lay-man shall drink of the Cup of their salvation; as though the Cup of salvation by the Blood of Christ pertained not to Lay-men. And whereas Theophilus Alexandrinus (whose works St. Hierom did translate about eleven hundred years past) saith, That if Christ had been crucified for the Devils, his Cup should not be denied them; yet the Pope denieth the Cup of Christ to Christian People, for whom Christ was crucified. So that if I should obey the Pope in these things, I must needs disobey my Saviour Christ.

The exco[m]municatio[n] of the Papists, why they take away the Cup.

But I was answered hereunto (as commonly the Papists do answer) that under the form of Bread is whole Christs flesh and blood: so that whosoever receiveth the form of Bread, receiveth as well Christs blood as his flesh. Let it be so, yet in the form of Bread only, Christs blood is not drunk, but eaten; nor is it received in the Cup in the form of Wine, as Christ commanded, but eaten with the flesh under the form of Bread. And moreover, the Bread is not the Sacrament of his blood, but of his flesh only; nor is the Cup the Sacrament of his flesh, but of his blood only. And so the Pope keepeth from all Lay-persons, the Sacrament of their redemption by Christs Blood, which Christ commandeth to be given unto them.

And furthermore, Christ ordained the Sacrament in two kinds, the one separated from the other, to be a re-presentation of his death, where his Blood was separated from his Flesh, which is not represented in one kind alone: So that the Lay-people receive not the whole Sacrament whereby Christs death is represented as he commanded.

Moreover, as the Pope taketh upon him to give the temporal Sword, by royal and imperial Power, to Kings and Princes: so doth he likewise take upon him to depose them from their imperial states, if they be disobedient to him, and commandeth the Subjects to disobey their Princes, availing the Subjects as well of their obedience, as of their lawful Oaths made unto their true Kings and Princes, directly contrary to Gods commandment, who commandeth all Subjects to obey their Kings, or their Rulers under them.

Note the flying of Gregory.

One John, Patriarch of Constantinople, in the time of St. Gregory claimed superiority above all other Bishops. To whom St. Gregory writeth, that therein he did injury to his three Brethren, which were equal with him, that is to say, the Bishop of Rome, the Bishop of Alexandria, and of Antiochia: which three were Patriarchal Sees, as well as Constantinople, and were Brethren one to another. But (saith St. Gregory) if any one shall exalt himself above all the rest, to be the universal Bishop, the same passeth in pride. But now the Bishop of Rome exalted himself not only above all Kings and Emperours, and above all the whole world, but takes upon him to give and take away, to let up and pull down as he shall think good. And as the Devil having no such Authority, yet took upon him to give unto Christ all the Kingdoms of the World, if he would fall down and worship him: in like manner the Pope taketh upon him to give Empires like and Kingdoms being none of his, to such as will fall down and worship him, and kiss his feet.

And moreover, his Lawyers and Glossers so flatter him, that they thin he may command Emperours and Kings to hold his Stirrup when he lighteth from his Horse, and to be his Foot-men: and that, if any Emperour and King give him any thing, they give him nothing but that is his own, and that he may dispence against Gods Word, against both the old and new Testament, against St. Pauls Epistles, and against the Gospel. And furthermore whatsoever he doth, although he draw innumerable People by heaps with himself into Hell, yet may not mortal man reprove him, because he being judge of all men, may be judged of no man. And thus he sitteth in the Temple of God, as if he were a God, and nameth himself Gods Vicar, and yet he dispenseth against God. If this be not to play Antichrists part, I cannot tell what is Antichrist, which is no more to say, but Christs enemy and adversary? who shall sit in the Temple of God, advancing himself above all other, yet by hypocrisie and fained Religion, shall subvert the true Religion of Christ, and under pretence and colour of Christs Religion shall work against Christ, and therefore hath the name of Antichrist. Now if any man lift himself higher then the Pope hath done, who lifteth himself above all the world; or can be more adversary to Christ, then to dispence against Gods Laws; and where Christ hath given any commandment, to command directly the contrary, that man must needs be taken for Antichrist. But until the time that such a person may be found, men may easily conjecture where to find Antichrist.

The Treatise of the Pope and the Emperours made this Popes book-men.

The Pope is Antichrist, that is, Christs enemy.

The true marks, proving that the Pope is Antichrist.

Wherefore, seeing the Pope thus to overthrow both Gods Laws and mans Laws, taketh upon him to make Emperours and Kings to be vassals and subjects unto him, especially the Crown of this Realm, with the Laws and Customs of the same; I see no mean how I may consent to admit his usurped power within this Realm, contrary to mine Oath, mine obedience to Gods Laws, mine allegiance and duty to your Majesty, and my love and affection to this Realm.

Note this conclusion.

This that I have spoken against the power and Authority of the Pope, I have not spoken (I take God to record and Judge) for any malice I owe to the Popes person, whom I know not, but I shall pray to God to give him grace, that he may seek above all things to promote Gods honour and glory, and not to follow the trade of his predecessors in these latter days.

The cause why the Archbishop spoke and wrote thus.

Nor have I spoken it for fear of punishment, and to avoid the same, thinking it rather an occasion to aggravate then to diminish my trouble; but I have spoken it for my most bounden duty to the Crown, Liberties, Laws, and customs of this Realm of England, but most specially to discharge my Confidence in uttering the Truth to Gods glory, casting away all fear by the comfort which I have in Christ, who saith, Fear not them that kill the Body, and cannot kill the Soul, but fear him that can cast both Body and Soul into Hell fire. He that for fear to lose this life will forsake the Truth, shall lose the everlasting life: And he that for the truths sake will spend his life, shall find everlasting life. And Christ promiseth to stand fast with them before his Father, which will stand fast with him here. Which comfort is so great, that whosoever hath his eyes fixed upon Christ, cannot greatly pass on this life, knowing that he may be sure to have Christ stand by him in the presence of his Father in Heaven.

Math. 10.

And as touching the Sacrament, I said; Forasmuch as the whole matter standeth in the understanding of these words of Christ: This is my Body, This is my Blood; I said that Christ in these words made demonstration of the Bread and Wine, and spake figuratively, calling Bread his Body, and Wine his Blood, because he ordained them to be Sacraments of his Body and Blood. And where the Papists say in those two points contrary unto me, that Christ called not Bread his Body, but a substance uncertain, nor spake figuratively: Herein I said I would be judged by the old Church, and which Doctrine could be proved the elder, that I would stand unto. And forforasmuch as I have alledged in my Book many old Authors, both Greeks and Latins, which above a thousand years after Christ continually taught as I do: if they could bring forth but one old Author, that faith in these two points as they say, I offered six or seven years ago, and do offer yet still, that I will give place unto them.

But when I bring forth any Author that faith in most plain terms as I do, yet faith the other part, that the Authors meant not so; as who should say, that the Authors spake one thing, and meant clean contrary. And upon the other part, when they cannot find any one Author, that faith in words as they say; yet say they, that the Authors meant as they say. Now, whether I or they speak more to the purpose herein, I refer me to the judgment of all indifferent hearers; yea the old Church of Rome, above a thousand years together, neither believed nor used the Sacrament, as the Church of Rome hath done of late years.

For in the beginning, the Church of Rome taught a pure and a sound Doctrine of the Sacrament. But after that the Church of Rome fell into a new doctrine of Transubstantiation; with the Doctrine they changed the use of the Sacrament contrary to that Christ commanded, and the old Church of Rome used above a thousand years. And yet to deface the old, they say that the new is the old: wherein for my part I am content to stand to the trial. But their Doctrine is so fond and uncomfortable, that I marvel that any man would allow it, if he knew what it is. But howsoever they bear the People in hand, that which they write in their Books hath neither Truth nor comfort.

For by their Doctrine, of one Body of Christ is made two bodies: one natural, having distance of members, with form and proportion of mans perfect Body, and this Body is in Heaven: but the Body of Christ in the Sacrament, by their own Doctrine, must needs be a monstrous Body, having neither distance of members, nor form, fashion or proportion of a mans natural Body. And such a Body is in the Sacrament (teach they) and goeth into the mouth with the form of Bread, and enteth no further then the form of Bread goeth, nor tarrieth no longer then the form of Bread is by natural heat in digesting. So that when the form of Bread is digested, that Body of Christ is gone. And forasmuch as evilmen be as long in digesting as good men, the Body of Christ (by their Doctrine) enteth as far, and tarrieth as long in wicked men as in godly men. And what comfort can be herein to any Christian man, to receive Christs unshapen Body, and it to enter no further then the stomach, and to depart by and by as soon as the Bread is consumed?

It seemeth to me a more sound and comfortable Doctrine, that Christ hath but one Body, and that hath form and fashion of a mans true Body; which Body spiritually enteth into the whole man, Body and Soul: and though the Sacrament be consumed, yet whole Christ remaineth, and feedeth the receiver unto eternal life, if he continue in godliness, and never departeth until the receiver forsake him. And as for the wicked, they have not Christ within them at all, who cannot be where Belial is. And this is my Faith, and (as me seemeth) a sound Doctrine, according to Gods Word, and sufficient for a Christian to believe in that matter. And if it can be shewed unto me, that the Popes Authority is not prejudicial to the things before mentioned, or that my Doctrine in the Sacrament is erroneous (which I think cannot be shewed) then I never was nor will be so perverse to stand willfully in mine own Opinion, but I shall with all humility submit my self unto the Pope, not only to kiss his feet, but another part also.

Another cause why I refused to take the Bishop of Gloucester for my Judge, was the respect of his own person, being more then once perjured. First, for that he being divers times sworn never to consent that the Bishop of Rome, should have any jurisdiction within this Realm, but to take the King and his Successors for supreme heads of this Realm, as by Gods Laws they be contrary to that lawful the said Bishop fate then in judgment by Authority from Rome, wherein he was perjured, and not worthy to sit as a Judge.

The second perjury was, that he took his Bishoprick both of the Queens Majesty and of the Pope, making to each of them a solemn Oath which oaths be so contrary that the one must needs be perjured. And furthermore in swearing to the Pope to maintain his Laws, Decrees, Constitutions, Ordinances, Refervations, and Provisions, he declareth himself an enemy to the Imperial Crown, and to the Laws and state of this Realm, whereby he declareth himself not worthy to sit as a Judge within this Realm. And for these considerations I refused to take him for my Judge.

This was written in another Letter to the Queen.

I Learned by Dr. Martin, that at the day of your Majesty Coronation, you took an Oath of obedience to the Pope of Rome, and the same time you took another Oath to this Realm, to maintain the Laws, Liberties, and Customs of the same. And if your Majesty did make an Oath to the Pope, I think it was according to the other Oath which be woth to minister to Princes, which is, to be obedient to him, to defend his person, to maintain his authority, honour, laws, lands, and privileges. And if it be so, (which I know not but by report) then I beseech your Majesty to look upon your Oath made to the Pope, and Realm, and to expend and weigh the two Oaths together, to see how they do agree, and then do as your Graces Conscience shall give you: For I am surely persuaded, that willingly your Majesty will not offend, nor do against your Conscience for any thing.

But I fear me that there be contradictions in your Oaths, and that those which should have informed your Grace thoroughly, did not their duties therein. And if your Majesty ponder the two Oaths diligently, I think you shall perceive you were deceived; and then your Highness may use the matter as God shall put in your heart. Furthermore, I am kept here from company of learned Men, from Books, from Counsel, from Pen and Ink, saving at this time to write unto your Majesty, which all were necessary for a man being in my case. Wherefore I beseech your Majesty, that I may have such of these as may stand with your Majesties pleasure. And as for my appearance at Rome, your Majesty will give me leave, I will appear there. And I trust that God shall put in my mind to defend his Truth there, as well as here. But I refer it wholly to his Majesties pleasure.

Another Letter of the Archbishop to Dr. Martin, and Dr. Story.

I Have me commended unto you. And as I promised, I have sent my Letters unto the Queens Majesty signed, praying you to sign them, and deliver them with all speed. I might have sent them by the Carrier sooner, but not surer. But bearing Mr. Bayliff say, that he would go to the Court on Friday, I thought him a meet messenger to send my Letters by. For better is later and surer, than sooner and never to be delivered. Yet one thing I have written to the Queens Majesty inclosed and sealed; which I require you may be so delivered without delay, and not be opened until it be delivered unto her Graces own hands. I have written all that I remember I said, except that which I spake against the Bishop of Gloucesters own person, which I thought not meet to write. And in some places I have written more, then I said, which I would have answered to the Bishop, if you would have suffered me.

You promised I should see mine Answers to the sixteen Articles, that I might correct, amend, and change them where I thought good, which your promise you kept not. And mine answer was not made upon my Oath, nor repeated, nor made in Judicio, but extra Judicium, as I protested; nor to the Bishop of Gloucester as Judge, but to you the King and Queens Præfators. I trust you deal sincerely with me without fraud or craft, and use me as you would wish to be in like case, your selves. Remember, that Quia mensura mensi fueritis, eadem remetietur vobis, i. What measure you mete, the same shall be measured to you again. Thus fare you well, and God send you his Spirit to induce you into Truth.

Ye heard before how the Archbishop Dr. Cranmer in the month of February was cited up to Rome, and in the month of March next following was degraded by the Bishop of Ely and Bishop Bower. In time of which his degradation he put up his Appellation.

In this his Appellation, because he needed the help of some good and godly Lawyer, he writeth to a certain Friend of his about the same: the Copy of which Letter in Latine is before expressed in the old Book of Acts, there to be read. The English of the same I thought good here to insert, as under ensueth.

Another

to a certain learned Lawyer, his Friend & about his Appeal.

THE Law of nature requireth of all men, that so far forth as it may be done without offence to God, every one should seek to defend and preserve his own life. Which thing, when about three days ago be thought my self, and therewithal remembered how that Martin Luther appealed in his time from Pope Leo the Tenth, to a general Council (lest I should seem rashly and unadvisedly to cast away my self) I determined to appeal in like sort to some lawful and free general Council. But seeing the order and form of an Appeal pertaineth to the Lawyers, whereof I my self am ignorant, and seeing that Luthers Appeal cometh not to my hand, I purposed to break my mind in this matter to some faithful Friend and skilful in the Law, whose help I might use in this behalf, and you only among other came to my remembrance as a man most meet in this University for my purpose. But this is a matter that requireth gravity, so that no man know of it before it be done. It is so that I am summoned to make mine answer at Rome, the 16. day of this month; before the which day I think it good after sentence pronounced, to make mine Appeal. But whether I should first appeal from the Judge Delegate to the Pope, and so afterward to the general Council, or else leaving the Pope, I should appeal immediately to the Council, herein I stand in need of your counsel.

Many causes there be for the which I think good to appeal. First, because I am by an Oath bound never to consent to the receiving of the Bishop of Rome's Authority into this Realm. Besides this, whereas I utterly refused to make answer to the Articles objected unto me by the Bishop of Gloucester, appointed by the Pope to be my Judge, yet I was content to answer Martin and Stoery, with this Protestation, that mine answer should not be taken as made before a Judge, nor yet in place of judgment, but as pertaining nothing to judgment at all; moreover, after I had made mine answer, I required to have a Copy of the same, that I might either by adding thereto, or by altering or taking from it, correct and amend it as I thought good. The which though both the Bishop of Gloucester, and also the King and the Queens Proctors promised me, yet have they altogether broken promise with me, and have not permitted me to correct my said answers according to my request, and yet notwithstanding have (as I understand) registred the same as Acts formally done in place of judgment.

Finally, so far as all this my trouble cometh upon my departing from the Bishop of Rome, and from the Popish Religion, so that now the quarrel is betwixt the Pope himself and me, and no man can be a lawful and indifferent Judge in his own cause; it seemeth (me thinks) good reason, that I should be suffered to appear to some general Council in this matter; specially seeing the Law of nature (as they say) denieth no man the remedy of appeal in such cases.

Now, since it is very requisite that this matter should be kept as close as may be, if perhaps for lack of perfect Skill herein you shall have need of further advice; then I beseech you even for the fidelity and love you bear to me in Christ, that you will open to no Creature alive whose the Cause is. And so far as the time is now at hand, and the matter requireth great expedition, let me obtain thus much of you, I beseech you, that laying aside all other your studies and business for the time, you will apply this my matter only, till you have brought it to pass. The chiefest cause in very deed (to tell you the Truth) of this mine Appeal is, that I might gain time (if it shall so please God) to live until I have finished mine answer against Marcus Antonius Constantinus, which I have now in hand. But if the Adversaries of the Truth will not admit mine Appeal (as I fear they will not; Gods will be done; I pass not upon it, so that God may therein be glorified, be it by my life, or by my death. For it is much better for me to die in Christs quarrel and to reign with him, then here to be shut up, and kept in the Prison of this Body, unless it were to continue yet still awhile in this warfare, for the commodity and profit of my Brethren, and to the further advancing of Gods glory: To whom be all glory for evermore, Amen.

There is also yet another cause why I think good to Appeal, that whereas I am cited to go to Rome to answer there for my self, I am notwithstanding kept here in Prison, that I cannot there appear at the time appointed: And moreover, so far as the state I stand in, is a matter of life and death, so that I have great need of learned counsel for my defence in this behalf; yet when I made my earnest request for the same, all manner of Counsel and help of Proctors, Advocates, and Lawyers was utterly denied me.

Your loving Friend, Thos. Cranmer.

Another Letter of Dr. Cranmer Archbishop, to Mrs. Wilkinson, exhorting her to fly in the time of Persecution.

THE true comforter in all distress is only God, through his Son Jesus Christ; and whosoever hath him, hath company enough if he were in a wilderness all alone: and be that hath twenty thousand in his Company, if God be absent, is in a miserable wilderness and desolation. In him is all comfort, and without him is none. Wherefore I beseech you seek your dwelling there, whereas you may truly and rightly serve God, and dwell in him, and have him ever dwelling in you. What can be so heavy a burden as an unquiet Conscience, to be in such a place as a man cannot be suffered to serve God in Christs Religion? If you be loath to depart from your kin and friends, remember that Christ calleth them his Mother, Sisters, and Brothers, that do his Fathers will. Where we find therefore God truly honoured according to his will, there we can lack neither Friend nor Kin.

If you be loath to depart for the slander of Gods Word, remember that Christ, when his hour was not yet come departed out of his Country into Samaria, to avoid the malice John 4. of the Scribes and Pharisees; and commanded his Apostles that if they were pursued in one place, they should fly to another. And was not Paul let down by a basket out at a window, to avoid the persecution of Aretas? And what wisdom and policy be used from time to time to escape the malice of his enemies, the Acts of the Apostles do declare. And after the same sort did the other Apostles, albeit, when it came to such a point, that they could no longer escape danger of the persecutors of Gods true Religion, then they shewed themselves, that they flying before came not of fear, but of godly wisdom, to do more good; and that they would not rashly without urgent necessity offer themselves to death, which had been but a temptation of God. Yea, when they were apprehended, and could no longer avoid, then they stood boldly to the profession of Christ; then they shewed how little they passed of death; how much they feared God more than men; how much they loved and preferred the eternal life to come above this short and miserable life.

Wherefore I exhort you as well by Christs commandment, as by the example of him and his Apostles, to withdraw your self from the malice of yours and Gods Enemies, into some place where God is most purely served; which is no slandering of the Truth, but a preserving of your self to God, and the Truth, and to the society and comfort of Christs little flock. And that you will do, do it with speed, lest by your own folly you fall into the persecutors hands. And the Lord send his holy Spirit to lead and guide you wheresoever you go, and all that be godly will say, Amen.

2 Chr. 13.

To my dear Fathers and Brethren, Dettor Cranmer, Dettor Ridley, and Dettor Laune, Prisoners in Oxford, for the faithful testimony of Gods holy Word.

A Letter written to D. Cranmer and his fellowes by Dr. Taylor.

Many protest God as whom we call it, that is, words and outward profession; but it is worth to him as it is in deed, and in suffering for his sake.

Right Reverend Fathers in the Lord, I wish you to enjoy continually Gods grace and peace through Jesus Christ; and God be praised again for this your most excellent promotion which ye are called unto at this present, that is, that ye are counted worthy to be allowed amongst the number of Christs records and witnesses. England hath had but a few learned Bishops, that would stick to Christ ad ignem inclusivè. Once again I thank God heartily in Christ for your most happy on-set, most valiant proceeding, most constant suffering of all such infamies, hissings, clappings, taunts, open rebukes, loss of living and liberty, for the defence of Gods cause, truth, and glory: I cannot utter with pen how I rejoyce in my heart for you three such Captains in the forward under Christs Cross, Banner, or Standard in such a cause and skirmish, when not only one or two of our dear Redeemers strong holds are besieged, but all his chief Castles ordained for our safeguard, are traiterously impugned. This your enterprize in the fight of all that be in Heaven, and of all Gods people in earth, is most pleasant to behold. This is another manner of Nobility, then to be in the fore-front in worldly warfares. For Gods sake pray for us, for we fail not daily to pray for you. We are stronger and stronger in the Lord, his Name be praised, and we doubt not but ye be so in Christs own sweet School. Heaven is all and wholly of our side; therefore Gaudete in Domino semper, & iterum gaudete & exultate, i. Rejoyce always in the Lord: and again, rejoyce and be glad.

Your assured in Christ,

Rowland Taylor.

Their Opinion or Perswasion was this; that in the Sacrament was the memorial only of Christs death and passion: for (said they) Jesus Christ is ascended up into Heaven, and is on the right hand of God the Father, according to the Scriptures, and not in the Sacrament, as he was born of the Virgin Mary.

For this they were burned. In whose suffering their constancy worthily was to be wondered at, who being so simple Women, so manfully stood to the confession and testimony of Gods Word and Verity: Infirmach, that when they had prepared and undressed themselves ready to the fire, with comfortable words of the Scripture they earnestly required the People to credit and to lay hold on the Word of God, and not upon mans devices and inventions, despising the Ordinances and Institutions of the Romish Antichrist, with all his Superstitions and rotten Religion; and so continuing in the torment of fire, they held up their hands, and called unto God constantly so long as life did endure.

This Pottens Wife in a night a little before her death, being asleep in her bed, saw a bright burning fire, right up as a Pole, and one the side of the fire she thought there stood a number of Queen Marys friends looking on. Then being asleep, she seemed to muse with her self whether her fire should burn so bright or no; and indeed her suffering was not far unlike to her dream.

This also I thought further to note, how these two being always together in prison, the one which was Michael's Wife, seemed to be nothing so ardent and zealous as Pottens Wife was, although (God be thanked) they did stoutly stand to the confession of the truth both; but when the said Michael's Wife came to the stake, and saw nothing but present death before her she much exceeded the other in joy and comfort; albeit both of them did joyfully suffer, as it was marvelled at of those that knew them, and did behold their end. And thus these two Martyrs ended their lives with great Triumph: the Lord grant we may do the like, Amen.

Persecution in the Diocess of Salisbury.

After these two Women of Ipswich, succeeded three men, which were burnt the same Month at one fire in Salisbury, who in the like quarrel with the other that went before them and led the dance, spared not their Bodies, to bring their Souls to the celestial felicity, where of they were thoroughly assured in Christ Jesus by his promises, as soon as the furious flames of fire had put their Body and Souls asunder.

The Story of John Maundrel, William Coberley, and John Spicer, Martyrs.

First John Maundrel, which was the Son of Robert Maundrel of Rend in the County of Wiltshire Farmer, was from his Childhood brought up in Husbandry, and after he came to mans estate, did abide and dwell in a Village called Buchampsey, in the Parish of Kevel within the County of Wiltshire, aforesaid, where he had Wife and Children, being of good name and fame. Which John Maundrel, after that the Scripture was translated into English by the faithful Apostle of England, William Tindal, became a diligent hearer, and a fervent embracer of Gods True Religion; so that he delighted in nothing so much, as to hear and speak of Gods Word, never being without the New Testament about him, although he could not read himself. But when he came into any company that could read, his book was always ready, having a very good Memory; so that he could recite by heart most places of the New Testament, his Conversation and living being very honest and charitable, as his Neighbours are able to testify.

So it was, that in the days of King Henry the eighth, at what time Doctor Trignon, and Doctor Lee did visit Abbeys, the said John Maundrel was brought before Doctor Trignon at an Abbey called Edington, within the County of Wiltshire aforesaid; where he was accused that he had spoken against the Holy Water and Holy Bread, and such like Ceremonies, and for the same did wear a white sheet, bearing a candle in his hand about the Market, in the Town of the Devises, which is in the said County. Nevertheless, his fervency did not abate, but by Gods merciful assistance he took better hold, as the sequel thereof did declare.

For in the days of Queen Mary, when Popery was restored again, and Gods True Religion put to silence, the said John Maundrel left his own House and departed into the County of Gloucestershire, and into the North part of Wiltshire, wandering from one to another to such men as he knew feared God, with whom as a servant to keep their Cattel, he there did remain with John Bridges or some other at Kingwood; but after a time he returned to his Country, and there coming to the Pyes to a friend of his named Anthony Cleve, had talk and Conference with him in a Garden, of returning home to his house.

And when the other exhorted him by the words of Scripture, to fly from one City to another, he replied again by the words of the Apocalyp 21. of them that be fearful, &c. said, that he needs must go home, and so did. Where he with Spicer and Coberley used at times to resort and confer together.

At length upon the Sunday following they agreed together to go to the Parish Church called Kevel, where the said Maundrel and the other two, seeing the Parishioners in the procession to follow and worship the Idol there carried, advertised them to leave the same, and to return to the living God, namely speaking to one Robert Barksdale head man of the Parish, but he took no regard to their words.

After this, the Vicar came into the Pulpit, who there being about to read his Bedroll, and to pray for the Souls in Purgatory; the said John Maundrel speaking with an audible voice, said, that was the Popes pinfold, the other two affirming the same. After which words, by Commandment of the Priest they were had to the stocks, where they remained till their service was done, and then were brought before a Justice of Peace, and to the next day carried to Salisbury all three, and presented before Bishop Capon, and W. Geoffrey being Chancellor of the Diocess. By whom they were imprisoned, and oftentimes examined of their faith in their Houses, but freedom openly. And at the last examination these were the Articles which the Chancellor alleged against them, being accompanied with the Sheriff of the shire, on Master S. Johns, and other Popish Priests in the Parish Church of Fisherion Anger, demanding how they did believe.

They answered, as Christian men should and ought to believe: and first they said, they believed in God the Father, and in the Son, and in the Holy Ghost, the 12. Articles of the Creed, the Holy Scripture from the first of Genesis to the last of the Apocalyp.

But that faith the Chancellor would not allow. Wherefore he apposed them in particular Articles: First, whether that they did not believe that in the Sacrament of the Altar (as he termed it) after the words of Consecration (spoken by the Priest at Mass, there remained no substance of Bread nor Wine, but Christs Body, Flesh and Blood, as he was born of the Virgin Mary. Whereunto they answered negatively, saying, that the Popish Mass was abominable Idolatry, and injurious to the Blood of Christ; but confessing that in a faithful Congregation, receiving the Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood, being duly mingled according to Christs institution, Christs Body and Blood is spiritually received of the faithful believer.

Also, being asked whether the Pope was supream head of the Church, and Christs Vicar on earth; they answered negatively, saying, that the Bishop of Rome doth usurp over Emperors and Kings, being Antichrist, and Gods enemy.

The Chancellor said, Will you have the Church without head?

They answered, Christ was head of his Church, and under Christ the Queens Majesty. What, said the Chancellor? a Woman head of the Church? Yes, said they, within her Graces Dominions.

Also, whether the Souls in Purgatory were delivered by the Popes pardons, and the suffrages of the Church.

They said, they believed faithfully that the Blood of Christ had purged their sins, and the sins of them that were saved, unto the end of the World, so that they feared nothing the Popes Purgatory, or esteemed his pardons.

Also, whether Images were necessary to be in the Churches, as Lay-mens books, and Saints to be prayed unto and worshipped.

They answered negatively; John Maundrel adding that wooden Images were good to roist a shoulder of Mutton, but evil in the Church; whereby Idolatry was committed.

Those Articles thus answered (for their Articles were one, and their answers in manner like) the Chancellor read their condemnation, and so delivered them to the Sheriff. Then spake John Spicer, saying, B b b 3

Sentence read against these three Martyrs.

Oh Master Sheriff, now must you be their Butcher, that you may be guilty also with them of innocent Blood before the Lord. This was the 23. day of March, Anno 1556. and the 24. day of the same month they were carried out of the Common Gaol to a place betwixt Salisbury and Wilton, where were two Poles set for them to be burnt at. Which Men coming to the place, kneeled down, and made their prayers secretly together, and then being disclosed to their Shirts, John Maundrel spake with a loud voice, Not for all Salisbury. Which words men judged to be an answer to the Sheriff, which offered him the Queens Pardon if he would recant. And after that in like manner spake John Spicer, saying, this is the joyfulllest day that ever I saw. Thus were they three burnt at two Stakes: where most constantly they gave their Bodies to the fire, and their Souls to the Lord for testimony of his T ruth.

As touching William Cokerley, this moreover is to be noted, that his Wife also, called Alice, being apprehended, was in the Keepers house the same time detained while her husband was in Prison. Where the Keepers Wife named Agnes Penicote, had secretly heated a Key fire hot, and laid it in the grass in the backside. So speaking to Alice Cokerley to fetch her the Key in all haste, the said Alice went with speed to bring the Key, and so taking up the Key in half did pitteously burn her hand. Whereupon the crying out at the sudden burning of her hand; Ah thou drab, quoth the other, thou that canst not abide the burning of the Key, how wilt thou be able to abide burning thy whole Body, and so the afterward revoked. But to return again to the story of Cokerley, who being somewhat learnt, and being at the Stake was somewhat long a burning as the wind flew: after his Body was scorched with the fire, and his left arm drawn and taken from him by the violence of the fire, that the flesh being burnt to the white bone, at length he stooped over the Chain, and with the right hand, being somewhat flunked, knocked upon his breast softly, the Blood and matter issuing out of his mouth. Afterward when they all thought he had been dead, suddenly he rose right up with his Body again. And thus much concerning these three Salisbury Martyrs.

A discourse of the Death and Martyrdom of six other Martyrs suffering at London, whose names here followeth.

About the 23. day of April, Anno Dom. 1556. were burned in Smithfield at one fire, these six constant Martyrs of Christ, suffering for the profession of the Gospel, viz.

Robert Drakes, Minister.
William Tyms, Curate.
Richard Spurge Sheerman.
Thomas Spurge, Fuller.
John Carvel, Weaver.
George Ambrose, Fuller.

They were all of Essex, and so of the Diocese of London, and were sent up, some by the Lord Rich, and some by others at sundry times, unto Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, then Lord Chancellor of England, about the 22. day of March, Anno 1555. Who after small examination, sent them, some unto the King's Bench, and others unto the Marshalsea, where they remained almost all the whole year, until the death of the said Bishop of Winchester, and had during that time nothing said unto them. Whereupon, after that Dr. Heath, Archbishop of Tork was chosen to the office of Lord Chancellorship, four of these persecuted Brethren, being now weary of this their long imprisonment, made their supplication unto the said Dr. Heath, requiring his favour and aid for their deliverance: the Copy whereof ensueth.

May it please your honourable good Lordship, for the love of God to tender the humble suit of your Lordships poor Orators, whose names are subscribed, which have lain in great misery in the Marshalsea, by the space of ten months and more, at the commandment of the late Lord Chancellor, to their utter undoing, with their Wives and Children. In consideration whereof, your Lordships said Orators do most humbly pray and beseech your good Lordship to suffer them to be brought before your Honour; and there, if any man of good Conscience can lay any thing to our charge, we trust either to declare our innocency against their accusations, or if otherwise their accusations can be proved true and we faulty, we are ready (God helping us) without our condign punishments to satisfy the Law according to your wife judgment, as we hope, full of fatherly mercy toward us and all men, according to your godly Office, in the which we pray for your godly success to the good pleasure of God, Amen.

This Supplication was sent (as is said) and subscribed with the names of these four under following?

George Ambrose.

Names subscribed to the Supplication.

Richard Spurge.

Upon the receipt and sight hereof, it was not long after, but Sir Richard Read Knight, then one of the Officers of the Court of the Chancery, the 16. day of January, was sent unto the Marshalsea to examine the said four Prisoners; and therefore beginning first with Richard Spurge upon certain demands, received his Answers thereunto: the effect whereof was, that he with others were complained upon by the Parson of Bocking unto the Lord Rich, for that they came not unto their Parish Church of Bocking, where they had inhabited; and thereupon was by the said Lord Rich sent unto the late Lord Chancellor, about the 22. day of March last past Viz. Anno 1555.

And farther, he said, that he came not to the Church since the first alteration of the English service into Latin (Christmas day then a twelvemonth only excepted) and that, because he disliked both the same and the Mass also, as not consonant and agreeing with Gods holy Word.

Moreover, he required that he might not be any more examined upon the matter, unless it pleased the Lord Chancellor that then was, to know his fault therein, which to him he would willingly utter.

Thomas Spurge.

Thomas Spurge being then next examined, made the same answer in effect that the other had done; confessing, that he absented himself from the Church, because the Word of God was not there truly taught, and nor the Sacraments of Christ duly ministered in such sort as was prescribed by the same Word. And being farther examined of his belief concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, he said; That if any could accuse him thereof, he would then make answer as God had given him knowledge therein.

George Ambrose.

He like answer made George Ambrose, adding moreover, that after he had read the late Bishop of Winchester's Book, intitled, De vera obedientia, with Boners Preface thereunto annexed, inveighing (both) against the Authority of the Bishop of Rome, he did much less set by their doings then before.

John Carvel.

John Carvel agreeing in other matters with them, answered, that the cause why he did forbear the coming to the Church, was, that the Parson there had preached two contrary Doctrines. For first, in a Sermon that he made at the Queens first entry to the Crown, he did exhort the People to believe the Gospel; for it was the Truth, and if they did not believe it, they should be damned. But in a second Sermon, he preached that the ANNO 1556. Testament was false* in forty places, which contrariety in him was a cause amongst other of his absenting from the Church.

Robert Drakes.

ABOUT the fourth day of March next after, Robert Drakes also was examined, who was Parson of Thundersley in Essex, and had there remained the space of three years. He was first made Deacon by Dr. Taylor of Hadley, at the commandment of Dr. Cranmer, late Archbishop of Canterbury. And within one year after (which was the third year after King Edward) he was by the said Archbishop and Dr. Ridley Bishop of London, admitted Minister of Gods holy Word and Sacraments, not after the order then in force, but after such order as was after established; and was presented unto the said Benefice of Thundersley by the Lord Rich, at the suit of Mr. Causton and Mr. Treheron; and now notwithstanding was sent up by the said Lord Rich, with the others before-mentioned: and at his coming to the Bishop of Winchester, was by him demanded whether he would conform himself like a Subject to the Laws of this Realm then in force. To the which he said he would abide all Laws that stood with the Laws of God; and thereupon was committed to Prison, where he and the rest above-named did remain ever since.

William Tyms.

NOW remaineth likewise to declare the examination of William Tyms, Deacon and Curate of Hockley in Essex. But before I come to his Examination, first here is to be opened and set forth the order and manner of his trouble, how and by whom he was first apprehended in Essex, and from thence sent up to London: the story whereof followeth in this manner.

The story of William Tyms Deacon and Curate of Hockley, with the manner of his taking.

THERE was at Hockley in Queen Maries days two Sermons preached in the Woods, the which Woods were appertaining to Mr. Tyrel; and the name of the one Wood was called Plumborough-Wood, and the other Beckes-Wood, and there was at the same Sermons an honest man and his wife with him, whose name was John Gye, the which Gye was Mr. Tyrels Servant, and did dwell under him, being his Herd at a Farm of his called Plumborough. Shortly after it was known to Mr. Tyrel, how that his Woods were polluted with Sermons, the which he did take very evil, and much matter did arise about it, as an unlawful Assembly; the which was laid to John Gyes charge, because he did not disclose that unlawful act to his Master, being then in the Communion of Peace, appointed at that time to keep down the Gospel, the which he did to the uttermost, as it may appear in many of his acts. Good God give him repentance if it be thy will.

Shortly after it pleased Mr. Tyrel to come to Hockley to sift out this matter, and to know who was at these Preachings. Well, there were found many faulty; for it is supposed there were an hundred persons at the least. So it pleased Mr. Tyrel to begin first with John Gye, and asked him where that naughty fellow was that served their Parish, one Tyms; for it is told me (said he) that he is the cause to bring these naughty Fellows into the Country. Therefore I charge thee Gye to fetch me this naughty Fellow Tyms, for thou knowest where he is. No, said Gye, I do not know. So in no wise could he make him fetch him.

Then stepped forth another of Master Tyrels men, willing to shew his Master pleasure, whose name was Richard Sheriff, and said to his Master; Sir, I know where he is. Well, said Master Tyrel, go to the Constables, and charge them to bring him to me.

So this Sheriff being diligent, made sure work, and had him brought before his Master with the Constables, whose names be these Edward Hedge, and John Jones, of Hadley, and James, of Hadley.

So when he came before the said Mr. Tyrel, then Mr. Tyrel commanded all men to depart; and it was widely done, for he was not able to open his mouth against Tyms without reproach, and there he kept him about three hours. But there were some that listened at the walls, and heard Mr. Tyrel say thus to Tyms.

Me thinketh (said he) that when I see the blessed Rood, it maketh me think of God.

Why Sir, said Tyms, if an Idol that is made with mans hands doth make you remember God; how much more ought the Creatures of God, as man being his workmanship, or the grass, or the Trees that bring forth fruit, make you remember God?

So Mr. Tyrel ended his talk with Tyms: it should seem in an heat, for he brast out and called him traitorily Knave.

Why Sir, said Tyms, in King Edwards days you did affirm the Truth that I do now.

Affirm, quoth Tyrel: may by Gods Body, I never thought it with my heart.

Well, said Tyms, then I pray you Master Tyrel bear with me, for I have been a Traitor but a while, but you have been a Traitor six years.

After this Tyms was sent to London to the Bishop, Tyms sent and from him to the Bishop of Winchester, and so from up to London to the Kings Bench, and then was Mr. Tyrels rage created with them that were in the Woods at the Sermons. So Mr. Tyrel took away Gyes Coat, and gave it to John Traiford, and sent him to St. Tupes to see good rule kept there.

When Tyms came before the Bishop of London, there was at that time the Bishop of Bath, and there was William Tyms examined of his Faith before them both. So before B. Tower, and the Bishop of Bath, he had wherewith to answer them both; for the Constables did say that brought him before the Bishop, that they never heard the like. Then the Bishop (as though he would have had Tyms to turn from the Truth) said to the Constables, I pray you (said he) give him good counsel, that he may turn from his error. My Lord, said the Constables, he is at a point, for he will not turn.

Then both the Bishops waxed weary of him, for he had troubled them about six or seven hours. Then the Bishops began to play Tyms cake, and to flatter him, saying, Ah good Fellow (said they) thou art bold, and thou hast a good fresh spirit, we would thou hadst learning to thy spirit. I thank you (my Lords) said Tyms, and both you be learned, and I would you had a good spirit to your learning. So thus they broke up, and sent Tyms to the Bishop of Winchester, and there were Edward Hedge and John James the Constables afore-named discharged, and Tyms was commanded to the Kings Bench, where he was mightily strengthened with the good men that he found there.

And thus hitherto ye have heard, first upon what occasion this William Tyms was apprehended, how he was intreated of Mr. Tyrel the Justice, and by him sent up to the Ordinary of the Diocese, which was Bishop Boner; who after certain talk and debating he had with the said Tyms, at length directed him to the Bishop of Winchester, being then Lord Chancellor, and yet living, and so was commanded by him upon the same to the Kings Bench.

Here by the way is to be understood, that Tyms as he was but a Deacon, so he was but simply, or at least not Priestly apparelled, forasmuch as he went not in a Gown, but in a Coat; and his Hofen were of two colours, the upper part white, and the neather stocks of Sheeps russet. Whereupon the proud Prelate sending for him to come before him, and seeing his simple attire, began to mock him, saying, Ah Sirra, are you a Deacon? Yes, my Lord, that I am, quoth Tyms. So methinketh, said the Bishop, ye are decked like a Deacon. My Lord, said Tyms, my vesture doth not so much vary from a Deacon; but methinketh your apparel doth as much vary from an Apollle.

So then there spake one of the Bishops Gentlemen, My Lord (said he in mockage) give him a Chair, a Toft and Drink, and he will be lusty. But the Bishop bade, have him away, and commanded him to come before him again the next day at an hour appointed.

W. Tyms brooght examined before B. Tower and the Bishop of Bath.

Talk between the Bishop of Winchester and W. Tyms.

But

But Winchester, for lack of leisure, or because of sickness growing upon him, or for what cause else I know not, either would not, or could not attend unto him, but returned him again to his ordinary Bishop from whence he came. So William Tyms being put off again to Bishop Baner, was placed together and coupled with the other five Martyrs above named, and with them brought together to publick examination before the Bishop the 21. day of March, first in the Bishops Palace of London, where the said Bishop after his accustomed manner proceeding against them, enquired of them their faith upon the Sacrament of the Altar. To whom they answered, that the Body of Christ was not in the Sacrament of the Altar really and corporally, after the words of consecration spoken by the Priest: of the which opinion they had been of long time, some later, some sooner, even as God of his mercy did call upon them unto the knowledge of his Gospel.

Then the Bishops Chaplains began to reason with them, but with no great Authority either of the Scriptures, or of the ancient Fathers (ye may be sure) as other their large conferences with the learned do already declare.

Another Examination of Tyms and Drakes, and the rest before the Bishop of London.

These five Martyrs where R. Drakes, Th. Spurge, Rob. Spurge, Level, and another. Their examinations before the Bp. of London. Sacrament of the Altar.

March 21. The 23. day of the same month next after, the Bp. sent again for Tyms and Drakes, and Ex officio, did object unto them certain Articles the sum and manner whereof were the same which before were objected to Whittle, Greene, Tudson, Went, Brown, Elise, Foster, Joan Lushford, look before. And the 26. day of the same month, he sent for the other four, ministring unto them also the same general Articles. Unto the which they all in effect answered in matters touching their faith, as did the said Barlet Greene and the rest. Other appearances they had, as the Bishops common manner of proceeding was more (as I have often said) for order and form of Law, then for any zeal of justice.

March 21. But in conclusion, the 28. day of his month of March, William Tyms, and Robert Drakes, with the other four above named, were brought to the open Confistory in Pauls before the said Bishop of London to be condemned for Heresie.

The Bishop first began in this or like sort; Tyms, quoth he, I will begin with thee first, for thou art and hast been the ring-leader of these thy companions, thou hast taught them Heresies, and confirmed them in their erroneous opinions, and hast endeavoured as much as in thee lyeth, to make them like unto thy self. If thy fault had not tended to the hurt of other, I would then have used thee more charitably, and not have brought thee to this open rebuke. I would according to the rule of Christ in the 18. of Matthew, have told thee thy fault between me and thee; if thou wouldst not have heard me, I would not so have left thee, but I with two or three other would have exhorted thee; if that would not have served, then would I have told the Church, &c. But for that thy fault is open and manifest to the World, and thou thyself remainest stout in thine error, this charitable dealing is not to be extended towards thee: I have therefore thought good to proceed by another rule, whereof St. Paul speaketh, 1 Timothy 5. Such as sin, rebuke them openly, that other may fear. For this cause art thou brought before me in the face of this People, to receive judgment according to thy deserts. Let me see what thou canst say, why I should not proceed against thee as thine Ordinary.

March 18. My Lord (quoth Tyms) will you now give me leave to speak? Yes, quoth the Bishop. Then said Tyms; My Lord, I marvel that you will begin with a lie. You call me the ring-leader and teacher of this company, but how untruly you have said, shall shortly appear: for there is none of all these my Brethren, which are brought hither as prisoners, but when they were at liberty and out of prison, they dissented from you and your doings, as much as they do at this present; and for that cause they are now prisoners.

So it is evident, that they learned not their Religion in prison. And as for me, I never knew them, until such time as I by your commandment was prisoner with them; how could I then be their ring-leader and teacher? So that all the World may see how untruly you have spoken. And as for my fault which you make so grievous, whatsoever you judge of me, I am well assured that I hold none other Religion then Christ preached, the Apostles witnessed, the Primitive Church received, and now of late the Apostolical and Evangelical Preachers of this Realm have faithfully taught; for the which you have cruelly burned them, and now you seek our Blood also. Proceed on hardly by what rule you will; I force not, I do not refuse you for my Ordinary.

Then said the Bishop, I perceive thou wilt not be contented their ring-leader. How faint thou, wilt thou submit thyself to the Catholic Church as an Obedient Child? in so doing thou shalt be received and do well enough, otherwise thou shalt have judgment as an Heretic.

Then one of the prisoners (whose name is not certainly known) said; My Lord, you are no upright Judge, for you judge after your own lust. But if you will judge us according to the Holy Testaments of Christ, which is the Word of Truth, we will accord to your judgment; for unto that Word we wholly submit our selves. But as for your judgment without the Truth God shall condemn. And this prisoner was very earnestly in hand with the Bishop, that they might be judged by the Word of God.

With this the Bishop was offended, calling him busie knave, and commanded him to hold his tongue, or else he should be had away to a place of smaller cafe.

Then Tyms answered and said; My Lord, I doubt not but I am of the Catholic Church whatsoever you judge of me. But as for your Church, you have before this day renounced it, and by Corporal Oath promised never to consent to the same. Contrary to the which you have received into this Realm the Popes Authority, and therefore you are falsely perjured and forsworn all the sort of you. Besides this, you have both spoken and written very earnestly against that Usurped Power, and now you do burn them that will not acknowledge the Pope to be Supreme Head.

Have I, quoth the Bishop? Where have I written any thing against the Church of Rome?

My Lord, quoth Tyms, the Bishop of Winchester wrote a very learned Oration, intituled, De vera obedientia, which containeth worthy matter against the Romish Authority. Unto the which book you made a Preface, inveighing against the Bishop of Rome, reproving his Tyranny and falsehood, calling his power false and pretended. The book is extant, and you cannot deny it.

Then was the Bishop somewhat abashed, and looking upon such as were present, spake very gently, saying; Lo, here is a goodly matter indeed. My Lord of Winchester being a great learned man, did write a book against the supremacy of the Popes Holiness, and I also did write a Preface before the same book, tending to the same effect. And thus did we because of the perilous World that then was. For then was it made treason by the laws of this Realm to maintain the Popes Authority, and great danger it was to be suspected a favourer of the See of Rome; and therefore fear compelled us to bear with the time, for otherwise there had been no way but one. You know when any uttered his Conscience in maintaining the Popes Authority, he suffered death for it.

And then turning his tale unto Tyms, he said; But since that time, even since the coming in of the Queens Majesty, when we might be bold to speak our Conscience we have acknowledged our faults, and my Lord of Winchester himself shamed not to recant the same at Pauls Cross. And also thou thyself feelest that I stand not in it, but willingly have submitted my self. Do thou also as we have done.

My Lord, quoth Tyms, that which you have written against the supremacy of the Pope, may be well approved by the Scriptures. But that which you now do, is against the Word of God, as I can well prove.

R. Baner charged with perjury and inconsistency.

Baner recited to Winch. book De Vera obedientia.

R. Baner confessed himself by fear.

Tyms again replied to the Bishop.

Anno 1556. Then another, I suppose it was Dr. Cooke, said; Tyms, I pray thee let me talk with thee a little, for I think we two are learned alike. Thou speakest much of the Scripture, and yet understandest it not. I will tell thee to whom thou mayst be compared: Thou art like to one which intending to go on hunting, riseth up early in the morning, taketh his Hounds, and forth he goeth, up to the hills, and down into the vallies; he passeth over the fields, over hedge and ditch, he searcheth the woods and thickets; thus laboureth he all the whole day, without finding any game. At night home he cometh weary of his travel, not having caught any thing at all; and thus fareth it by thee. Thou labourst in reading of the Scriptures, thou takest the Letter, but the meaning thou knowest not, and thus thy reading is as unprofitable unto thee, as hunting was unto the man I spake of even now.

The answer of Tyms to the Hunters similitude.
Sir, quoth Tyms, you have not well applied your similitude; for I praise God, I have not read the Scriptures unprofitably; but God, I thank him, hath revealed unto me so much as I doubt not is sufficient for my salvation.

Dr. Cooke's Reason.
Then said the Bishop; You brag much of knowledge, and yet you know nothing: you speak much of Scripture, and you know not what Scriptures. I pray thee tell me; How knowest thou that thing to be the Word of God, which thou callest Scripture?

Thomas Drake's answer.
To this answered Robert Drakes, that he did know it to be the Word of God, for that it doth shew unto men their salvation in Christ, and doth revoke and call back all men from wicked life, unto a pure and undefiled conversation.

Dr. Cooke's reply.
The Bishop replied, that the heathen Writers have taught precepts of good living, as well as the Scripture, and yet their writings are not esteemed to be Gods Word.

Tyms answers to Dr. Cooke.
To this answered Tyms, saying; The Old Testament beareth witness of those things which are written in the New, for (quoth he) there is nothing taught in the New Testament, but it was fore-shewed in the Law and Propets.

Dr. Cooke denying the principles of Divinity, Eja 59.
I will deny all, quoth the Bishop, I will deny all; what sayst thou then? Then Robert Drakes alleged a sentence in Latine out of the Prophet Eja, in the 59. Chapter of his Prophesie; Spiritus meus qui est in te, &c. My Spirit Which is in thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of the seed of thy seed from henceforth even for ever; meaning thereby to prove, that he which had the Spirit of God, could thereby discern and judgetruly which was Gods Word: But before he could explicate his mind, he was interrupted by the Bishop, who spake unto Dr. Pendleton, saying.

Dr. Cooke calling for more help. Dr. Pendleton's speech for talk.
Master Doctor, I pray you say somewhat unto these Folks that may do them some good. Then Dr. Pendleton, as he leaned near unto the Bishop, covered his face with both his hands; to the end he might the more quietly devise what to say; but other talk was presently ministred, so that for that time he said nothing.

And thus much William Alsbury, witness hereof, being present therat, so far as he heard, hath faithfully recorded and reported. What more was spoken and there said for they made not yet an end a good while after because he departed then out of the house, he doth not know, nor did hear.

Then the Bishop, after this and such like communication thus passed between them, proceeding at length in form of Law, caused both his Articles and Answers to the same, there and then to be openly read: the sum of which his Confession recorded and left by his own hand writing, tended to this effect as followeth.

The Articles for the which William Tyms of Hockley in Essex, was condemned in the Consistory in Pauls, the 28. day of March, with his Answers and Confession upon the same.

Articles answered by W. Tyms.
First, I did truly confess and believe, that I was baptized, in the true Catholick Church of Christ; for when I was baptized, there was the clement and the Word of God, according to Christs institution. And my Godfathers and Godmothers did promise for me, that I should forsake the Devil, and all his works, and that I should keep Gods Commandments; and believe all the Articles of the Christian Faith; the which I do believe at this day, and with Gods help I trust to do while I live; for it was not the wickedness of the Minister that made the Sacrament of none effect, &c.

Item, I confessed two Sacraments; and but two in Christs true Church; that is, the Sacrament of Baptism, and the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, and that Christ is present with his Sacraments, as it pleaseth him.

Item, I confessed that Christ hath a visible Church, wherein the Word of God is truly preached, and the Sacraments truly ministred.

Item, I confessed the See of Rome to be as the late Bishop of Winchester hath written in his Book, De vera obedientia, to the which I said unto the Bishop of London, that he had made a godly Preface; and also John Bale hath plainly declared in his Book, called the Image of both Churches, even so much as I believe thereof.

Item, I confessed the Mass to be blasphemy to Christs death and passion.

Item, I Confessed that in the Sacrament of the Altar Christ is not present either spiritually or Corporally; but as they use it, it is an abominable Idol.

Last of all, I confessed the Bishop of London to be mine Ordinary.

After this the Bishop falling to intreating and persuasions, earnestly exhorted him to revoke his Heresies (as he termed them) and to reform himself unto the Church of Rome, and not to stick so much to the literal sense of the Scriptures, but to use the interpretation of the old Fathers.

To the which Tyms answered, I will not reform my self thereunto. And I thank God, of this day; for I trust he will turn your curlings into blessings.

And furthermore, asking this question, he said; And what have you to maintain the real presence of Christ in the Sacrament, but only the bare Letter?

We have (quoth the Bishop) the Catholick Church. No, said Tyms, you have the Popish Church of Rome for you, for which you be perjured and forewarned. And the See of Rome is the See of Antichrist; and therefore to that Church I will not conform my self, nor dare consent unto it.

Then the Bishop seeing his constant boldness to be unmoveable, proceeding to his Condemnation, pronounced the sentence definitive upon him, and gave him over to the secular Power.

The Condemnation of Robert Drakes

After, calling for Robert Drakes, he used towards him the like manner of exhortation that he did before. To whom Drakes said; As for your Church of Rome, I utterly despise and deny it, with all the works thereof, even as I deny the Devil and all his works.

The Bishop then using his accustomed order of Law, with his like exhortations, at last gave him the like blessing that Tyms had, and so charged the Sheriff with him.

The Condemnation of Thomas Spurge, and of the other three Martyrs

Thomas Spurge being next demanded if he would return to the Catholick Church, said as followeth; As for your Church of Rome, I do utterly deny it: but to the true Catholick Church I am content to return, and continue in the same, whereof I believe the Church of Rome to be no part or member.

Then in fittie, calling the rest in their courses, and upon the like demands receiving the like answers, the said Bishop gave unto each of them their severall judgments, and so ridding his bloody hands, committed them unto the custody of the Sheriff of London, who sent them unto Newgate, whither they went all most joyfully, abiding there the Lords good time, wherein they should seal this their Faith with the shedding of their Blood; which they most stoutly and willingly performed, the fourteenth day of April, as before is mentioned.

THe grace, mercy, and peace of God our Father through Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour, with the sweet comfort of his holy and mighty Spirit, to the performance of his will, to your everlasting comfort, be with you my dear Sister Glascock, both now and evermore, Amen.

My most dear and entirely beloved Sister, yea Mother I might rightly well call you for the Motherly care which you have always had for me, I have me most heartily commended unto you, giving God most hearty thanks for you, that he hath given you so loving a heart to Christ's poor Gospel, and his poor afflicted flock for the same: and as you have full godly begun, so I beseech God to give you power to go forward in the same, and never more to look back, fearing neither fire, neither sword; and then I warrant you, you have not far to run.

And now (my dear Heart) remember well what I have taught you when I was present with you, and also written being absent, and no doubt we shall shortly meet again with a most joyful meeting. I go upon Friday next to the Bishop of London's Cole-house, which is the 20. day of March, where I think it will be hard for any of my Friends to speak with me. Howbeit I trust I shall not long tarry there, but shortly after be carried up after my dear Brethren and Sisters, which are gone before me into Heaven in a fiery Chariot: therefore now I take my leave of you, till we meet in Heaven; and hie you after. I have tarried a great while for you, and seeing you be so long a making ready, I will tarry no longer for you. You shall find me merrily singing, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Sabbath, at my Journeys end. Therefore now (my dear Heart) make good halt, and loyter not by the way, lest night take you, and so ye be shut out of the gate with the foolish Virgins. And now (my Sister) in witness that I have taught you nothing but the truth, here I write my name with my Blood for a testimonial unto you, that I will seal the simple Doctrine which I have taught you, with the rest. And thus fare you well: And God defend you from Antichrist, and all his Ministers, the false Priests, Amen.

God be merciful unto you, pardon and forgive all your sins, and send you Faith to believe the same, that you may be partaker of his heavenly Kingdom, Amen.

My dear Sister, I have most heartily commended unto you; and as I have lamented your falling from God, by being partaker with that Idolatrous Priest; so have I, since I heard of your earnest repentance, very much rejoiced, and also praised Almighty God for his mercy shewed unto you, in that he hath not left you to your self, but since your denial, he hath shewed his mercy on you, by looking back on you as he did on Peter, and so caused you to repent as Peter did, and bitterly to weep for your sins: whereas if God had left you to your self, you had run forward from one evil to another, till at length your heart should either have been hardened, or else you should have depaired of the mercy of God. And seeing that God hath been so merciful unto you as he hath been, be you not unthankful unto him for the same. For I certify you that your sorrowful heart that you have had, doth declare unto me that God hath pardoned and forgiven all your sins for the blood-shedding of that immaculate Lamb, Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour.

Therefore as Peter, after the time that Christ had forgiven him his sin, did boldly confess Christ before all his enemies; even so my dear heart in the Lord, seeing that God hath so mercifully pardoned and forgiven you your sins, now cleave unto him, and be at defiance with his enemies the Papists: and as they do bear witness with their Father the Devil, by going to the Church; and shedding the innocent blood of all those that will not go with them; even so do you bear witness with Christ, by not coming there: for all those that do go thither shall be partakers of their Brethren's blood, that is shed for the testimony of Christ, except they repent and amend; which grace that they may so do, I beseech the eternal God for his Christs sake, if it be his good will, to give them in his good time. And the same good God that hath been so merciful unto you to call you to repentance, him I beseech to keep you in his fear and love, that you may have always affiance in him, and evermore seek his honour and glory to your everlasting comfort in Christ, Amen. Thus fare you well, from the Kings-Bench this 28. of August.

Another Letter of William Tyms to certain godly Women of his Parish, followers of the Gospel.

Race, mercy, and peace from God the Father, through our Lord Jesus Christ, be with you both now and evermore, Amen.

Dear Sisters, I have me most heartily commended unto you, thanking you for the great kindness shewed unto me in this time of mine imprisonment, and not only unto me, but also unto my poor Wife and Children; and also for the great kindness that you shew unto all the living Saints that be dispersed abroad, and are fain to hide their heads for fear of this cruel persecution.

Dear Sisters, when I do remember your constancy in Christ, I call to remembrance the constancy of divers godly Women, as Susannah, Judith, Hester, and the good wife of Nabal, that through her godly conditions saved both her husbands life, and all her household, when David had thought to have slain him for his churlish answer that he sent him. Also I do remember Rahab that lodged the Lords Spies, how God preserved her and her whole household for her faithfulness that she bare to Gods People. So I do believe that when the Lord shall send his Angel to destroy these Idolatrous Egyptians here in England, and shall find the blood of the Lamb sprinkled on the door-post of your hearts, he will go by and not hurt you, but spare your whole households for your sakes. Also I do remember Mary Magdalen, how faithful she was; for she was the first that preached the Resurrection of Christ. Remember the blessed Martyr Anne Askew in our time, and follow her example of constancy. And for the love of God take heed that in no case you do consent to Idolatry, but stand fast to the Lord, as the good Woman did that had her seven Sons put to death before her face, and she always comforting them, yea and last of all suffered death her self, for the testimony of her God, which is the living God. Thus I beseech God to send you grace and strength to stand fast to the Lord, as she did, and then you shall be sure of the same Kingdom that she is sure of; to the which Kingdom I pray God bring both you and me, Amen.

give you grace to love your own Souls, and then I trust you will flee from all those things that should displease our good and merciful God, and hate and abhor all the company of those that would have you to worship God any otherwise than is contained in his holy Word. And beware of those Masters of Idolatry, that is, these Papistical Priests. My dear Brethren, for the tender mercy of God, remember well what I have said unto you, and also written, the which I am now ready to seal with my Blood. I praise God that ever I lived to see the day, and blessed be my good and merciful God, that ever he gave me a Body to glorifie his Name. And (dear Hearts) I do now write unto you for none other cause, but to put you in remembrance, that I have not forgotten you, to the end that I would not have you forget me but to remember well what I have simply by word of mouth and writing taught you. The which although it were most simply done, yet truly, as your own Conscience beareth me record: and therefore in any case take good heed that you do not that thing which your own Conscience doth condemn. Therefore come out of Sodom, and go to Heaven-ward with the servants and martyrs of God, lest you be partakers of the vengeance of God that is coming upon this wicked Nation, from the which the Lord God defend you, and send us a joyful meeting in the Kingdom of Heaven: unto the which God bring you all, Amen. Thus now I take my leave of you for ever in this world, except I be burned amongst you, which thing is uncertain unto me, as yet.

My most dear Brethren and Sisters in our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, I have me most heartily commended unto you, with hearty thanks for all the great liberality that you have shewed unto me, and especially now in this time of my necessity, when that God hath sent my poor Wife a Child in my Captivity; which is no little care to me, so to provide, that I might keep both the Child and my Wife from the Antichristian Church: the which thing I thank my God, through his most gracious providence, I have yet done, though it be (as ye know) great Charge, not to me, but to the Congregation of God; and it grieveth me that I have been so chargeable to them as I have been, and specially you my dear Brethren, I being so unworthy a member as I have been, and also of so small acquaintance; but such is the merciful goodness of God, so to move your hearts with Charity towards me. And as he hath moved your hearts so to do, even so I beseech God to give you power to forsake and refuse all things which be displeasing in his sight, and to do all things which be requisite to a Christian; and send you grace to go forwards in the same as you have godly begun, neither fearing fire nor sword. And, my most dear Hearts, remember well the simple plain Doctrine the which I have taught you, and also written unto you, which was the Truth, and for a testimony of the same, I trust that you shall shortly hear, or else see that I will seal the same with my Blood. And in the mean time I desire you all to remember me in your prayers, as I know you do, and as with Gods help I will do for you, that God, for his dear Son Christs sake, will so finish the days of our pilgrimage, that we may rest together with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the everlasting kingdom of Heaven; to the which I beseech the eternal God for his Christs sake to bring both you and all yours, Amen.

Another Letter of William Tyns to his Sister Colfox and Agnes Glascock.

GRACE and peace from God the Father of all mercy, through the merits of our dear Saviour Jesus Christ, be perceived and felt in the hearts of you, my dearly beloved Sisters in the Lord, by the mighty working of the Holy Ghost the Comforter, both now and evermore, Amen.

My most dear and entirely beloved Sisters in the Lord, after my most hearty Commendations, according to my most bounden duty, I do as I am accustomed, or at least bound to do, that is, I give you warning of your Enemies, which be the Papists, and take good heed to them, for they serve a crafty Master; yea, and as St. Peter faith, he sleepeth not, but goeth about like a roaring Lion, seeking whom he may devour. For your old familiar Friends, or worldly Companions, when they see that you will not run to the Idols Temple with them, it will seem a strange thing unto them, that ye run not to the same excess of riot, as St. Peter faith, and therefore they will speak evil of you, rail on you, and persecute you.

But, my dear Sisters, let it not trouble you, for it is but to try you, and let it not seem a strange thing unto you. But when they do so, remember wherefore it is, and for whose sake, even because you will not forsake God as they do. For the hatred they bear you, is for the Word of God, and then it is Gods cause, and I tell you he will revenge it. And therefore if ye be railed on, and troubled for his sake, think your selves most happy. For if you suffer with the Patriarchs, Prophets and Apostles, then shall ye be sure to be partakers of the same joy that they are in. Yea, you have heard by the Word of God, how cruelly the Tyrants always have persecuted the true Members of Christ, as he himself hath promised that they shall do unto the end of the world.

By the way I will bring to your remembrance the holy Martyr St. Stephen, who for favouring, maintaining and defending the same Doctrine that we now suffer for, was called a Blasphemer, and stoned to death at Jerusalem. And Christs Apostles were diversely afflicted all the world over for the same by this viperous generation. Antipas, the faithful witness of Christ was slain at Pergamus. Jehon for receiving of Paul and Silas, with other Disciples and teachers of the Gospel, was brought before the Council at Thessalonica, and accused for a fiditious traitor against Cæsar. No marvel therefore that at this day we be vexed on the same sort, maintaining the same cause, and favouring the teachers thereof. Is there any other reward following the true Servants of God now, than hath been afore-times? No surely, for so hath Christ promised. And if they have persecuted him, needs must they persecute his Members; if they have called the Master of the house Beelzebub, so will they do his household, You shall be hated of all men (saith Christ) for my Names sake.

It is no new thing, my dear Hearts, to see the true Members of Christ handled as in our days they be, as it is not unknown to you how they be cruelly entreated, and blasphemed without any reasonable cause. For Hereticks must they be taken, which follow not their traditions. And then they may as well call Christ an Heretic, for he never allowed their dirty Ceremonies. He never went a procession with a Cope, Crofs, or Candlestick. He never sensed Image, nor sang Latin Service. He never fate in Confession. He never preached of Purgatory, nor of the Popes Pardons. He never honoured Saints, nor prayed for the Dead. He never said Mass, Mattins, nor Evensong. He never commanded to fast Friday nor Vigil, Lent nor Advent. He never hallowed Church nor Chalice, Altars nor Palms, Candles nor Bells. He never made holy Water nor holy Bread, with such like. But such dumb Ceremonies, not having the express commandment of God, he calleth the leaven of the Pharisees, and damnable hypocritie; admonishing his Disciples to beware of them. He curseth all those that add to his Word such beggarly shadows, wiping their names clean out of the Book of Life. St. Paul faith, they have no portion with Christ, which wrap themselves again with such yokes of bondage.

Therefore my dear hearts, seeing that our good God hath by the light of his Holy Word, delivered us from all such dark, blind, dumb, beggarly traditions of men, stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free, and wrap not your selves again in the yoke of bondage. But let us always be ready, looking for the coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, which as Saint Peter faith, will come as a thief in the night. And our Captain Christ faith, If the good man of the house knew what hour the thief would come, he would surely watch.

Therefore my dear hearts, be of good comfort, although the World rage never so fore against you. And for your comfort mark well the great mercy of God, who according to his promise for the weakness of our nature hath so alwayed the heat of the fire, that our dear Brethren which are gone before us, to the sight of all men, have found it rather to be joy then pain. And think you surely God will be as merciful unto you, as he hath been unto them; and say with S. Paul, Rom. 8. Who shall separate us from the love of God? shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, either hunger, either nakedness, either peril, either sword? as it is written, for thy sake are we killed all the day long, &c.

Therefore (my dear Sisters) if to save your lives, any dissembling Gospellers would have you to go to the Idols Temple with them, say unto them; No, for my Mr. Christ faith, Matth. 10. He that would save his life, shall lose it. And in another place to comfort us he faith, There shall not one hair fall from your head, without it be your Heavenly Fathers will. And therefore say you that you will not be of that sort, that be neither hot nor cold, left God should frowne you out of his mouth. But make them this answer, saying; S. Paul faith, 2. Corinth. 6. Bear no strange yoke with the unbelievers. For what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, what company hath light with darkness, what concord hath Christ with Belial, either what part hath he that believeth, with an infidel? How agreeth the Temple of God with images?

And ye are the Temple of God, as God faith, I will dwell among them, and walk among them, and will be their God, and they shall be my People. Wherefore come out from among them, and separate your selves (saith the Lord) and touch no unclean thing: so will I receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my Sons and Daughters, saith the Lord.

Thus mine own Bowels in the Lord, as I began, so make I an end, bidding you beware of your enemies, and take up your Cross, and follow your Captain Christ in at the narrow gate here by persecution, and then you shall be sure to reign and rejoyce with him in his everlasting Kingdom, which he himself hath purchased with his own most precious Blood: to whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost, be all honour both now and for ever, Amen.

By me William Tyms.

Another Letter of William Tyms, with an Exhortation to all Gods faithful Servants, to eschew the Society of Idolaters, and Gods enemies.

Grace be with you, and peace from the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

I thank my God with all remembrance of you always in my prayers for you, and pray with gladness, because of the fellowship which ye have in the Gospel, from the first day that I knew you, until this day; and I am surely certified of this, that he which hath begun a good work in you, shall go forth with it, until the day of Jesus Christ, as it becometh me to judge of you; whom I have in my heart, and as companions of grace with me, even in my bonds. And thus I pray, that your love may increase more and more in knowledge. Good Brethren, I most heartily desire God, that as you have a willing mind to comfort my vile Earthly Body in this time of persecution, so he will strengthen you with his Holy Spirit, that my imprisonment do not discomform, but rather strengthen and comfort you, to see the goodness of God shewed unto me, in that being a man without learning, and brought before three such Bishops concerning Worldly Willam, he gave me both mouth and Willam; inasmuch that the Bp.

of London went away in a great haile from me, and after that he sent his man with a Bible, turning to the ninth chapter to the Hebrews, and the Bishop of Bath looking on it, said; What meaneth my Lord? this maketh nothing for his purpose. Then I looked on it, and said; my Lord seeth that I was weak, and therefore he hath helped me; for here he hath condemned the sacrifice of your Mase: for you say that you offer a daily sacrifice in your Mase, both for the quick and the dead; and here S. Paul faith Without Blood-shedding there is no forgiveness of sins; therefore that is here condemned. He answered, Yea, faith he, so? So say all such Hereticks, and so forth, with many like arguments, which my neighbors that heard them, can declare, therefore I leave them. This have I written, that you should not be afraid, but call upon God, as he hath commanded us to ask, and we shall have; Seek and you shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you. Also he hath commanded us to call on him in the day of trouble, and he hath promised to hear us. Therefore if we have not both mouth and Willam at his hand, the fault is in us, that either we will not repent us of our wickedness, and amend our lives, or else we be unfaithful, and believe not the promises of God; and so we our selves, are the cause that this Willam is lacking in us. Therefore let us repent and amend our lives, and God is merciful. And in any case, as I have always said unto you, since I first knew you, so say I now: Beware of Idolatry, and of your good intents; if not, mark what hath followed upon them that have left Gods commandments, and done their own good intents. Remember when the Children of Israel had made them a golden Calf, did not God say they had made a god, and would have destroyed them, had not Moses earnestly prayed for them? I let many others places alone that prove the Wrath of God to come upon the People for Idolatry; therefore as we will avoid the Wrath of God, let us keep us unstained from it. You have example out of the Old Testament, how loth the Godly Fathers were to be partakers with the wicked: And yet to see how little we regarded it, it would make any Christian mans heart to weep. God send us more grace. First look in the 11. and 12. of Genesis; Abraham, because he would not be partaker of their Idolatry, fled from the People of Caldea, being his native country. And in the 19. of Genesis. Let at the commandment of the Angels departed from Sodom, left he tarrying with the Sodomites should have been consumed with them. In the 21. of Genesis, Sarah would not suffer Isaac, which was given to mocking, to keep company with her Son Isaac, lest he should also become a mocker. Look in the 16. of Numbers, Moses at Gods appointment commanded the People to depart from the dwelling places of Chore, Dathan, and Abiram, lest they also should be all wrapped in their sins, and so perish among them. So do I, even as Moses Commanded them that they should not keep company with those wicked People, lest they should not keep company with those wicked People, lest the Vengeance of God should light on them, so do I (I say) give you warning that you should not keep company with the Idolaters, in their Idolatrous Temples, lest the wrath of God come upon you to destroy you.

Look what S. Paul faith in the second Epistle, and the sixth chapter to the Corinthians; Set your selves (saith he) therefore at large, and bear no strange yoke with the unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? what company hath light with darkness? what concord hath Christ with Belial: either what part hath he that believeth, with an infidel? How agreeth the Temple of God with images? And ye are the Temple of God, as faith God; I will dwell among them, and walk among them, and will be their God, and they shall be my People. Wherefore come out from among them, and separate your selves (saith the Lord) and touch no unclean thing.

Good Brethren mark what cometh of keeping company with the wicked. Syrach faith, He that toucheth pitch, shall be defiled therewith: and he that keepeth company with the proud, shall cloath himself with pride. Even so he that is familiar with Idolaters, cannot be unstained from Idolatry, except he do it to win them to Christ, as there be but a few that do: Yea, it may not be where Idolatry is openly committed, as for an example; Peter, so long as he continued with Christ and Christs Disciples, he continued continued in the truth, preached the truth, confessed openly Christ to be the Son of the living God, and promised that he would not only go to Prison, but also to what it is to very death with him: but when he came once into the Court into the Bishops House, he streighway was stricken with fure fear, that a poor Maiden and simple Ruffian (such a one as my Lord of London hath, that said, By Gods blood, if I meet with any of these vile Heretics, I will thrust an Arrow in him) when Peter (I say) was amongst them, he denied his Master, and swore that he never knew him, whom he, before he came there, boldly confessed before all men: and again, after that he had repented him of his wicked deed, he boldly preached to the believing Jews, commanding them among other his godly Exhortations, to save themselves from that untoward Generation. How many of our Priests before this storm of Perfection, when the Gospel was truly preached, were bold, and could say, They would dye rather than deny their Master? But when they come once into the Bishops Houses, they preach no more Christ, but utterly deny him: therefore I pray God keep them from thence, or else fend them more grace and strength. It is needfull to pray; therefore watch in prayer.

A vile servant of Bp. Zouari.

As it is. before this storm of Perfection, when the Gospel was truly preached, were bold, and could say, They would dye rather than deny their Master? But when they come once into the Bishops Houses, they preach no more Christ, but utterly deny him: therefore I pray God keep them from thence, or else fend them more grace and strength. It is needfull to pray; therefore watch in prayer.

Paul, all the while he was among the Bishops, was a cruel Persecutor, but after he was called of God from the Bishops, he became a true Preacher: therefore God keep all Christian men out of the hands of our Bishops. S. Paul in the fiftenth to the Romans, faith, I dare not speak any of those things that Christ hath not wrought by me. He faith also, Rom. 16. I beseech you brethren, mark them that make division, and give occasion of evil, contrary to the Doctrine that ye have learned, and them avoid: for they that are such serve not the Lord Jesus Christ, but their own bellies, and with sweet and flattering words deceive the hearts of the simple. Our Master Christ himself hath given us warning which they be: for he hath set the plain mark on them, in the 24. of Matthew, if they say here is Christ, or there is Christ, believe them not, faith Christ: if they say, he is in the desert, go not forth. If they say, he is in the secret place, believe them not. And I pray you, where can he be more secret, then in so small a piece of bread? For my Lord of London, like a Liar, said to me, that after the words be spoken, there remaineth neither Bread nor Wine. Then I asked him what he said to David, where he faith, Thou shalt not suffer thy holy One to see corruption. How say you to that? Will not the Sacrament of the Altar putrifie or corrupt? He answered, Yes. I asked him, what it was that did corrupt, if there were neither Bread nor Wine. He answered, and said the Accidents. I said unto him, It was a mad Accident without Substance: for you say, there is neither Bread nor Wine, and then there is nothing to corrupt: with many such like Arguments.

Bp. Zouari not able to answer to this place of David.

* How can corruption be referred to Accidents, when by all philosophy generation and corruption belong only to the body, and not to the bread, and not to the substance?

Therefore beware of them, for they go about to deceive you with such Arguments. Say not but ye be warned, and a great deal the more worthy of your damnation, if they deceive you, because you have had so much warning. Repent you betimes of your sinful lives, and amend, and then no doubt but God will either turn their hearts, or else take them away, or else he will give us that, that he promised to his Disciples, if we be contented to take the same reward they had. And if we disdain the one, let us not look for the other. For he that will be his Fathers heir, must be contented to receive his Fathers correction. For S. Paul faith in the twelfth to the Hebrews, If we be not under correction, wherewith all are partakers, then are we bastards and not sons.

And you know what belongeth to a bastard; he shall not be his Fathers heir. And if we remember our selves well, how negligent we have been to our Fathers commandment, we shall find our selves worthy to be corrected at his hand. If we refuse his correction, he will reftle us to be his sons. I pray you look what he promised to his Disciples, and I pray you also look how willingly they received it. And so must we do, if we will be partakers with them. First let us see what Christ promised to his Disciples. Look in the tenth of S. Matthew, and there shall you see these words, Behold, I send you forth as sheep among wolves. Be wise therefore as serpents, and innocent as doves. Beware of men, for they shall deliver you up to the Councils, and shall scourge you in their Synagogues: ye shall be brought before the Head-men and Kings for my Names sake. But when they put you up, take ye no thought, how or when ye shall speak: for it shall be given you in the same hour what ye shall speak. For it is not you that speak, but the Spirit of my Father which speaketh in you, &c. Read the whole Chapter, for it is very comfortable to a Christian man; and mark it well, and you shall find what we ought to do in the time of Perfection. Also look in the second Epistle of S. Paul to the Corinthians, and the fourth Chapter, he faith, For we which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus sake, that the life also of Jesus might appear in our mortal flesh. Thus have you heard that S. Paul doth boast of Perfection; even so should we, for it is the way to bring us to rest.

Therefore let us strive to enter in at the narrow gate, and let us remember the saying of S. Paul in the 21. Chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, when he was going to Jerusalem. When he was in the House of Philip the Evangelist, these came in a Prophet, and took off his girdle, and bound his hands and his feet, saying, Thus shall they do with the man that turneth this gentle when he cometh to Jerusalem. When the Disciples heard that, they would have persuaded him that he should not go thither: here you shall see what answer this Master made them; he was a faithful Shepherd; What do ye weeping and breaking of my heart? I am not ready to be bound only, but also to dye at Jerusalem, for the Name of the Lord Jesus.

Yet I think there be some that will say, that I needed not to have been taken, if I would have kept me out of the way. But I say unto them, that the thinking away of so many of our Shepherds as be gone, maketh so many of the Flock to scatter; which will be required at their hands, of the Master of the Sheep. What will he say to them at the day of Account when they shall come to receive their wages? He shall say to them, Depart from me ye wicked Hirelings, for when ye saw the Wolf come, ye ran away, and left my Sheep in the Wilderness. If you had been good Shepherds, you would rather have lost your lives than have lost one Sheep committed to your charge, through your fault. And I pray you, what care be the Sheep in, when their Shepherd runneth away from them? I need not tell you, you know the danger that followeth so well.

A note for them which think away havinge Care.

Therefore let us pray to God to send us faithful Shepherds, and also obedient Sheep, that will not hear a strangers voice. I would all men would mark well the saying of S. Paul in the eighth to the Romans, where he faith in these words, Who shall separate us from the love of God? shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or nakedness, either peril, either sword? As it is written, For thy sake are we killed all the day long, and are counted as sheep appointed to be slain: nevertheless we overcome strongly through his help that loved us. Yea, I am sure that neither death, neither life, neither Angels, neither rule, neither power, neither things present, neither things to come, neither height, neither depth, neither any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, and so forth. Also he faith in another place, All that will live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution, 2 Tim. 3. Thus I prove it to be our heavenly Fathers rod: therefore let us thankfully receive it like obedient Children, and then our Father will love us.

Yet hear what S. Peter faith in his first Epistle, and the fourth Chapter, Dearly beloved (faith he) be ye troubled in this heat which is now come among you to try you, as though some strange thing had happened unto you, but rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christs sufferings, that when his glory appeareth you may be merry and glad. If ye be vexed on for the name of Christ, happy are ye for the spirit of glory, and the spirit of Gods rest upon you. On their part be ye evil spoken of, but on your part be ye glorified. Here S. Peter faith it is no strange things, and that I have partly proved before, because we have nothing else promised us in this world.

Therefore let us call on God for grace. Be ye sure that they can do nothing to us, till God permit it. As for example, Look in the first Book of Kings, Chap. 19. you shall see how Saul persecuted David, purposing to kill him; but his labour was in vain.

Also in the third Book of Kings, the 19. Chapter, Jehoiachin threatened and swore to slay Elias, but the Lord preserved him. Also in the second chapter of Job, you see that Satan could do nothing to Job, till God suffered him, neither exercised his cruelties any further then God had appointed him. The Godly Woman Susanna, in the thirteenth of Daniel, through the false accusation of the wicked Judges, was even at a point to dye, yet God wonderfully delivered her. These have I written to put you in remembrance, that Man can do no more then is the will of God: therefore let us not resist his will, but refer all to him: and let us be doing that thing that God hath commanded us in his holy Word.

Exhortation
not to refuse God's will.

Dear Brethren, for the Blood of Christ refuse not the Cross of Christ, but remember the saying of the godly Man David in his 119. Psalm, where he saith, It is good for me that I have been in trouble, that I may learn thy Statutes. In the same place he saith, Before I was in trouble, I went wrong, but now I have kept thy word. Even so it is in trouble with us, for the Word of God was never so sweet and comfortable, as it is now that we be in trouble. Also Saint Paul saith in the fifth chapter to the Romans: We rejoyce in tribulation: For we know that tribulation bringeth patience, patience bringeth experience, experience bringeth hope, and hope maketh not ashamed.

God's Word never so comfortable
in trouble.

Also I pray you remember the saying of Saint Paul in the second to Timothy, and the first chapter, where he saith, Be not ashamed to testify the Lord: neither be ashamed of me. Even so I say unto you, dear brethren, Be not ashamed of my imprisonment, neither sorry, but rejoyce with me, that I hath pleased God of his goodness to call me to such a dignity as this shall be unto me, if I may have his Grace to lose my Life (which I regard as most vile) for his Names sake: for then I shall be sure to find it again with advantage. Therefore I desire you all that you will pray with me unto Almighty God, that he of his merciful goodness will send me his Grace and strength, that I may continue unto the end; as I will pray for you, that God will preserve you from all the wicked ways of Antichrist, and strengthen and comfort you, if it be his good pleasure that you shall suffer any thing for his names sake, as he hath faithfully promised to do. And I certify you, that if all Men knew the comfort they should receive at the hand of God, being in prison, I think there would come more to prison then there do. For surely we find such comfort at the hand of God since we have been in prison, that we had rather dye then be abroad to see the Idolatry that is committed among them that be abroad; beside the seeking one of anothers Blood, with other wickedness too much; God send me more Grace. But I trust, among you there be none such: and if there be, repent and amend, lest it be verified on you, that is spoken by the Prophet Jeremy, the second Chapter, where he saith, My people hath committed two great evils: They have forsaken me the Fountain of the living Waters, and digged themselves pits: pits (I say) that are broken, and can hold no Water. Also in the seventh Chapter, he saith, Hear not the words of the Prophets that preach their own dreams. Good Brethren beware of those false Prophets that I have given you warning of.

Dear beloved, here I make an end for this time, desiring the same health both of Body and Soul unto you all, that I would have my self, and I end with the same that Saint Peter saith in his first Epistle and the fifth Chapter, Submit your selves therefore under the mighty band of God, that he may exalt you when the time is come. Cast all your care on him, for he careth for you. Be sober and watch, for your adversary the Devil like a roaring Lion walketh about, seeking whom he may devour, whom resist stedfast in faith: remembering that ye do but fulfil the same afflictions, that are appointed to your brethren that are in the World. The God of all Grace that called you unto his eternal Glory, by Christ Jesus, shall his own self, after you have suffered a little affliction, make you perfect, shall settle, strengthen and stablish you. To him be glory and dominion for ever, and while the World endureth, Amen.

Greet one another with an holy kiss of love. Peace be with you all which are in Christ Jesus. I pray you all say, Amen.

These be in the same prison where I am; the Bishop Anno of S. Davids, Doctor Taylor of Hadley, Master Philpot, 1556. and my singular good Father Master Bradford, with five other of Suffex Laymen.

I desire some good Brother, to write this new, for I wrote it (as I do many times) with fear. For if the Keepers had found me, they would have taken it from me, and my Pen and Ink also.

Good Brethren, I am kept alone, and yet I thank God he comforteth me past all the comfort of any Man: for I thank him, I was never merrier in Christ.

By me Williams Tyms, Prisoner in the Kings Bench.

About this time, or somewhat before, came down certain Commissioners assigned by the Queen and Council, to Norfolk and Suffolk (as to other Countries else besides) to enquire of matters of Religion: unto the which Commissioners there was a Supplication then exhibited by some good and well disposed Men (as by the same may appear) dwelling about those parts. Which Supplication, as I thought it not unworthy to be read, bearing the date of this present year, to be printed; so I thought it was not to be omitted, nor unworthy here to be placed, in consideration of the fruit which thereof might ensue to the Reader.

A certain Godly Supplication exhibited by certain Inhabitants of the County of Norfolk, to the Commissioners come down to Norfolk and Suffolk, fruitful to be read and marked of all Men.

I most humble and lowly wife, we beseech your Honours, Right Honourable Commissioners, to tender and pity the humble suit of us poor Men, and true, faithful, and obedient Subjects, whos we have ever heretofore, so intend we, with Gods Grace, to continue in Christian obedience unto the end, and according to the Word of God with all reverend fear of God, to do our bounden duty to all those Superior Powers, whom God hath appointed over us, doing as St. Paul saith, Rom. 13. Let every Soul be Subject to the Superior Powers. For there is no Power but of God: but those Powers that are, are ordained of God. Wherefore whosoever resisteth the Power, he resisteth God, and they that resist get themselves judgment. These lessons (Right Honourable Commissioners) we have learned of the holy Word of God, in our Mother Tongue.

A Supplication exhibited to the Commissioners in Norfolk

First, That the Authority of a King, Queen, Lord, and other their Officers under them, is no tyrannical usurpation, but a just, holy, lawful, and necessary estate for Man to be governed by, and that the same is of God, the Fountain and Author of Righteousness.

The Authority of Kings and Queens approved.

Secondly, That to obey the same in all things not against God, is to obey God, and to resist them, is to resist God. Therefore, as to obey God in his Ministers and Magistrates bringeth life; so to resist God in them, bringeth punishment and death. The same lesson have we learned of S. Peter, 1. Pet. 5. saying, Be ye subject to all humane ordinances for the Lords sake, whether it be to the King, as to the most highest, or to the Lieutenants sent from him, to the punishment of evil doers, but to the praise of such as do well. For so is the will of God, that with well doing, ye should stop the mouths of foolish and ignorant Men, as free, and not as having the liberty to be a cloak to malice, but as the servants of God.

Wherefore considering with our selves, both that the Christian Magistrates power is of God, and that for the Lords sake we be bound to Christian obedience unto them, having now presently a Commandment, as though it were given from the Queens Majesty, with all humble obedience due to the Regal Power and Authority ordained of God (which we acknowledge to stand wholly and perfectly in her Grace) and with due reverence unto her Graces Commissioners, we humbly beseech you with patience and pity to receive this our answer unto this Commandment, given unto us.

The Christian Men bound to obey God in his Magistrates.

First, Right Honourable Commissioners, we have considered our selves to be not only English Men, but also Christians, and therefore bound by the holy vow made to God in our Baptism, to prefer Gods Honour in all things,

The honour of God to be preferred before all regal honour

things, and that all obedience (not only of us mortal men, but even of the very Angels and heavenly Spirits) is due unto Gods Word; Inmuch that no obedience can be true and perfect, either before God or Man, that wholly and fully agreeth not with Gods Word.

Then have we weighed the Commandment concerning the restitution of the late abolished Latin Service, given unto us to dissent and disagreg from Gods Word, and to command manifest impiety, and the overthrow of godlines and true religion, and to import a subversion of the Regal Power of this our Native Country and Realm of England, with the bringing in of the Romish Bishops Supremacy, with all Errors, Superstitions, and Idolatry, wasting of our Goods and Bodies, destroying of our Souls, bringing with it nothing but the severe wrath of God, which we already feel, and fear left the same shall be more fiercely kindled upon us. Wherefore we humbly protest, that we cannot be persuaded, that the same wicked Commandment should come from the Queens Majesty, but rather from some other, abusing the Queens goodnes and favour, and studying to work some feat against the Queen, her Crown, and the Realm, to please with it the Roman Bishop, at whose hands the same thinketh hereafter to be advanced.

An honest Petition to
Q. Mary.

As the Agagite Aman wrought maliciously against the noble King Affuerus; and as the Princes of Babel wrought against the good King Darius: so think we the Queens most gentle heart to be abused of some, who seeking themselves and their own vain glory, procure such Commandments as are against the glory of God. For we cannot have so evil an opinion in her Majesty, that she should subvert the most godly and holy Religion (so accordingly to Gods Word set forth by the most noble, virtuous, and innocent King, a very Saint of God, our late most dear King Edward, her Graces Brother) except he were wonderfully abused; who, as hating reformation, will rather the destruction of all others, then acknowledge their errors, and to be according to Gods Word, reformed. For truly, the Religion lately set forth by King Edward, is such in our Consciences as every Christian man is bound to confess to be the Truth of God, and every Member of Christs Church here in England must needs embrace the same in heart, and confess it with mouth, and (if need require) life and forsake, not only house, land and possessions, riches, wife, children and friends; but also (if God will so call them) gladly to suffer all manner of persecution, and to lose their lives in the defence of Gods Word and Truth set out amongst us. For our Saviour Christ requireth the same of us, saying, Whoever shall be ashamed of me and my word before this adulterous and sinful generation, the Son of Man will also be ashamed of him, when he shall come in the glory of his Father with the holy Angels. And again saith he, Whoever will confess me before men, I will confess him before my Father that is in Heaven. And whoever will deny me before men, I will also deny him before my Father that is in Heaven. And whoever shall speak a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him, but whoever shall rail against the holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him.

We humbly beseech the Queens Majesty, and you her honourable Commissioners, be not offended with us, for confessing this Truth of God, so faithfully given us in charge of Christ; neither bring upon us, that great sin that never shall be forgiven, and shall cause our Saviour Jesus Christ in the great day of Judgment, before his heavenly Father and all his Angels, to deny us, and to take from us the blessed price and ranfome of his bloodshed, where-with we are redeemed.

For in that day, neither the Queens Highness, neither you, nor any man shall be able to excuse us, nor to purchase a pardon of Christ for this horrible sin and blasphemy of casting aside and condemning his Word. We cannot agree nor consent unto this so horrible a sin; but we beseech God for his mercy to give us and all men graces most earnestly to flee from it, and rather (if the will of God be so) to suffer all extremity and punishment in this world, then to incur such damnation before God.

Example of
R. Manasse,

Manasse, who restored again the wickedness of Idolatrious Religion (before put down by Ezechias his Father) brought the wrath of God upon the People: so that the Scripture saith, Notwithstanding the Reformation made by Josias, the Lord turned not from the fierceness of his great wrath wherewith he was angry against Juda, because of the provocation with which Manasses provoked him. And the Lord said, even Juda will I take away from my presence, as I cast away Israel. And I will cast away this City of Jerusalem, and the house whereof I said, My name shall be there. Jerobam, who at Bethel and Dan erected up a new found Service of God, and not only sinned himself, but also made all Israel to sin with him, so that not only he was damned for commanding, but the wrath of God came upon all Israel, for obeying that his ungodly Commandment: Yet was it not so heinous an offence to bring in an Idolatry never yet heard of, as after Reformation made by the godly Kings and Princes, by the virtuous and holy Bishops, by the Prophets and Servants of God, to reject and cast off the Word and true Religion of God, and to receive again a damned Impiety.

This most heinous offence is now offered unto us, although the same be painted and coloured with the name of Reformation, restoring of Religion, ancient Faith, with the name of the Catholick Church, of Unity, Catholick Truth, and with the Cloak of feigned Holiness. These are sheepskins, under the which (as Christ faith) the ravening Wolves cover themselves. But Christ willet us to look upon their fruits, whereby we may know them; and truly that is no good fruit, to cast aside Gods Word, and to banish the English Service out of the Churches, and in the place of it to bring in a Latin Tongue unknown unto the People. Which as it edifieth no man, so it hath been occasion of all blindness and error among the People. For afore the blessed Reformation begun by the most noble Prince of godly memory, the Queens good Father; and by our late holy and innocent King, her good Brother, finished; it is not unknown what blindness and error we were all in, when not one man in all this Realm unlearned in the Latin, could say in English the Lords Prayer, or knew any one Article of his Belief, or rehearse any one of the Ten Commandments. And that ignorance, mother of mischief, was the very root and well-spring of all Idolatry, Sodomitical Monckery, and whorish Chastity of unmarried Priests, of all whoredom, drunkenness, covetousness, swearing and blasphemy, with all other wicked sinful living. These brought in the severe wrath and vengeance of God plaguing sin with Famine and Pestilence; and at last the Sword consumed and avenged all their impiety and wicked living. As it is greatly to be feared the same or more grievous Plagues shall now again follow.

We cannot therefore consent nor agree that the Word of God and Prayers in our English Tongue, which we understand, should be taken away from us, and for it a Latin Service, we wot not what (for none of us understand it) to be again brought in amongst us, specially seeing that Christ hath said, My sheep hear my voice, and follow me, and I give to them everlasting life. The Service in English teacheth us, that we are the Lords People, and the Sheep of his Pasture, and commandeth that we harden not our hearts, as when they provoked the Lords wrath in the wilderness, lest he swear unto us, as he did swear unto them, that they should not enter into his rest.

The Service in Latin is a confused noise; which if it be good, (as they say it is) yet unto us that lack understanding, what goodnes can it bring? S. Paul commandeth, that in the Churches all things should be done to edifying, which we are sure is Gods Commandment. But in the Latin Service nothing is done to edifying, but contrarily all to destroy those that are already edified, and to drive us from Gods Word and Truth; and from believing of the same, and so to bring us to believe lies and fables, that tempting and provoking God, we should be brought into that judgment that blessed Paul speaketh of, saying, Antichrist shall come according to the working of Satan, with all manner of power and signs, and lying wonders in all deceivableness of unrighteousness in those that perish: because they have not received the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And therefore God will send them strong delusions, that they should believe lies.

and be damned, as many as have not believed the truths, but have approved unrighteousness.

Thus, altogether drawn from God, we shall fall into his wrath through unbelief, till he swear unto us as he did unto the unfaithful Jews, that such Infidels shall not enter into his rest.

The true use of the Lords Supper get extolled.

In the Administration of the Lords Supper, which we confess to be the holy Communion, and partaking with Christ and his holy Congregation, we have learned Gods holy Commandments, and at the rehearsal of every one of them to ask God mercy for our most grievous transgressions against them, and to ask grace of God, to keep them in time to come, that the same may not only outwardly sound in our ears, but also inwardly by the Holy Ghost be written in our hearts.

We have learned also the holy Prayer made for the Queens Majesty; wherein we learn that her Power and Authority is of God, therefore we pray to God for her, that she and all Magistrates under her, may rule according to Gods Word, and we her Subjects obey according to the same.

Causes why the Communion should be received.

Truly (most honourable Commissioners) we cannot think these things evil, but think them most worthy to be retained in our Churches, and we would think our selves not to have true Subjects hearts, if we should go about to put away such godly Prayers, as put us perpetually in memory of our bounden obedience and duty to God and our Rulers. For, as we think, at this present the unquiet Multitude had more need to have these things more often and earnestly beaten and driven into them (specially given in many places to stir and trouble) then to take from them that blessed Doctrine, whereby only they may to their salvation be kept in quiet.

Receiving of both kinds.

Furthermore, we cannot forsake that blessed partaking of the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christs Institution, ministered with such godly Prayers, Exhortations and Admonitions teaching us the knowledge of God, the exceeding love and charity of our loving Redeemer Christ, breaking his Body upon the Cross for our sins, and shedding his most precious Blood for our Redemption: which we in eating of that blessed Bread, and drinking of the blessed Cup, assuredly believe that we receive, and be perfectly joynt with Christ and his holy Catholick Church into one Body, and into one unity and brotherly love, whereby each Member faithfully embraceth other. We must needs confess this Institution of Christ to be most holy and godly, whereof we have the only comfort in Confidence against sin and damnation, with the assurance of Salvation, and whereof hath ensued reformation of many heinous sins, much lawing, strife, and contention is ended; drunkennes, whoredom, and other vices, in some reformed, goodness and vertue increased and nourished.

The Mass hath nothing in it but a heap of Ceremonies.

In the Latin Mass we never had no such edifying, but only we saw a great many of Ceremonies and strange Gestures; as turning of the Priest, crossings, blessings, breathings, washing of hands, and spreading abroad of his arms, with like Ceremonies that we understand not. And concerning the Latin Tongue, wherein the Priest prayeth, we wot not whether he blesteth or curseth us. We are not partakers of the Sacrament, as Christs Institution appointeth we should be.

In the ministering of the Sacrament, the Priests alter the Institution of Christ, committing theft and sacrilege, robbing us of the Cup of Christs Blood, contrary to Christs Commandment, saying, Drink ye all of this.

The people in Latin, which nothing edifieth us either in Faith or Manners. Christ commandeth not that his Supper should be ministered in an unknown Tongue: but so far as Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing cometh of Gods Word, how can we believe Christs word and promise made unto us in this holy Sacrament, saying, This is my Body broken for you, and this is my Blood of the New Testament, which is shed for you, for the remission of sins, if the same promises of Christ either be not at all recited, or else so recited in Latin, that the Congregation understandeth not, nor heareth not what is spoken? S. Paul saith thus, reciting the saying of Ely, As truly as I live, saith the Lord, all knees shall bow unto me, all tongues shall give praise unto God. Also he saith,

Phil.

Let us adore him, and bow down before him: for he hath made himself for us a sacrifice of praise, a sacrifice of good works, which we offer unto him in reverence of mind and with a pure heart, with a voice and with organs, as a sacrifice of good will, which is acceptable by him through Jesus Christ our Lord. And he saith, Let us adore him, and bow down before him: for he hath made himself for us a sacrifice of praise, a sacrifice of good works, which we offer unto him in reverence of mind and with a pure heart, with a voice and with organs, as a sacrifice of good will, which is acceptable by him through Jesus Christ our Lord.

All tongues must confess, that Jesus Christ is the Lord, unto the glory of God the Father. The holy Ghost came upon the Apostles in fiery Tongues, so that they spake the Tongues of all Nations under Heaven. S. Paul ministered to the Corinthians, and preached to them in their own Mother-tongue, and rebuked the bringing in of strange Tongues into the Congregations. We cannot think it to be well, that so holy an Apostle rebuked. And whatsoever virtue the Latin Tongue hath to such as understand it, to us Englishmen not understanding it, it is altogether without virtue and edifying, and therefore unmeet for our Churches.

The Priests complain that we Lay-men love them not, nor have them in honour, but it is their own fault: For how should we love them, that only seek to keep us in blindness and ignorance, to damn our souls, to destroy our bodies, to rob and spoil our goods and substance under a colour of pretended holiness? We know (right honourable Commissioners) what honour is due to such Wolves, and how by the authority of Gods Word, such are to be fled, as Peltences to the Lords Lambs, whom they miserably daily murder.

But we have rather chosen by this our meek Supplication, humbly to desire the Queens Majesty, and you her honourable Commissioners, to render Gods Word again unto the Churches, and to permit us freely to enjoy the same. For we certainly know, that the whole Religion lately set out by the holy Saint of God, our late most dear King Edward, is Christs true Religion written in the holy Scripture of God, and by Christ and his Apostles taught unto his Church. Wherefore we cannot allow with safe Conscience this refusal of it, and casting of it out of our Churches; so far as to refuse, cast off, and to reject it, is to cast off Christ himself, and to refuse our part in his blessed Body broken for our sins, and his Blood shed for our Redemption. Which thing who doth, the same without repentance can look for no Sacrifice for his sins, but must fearfully wait for the Judgment, and for that vehement fire that shall destroy Christs Adversaries. For if he that despiseth the Law of Moses, is without mercy put to death under two or three witnesses, how much more grievous torments shall he suffer that treadeth under foot the Son of God, and esteemeth the blood of the Testament (whereby he was sanctified) as a profane thing, and contumaciously useth the Spirit of Grace?

Wherefore, we most humbly pray and beseech the Queens gracious Majesty, to have mercy and pity upon us her poor and faithful Subjects, and not to compel us to do the thing that is against our Conscience, and shall so incurably wound us in heart, by bringing into the Church the Latin Mass and Service that nothing edifieth us, and calling out of Christs holy Communion and English Service, so causing us to sin against our Redemption. For such as willingly and wittingly against their Conscience shall so do (as it is to be feared many a one doth) they are in a miserable state, until the mercy of God turn them; which if he do not, we certainly believe, that they shall eternally be damned: and as in this world they deny Christs holy Word and Communion before men, so shall Christ deny them before his Heavenly Father and his Angels.

And whereas it is very earnestly required, that we should go in Procession (as they call it) at which time the Priests say in Latin such things as we are ignorant of, the same edifieth nothing at all unto godliness, and we have learned that to follow Christs Cross, is another matter, namely, to take up our Cross, and to follow Christ in patient suffering for his love, tribulations, sickness, poverty, prison, or any other adversity, whensoever Gods holy will and pleasure is to lay the same upon us. The triumphant Passion and Death of Christ, whereby in his own person he conquered death, sin, hell, and damnation hath most lively been preached unto us, and the glory of Christs Cross declared by our Preachers; whereby we have learned the causes and effects of the same more lively in one Sermon, than in all the Processions that ever we went in, or ever shall go in.

When we worshipped the Divine Trinity kneeling, and in the Litany invoking the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, asking mercy for our sins, and desiring Anno 1556. desiring such Petitions as the need of our frail estate and this mortal life requireth, we were edified, both to know unto whom all Christian Prayers should be directed, and also to know that of Gods hand we receive all things, as well to the salvation of our souls; as to the relief of our mortal necessities. And we humbly beseech the Queens Majesty, that the same most holy Prayers may be continued amongst us; that our Ministers praying in our Mother-tongue, and we understanding their Prayers and Petitions, may answer, Amen, unto them. At Evening Service we understood our Ministers Prayers, we were taught and admonished by the Scriptures then read; which in the Latin Even-song is all gone.

At the Ministration of holy Baptism, we learned what League and Covenant God had made with us, and what Vows and Promises we upon our part had made, namely, to believe in him, to forsake Satan and his works, and to walk in the way of Gods holy Word and Commandments.

The Christian Catechism continually taught and called to remembrance the same, whereas before no man knew any thing at all. And many good-men of forty years, that had been Godfathers, to thirty Children, knew no more of the Godfathers office, but to wash their hands ere they departed the Church, or else to fast five Fridays with bread and water.

O merciful God, have pity upon us. Shall we be altogether cast from thy Presence? we may well lament our miserable estate, to receive such a Commandment, to reject and cast out of our Churches all these most godly Prayers, Instructions, Admonitions and Doctrines, and thus to be compelled to deny God, and Christ our Saviour, his holy Word, and all his Doctrine of our Salvation, the Candle to our feet, and the Light to our steps, the Bread coming down from Heaven that giveth life, which who so eateth, it shall be in him a Well-spring streaming unto eternal Life; whereby we have learned all Righteousness, all true Religion, all true Obedience towards our Governors, all Charity one towards another, all good Works that God would us to walk in, what punishment abideth the wicked, and what heavenly Reward God will give to those that reverently walk in his ways and commandments.

Wherefore right honourable Commissioners, we cannot without Impiety refuse and cast from us the holy Word of God which we have received, or condemn any thing set forth by our most godly late King Edward and his virtuous Proceedings, so agreeable to Gods Word. And our most humble sure is, that the Commandment may be revoked, so that we be not constrained thereunto. For we protest before God, we think if the holy Word of God had not taken some root amongst us, we could not in times past have done that poor duty of ours, which we did in assisting the Queen, our most dear Sovereign, against her Graces mortal Foe, that then sought her destruction. It was our bounden duty, and we think God for the knowledge of his word and grace, that we then did some part of our bounden service.

And we meekly pray and beseech the Queens Majesty for the dear Passion of Jesus Christ, that the same Word be not taken away out of her Churches, nor from us her loving, faithful and true Subjects; lest if the like necessity should hereafter chance (which God for his mercy sake forbid, and ever have and defend her Grace, and all us) the want of Knowledge and due remembrance of Gods Word may be occasion of great ruin to an infinite number of her Graces true Subjects. And truly we judge this to be one subtil part of the Devils, (Enemy to all godly peace and quietness) that by taking Gods Word from among us, and planting Ignorance, he may make a way to all mischief and wickedness; and by banishing the holy Gospel of Peace, he may bring upon us the heavy wrath of God, with all manner of Plagues; as death, strange sickness, pestilence, murren, most terrible uproars, commotions and seditions. These things did the Lord threaten unto the Jews for refusing his Word, saying, Go, and thou shalt say unto this people: Ye shall hear indeed, but ye shall not understand, ye shall plainly see, and not perceive. Harden the heart of this people, stop their ears, and shut their eyes, that they see not with their eyes, hear not with their ears, and understand not with their hearts, and convert and be healed. And I said, How long Lord? And he answered, Until the Cities be destroyed, utterly wasted without inhabitants, and the houses without men, till the Land also be desolate and be unbuilded. And the Prophet Micah, considering the contempt of Gods Word among the Israelites, threatened them thus, When the day, that thy Preachers warned thee of, cometh, thou shalt be wasted away. And let no man believe his friend, or put confidence in his brother. Keep the door of thy mouth from her that lyeth in thy bosom: for the son shall put his father to dishonour, and the daughter shall rise against her mother, the daughter in law against the mother in Law; and a mans foes shall be even they of his own household. The same Plague threatened Christ unto the Jews, for refusing his Peace profeted them in the Gospel, and he wept on the City Jerusalem; which murdered the Prophets, and stoned such as were sent unto her.

The same Plagues, we are afraid, will also fall upon us. For whereas heretofore with the receiving of Christs Word and peaceable Gospel, we had great Benedictions of God, especially this Christian concord and holy peace, so that all were at a full and perfect Ray in Religion, no man offended with another, but as the Sons of Peace, each of us with Christian Charity embraced other: now alas for pity, the Devil (riding upon the red horse, shewed unto S. John in the Revelation) is come forth, and power is given unto him to take peace from the Earth. For now a man can go to no place, but malicious buff-bodies curiously search out his deeds, mark his words, and if he agree not with them in despising Gods Word, then will they spitefully and hatefully rail against him and, calling it Error and Herefie, and the Professors thereof Hereticks and Schismatics, with other odious and spiteful names, as Traitors and not the Queens Friends, not Favourers of the Queens Proceedings; as if to love Gods Word were Herefie, and as though to talk of Christ, were to be Schismatick; as though none could be true to the Queen, that were not false to God; as though none were the Queens Friends, but such, as despitefully rail on her Graces Father and Brother, and on Gods Word that they set forth; as though none favoured the Queens Majesty, but such as hate all godly knowledge.

And in very deed these things that all this tumult is made for, are meer inventions of Popes, brought into the Church of their own imaginations, without commandment or example either of Christ, or of his Apostles; and there is not one word in the Bible, that being truly alledged, maintaineth them, nor any Doctor of Antiquity before S. Austins days, as it hath been divers times sufficiently proved before all the whole Parliament and Convocation of this Realm. Yet these, being meer Traditions of Bishops, are set out for Gods Commandments; and the Queens Authority (given to her of God to maintain his Word) must be abused to put down Gods Word. And you right honourable Justices, and Keepers of Laws and Righteousness, are also abused and made the Bishops Apparators, to set forth such Romish Trash as is to Christs dishonour; and against the Supream Authority of the Regal Estate of this Realm. And we poor Subjects, for speaking of that which is truth, and our bounden Allegiance, are daily punished, railed upon, and noted for seditious, and not the Queens friends.

But God (who is blessed for ever) knoweth that they slander us, and pull the Thorn out of their own foot, and put it in ours: for the Searcher of hearts knoweth, that we bear a faithful and true heart unto her Grace, and unto all her Proceedings, that are not against God and his holy Word. And we daily pray unto the heavenly Father, to lighten her Graces Royal heart with the glorious Light of the Gospel, that the may establish and confirm that Religion, that her Graces Brother, our most dear King, did set out amongst us; and so governing and ruling this her Realm in the fear and true way of God, the may long live, and with prosperity, peace, and honour reign over us.

But we cannot think that those men do seek either Gods honour, or her Graces prosperity, or wealth of the Realm, that take from her Graces faithful Subjects Gods Word, which only is the root of all love and faithful obedience unto her Grace, and of all honesty, good life, and virtuous concord among her Commons. And this we fear, lest the Root being taken away, the Branches will soon wither and be fruitless. And when the Philistines have stopped up the Well-spring, the fair Streams that should flow shall soon be dried up. All our Watchmen, our true Preachers have taught us, that as long as we retained Gods Word, we should have God our gracious merciful Father; but if we refused and cast off the Lords yoke of his Doctrine, then shall we look for the Lords wrath and severe visitation to plague us, as he did the Jews for the like offences. And Paul saith, Rom. 2. God grove to them the spirit of unquietness and uproar, eyes wherewith they should not see, and ears wherewith they should not hear, until this day: And as David saith, Psal. 69. Let their table be made a snare to take themselves withal, a trap to catch them, and a stumbling block to fall at. Let their eyes be blinded that they see not, and bow thou down their backs always.

What unquietness followeth the lack of Gods word

O merciful God, all this is now come upon us, and daily more and more increased, and we fear at last it will so bow down our backs, that we shall utterly be destroyed; the troublesome spirit of uproars and unquietness daily troubleth mens hearts, and worketh such unquietness in all places, that no man that loveth quietness, can tell where to place himself. Men have eyes and see not, how grievous an offence it is to cast off the yoke of Gods Doctrine, and to bear the heavy burden that unfaithful Hypocrites lay upon us. We have ears and hear not the warning of Gods Word, calling us to true Repentance, nor his threats against our Impiety. Our most sweet table of Christs Word and most holy Communion is taken away, and turned to a most perillous snare, through the brawling Disputations of men. And as the Idol of Abomination betokened final subversion unto the Jewish Nation; so we fear, this setting aside of the Gospel and holy Communion of Christ, and the placing in of a Romish Religion, betokeneth defolation of this noble Realm of England to be at hand.

For the Plagues of Hunger, Pestilence and Sword, cannot long tarry; but except we repent, and turn again to the Lord, our backs shall be so bowed, that the like horrible Plagues were never seen. And no marvel: for the like offence was never committed, as to reject and cast off Christ and his Word, and in plain English to say, We will not have him to reign over us. O Lord, how terrible is it that followeth in the Gospel? Those mine enemies that would not have me to reign over them, bring them thither, and slay them before me, Luke 19. God be merciful unto us, and move the Queens Majesties heart, and the hearts of her honourable Council, and your hearts (right honourable Commissioners) to weigh these dangers in due time; and to call Gods Word into your Council, and then you shall see how it agreeth with this Bishop-like Commandment; and to be as wary to avoid the contempt of the eternal God, and dangers of the same, as you are prudent and wise in matters of this World, lest if the Almighty be contemned, he stretch forth his Arm which no man can turn, and kindle his Wrath, that no man can quench.

Writing to Q. Mary, to her Council, and Commissioners.

The day of true Subjection desired, first to Christ, then to the Queen.

Now for a Prince ought to require obedience of his Subjects

We have humbly opened unto your Consciences, doubtless fore wounded and grieved by this Commandment; and we meekly pray and beseech the Queens Majesty, for the precious death and bloodshedding of Jesus Christ our Saviour, to have mercy and pity upon us her Graces poor Commons, faithful and true Subjects, Members of the same Body Politick, whereof her Grace is Supreme Head. All our Bodies, Goods, Lands and Lives are ready to do her Grace faithful obedience, and true service of all Commandments that are not against God, and his Word: but in things that import a denial of Christ, and refusal of his Word and holy Communion, we cannot consent nor agree unto it. For we have bound our selves in Baptism to be Christs Disciples, and to keep his holy Word and Ordinances. And if we deny him before men, he will deny us before his heavenly Father and his holy Angels in the day of Judgment; which we trust her benign Grace will not require of us.

And we humbly beseech her Majesty, that we be not enforced unto it; but as we serve her Grace with Body and Goods, and due Obedience, according to Gods Commandments; so we may be permitted freely to serve God and Christ our Saviour, and keep unto him our Souls, which he hath with his precious blood redeemed, that so (as Christ teacheth) we may render to Caesar that which is due to Caesar, and to God that which is due to God.

For we think it no true Obedience unto the Queens Highness, or to any other Magistrate ordained of God under her, to obey in the things contrary to Gods Word, although the same be never so freightly charged in her Graces Name. The Bishop of Winchester hath truly taught in the point, in his Book of true Obedience, that true Obedience is in the Lord, and not against the Lord. as the Apostle answered before the Council at Jerusalem, commanding them no more to preach in the Name of the Lord Jesus. Judge you (saith the y. whether it be A3: 4.) right in the sight of God, to bear you rather than God. And again they said, We must obey God rather than Man. Wherefore we learn, that true Obedience is to obey God, King of all Kings, and Lord of all Lords, and for him, in him, and not against him and his Word, to obey the Princes and Magistrates of this World, who are not truly obeyed when God is disobeyed, nor yet disobeyed when God is faithfully obeyed.

True obedience how far it reacheth.

Tobias disobeyed not his King, although contrary to his Commandment, and contrary to the usage of all others, when they went to Dan and Bethel, he went unto Jerusalem, and worshipped in the Temple of the Lord. The three young men in Babylon, refusing Nebuchadnezzars Commandment, pleased God more than the whole Multitude that obeyed. And Daniel that prayed to the God of Heaven, contrary to King Darivs Commandment, bare a more true and faithful heart to the King, than those wicked Counsellors, that procured that wicked Law, or those that for fear or flattery obeyed it. Which two Pestilences (fear and flattery) have ever destroyed true Obedience to God and Man; when wicked godless men (that care not if the Devil were worshipped, so they might get and obtain riches, promotions, and dignity, and worldly glory) turn to and fro, as every wind bloweth; and weak and frail men fearing loss of goods, punishment, or death, do outwardly in body that thing, that their hearts and consciences inwardly abhorreth, and so outwardly disobey God, and in heart dissemble with man, which dissimulation we think worthy hate of all men, and most uncomely for Christian men.

Example of true obedience.

Fear and flattery, enemies to true obedience. God and Man.

Wherefore, we humbly beseech the Queens Majesty, with pity and mercy to tender the lamentable fate of us her poor Subjects, which be by this Commandment sore hurt, and wounded in our Consciences, and driven to many miseries, and by the malicious attempts of wicked men suffer great wrongs and injuries, slanders, loss of goods, and bodily vexations. We think not good, by any unlawful stir or commotion to seek remedy; but intend, by Gods grace, to obey her Majesty in all things, not against God, and his holy Word. But unto such ungodly Bishop-like Commandments, as are against God, we answer with the Apostles, God must be obeyed rather than Man. If Persecution shall ensue (which some threaten us with) we desire the heavenly Father, according to his promise, to look from Heaven, to hear our cry, to judge between us and our Adversaries, and to give us faith, strength and patience to continue faithful unto the end, and to shorten these evil days, for his chofens sake; and so we faithfully believe he will.

Faith discombleneth worldly ambition.

Notwithstanding, we trust the Queens gracious and merciful heart will not suffer such tyranny to be done against her poor, innocent, faithful and obedient Subjects, that daily pray unto God for her; which have no remedy in this world, but to sue unto her Highness, our most gracious and benign Sovereign; whom we pray and beseech, for the dear blood of Christ, to pity our lamentable case and hurt of Conscience, and to call back all such Commandments as are against Gods honour, as the good King Darivs, Assuerus, Trajanus, Theodosius, and divers other have done, and permit the holy Word of God and true Religion (set forth by our most holy and innocent King Edward, a very Saint of God) to be restored again unto our Churches, to be frequented amongst us. So shall we grow and increase in the knowledge of God and Queen Marys authority against mens consciences.

Anno 1556. and of Christ's true repentance and amendment of Life so shall we exhibit true obedience to our lawful Magistrates and all things are ordained of God: so shall love and charity (of late through this commandment so decayed) be again restored, the honour of her regal estate the more confirmed and established and godliness and virtuous life among her loving subjects increased & maintained.

And we most heartily pray you (Right Honorable Commissioners) to be means unto the Queens Highness, and to her Honorable Council, that this our humble sute may be favourably tendered, and graciously heard and granted. And we shall not cease day and night to pray unto the Heavenly Father long to preserve her Grace and all other Magistrates in his fear, and love, and in prosperous peace and wealth, with long life and honor, Amen.

The Story of John Harpole, of the Parish of S. Nicholas in Rochester, Joan Beach Widow, of Tunbridge, Martyrs.

John Harpole, Joan Beach, Martyrs. Touching the Examination of Joan Beach Widow, and of John Harpole within the Diocesis of Rochester, by Maurice Bishop of the said Diocesis, remembrance was made before in the Story of Nicholas Hall, wherein was declared the four Articles Confitorial of the Bishop, objected and laid, as unto the said Nicholas Hall and his company, so also to this Joan Beach Widow: whereof the first was this;

1. That she was of the Parish of Tunbridge, in the Diocesis of Rochester.
2. Item, that all persons which preach, teach, believe or say otherwise or contrary to that their Mother Holy Catholick Church of Christ, are Excommunicate Persons and Hereticks.
3. Item, that the said Joan Beach hath, and yet doth affirm, maintain, and believe contrary to the said Mother Church of Christ, videlicet, that in the Blessed Sacrament of the Altar, under form of Bread and Wine, there is not the very Body and Blood of our Saviour in substance, but only a token and memorial thereof; that the very Body and Blood of Christ is in Heaven, and not in the Sacrament.
4. Item, that she hath been, and yet is, amongst the Parishioners of Tunbridge, openly noted and vehemently suspected to be a Sacramentary, and Heretick.

Her personal Answers to the said Articles.

Answers of Joan Beach to the Articles. TO the which foresaid Articles, her answers were these. First, that she was and is of the said Parish of Tunbridge, in the Diocesis of Rochester.

2. That all persons which do Preach and hold otherwise and contrary, to that which the Holy Catholick Church of Christ doth, are to be reputed for Excommunicate and Hereticks; adding withal, that nevertheless she believeth not the Holy Catholick Church to be her Mother, but believeth only the Father of Heaven to be her Father.

3. Thirdly, that she hath, and yet doth verily believe, hold, and affirm, in the Sacrament of the Altar under forms of Bread and Wine, not to be the very Body and Blood of our Saviour in substance, but only a token and remembrance of his death to the Faithful receiver, and this his Body and substance is only in Heaven, and not in the Sacrament.

Lastly, as touching how she hath been or is noted and reputed among the Parishioners of Tunbridge, she said, she could not tell; howbeit she believed, she was not so taken and reputed.

Examination and Condemnation of John Harpole and Joan Beach.

John Harpole, Joan Beach, Martyrs. He like matter, and the same four Articles were also the same present time and place ministered to Harpole, and Joan Harpole by the foresaid Bishop Maurice; who after the like answers received of him, as of the other before, adjudged and condemned them both together to death, by one form of Sentence, according to the tenour and course of their several sentence, which ye may read before in Master Rogers Story.

And thus these two Christian Martyrs coupled in one confession, being condemned by the Bishop, suffered together at one fire, in the Town of Rochester, where they together ended their lives about the first day of this present Month of April.

John Hullier, Minister and Martyr.

Next after these ensueth the Martyrdom of John Hullier, Minister, who first being brought up in the School of Eaton, was afterward Scholar, and then Conduet in the Kings Colledge at Cambridge suffered under Doctor Tunstall Bishop of Ely, and his Chancellor, for the sincere setting out of the light of Gods Gracious Gospel revealed in these our days. In whose behalf this is to be lamented, that among so many fresh wits and writings in that University, so little matter is left unto us touching the process of his judgment, and order of his suffering, which so innocently gave his life in such a cause among the midst of them. By certain Letters which he himself left behind, it appeareth that he was zealous and himself in that Doctrine of truth, which every true Christian Man ought to embrace. His Martyrdom was about the second day of this present Month of April.

Letters of Master John Hullier, Minister.

A Letter of John Hullier to the Christian Congregation, exhorting them faithfully to abide in the Doctrine of the Lord.

IT standeth now most in hand (O dear Christians) all them that look to be accounted of Christs flock at the great and terrible day, when a separation shall be made of the sort that shall be received from the other which shall be refused, faithfully in this time of great afflictions to hear our Master Christs voice, the only true Shephard of our Souls, which faith, Whofoever shall endure to the end shall be safe. For even now is that great trouble in hand (as here in England we may well see) that our Saviour Christs flock of so long before, which should follow the true and sincere Preaching of his Gospel. Therefore in this time we must needs either shew that we be his Faithful Souldiers, and continue in his battell unto the end, putting on the armour of God, the buckler of faith, the breastplate of love, the helmet of hope and Salvation, and the Sword of his Holy Word (which we have heard plentifully) with all instance of Supplication and Prayer; or else if we do not work and labour with these, we are Apostates and false Souldiers, shrinking most unthankfully from our gracious and sovereign Lord and Captain Christ, and leaning to Belial. For as he faith plainly, Luke 14. Whofoever bearth not my Cross and followeth me, he cannot be my disciple. And Matih. 6. No Man can serve two Masters: for either he must hate the one, or love the other, or else he shall lean to the one, and despise the other. The which thing the Faithful Prophet Helias signified when he came to the people, and said, Why halt ye between two Opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him, or if Baal be he then follow him, 3 Reg. 18.

Now let us not think, but that the same was recorded in writing for our instruction, whom the ends of the World are come upon, as the Apostle S. Paul faith, Rom. 15. Whatsoever things are written aforehand, they are written for our learning. If Christ be that only good and true Shephard that gave his life for us, then let us that bear his mark, and have our Consciences sprinkled with his Blood, follow altogether, for our Salvation, his Heavenly Voice and calling, according to our profession and first promise. But if we shall not do so, certainly (say what we can) although we bear the name of Christ, yet we be none of his Sheep indeed. For he faith very manifestly, John 10. My Sheep hear my voice, and follow me: a stranger they will not follow, but will flee from him, for they know not the voice of a stranger.

Therefore let every Man take good heed in these perilous days (whereof we have had so much warning aforehand, hand) that he be not beguiled by the goodly outward shew and appearance, as Eve was of our old subtil enemy, whose craft and wilfulness is so manifold and divers, and so full of chiefe windings, that if he cannot bring him directly and the plain straight way to content to his suggestions; then he will allure him and wind him in by some other false ways (as it were by a train) that he shall not perceive it, to deceive him withal, and to steal from him that goodly victory of the incorruptible and Eternal Crown of Glory, which no Man else can have, but he that fighteth lawfully: as at this present day, if he cannot induce him throughly, as other do, to favour his Devilish Religion, and of good will and free heart to help to uphold the fame, yet he will inveigle him to resort to his wicked and whorish School-House, and at the least, wife to be conversant and keep company with his congregation there, and to hold his peace and say nothing, whatsoever he think, so that he be not a Diligent Souldier and a good labourer on Christs side, to further his Kingdom by that subtil means flattering him that he shall both save his life, and also his goods, and live in quiet. But if we look well on Christs Holy Will and Testament, we shall perceive that he came not to make any such peace upon Earth, nor yet that he gave any such peace to his Disciples; I leave peace with you (saith he) my peace I give you, not as the World giveth it, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, nor fearful. These things have I spoken unto you, that in me ye should have peace. In the World ye shall have affliction, but be of good cheer, I have overcome the World. The Servant is not greater then his Lord and Master. If they have persecuted me, they shall also persecute you. If any Man come to me, and hateth not his own Father and Mother, Wife, Children, Sisters, yea, and moreover his own Life, it is not possible for him to be my Disciple. Blessed be ye that now weep, for ye shall laugh: and we be unto you that now laugh, for ye shall mourn and weep. He that will find his life, shall lose it.

Therefore the God of that true peace and comfort, preserve and keep us, that we never obey such a false flattering, which at length will pay us home once for all, bringing for temporal peace and quietness, everlasting trouble, vexation, and disquietness; for these vain and transitory goods, extreme loss and utter damage of the eternal treasure and inheritance; for this mortal life, deprivation of the most joyful life immortal; finally, the entrance into endless death most miserable, unmeasurable pain and torment both of Body and Soul.

Now conferring these two Schoolmasters together, let consider the thing well, and determine with our selves which way we ought to take, and not to take the common broad way which seemeth here most pleasant, and that the most part of the people take Surely I judge it to be better, to go to School with our Master Christ, and to be under his Ferula and rod (although it seemeth sharp and grievous for a time) that at the length we may be inheritors with him of everlasting joy, rather then to keep company with the Devils Scholars, the adulterous generation, in his School that is all full of pleasure for a while, and at the end to be paid with the wages of continual burning in the most horrible lake which burneth evermore with Fire and Brimstone without any end. What shall then these vain goods and temporal pleasures avail? Who shall then help when we cry incessantly, Wo, wo, alas, and weal away for unmeasurable pain, grief, and sorrow? O let us therefore take heed betime, and rather be content to take pains in this World for a time, that we may please God. Our Saviour Christ the true teacher saith: Every Branch that bringeth not forth fruit in me, my Father will take away, John 15.

It is also not written in vain, Eccle. 4.1. The Children of the Ungodly are abominable Children, and so are they that keep company with the Ungodly. What doth he else, I pray you, that resorteth to the ministrations and service that is most repugnant and contrary to Christs Holy Testament, there keeping still silence, and nothing reproving the same, but in the face of the World, by his very deed itself, declare himself to be of a false, fearful, dissembling, fained, and crafty heart, and to have laid away from him the armour of light, discouraging as much as lieth in him all the residue of Christs holy, and giving a manifest offence to the weak, and also confirming, encouraging, and rejoicing the hearts of the adversaries in all their evil doing? By which example he doth shew himself neither to love God, whom he seeth to be dishonoured and blasphemed of an Antichristian Minister, nor yet his neighbour before whom he should rebuke the evil, as it is expressly commanded in Gods Holy Law, where it is said: Thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbour, that thou bear not sin for his sake, Levit. 19. Wherefore let such a one never fantasie to deceive himself, that his name is registered in the Book of Life, to have the reward of Christs Souldier, except he do the duty, and perform the part of a Faithful and right true Souldier, as other have done before. For such fearfulness cometh not from God, as telleth Saint Paul, 2 Tim. 1. saying, God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power and love. He not ashamed, saith he, to testify our Lord, but suffer adversity also with the Gospel, through the power of God, which saved us, and called us with an holy calling.

To be now fearful, when most needs that we should be of strong hearts, is utterly the rejecting of the fear of God, and plain unfaithfulness and disobedience to the express commandment of our Saviour Christ, which faith in his Holy Gospel, Math. 10. Fear not them that kill the Body, &c. For what faithfulness do we express towards him, when he faith thus to us, and yet we declare in our doings the very contrary, being ever fearful, even as the unbelieving Israelites, which unfaithfully feared Gods Enemies the Heathen Canaanites, whereas he had oftentimes given them commandment by his true Prophet Moses, to do the contrary? For the which cause, all the whole number of that Seed were destroyed in process of time in the Wilderness, and enjoyed not the pleasant land of promise. Which was a Bodily figure shewed before, and now agreeing to the promise of the Heavenly Inheritance, which shall be given to none other, but only to all such as with love unfained be wholly bent, without any fear of Man, to fulfill Gods Holy Will and pleasure. But all they that pertain to the lively Faith, to the winning of the Soul, will faithfully stick to the commandment, trusting most firmly and faithfully that he that gave the fame, will also give strength plentifully to perform it, even in the weakest vessels of all, even as we have heard and seen by many and divers examples; he only be praised therefore.

Saint Peter saith, 1 Pet. 3. Fear not though they seem terrible unto you, neither be troubled, but sanctify the Lord God in your hearts. Only (saith Saint Paul, Philippi. 1. let your conversation be as it becometh the Gospel of Christ. Continue in one spirit, and in one Soul, labouring as we do, to maintain the faith of the Gospel, and in nothing fearing your adversaries, which is to them a token of Damnation, and to you of Salvation, and that of God: for unto you it is given that not only ye should believe in Christ, but also suffer for his sake. Wherefore let us be right well assured, that we shall find a most straight reckoning and account, if we transgress the said most wholesome precepts given us of our Master Christ, and of his Apostles, and now in this troublesome time wherein the Gospel is persecuted, shew our selves fearful Souldiers; as it is manifestly declared in the Revelation of Saint John, Chapter, 2.1. where it is written, That the fearful shall have their part with the unbelieving and abominable, in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death. Again, it is written in the same Book for our warning, Chapter the third, Because ye are not both, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my Mouth.

Now therefore (good Christians) these true testimonies of Gods lively word deeply considered and weighed, let us chiefly stand in awe of his most terrible judgments, and be not as they that presumptuously tempt him. Let him always be our fear and dread. He now chasteneth, he now nourisheth us for our profit, delighting in us even as a loving Father in his beloved Child, to make us perfect, and to have us to be partakers of his Holiness. He now judgeth us (not utterly taking away his everlasting love and mercy from us, he doth from the malignant and wicked) that we should not be condemned with the wicked World: but if we now refuse his most loving chastity.

Anno 1556. chaffling, and follow the World, we must needs have our portion with the World. Wide is the gate, and broad is the way which leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in therat: But strait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. O how much better is it to go this narrow way with the people of God, then to enjoy the pleasures of Sin for a time?

In consideration whereof, let us without any more flacking and further delays in this great warning by Gods loving visitation, submit our selves betime under his mighty hand, that he may exalt us when the time is come. And thus I wholly commit you to him, and to the Word of his grace, which is able to build further, beseeching you most heartily to pray for me, that I may be strong through the power of his might, and stand perfect in all things, being always prepared and ready, looking for the mercy of our Lord unto eternal rest, and I will pray for you as I am most bound. So I trust he will graciously hear us for his promise sake made unto all the faithful in his dearly beloved Son Christ our alone Saviour, whose Grace be with your Spirit, most dear Christians, for ever. So be it.

By your Christian Brother, John Hullier, a Prisoner of the Lord.

John Hullier being of long time prisoner, and now openly judged to dye for the Testimony of the Lord Jesus, witheth heartily to the whole congregation of God, the strength of his Holy Spirit, to their everlasting health both of Body and Soul.

I Now (most dear Christians) having the sweet comfort of Gods saving health, and being confirmed with his free Spirit (be he only praised therefore) am constrained in my Conscience, thinking it my very duty to admonish you, as ye tender the Salvation of your Souls, by all manner of means to separate your selves from the company of the Popes hirelings, considering what is said in the Revelation of Saint John, by the Angel of God, touching all Men. The words be these; If any Man worship the Beast and his Image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink the Wine of the Wrath of God, which is poured into the cup of his wrath, and he shall be punished with fire and brimstone before the holy Angels, and before the Lamb, and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up evermore. Mark well here (good Christians) who is this Beast and worshippers that shall be partakers of that unpeakeable torment. The Beast is none other but the carnal and Fleishly Kingdom of Antichrist, the Pope with his rabble of false Prophets and Ministers, as it is most manifest: which to maintain their high Titles, Worldly promotions and dignities, do with much cruelty, daily more and more set forth and establish their own traditions, decrees, decretals, contrary to Gods Holy Ordinances, Statutes, Laws, and Commandments, and wholly repugnant to his sincere and pure Religion and true Worshipping.

Now what do they else but Worship this Beast and his Image, who after they had once already escaped from the filthiness of the World, through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, are yet again tangled therein and overcome, using dissimulation unfaithfully for fear of their displeasure, doing one thing outwardly, and thinking inwardly another; so having them in reverence under a cloak and colour, to whom they ought not so much as to say, God speed; and adjoyning themselves to the malignant congregation, which they ought to abhor as a den of Thieves and Murderers, and as the voices being contrary to Christs Voice, if they were of his Flock, they would not know, but would flee from him; as he himself being the good Shepherd of our Souls doth full well in his Holy Gospel testify. Again, what do they else I pray you, but receive the Beasts mark in their foreheads and in their hands, which do bear a fair Face and Countenance outwardly in supporting them as other do, being ashamed openly to confess Christ and his Holy Gospel? But this fairness and dissimulation Christ and his Gospel will in no wife allow. Of whom it is said, Luke 9. Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this Adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when he shall come in the Glory of his Father with his holy Angels. Therefore faith Almighty God by his Prophet Malachy, Malach. 1. Cursed be the dissemblers. Ye were once lightened, and tasted of the Heavenly gift, and were become partakers of the Holy Ghost, and tasted of the Word of God, and of the power of the World to come. And our Saviour Christ faith, Luke 6. No Man that putteth his hand to the plough and looketh back, is apt for the Kingdom of God. Therefore Saint John the Apostle useth this for a manifest token, that the backsliding of the true Preachers of Gods Word declare evidently, that they be not of the number of them. For, faith he 1 John 2. They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had been of us, no doubt they would have continued with us. Surely so long as we use dissimulation, and to play on both hands, we are not in the light. For whatsoever is manifest, the same is light; as the elect vessel of God S. Paul witnesseth in Ephes. 4.

Wherefore (good Christians) for Gods most dear love, deceive not your selves through your own will, dom, and through the Wisdom of the World, which is foolishness before God; but certify and stay your own Conscience with the sure truth and faithful Word of God, and with the infallible testimonies of Holy Scripture. For although Gods mercy is over all his works; yet it doth not extend but only to them that hold fast the confidence and rejoicing of hope unto the end, not being weary in well doing, but rather waxing every day stronger and stronger in the inward Man. Therefore in the Revelation of S. John, where it is entreated of the Beast and his Image, it is also said, Here is the suffering of Saints, and here are they that keep the Commandments, and the Faith of Jesus Christ, Revelat. 13. Whereby Almighty God doth then plainly, that he doth use those wicked Men as Instruments for a time, to try the patience and faith of his peculiar people, without the performance whereof we can have no part among the living; but as it is said in the same Revelation, The fearful shall have their part in the Lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death.

But peradventure ye will object and say unto me; What shall we do? Shall we cast our selves headlong to death? I say not so. But this I say, that we are all bound (if ever we look to receive Salvation at Gods Hand) in this case wholly to be obedient to his determinate counsel and foreknowledge, expressed by the gift of the Spirit in Holy Scripture; and then to cast all our care upon him, who worketh all in all for the best, unto them that love him: and thus he giveth commandment, saying: Come away from her my people, that ye be not partakers of her Sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues, Apoc. 18. Now who hearing this terrible voice of God, which must needs be fulfilled, will not with all speed and diligence apply himself to do thereafter, except such as will presumptuously tempt him? And as touching such, the Wise Man faith, Eccles. 2. He that loveth peril and danger, shall perish therein. But they that be of the Faith of Abraham, even as he did, so will they in all assays and trials be obedient to the Heavenly Voice, howsoever it seemeth contrary to their own natural will and carnal reason, according to the sure word of Faith, which faith; Hope thou in the Lord, and keep his way: hold thee still in the Lord, and abide patiently upon him. Let not thy jealousie move thee also to do evil. Come out from among them, and joyne not your selves to their unlawful assemblies; yea, do not once shew your selves with the least part of your Body to favour their wicked doings, but glorifie God (as most right is) as well in your whole Body outwardly, as inwardly in your Spirit, or else you can do neither of both well; for your Body doth belong to God as well as your Spirit. At the dreadful day of Judgment we shall all receive the works of our Bodies, according to that we have done, whether it be good or bad.

Therefore whatsoever we do, we may not bring the Spirit in bondage to the Body, but contrariwise we must subdue the Body and the will of the Fleish to the Spirit, that the Spirit may freely accomplish the will of God beholdings; for otherwise we shall never be partakers of his promise, with the true Children of Abraham. For as S. Paul saith, They which are the children of the flesh, are not the children of God. If we shall live according to the flesh, we shall dye. For to be carnally minded, is death; but to be spiritually minded, is life and peace, because that the fleshly mind is enmity to God: for it is not obedient to the Law of God, neither can be. So then they that are in the flesh, cannot please God. Now choose you which way you will take; either the narrow way that leadeth unto life, which Christ himself, and his faithful followers, have gone through before; or else the broad path-way that leadeth to destruction, which the wicked worldlings take their pleasure in for a while. I for my part have now written this short Admonition unto you of good will (as God is my witness) to exhort you to that way, which at length you your selves shall prove and find to be best, yea and rejoyce thereof. And I do not only write this, but I will also (with the assistance of Gods grace) ratifie and confirm, and seal the same with the effusion of my blood, when the full time shall be expired that he hath appointed; which (so far forth as I may judge) must needs be within these few days. Therefore I now bid you all most heartily farewell in the Lord, whose grace be with your spirit, Amen. Watch and

Anno 1556.

Besides these Letters, the said John Hullier left also a godly Prayer, which if any be disposed to peruse, it is extant in the old Book of Acts to be found, pag. 1515.

The death and martyrdom of six constant Professors of Christ, burned at Colchester, for the testimony of the Gospel, the 28. day of April.

Not long after the death of Robert Drakes, William Tyme, and the other Essex Martyrs, executed in Smithfield, as is above specified, followed in the same order likewise of Martyrdom, at one like fire in the Town of Colchester, (where the most part of them did inhabit) six other blessed Martyrs, whose names be these:

Christopher Lyster of Dagenham, Husbandman.
John Mace of Colchester, Apothecary.
John Spencer of Colchester, Weaver.
Symon Joyne, Sawyer.
Richard Nichols of Colchester, Weaver.
John Hammond of Colchester, Tanner.

The burning of the foresaid six men at Colchester.

Wagon Craft.

With these six was also joyned another, whose name was Roger Grasbroke, but he afterward submitted himself. Of these above named, the Bishop, because he (as it seemed by the short Process recorded by his Register) waxed now weary, made a very quick dispatch. For soon after that, they were delivered unto one John Kingstone, Bachelor of Civil Law, and then Commissary to the Bishop, by the Earl of Oxford and other Commissioners (as appeareth by a Bill indented, made between the Commissioners and the said Commissary, for the receipt of the said Prisoners, dated the 28. day of March, Anno Regni Regis & Regine Philippi & Mariæ secundo & tertio, which is the year of our Lord, 1556.) and by him sent up unto his Lord and Master, the Bishop cauled them to be brought unto his House of Fulham: Where in the open Church, judicially were ministred unto them the same Articles that were propounded unto Bartlet Green and others, mentioned before. To the which they made their several Answers, agreeing altogether in one Truth, as by the sum and effect thereof here ensuing, more plainly appeareth.

2. To the second they answered, That they believed, that in the true Catholick Church of Christ there be but two Sacraments; that is to say, the Sacrament of Baptism, and the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ.
3. To the third Article they all agreed, confessing that they were baptized in the Faith and Belief of the Catholick Church, and that their Godfathers and Godmothers had professed and promised for them, as is contained in the same Article.
4. To the fourth they answered, That they always were, and yet then did continue in the Faith and Profession wherein they were baptized; Richard Nichols adding also, that he had more plainly learned the truth of his Profession by the Doctrine set forth in K. Edward the sixth his days, and thereupon he had builded his Faith, and would

5. To the fifth they answered, That they neither swerved nor went away from the Catholick Faith of Christ. Howbeit they confessed, that within the time articulate (and before) they had misliked, and earnestly spoken against the Sacrifice of the Mass, and against the Sacrament of the Altar, affirming that they would not come to hear or be partakers thereof, because they had; and then did believe, that they were set forth and used contrary to Gods Word and Glory. And moreover they did grant, that they had spoken against the usurped Authority of the Bishop of Rome, as an oppressor of Christs Church and Gospel, and that he ought not to have any Authority in England. For all which sayings they were no whit sorry, but rather rejoiced and were glad.

6. To the sixth they answered, That they never refused, nor yet then presently did refuse to be reconciled to the Unity of Christs Catholick Church: but they said they had, and then did, and so ever would hereafter utterly refuse to come to the Church of Rome, or to acknowledge the Authority of the seat thereof, but did utterly abhor the same, for putting down the Book of God, the Bible, and setting up the Babylonical Mass, with all other of Antichrists merchandize.

7. To the seventh Article, the effect thereof they all granted. And Symon Jyng declared further, that the cause of his refusing to be partaker of their trumphery was, for that the Commandments of God were there broken, and Christs Ordinances changed and put out, and the Bishop of Rome Ordinances in stead thereof put in. Moreover, as touching the Sacrament of Christs Body, Christopher Lyfter affirmed, that in the said Sacrament there is the substance of Bread and Wine, as well after the words of Consecration as before, and that there is not in the same the very Body and Blood of Christ really, substantially, and truly, but only Sacramentally and Spiritually by Faith in the Faithful receivers, and that the Mass is not propitiatory for the quick or for the dead, but meer Idolatry and Abomination.

8. To the eighth they said, That they were sent to Calcheſter Priſon by the King and Queens Commiſſioners, because they would not come to their Parish Churches, and by them ſent unto the Biſhop of London, to be there- of further examined.

9. To the ninth they all generally agreed, That that which they had ſaid in the premiſſes was true, and that they were of the Dioceſ of London.

Theſe Answers thus made, the Biſhop did diſmiſſ them for that preſent untill the afternoon. At which time having firſt their Articles and Answers read unto them again, and they ſtanding moſt firmly unto their Chriſtian profeſſion, they were by divers ways and means aſſayed and tried if they would revoke the ſame their profeſſed Faith, and return to the Unity of Antichriſts Church.

Which thing when they reſuſed, the Biſhop ſtoutly pronounced the Sentence of Condemnation againſt them, committing them unto the Temporal Power. Who, upon the receipt of the King and Queens Writ, ſent them unto Calcheſter, where the 28. day of April, moſt cheerfully they ended their lives to the Glory of Gods holy Name, and the great encouragement of others.

At which words the Bishop, belike, somewhat tickled, and therefore very loth to delay their Condemnation any longer (such was now his hot burning charity) commanded that they should be brought after him unto Fulham, whether he before dinner did go, and there in the afternoon, after his solemn manner, in the open Church he pronounced the definitive Sentence of Condemnation against them, and so delivering them into the hands of the temporal Officer, thought to dispatch his hands of them, but could not so dispatch his Conscience before the judgment of God, from the guiltiness of innocent Blood.

The poor Men, being now in the temporal Officers hands, might not there be suffered long to remain, and therefore the fifteenth day of May, very early in the morning, they were carried from Newgate in a Cart to Stratford the Bowes, and most quietly in the fire praising God yielded up their Souls into his hands, through a lively faith in Jesus Christ, whom unto the end they did most constantly confess.

At their death, Hugh Laverock, after he was chained, cast away his Crucch, and comforting John Apprice his fellow-Martyr, said unto him; Be of good comfort my Brother; for my Lord of London is our good Phisician. He will heal us both shortly; thee of thy blindness, and me of my lameness. And so patiently these two good Saints of God together suffered.

Three Women the same time burned in Smithfield, Katherine Hut, Elizabeth Thackvel, and Joan Horns.

May 16.

The next day after martyrdom of this Lame and Blind Man above specified, in the said Month of May, were brought to the Fire three Women, with whom also was adjoynd another, who being in the same confancty with them, was likewise partaker of the said condemnation. The names of these were:

Katherine
Hut, Widow.
Joan Horns, Maid.
Elizabeth Thackvel, Maid.
Margaret Ellis, Maid.

Katherine Hut of Backing, Widow.

Joan Horns of Billerica, Maid.

Elizabeth Thackvel of great Bursted, Maid.

Margaret Ellis of Billerica, Maid.

How these with divers other more were persecuted and sent up, especially by Sir John Mordant, and Edmund Tyrel Esquire, Justices of Peace, this their Letter following will declare.

A Letter sent unto Boner Bishop of London, from Sir John Mordant Knight, and Edmund Tyrel Esquire, Justices of Peace for the County of Essex.

A Letter of certain persecuting Justices to Boner.

Our Humble Commendations to your Lordship; these shall be to advertise you, that we have sent unto your good Lordship Joan Potter, the Wife of Hugh Potter, James Harris, servant of William Harris of Bromhill and Margaret Ellis, for that they be not conformable to the orders of the Church, nor to the Real Presence of Christs Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar, to use your Lordships pleasure with them, as you think good; not doubting, with the punishment of these and other before sent to your Lordship, but that the Parish of great Bursted and Billerica shall be brought to good conformity. Thus, committing your good Lordship to the tuition of the Almighty God, we take our leave.

From great Bursted this present second day of March, Anno 1556.

Your Lordships to commands; John Mordant, Edmund Tyrel.

After the receipt of these Letters, Bishop Boner entering to examination of these four Women above named, laid and objected the like Articles to them, as after his usual form he used to minister, and are before expressed: Whereunto the said Women likewise agreeing in the same Unity of Spirit and Doctrine, according in their Answers, much agreeing unto the other before them.

As first, to the Article in the first place objected, they consented and granted, believing the said Article to be true in every part thereof.

2. To the second, partly they answered, they could not tell what a Sacrament is; Elizabeth Thackvel, and Katherine Hut adding moreover, that Matrimony, and Baptism, and the Lords Supper were Sacraments ordained in the Church: but whether the other specified in this Article be Sacraments (as they heard them called) ordained by God or not, they could not tell. Margaret Ellis being examined severally, as the other were, upon the same, how many Sacraments there were, answered (as a young maid unskilled, in her simple ignorance) that she could not tell. Howbeit she had heard (she said) that there was one Sacrament, but what it was she could not tell, &c.

The simple ignorance of these Women had most evidently been inferred, then they could
buried.

3. To the third likewise they granted, that they were Baptized by their Godfathers and Godmothers, which Godfathers and Godmothers (said Margaret Ellis) did not then know so much, as the doth now know: Katherine Hut adding withal and saying, that she was Baptized; but what her Godfather and Godmothers did then promise for her in her name, she could not tell, &c.

4. To the fourth Article Margaret Ellis, and Elizabeth Thackvel did grant thereunto: Katherine Hut said moreover, that she, being of the Age of fourteen years, was of the faith wherein she was christened and yet never, theless the said faith in that Age (she said) was but a dead faith, because she did not then understand what she did believe. Joan Horns added, that she, being eleven years of age, began to learn the faith set forth in King Edwards days, in the which Faith and Religion (she said) she hath hitherto, and yet doth, and so will hereafter continue, God so assisting her.

5. To the fifth Article they answered and confessed, according all in this effect, that as touching the Mass, they knew no goodness in it; and as touching the Sacrament of the Altar, they believed that Christs Natural Body is in Heaven, and not in the Sacrament of the Altar: & concerning the See of Rome, they acknowledged no such supremacy in that See, neither have they any thing to do therewith.

Against the Mass and Sacrament of the Altar.

6. In answering the sixth Article, they did all generally refuse to be reconciled or united to the Church of Rome, or any other Church, contrary to that wherein they now stood and did profess.

7. To the seventh Article they answered likewise, that they had so done and said in all things, as it is in this Article contained: Katherine Hut adding moreover the reason why; for that (said she) neither the Service in Latin, Mass, Mattens, and Even-song, nor the Sacraments were used and ministered according to Gods Word: And furthermore, that the Mass is an Idol, neither is the true Body and Blood of Christ in the Sacrament of the Altar, as they make Men believe.

8. The Answer to the eighth Article, declared that they were all and every one sent up to Boner by Sir John Mordant Knight, and Justice of Peace in Essex (the Lord of his mercy send us better Justices I beseech him) or that they could not affirm the presence of Christs Body and Blood to be truly and really in the Sacrament, and for that they came not to their Popish Parish Church.

By Sir John Mordant Promised.

9. To the ninth Article, they answered and confessed the premises thereof to be true, and denied not the same; Katherine Hut said, that she was of Backing in Essex of the peculiar jurisdiction of Canterbury, and not of the Diocese and jurisdiction of London.

Katherine Hut Promised.

After

Anno 1556. After these their Answers received, they were produced again about the thirteenth of April to further Examination, and so at length to their final Judgment; where Katherine Hut widow, standing before the Bishop boldly and constantly stood to that which he had said before, neither yielding to his fair promises, nor overthrowing with his terror. Who being required of the Sacrament to say her mind, and to revoke her self unto the fellowship of the Catholick Faith, openly protested, saying, I deny it to be God, because it is a dumb God, and made with mens hands. Wherein the good and faithful Martyr of Christ firmly persisting, so received her Sentence, being condemned of Boner to the fire; which she with great constancy sustained by the grace and strength of the Lord, and did abide for the cause and love of Christ.

Joan Horns Maid, produced likewise to her Judgment and Condemnation, with like firmness and Christlike fortitude declared her self a true Martyr and follower of Christs Testament, giving no place to the Adversary; but being charged that she did not believe the Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood to be Christ himself; of the which Sacrament (contrary to the nature of a Sacrament) the Adversaries are wont to make an Idol Service; to this the protesting openly her mind, said as followeth; If you can make your God to shed blood, or to shew any condition of a true lively Body, then will I believe you: but it is but Bread (as touching the Substance thereof) meaning the matter whereof the Sacrament consisteth; and that which you call Heresie, I trust to serve my Lord God in, &c.

And as concerning the Romish See, she said, My Lord (speaking to Boner) I forsake all his Abominations, and from them good Lord deliver us. From this her stable and constant affection, when the Bishop was too weak to remove her, and too ignorant to convince her, he knocked her down with the butcherly Ax of his Sentence. And so the holy Virgin and Martyr committed to the Shambles of the Secular Sword, was offered up with her other fellows a burnt Sacrifice to the Lord, in odorem bonae fragrantiae, in the favour of a sweet and pleasant smell.

As touching Margaret Ellis, she likewise persevering in her forsaide Confession, and resisting the false Catholick errors and heresies of the Papists, was by the said Boner adjudged and condemned; but before the time of her burning came, prevented by death in Newgate Prison, departed and slept in the Lord.

No less strength in the grace of the Lord appeared in the other Maid Elizabeth Thackvell, whose heart and mind the Lord had so confirmed in his Truth, so armed with Patience, that as her Adversaries could by no sufficient knowledge of Scripture convince her affirmation, so by no forcible attempts they could remove her confession. Whereupon the standing to the death, being in like sort condemned, by the said unchristlike exheredation, gave her life willingly and mildly for the confirmation and sealing up of the sincere truth of Gods Word.

These three innocent and godly women, thus falsely and wrongfully by men condemned for the just quarrel and cause of Gods Gospel, were had to Smithfield, and there cruelly bound to the Stake, gave their Bodies to the Tormentors, their Spirits they commended to God. For whose glory they were willing and ready to suffer whatsoever the cruel hands of their enemies should work against them, dying more joyfully in the flaming fire, than some of them that burned then did peradventure in their beds. Such a Lord is God, glorious and wonderful in all his Saints. The martyrdom of these Saints of God was the 16. of May.

Thomas Drowry a blind Boy, and Thomas Croker Bricklayer, Martyrs.

May 1. YE heard a little before of two men, the one blind, the other lame, which suffered about the 15. of May. And here is not to be forgotten another as godly a couple, which suffered the like passion and martyrdom for the same cause of Religion at Glocester: of the which two, the one was a blind Boy, named Thomas Drowry, whom mentioned before in the History of Bishop Hooper, whom the said virtuous Bishop confirmed then in the Lord, and in the Doctrine of his Word.

With him also was burned another in the same place, and at the same fire in Glocester, about the fifth of May, whose name was Thomas Croker Bricklayer.

Concerning the which blind Boy; how long he was in Prison, and in what year he suffered, I am not certain. Of this incredible Intelligence I have received by the Testimony of the Register then of Glocester, named John Taylor, alias Barker, that the said blind Boy at his last Examination and final Condemnation, was brought (by the Officers, under whose custody he had remained) before Dr. Williams then Chancellor of Glocester, sitting Judicially with the said Register in the Consistory, near unto the South-door, in the neither end of the Church of Glocester. Where the said Chancellor then ministred unto the Boy such usual Articles as are accustomed in such cases, and are sundry times mentioned in this Book: Amongst which, he chiefly urged the Article of Transubstantiation; saying in effect as followeth.

Chancellor. Dost thou not believe, that after the words of Consecration spoken by the Priest, there remaineth the very real Body of Christ in the Sacrament of the Altar?

Thom. To whom the blind Boy answered; No, that I do not.

Chan. Then thou art an Heretick, and shalt be burned: But who hath taught thee this Heresie?

Thom. You Master Chancellor.

Chan. Where I pray thee?

Thom. Even in yonder place; pointing with his hand, and turning towards the Pulpit, standing upon the North-side of the Church.

Chan. When did I teach thee so?

Thom. When you preached there (naming the day) a Sermon to all men as well as to me, upon the Sacrament. You said, the Sacrament was to be received spiritually by Faith, and not carnally and really, as the Papists have heretofore taught.

Chan. Then do as I have done, and thou shalt live as I do, and escape burning.

Thom. Though you can so easily dispense with your self, and mock with God, the World, and your Conscience, yet will I not so do.

Chan. Then God have mercy upon thee; for I will read the Condemnation Sentence against thee.

Thom. Gods will be fulfilled.

The Register being herewith somewhat moved, stood up, and said to the Chancellor;

Register. Fie for shame, Man, will you read the Sentence against him, and condemn your self? Away, away, and substitute some other to give Sentence and Judgment.

Chan. No, Register, I will obey the Law, and give Sentence my self according to mine Office.

And so he read the Sentence condemnatory against the Boy (with an unhappy tongue, and a more unhappy Conscience) delivering him over unto the Secular Power. Who the said fifth day of May, brought the said blind Boy to the place of Execution at Glocester; together with one Thomas Croker a Bricklayer, condemned also for the like testimony of the Truth. Where both together in one fire most constantly and joyfully yielded their Souls into the hands of the Lord Jesus, Extremum. In Lond.

Persecution in Suffolk.

Three burnt at Beckles, May 21.

AFTER the death of these above rehearsed, were three men burnt at Beckles in Suffolk, in one fire about the 21. of May, Anno 1556. Whose names are here specified.

Thomas Spicer of Winston, Labourer.

John Denny and Edmund Poole.

This Thomas Spicer was a single man, of the age of Nineteen years, and by vocation a Labourer, dwelling in Winston in the County of Suffolk, and there taken in his Masters House in Summer, about or anon after the rising of the Sun, (being in his Bed) by James Ling and John Keretch of the same Town, and William Dunning of Debham in the said County.

The occasion of his taking was, for that he would not go to their Popish Church to hear Mass, and receive their Idol at the Commandment of Sir John Tyrrel Knight, of Gipping-Hall in Suffolk, and certain other Justices there, who sent both him and them to Eye Dungeon in Suffolk, till at length they were all three together brought before Dunning, then Chancellor of Norwich, and Mr. Mings the Register sitting at the Town of Breckles to be examined.

And there the said Chancellor, perswading what he could to turn them from the Truth, could by no means prevail of his purpose. Wherefore minding in the end to give Sentence on them, he burst out in tears, intreating them to remember themselves, and to turn again to the holy Mother Church, for that they were deceived and out of the Truth, and that they should not wilfully cast away themselves, with such like words.

Now as he was thus labouring them, and seemed very loath to read the Sentence (for they were the first that he condemned in that Diocese) the Register there sitting by, being weary belike of tarrying, or else perceiving the constant Martyrs to be at a point, called upon the Chancellor in haste to rid them out of the way, and to make an end. At the which words the Chancellor read the Condemnation over them with tears, and delivered them to the Secular Power.

Their Articles.

The Articles objected to these, and commonly to all other condemned in that Diocese by Dr. Hopson Bishop of Norwich, and by Dunning his Chancellor, were these:

1. First, It was Articulate against them, that they believed not the Pope of Rome to be Supreme Head immediately under Christ in Earth of the Universal Catholick Church.
2. Item, That they believed not holy Bread and holy Water, Alms, Palms, and all other like Ceremonies used in the Church, to be good and laudable for stirring up the People to Devotion.
3. Item, That they believed not, after the words of Consecration spoken by the Priest, the very natural Body of Christ, and no other Substance of Bread and Wine to be in the Sacrament of the Altar.
4. Item, That they believed it to be Idolatry to worship Christ in the Sacrament of the Altar.
5. Item, That they took Bread and Wine in remembrance of Christ's Passion.
6. Item, That they would not follow the Cross in Procession, nor be confessed to a Priest.
7. Item, That they affirmed no mortal man to have in himself freewill to do good or evil.

For this Doctrine and Articles above prefixed, these three (as is aforesaid) were condemned by Dr. Dunning, and committed to the Secular Power, Sir John Silliard being the same time high Sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk.

And the next day following upon the same, they were all burnt together in the said Town of Breckles. Whereupon it is to be thought, that the Writ De Comburendis, was not yet come down, nor could be, the Lord Chancellor B. Heath being the same time at London. Which if it be true, then it is plain, that both they went beyond their Commission, that were the Executioners, and also the Clergy, which were the Instigators thereof, cannot make good that they now pretend; saying, that they did nothing but by Law. But this let the Lord find out when he seeth his time.

In the mean time while these good men were at the Stake, and had prayed, they said their Belief; and when they came to the reciting of the Catholick Church, Sir John Silliard spake to them; That is well said, first, quoth he, I am glad to hear you say, you do believe the Catholick Church. That is the best word I have heard of you yet.

To which his sayings Edmund Poole answered, that though they believe the Catholick Church, yet do they not believe in their Popish Church, which is no part of Christ's Catholick Church, and therefore no part of their Belief.

When they rose from Prayer, they all went joyfully to the Stake, and being bound thereto, and the Fire burning about them, they praised God in such an audible voice, that it was wonderful to all those which stood by and heard them.

Then one Robert Bacon, dwelling in the said Breckles, a very Enemy of Gods Truth, and a Persecutor of his People, being there present within hearing thereof, willed the Tormentors to throw one Pagot to stop the Knaves breaths, as he termed them; so that was his burning Charity. But these good men, not regarding their malice, confessed the Truth, and yielded their lives to the death for the testimony of the same, very gloriously and joyfully. The which their constancy in the like cause the Lord grant we may imitate and follow unto the end: Whether it be death or life to glorifie the Name of Christ, Amen.

And so far as we have here entered into the Persecution of Norfolk and Suffolk, it cometh therefore to mind, by occasion hereof, briefly to touch by the way, some part (for the whole matter cannot be so exprest as it was done) touching the troubles of the Town of Winston and Mendlesham in Suffolk, raised and stirred by the said Sir John Tyrrel and other Justices there of the like affinity. The sum and effect of which briefly is thus signified to me by writing.

The Persecution in the Towns of Winston and Mendlesham in Suffolk.

BY the procurement of Sir John Tyrrel Knt. and other of his Colleagues, there were persecuted out of the Town of Winston in Suffolk, these persons hereafter following, Anno 1556.

Mrs. Alice Twaites Gentlewoman, of the age of threefoore years and more, and two of her Servants.
Humphrey Smith and his wife.
William Catchpole and his wife.
John Mauling and his wife.
Nicholas Burlingham and his wife.
 And one Raught and his wife.

Such as were persecuted and driven out of the Town of Mendlesham, in the County of Suffolk.

Symon Harlstone, and Katherine his wife, with his five children.
William Whuting, and Katherine his wife.
Thomas Dobson and his wife.
Thomas Hubbard and his wife.
John Doncon and his wife and maid.
William Doncon.
Thomas Woodward the elder.
 One Kennolds wife.
 A Poor Widow.
 One mother Semous Maid.

Besides those that were constrained to do against their Conscience, by the help of the Parish Priest, whose name was Sir John Brodsh.

These be the chiefest Causes why those above named were persecuted.

First, they d'd hold and believe the holy Word of God to be the sufficient Doctrine unto their Salvation.

Secondly, They denied the Popes usurped Authority, and did hold all that Church of Antichrist to be Christ's Adversaries. And further, they refused the abused Sacraments, defied the Mass and all Popish Service and Ceremonies, saying, they robbed God of his honour and Christ of his death and glory, and would not come at the Church, without it were to the defacing of that they did there.

Thirdly, They did hold that the Ministers of the Church by Gods Word might lawfully marry.

Fourthly, They held the Queen to be as chief Head, and wicked Rulers to be a great Plague sent of God for sin, &c.

Fifthly, They denied mans Free-will, and held that the Popes Church did err, and many other in that point with them, rebuking their false confidence in works, and their false trust in mans righteousness. Also when any rebuked those persecuted for going so openly, and talking so freely; their answer was, They knewed, confessed, and believed, and therefore they must speak: and that their Tribulation was Gods good will and providence, and that his Judgments were right, to punish them with other for their sins; and that of very faithfulness and mercy God had caused them to be troubled, so that one hair of their Heads should not perish before the time, but all things should work unto the best to them that love God, and that Christ Jesus was their life and only righteousness, and that only by faith in him, and for his sake all good things were freely given them, also forgiveness of sins and life everlasting.

Many of these persecuted were of great Substance, and had Possessions of their own.

And upon the Wednesday in the night the man died, being overcome with hunger and watching. So there was none left but this Crow, who, driving up and down in the Sea, called upon God as he could, and might not sleep for fear that the Sea would have beaten him off.

So at length I my self (said Thomas Morse) being laden to Antwerp with my Crayer, going from Lee up on Friday, having within my Crayer, of Mariners and Merchants, to the number of 46. persons, and so coming to the Foreland, the wind was not very good, so that I was constrained to go somewhat out of my way, being in the Afternoon about six of the Clock, where at the last we saw a thing afar off, appearing unto us like a small buoy, that Fishermen do use to lay with their hooks.

When we saw it, some said, Let us have some light. And I said to him that was at the Helm; Keep your course away, for we shall but hinder the Fisherman, and have no fish neither, and so at my commandment he did. But at length he at the Helm standing higher than all we did, said, Me think Master, it is a man. But yet they, being in doubt that it was but a Fishers Buoy, returned the Ship from him again to keep their course.

Crow beholding the Ship to turn from him, being then in utter despair, and ready now to perish with watching, famine, and moreover miserably beaten with the Seas, at last took his Mariners Cap from his head, and bolding up the same with his arm, as high as he could, thought by shaking it as well as he might, to give them some token of better sight.

Whereupon the Styrenmen more sensibly perceiving a thing to move, advertised us again, declaring how he did see plainly a mans arm; and with that we all beheld him well, and so came to him and took him up. And as soon as we had him in our Ship, he began to put his hand in his bosom; and one asked him if he had money there. No, said he, I have a Book here, I think it be wet; and so drew out his Testament, which we then dried. But the Sea had so beaten him, that his eyes, nose, and mouth were almost clofed with salt, that the heat of his face and the weather had made. So we made a fire and sufficed him with dry clothes, and gave him Aqua composita to drink, and such meat as was in the Ship, and then let him sleep.

The next day we awaked him about eight of the clock in the Morning, and his blood began somewhat to appear in his flesh (for when we took him up, his flesh was even as though it had been foddren, or as a drowned mans) and then we talked with him of all the matter before rehearsed. And so saying to Antwerp, the Merchants which saw the thing published the same in Antwerp; and because it was wonderful, the people there, both men and women, came to the Ship to see him many of them. Some gave him a Peticoat, and some a Shirt, some Hofen, and some Money (always noting how he cast away his Money, and kept his Book).

And many of the women wept when they heard and saw him. And Master Governour of the English Nation there had him before him, and talked with him of all the matter; and pitying his case, commanded the Officer of the English House to go with him to the free Oshouses amongst the English Merchants, and I with them, and at three Houses there was given him six pound ten shillings. And so from thence he went with me to Roan, where the people also came to him to see him, marvelling at the great works of God.

And thus much concerning this poor man with his New Testament preserved in the Sea (which Testament the Popes Clergy condemneth on the Land) ye have heard, as I received by the relation of the Party above named, who was the doer thereof, and yet alive dwelling in Lee, well known to all Merchants of London. In which story this by the way understand, good Reader, (which rightly may be supposed) that if this poor man, thus found and preserved in the Sea with a New Testament in his bosom, had had instead of that a Pix with a consecrated Host about him, no doubt it had been rung ere this time all Christendom over for a Miracle, so far as the Pope hath any Land. But to let the Pope with his false Miracles go, let us return again to our matter begun, and adjoyn another History of much like condition, testified likewise by the Informa-

Give God the praise.

¶ Forasmuch as we are now in the Month of May, before we overpass the same, and because the Story is not long, and not unworthy peradventure of noting, it shall not grieve the studious Reader, a little to give the hearing thereof, whereby to learn to marvel and muse at the great works of the Lord. They that go down (saith the Psalmist) into the Sea, labouring upon the water, have seen the works of the Lord, and his mighty wonders upon the deep, Psal. 106. &c. The truth whereof may well appear in this story following; which story, as it is signified and written to me by relation of the party himself, which was doer thereof, called Thomas Morse, so I thought to purport the same as followeth.

A Story of one Gregory Crow, marvellously preserved with his New Testament upon the Seas, May 26.

New Testament.

Upon Tuesday after Whitsunday, which was the 26. day of May, in this present year 1556. (or else, as he rather thinketh, in the year next before, which was 1555.) a certain poor man, whose name was Gregory Crow, dwelling in Maulden, went to the Sea, minding to have gone into Kent for Filling Earth, but by the way, being foul weather, was driven upon a Sand, where presently the Boat sunk, and was full of water, so that the men were forced to hold themselves by the Masts of the Boat, and all things that would swim did swim out of her. Amongst which Crow saw his Testament in the water, and caught it and put it in his bosom. Now it was ebbing water, so that within one hour the Boat was dry, but broken so as they could not save her; but they went themselves upon the Sand (being ten miles at the least from the Land) and there made their Prayers together, that God would send some Ship that way to save them (being two men and one boy in all;) for they might not tarry upon the Sand but half an hour, but it would be flood. In the which time they found their Chest wherein was money to the sum of five pound six shillings eight pence, the which money the man which was with the said Crow (whose name I know not) took and gave it unto Crow who was owner thereof, and he cast it into the Sea, saying, If the Lord will save our lives, he will provide us a Living, and so they went upon the Mast there, hanging by the arms and legs for the space of ten hours; in the which time the boy was so weary and beaten with the Sea, that he fell off and was drowned.

And when the Water was gone again, and the Sand dry, Crow said to his man, It were best for us to take down our Masts, and when the flood cometh we will sit upon them, and so it may please God to bring us to some Ship that may take us up. Which thing they did, and so at ten of the Clock in the night of the same Tuesday, the flood did bear up the Mast whereupon they fate.

tion of the said Thomas Morfe above mentioned, to the intent to make known the worthy acts of the Almighty, that he may be magnified in all his wondrous works. The Story is thus declared, which happened Anno 1556. about Alchathmas.

Another like story of Gods Providence upon three men delivered upon the Sea.

Another like story of three men that feared God, by Gods providence preserved on the Sea. These sitting upon a piece of their Ship two days and two nights in the Sea

There was a Ship (saith the said Thomas Morfe) whereof I had a part, going toward the Bay for Salt, with two Ships of Brickleser, which were altogether going for Salt, as before is said. At what time we were within ten miles of the North Foreland, otherwise called Tenast, the wind did come so contrary to our Ship, that we were forced to go clean out of the way, and the other two Ships kept their course still, until our Ship was almost out of sight of them. And then they saw a thing driving upon the Sea, and hoised up their Boat and went unto it; and it was three men sitting upon a piece of their Ship, which had sitten so two days and two nights.

There had been in their Ship eight men more, which were drowned, being all Frenchmen, dwelling in a place in France called Olorenne. They had been at Danſwick, and lost their Ship about Oxford Nas, as might be learned by their words. They were men that feared God, the one of them was Owner of the Ship. Their exercise, while they were in our Ship, was, that after their coming in, they gave thanks for their Deliverance: both Morning and Evening they exercised Prayer, and also before and after Meat; and when they came into France, our Ships went to the same place where these men dwelled, and one of them did sell unto our men their Ships lading of Salt, and did use them very courteously and friendly, and not at that time only, but always whensoever that Ship cometh thither, (as the hath been there twice since) he always doth for them, so that they can lack nothing. I should have noted, that after our Ship had taken up those three men out of the Sea, they had the wind fair presently, and came and overtook the other two Ships again, and so they proceeded in their Voyage together.

For the more credit of this Story above recited, to satisfy either the doubtful, or to prevent the quarreller, I have not only alledged the name of the party which was the doer thereof, but also expressed the matter in his own words, as I of him received it; the Party and Reporter himself being yet alive, and dwelling at Lee, a man so well known amongst the Merchants of London, that whoſoever heareth the name of Thomas Morfe, will never doubt thereof. And again, the matter it self being so notoriously known to Merchants as well here as at Antwerp, that though his name were not expressed, the Story can lack no Witnesses.

The death of William Slech in the Kings Bench.

May 11. Will. Slech died in the Kings Bench, and buried in the field.

The last day of the said Month of May, in the year aforesaid, William Slech being in Prison for the said Doctrine of the Lords Gospel, and the Confession of his Truth, died in the Kings Bench, and was buried on the backside of the said Prison, for that the Romish Catholic Spirituality thought him not worthy to come within their Pope holy Church-yards, neither in any other Christian Burial, as they call it.

The Story of four men condemned at Lewis the 6. day of June.

June 6. Four Martyrs burnt at Lewis.

In June next following, about the sixth day of the same Month, four Martyrs suffered together at Lewis, whose names were these:

Thomas Harland of Woodmancote, Carpenter.
John Oswald of Woodmancote, Husbandman.
Thomas Avington of Ardingly, Turner.
Thomas Read.

To Thomas Harland I find in the Bishop of Londons Registers, to be objected for not coming to Church. Whereunto he answered, That after the Mass was restored, he never had will to hear the same, because (said he) it was in Latin which he did not understand, and therefore as good, quoth he, never a whit as never the better.

John Oswald denied to answer any thing, until his Accusers should be brought face to face before him; and nevertheless said, That Fire and Fagots could not make him afraid: but as the good Preachers which were in King Edwards time have suffered and gone before, so was he ready to suffer and come after, and would be glad thereof.

These four, after long Imprisonment in the Kings Bench, were burned together at Lewis in Suffex, in one Fire, the day of the Month aforesaid.

The Martyrdom of Thomas Whood, and Thomas Milles.

In the same Town of Lewis, and in the same Month likewise, were burned Thomas Whood Minister, and Thomas Milles, about the twentieth day of the same Month, for relishing the erroneous and heretical Doctrine of the pretended Catholic Church of Rome.

Two dead in the Kings Bench.

In the which Month likewise, William Adherall Minister, imprisoned in the Kings Bench, there died the 24. day of the same Month, and was buried in the backside: Also John Clement Wheelwright, who dying in the said Prison, in like sort upon the Dungehill was buried in the backside two days after, viz. the 25. day of June.

A Merchants Servant burned at Leicester.

The next day following of the said Month of June, we read of a certain young man, a Merchants Servant, who for the like godliness suffered cruel Persecution of the Papists, and was burnt at Leicester the 26. day of the Month of June above named.

Thirteen Martyrs burned at Straford the Bow.

Not long after the death of the Merchants Servant before mentioned, there followed in this happy and blessed order of Martyrs burned in one Fire at Straford the Bow by Londons, eleven men and two women, whose dwellings were in sundry places in Essex, and whose names hereafter follow.

The sum and effect whereof ensueth.

To the first, they all answered affirmatively; but Lyon Cawch added further, that he believed that the true Faith and Religion of Christ is, whereſoever the Word of God is truly preached.

To the second Article they all answered in effect, denying that there be seven Sacraments; some affirming that in the Church of Christ there be but two Sacraments, that is to say, Baptism and the Lords Supper: Others referring themselves to believe as the Scripture teacheth them: And other some refused to make answer because of their simplicity.

To the third Article they all answered affirmatively.

To the fourth Article they all answered affirmatively, saying John Routh, what he would make no answer therunto, but John Routh added, that he believed the Article to be true, but was bound to have no better knowledge.

Answer to the fifth Article. To the fifth, they all answered in effect affirmatively, saving John Routh, whose answer was, That the Mass is such a thing, which neither can nor will enter into his Conscience. And Henry Adlington answered, That for nine or ten years before, he milked the Mass, and also the Sacrament of the Altar, because they cannot be proved by the Scriptures. And as touching the Authority of the Sec of Rome, he being but fourteen years of age, took an Oath against the same, which Oath (he said) he intended to keep by the grace of God.

Answer to the sixth Article. To the sixth they all answered affirmatively, saving John Routh, and William Halliwell, who both refused to answer, because they knew not what they meant by this Article. But the two Women added, That they refused to be reconciled to the Faith and Religion that was then used in the Realm of England. And Laurence Pernam added, That he never refused to be reconciled and brought to the Unity of the Catholick Church of Christ.

Answer to the seventh Article. To the seventh Article they all answered affirmatively; but William Halliwell denied that ever he called the Mass Idolatry and Abomination. And Henry Wye affirming the Article to be true; yet he confessed his infirmity, that he went to his Parish Church and received, before he was put in Prison.

Answer to the eighth Article. To the eighth Article Edmund Hurst, Ralph Jackson, and George Searles answered affirmatively: Henry Wye said he was brought before certain Justices of Peace in Essex, concerning one Higbed his late Master, and thereupon he was committed to Colchester Castle, and from thence sent to London to the Bishop to be further examined. William Halliwell affirmed the like confession as Henry Wye did, only Higbed excepted. John Derisfall said he was called before the Lord Rich, and Mr. Midmay of Chelmsford, and was by them sent to Boner Bishop of London, to be further by him examined. Thomas Bowyer said he was brought before one Mr. Wiseman of Felsted, and by him was sent to Colchester Castle, and from thence was carried to Boner Bishop of London, to be by him further examined. Lyon Carweb said that he was sent to come before the King and Queens Majesties Commissioners, and there before them appearing three times, was sent to Boner Bishop of London, to be by him further examined. Henry Adlington said, That he coming to Newgate to speak with one Gratwicke there being Prisoner for the Testimony of Jesus Christ, was apprehended and brought before Dr. Story, and by him sent to Boner Bishop of London, to be by him further examined. John Routh said, That he was converted before the Earl of Oxford, and by him sent to the Castle of Colchester, and from thence conveyed to Boner Bishop of London, to be by him further examined. Laurence Pernam said, That he was committed to Harford Prison, because he would not go to Church, and from thence sent to Boner Bishop of London, to be by him further examined. Agnes George said, That she was committed to Prison in Colchester, at the commandment of one Mr. Maynard an Alderman of the Town, because she would not go to Church, and from thence was sent to Boner Bishop of London, to be by him further examined. Elizabeth Pepper said she was apprehended by two Constables and an Alderman, for that she would not come to Church, and by them was sent to Boner Bishop of London, to be by him further examined.

Answer to the ninth Article. To the ninth Article, they all believed the Premises to be true above by them confessed, and that they were of the Diocess and Jurisdiction of London. But Elizabeth Pepper added, That she was of the Town of Colchester.

And Agnes George added, That she was of the Parish of Barefold. And Lyon Carweb added, That he was then of the City of London, by reason that he was at that present a Merchant there.

Henry Wye. Henry Wye, Brewer, was of the Parish of Stamford le Hore, and of 32. years of age.

W. Halliwell. William Halliwell was a Smith, of the Parish of Waltham Holle-Croft, and of the age of 24. years, or thereabouts.

Ralph Jackson was a Servingman, of Shipping Onger, and of the age of 24. years.

Laurence Pernam was a Smith of Hadston, within Laurence the Parish of Amwell, in the County of Hartford, and of the age of 22. years.

John Derisfall was a Labourer, of the Parish of Retington in Essex, and of the age of 50. years.

Edmund Hurst was a Labourer, of the Parish of S. James's in Colchester, and of the age of 50. years and above.

Thomas Bowyer was a Weaver of Much Darnow, and of the age of 36. years.

George Searles was a Taylor, between 20. or 21. years of age, of the Parish of White Nettle, where he was taken and carried to the Lord Rich, who sent him to Colchester Castle, with a Commandment that no Friend he had should speak with him. There he lay six weeks, and was sent up to London, where he was sometime in the Bishops Colchouse, sometime in Lollards Tower, and last of all in Newgate. He was apprehended in Lent, about a fortnight before Easter, in the place aforesaid.

Lyon Carweb was a Broker, born in Flanders, and then resident, at his taking, in the City of London, and of the age of 28. years or thereabouts.

Henry Adlington was a Sawyer, and of Greensted in the County of Suffex, and of the age of 30. years.

John Routh was a Labourer, and of the Parish of John Routh Wickes in Essex, and of the age of 26. years.

Elizabeth Pepper was the wife of Thomas Pepper Weaver, of the Parish of S. James's in the Town of Colchester, and of the age of 30. years, or thereabouts; who when she was burned at Stratford, was eleven weeks gone with child, as she then testified to one Basons wife, who then unloosed her Neckchief, saying moreover, when she was asked why she did not tell them; and answering, Why, quoth she, they knew it well enough. O! such be the bloody hearts of this cruel Generation, that no occasion can lay them from their mischievous murdering of the Saints of the Lord, which truly profess Christ crucified only and alone for the satisfaction of their sins.

Agnes George was the wife of Richard George Husbandman, of West Barefold in the County of Essex, and of the age of 26. years. This Richard George had another wife burned beside her in the Postern at Colchester, and himself lay in Prison until Queen Elizabeth came to the Crown, and then was delivered.

When these thirteen were condemned, and the day appointed they should suffer, which was the 27. day of June, An. 1556. they were carried from Newgate in London the said day to Stratford the Bow, (which was the place appointed for their Martyrdom) and there divided into two parts, in two several Chambers. Afterward the Sheriff, who there attended upon them, came to the one part, and told them that the other had recanted, and their lives therefore should be saved, willing and exhorting them to do the like, and not to cast away themselves.

Unto whom they answered, That their Faith was not builded on Man, but on Christ crucified. Then the Sheriff perceiving no good to be done with them, went to the other part, and said (like a liar) the like to them, that they whom he had been with before, had recanted, and should therefore not suffer death, counselling them to do the like, and not willfully to kill themselves, but to play the wile men, &c.

Unto whom they answered as their Brethren had done before, that their Faith was not builded on Man, but on Christ and his Word, &c.

Now when he saw it bootied not to perswade (for they were, God be praised, fully grounded on the Rock Jesus Christ) he then led them to the place where they should suffer, and being all there together, most earnestly they prayed unto God, and joyfully went to the Stake, and kissed it, and embraced it very heartily.

The eleven men were tied to three Stakes; and the two women loose in the midst without any Stake, and so they were all burnt in one Fire, with such love to each other, and constancy in our Saviour Christ, that it made all the lookers on to marvel. The Lord grant us the like grace in the like need, according to the good pleasure of his will, Amen.

In the company of these foresaid thirteen, were three more condemned to dye; whose Names are here-under specified:

Which three answered to those Articles that were propounded unto the said thirteen, in effect as they did. And being thus in the hands of the Secular Power, Cardinal Pool sent his Dispensation for their lives, by what occasion I cannot safely say, but by means thereof they then escaped. The Copy of which Dispensation, because it is exemplified in our first Impression, I shall desire the Reader to refer to the place of the page 1525.

whereof they drew out their Faith, and set to their Hands as hereafter followeth, and directed the same to their Friends, and the faithful Congregation, as followeth.

Unto all our dearly beloved Friends, and the holy Congregation of Jesus Christ, even so many as love God, grace be with you, and peace from God our Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ. So be it.

A Letter or Apology of the Martyrs, pursuing themselves of the false flander of
Mr. Fecknam.

It is manifest to all unto whom this our Certificate shall be sent, that where upon Saturday, being the thirteenth day of June, at Fulham, before the Bishop of London, sixteen of us (whose names here-under are subscribed) were condemned to dye for the most pure and sincere truth of Christ's verity; which most godly truth hath been from the beginning with the wicked adversaries thereof continually defaced, and is by the Devil and his Imps even at this present likewise daily slandered: Upon this occasion, dearly beloved Brethren, we are moved, yea constrained, in the ears of all men to manifest our belief, and also briefly the Articles whereof we are condemned, for the avoiding of false reports and slanderous tongues, which might happen by the most ungodly and uncharitable Sermon lately preached at Pauls Cross, the fourteenth of the said Month, being Sunday, by Mr. Fecknam, now Dean of the same Church: where he in that most worthy Audience defamed us to be in sixteen sundry Opinions, which were a thing prejudicial to all Christ's verity; and for a testimonial thereof, this here-under written shall answer our Cause, and therefore we pray you that are of God to judge.

Uniform
in their Faith

The first, we believe we were baptized in the Faith of Christ's Church, and incorporate unto him, and made Members of his Church, in the which Faith we continue. And although we have erred for a certain time, yet the root of Faith was preserved in us by the Holy Ghost, which hath reduced us into a full certainty of the same, and we do per-fit, and will by Gods assistance to the end. Now mark, that although the Minister were of the Church malignant, yet his wickedness did not hurt us, for that he baptized us in the Name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

There was both the Word and the Element, and our Godfathers and Godmothers renouncing for us the Devil and all his Works, and confessing the Articles of the Christian Faith for us, and also witnesses that we are baptized, not in the Faith of the Church of Rome, but in the Faith of Christ's Church.

The greatest Son of their Baptism.

1. Item, There are but two Sacraments in Christ's Sacrament Church, that is, the Sacrament of Baptism, and the Lord's Supper. For in these are contained the Faith of Christ his Church; that is, the two Testaments, the Law and the Gospel. The effect of the Law is repentance, and the effect of the Gospel remission of sins.

The Sacrament of the Church.

2. Item, We believe that there is a visible Church, wherein the Word of God is preached, and the holy Sacraments truly ministered, visible to the wicked world, although it be not credited, and by the death of Saints confirmed, as it was in the time of Helias the Prophet as well as now.

The visible
Church.

3. The See of Rome is the See of Antichrist, the Congregation of the wicked, &c. whereof the Pope is Head under the Devil.

The See of Antichrist.

4. Item, The Mass is not only a profanation of the Lords Supper, but also a blasphemous Idol.

The Mass.

5. Item, God is neither spiritually nor corporally in the Sacrament of the Altar, and there remaineth no Substance in the same, but only the Substance of Bread and Wine.

Transub-stantiation denied.

For these the Articles of our Belief, we being condemned to dye, do willingly offer our corruptible Bodies to be dissolved in the fire, with one voice assenting and con-

Anno 1556. confenting thereunto, and in no point dissenting or disagreeing from any of our former Articles.

Apparent also let it be and known, that being of the former Articles before the bloody Bishop examined, he said day and time, we affirmed to believe all that he or they would approve by the Scriptures. But he said that he would not stand to prove it with Hereticks, but said they themselves were the holy Church, and that we ought to believe them, or else to be cut off like withered branches.

Their Names subscribed to the same.

Thirteen of these were Martyrs, as is before said.

Ralph Jackson.	Edmund Hurst.
Henry Adlington.	Lawrence Parnam.
Lyon Cawch.	Thomas Bewyer.
William Halliwell.	Elizabeth Pepper.
George Searles.	Agnes George.
John Routh.	Thomas Freeman.

Henry Wye.	William Adams.

Trouble and business in the Diocess of Litchfield.

IN the Diocess of Litchfield, about the fourteenth of June, in the same year, John Celfstock who was lately come from London before, and now dwelling at Welington, though he suffered no Martyrdom, yet sustained some trouble, being attached and examined by the Bishop, named Ralph Bane, for his Religion, especially for two points, in holding against the reality of Christ in the Sacrament, and against Auricular Confession to be made to the Priest. For the which cause being compelled to recant, he was enjoined in the Church of St. Cedde to bear a Flagot before the Cross, bare-headed, having in the one hand a Taper, and in the other a pair of Beads, &c.

Amongst divers other which in the same Diocess, and the same time were suspected and troubled for the like, was Thomas Flier of Uttoxeter, Shoemaker, Nich. Ball of Uttoxeter, Capper, Thomas Pyot of Chedull.

Item, Henry Crimes for marrying his Wife on Palm-Sunday Even, &c. Some other also there were which had the like Penance enjoined them as Thomas Johnson about the 26. day of this Month of June, because he swore by the holy Mass before the Bishop sitting in Judgment, who for the same was driven to go before the Cross with his Taper and Beads, &c.

Concerning the which Thomas Flier above named, being a godly and a zealous man, this furthermore is to be noted, and not unworthy of grateful memory, that whereas in the Town of Uttoxeter, commandment was directed unto him amongst others from the Ordinary, for pulling down Monuments of Superstition, and namely the Rood-loft; he being one of the Churchwardens or Sidemen, on a time had talk upon the same with certain of his Neighbours, where one wished them ill to chieve, that should go about such an act.

What words passed else amongst them, ministering matter of farther provocation, it is not perfectly known. In fine, the said Flier being offended, and afterward meeting with him that had used such words before, began to commune with him of the matter; but in the end the man so little repented him of those sayings, that he added yet more fierce words, and at length strokes also, in such wise, that at the conflict the said Thomas Flier was slain; and yet so was the matter handled, and such amends was made with Money by the Murderer and his Friends, to the said Fliers wife, that he suffered little or nothing for the same, save only that he was banished the Town, and sworn and bound never to come in it so long as the said Fliers wife should live.

Three men dead in the Prison of the Kings Bench.

AFTER the burning of these in Stratford, the same Month died in the Prison of the Kings Bench in Southwark, one Thomas Parret, and was buried in the backside, the 27. day of the Month above said.

Also Martin Hunt (as is reported) in the same Prison was furnished the 29. day. At which time likewise died in the same Prison, as I find recorded, one John Norice, and after the same sort as the other was buried on the backside of the said Prison, the day above mentioned.

The Story of three Martyrs suffering at St. Edmundsbury.

AFTER the death of the afore said Thomas Parret, June 16. Martin Hunt, and John Norice, were three martyred at St. Edmundsbury in Suffolk, in one fire, whose Names are here under specified:

Roger Bernard.
Adam Foster.
Robert Lawton.

The first Examination of Roger Bernard before Dr. Hop-ton Bishop of Norwich.

WHEN Roger Bernard came before the Bishop, first he was asked whether he had been with the Priest at Easter to be thriven, and whether he had received the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, or no? Unto whom Roger Bernard answered, No: I have not been with the Priest, nor confessed my self unto him, but I have confessed my sins to Almighty God, and I trust he hath forgiven me; whereof I shall not need to go to the Priest for such matters, who cannot help himself.

Bish. Surely Bernard thou must needs go, and confess thy self unto him.

Rog. That shall I not do (by Gods grace) while I live.

Bish. What a stout boyly Heretic is this? How desperately he answereth?

Rog. My Lord, it grieveth me no whit (I thank God) to be called Heretic at your hands: for so your Forefathers called the Prophets and Confessors of Christ, long before this time.

At these words the Bishop rose up in a great heat, and bade Bernard follow him. Then the Bishop went and kneeled before that they call the Sacrament of the Altar, and as he was in his Prayers kneeling, he looked back, and asked Bernard why he came not and did as he did. Unto whom Bernard answered, I cannot tell why I should so do. Why, quoth the Bishop, thou lewd Fellow, whom seest thou yonder, pointing to the Pix over the Altar?

Rog. I see no Body there. Do you, my Lord?

Bish. Why, naughty man, dost thou not see thy Maker?

Rog. My maker? No, I see nothing but a few Clouds hanging together on a heap. With that the Bishop rose up sore displeased, and commanded the Jaylor to take him away, and to lay Irons enough on him. For, quoth he, I will tame him ere he go from me, I trow so; and so he was carried away.

The second Examination of Roger Bernard before the said Bishop.

THE next day Bernard was brought again before the Bishop, who asked him if he did not remember himself since the day before, that he was before him.

Rog. Yes, my Lord, I have remembered my self very well, for the same man I was yesterday, I am this day, and I hope shall be all the days of my life, concerning the matter you talked with me of.

Then one of the Guard standing by, said, My Lord, I pray you trouble not your self any more with him, but let me have the examining of him, I shall handle him after another sort, I trow, and make him a fair Child ere he go, you shall see.

So was he committed to him, and brought by him to an Inn, where were a great many of Priests assembled together, and there they fell all in flustering him, and persuading him with gay enticing words what they could; but when therein they might not prevail, for that the Lord assisted the good poor man, then began they to threaten him with whipping, stocking, burning, and such like, that it was wonderful the do they made with him. Unto whom Bernard said, Friends, I am not better then my Master Christ and the Prophets, which your Fathers served after such sort; and I for his Names sake am content.

tent to suffer the like at your hands, if God shall so permit, trusting that he will strengthen me in the same according to his promise, in spite of the Devil and all his Ministers. So when they could not make him to relent or yield, they said, behold a right Scholar of John Fortune, whom they had then in prison. Then carried they him to the Bishop, who immediately condemned him as an Heretick, and delivered him to the Secular Power.

This Roger Bernard was a single Man; and by his vocation a Labourer, dwelling in Fransden in Suffolk, who was taken in the night by Master Tamages Men, because he would not go to Church to hear their unfavoury Service, and so by them carried to prison.

Adam Foster.

A Adam Foster of the age of six and twenty years, Husbandman, being married, dwelling in Mendlesham in the County of Suffolk, was taken at home in his house a little before the Sun going down by the Constables of the said Town, George Revet and Thomas Mause, at the Commandment of Sir John Tyrrel of Gyppinghal in Suffolk, Kt. because he would not go to Church and hear Mass, and receive at Easter, except he might have it after Christs Holy Ordinance. When they came for him, they told him he must go with them unto the Justice. Unto whom Adam Foster said, for Christs Cause, and to save his Conscience, he was well contented; and so they led him to Sir John Tyrrel, and he sent him to Aye dungeon in Suffolk, from whence at length he was sent to Norwich, and there condemned by Bishop Hopton.

Now after his taking, the said Thomas Mause and George Revet were stricken with a great fear and sickness, whereby Mause pined and consumed away even unto death, although he was a Man of young and lusty age. But George Revet who was the said *Mause*s fellow, and a great Reader of the Scripture, or (as a Man may term it) a talkative Gospeller, would not be premonished by the Works of God, but set his Son to help the Priest say Mass, and to be Clerk of the same Town of Mendlesham for lucre sake; yet was there a fair warning given him of God, although he had not the Grace so to consider it, the which thing was this.

A young Man of the same Parish newly married, called Robert Edgore, being of a ripe wit and sound, was Clerk in the said Church before the said Revet set his Son in that room, and executed the Office a little, yet, alas too long, against his own Conscience; whereby at length the Lord took away his wits, that many years after, his poor and woful Wife, good Woman, was compelled to keep him chained, and bound continually, lest he should unawares do himself or some other some mischief, as many times (the more pity) he was ready enough to do.

This (as I said) would not admonish Revet, but needs he must persist in his wicked purpose. Notwithstanding at the length, as many Men were offended with him in the Parish, as honest women especially (being mightily grieved at his ungodly doings) came to him and said, Neighbour Revet, are ye not afraid to let your Son help the naughty Priest to say Mass, and to serve that abominable Idol? and he said, No.

Then said they, we fear not to go to Church and hear Mass, seeing you, being a Man that so much profess Christianity, will let your Son help the Priest say Mass, &c.

At which words Revet waxed angry, and in his rage immediately made his Prayer unto God after this manner, or with such like words, saying; O Lord, if it be not thy will that my Son should so do, then I beseech thee send some strange token to let me understand what thy good pleasure is therein, &c. So according to his Petition, within short space after, his neighbors Bull came into his Pasture, and there he having a very proper Gelding, which was his felicity above any thing he had, the Bull running upon him, did so wound and gore him, that immediately thereof his Gelding died, and he thereby nothing amended. For although he knew and confessed, that it was the Lords hand upon him for the sufferance of his Son in that wicked vocation; yet would he not take him from it, but permitted him still to use and frequent the same against his own Conscience.

At the last, the Lord justly sent upon him a great swelling in his Legs, which did so grievously vex and trouble him by reason it swelled upward, that at length having thereby brought upon him a very strange sickness, he died most miserably, in so impatient manner; that it terrified all good hearts to hear thereof. The Lord grant for Christs sake, that we may observe his Judgments better, to his glory and our comfort, Amen. Ex testimonio quorundam Suffolensium.

Robert Lawton.

R Robert Lawton was a single Man, of the age of thirty years, and by vocation a Linen Weaver, who was apprehended in the night by one Robert Kereth, at the commandment of Sir John Tyrrel of Gyppinghal in Suffolk, Knight, and so was immediately carried to Aye Dungeon in Suffolk, where he remained a certain time, and after was led to Bury. The cause of his taking was, for that he would not go to Church to hear Mass, and receive their Popish Idol.

When these three fore said Martyrs were carried to their deaths, viz. Roger Bernard, Adam Foster, and Robert Lawton at Bury, after they had made their Prayer, being at the Stake, and the tormentors attending the fire, they most triumphantly ended their lives, in such happy and blessed condition, as did notably set forth their constancy and joyful end, to the great praise of God, and their commendation in him, and also to the encouragement of others in the same quarrel to do the like. The Lord of strength fortifie us to stand as his true Souldiers in what standing soever he shall think it good to place us, Amen.

In the Examination of Roger Bernard, ye heard a little before, how he was compared by the Priests there, to John Fortune, and called his Scholar. This John Fortune, otherwise called Cutler, of Himelsham in Suffolk, was by his occupation a Black-Smith, whom they had before then in Examination a little before, the 20. day of April. In Spirit he was zealous and ardent, in the Scriptures ready, in Christs Cause stout and valiant, in his answers marvellous, and no less patient in his wrongfull suffering then constant in his Doctrine. Whether he was burned, or died in Prison, I cannot certainly find; but rather I suppose that he was burned. Certain it is, howsoever he was made away, he never yielded. What his Answers and Examinations were before D. Parker and the Bishop, ye shall hear him, although not with his own mouth speaking, yet with his own hand you shall see written, what he did say, as followeth.

The Examination of John Fortune before Doctor Parker and Mr. Foster.

First D. Parker asked me how I believed in the Catholic Faith.

And I asked him which Faith he meant; whether the Faith that Stephens had, or the Faith of them that put Stephen to death.

D. Parker being moved, said, What a naughty fellow is this? you shall see anon he will deny the Blessed Sacrament of the Altar.

M. Foster. Then said Master Foster, I know you well enough. You are a busie Merchant. How sayest thou by the blessed Mass?

For. And I stood still and made no answer.

Fost. Then said Master Foster, why speakest thou not, and makest the Gentleman an answer?

For. And I said, Silence is a good answer to a foolish question.

Park. Then said the Doctor, I am sure he will deny the blessed Sacrament of the Altar also.

For. And I said, I know none such, but only the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Park. Then said he, you deny the order of the seven Sacraments. And why dost thou not believe in the Sacrament of the Altar?

For. And I said, because it is not written in Gods Book.

Park. Then said he, you will not believe unwritten Verities.

M. Foff. Well, said M. Foff, you shall be whipped and burned for this gear I trow.

Fort. Then said I, if you knew how these words do rejoyce my heart, you would not have spoken them.

Foff. Way thou fool, dost thou rejoyce in whipping? Fort. Yea, said I, for it is written in the Scriptures, and Christ said, Thou shalt be whipped for my names sake: and since the time that the sword of tyranny came into your hands, I heard of none that was whipped. Happy were I, if I had the maiden-head of this persecution.

Away with him then, said he for he is ten times worse then Samuel: and so he was carried to prison again.

The Second Examination of John Fortune before the Bishop of Norwich.

When I came before the Bishop, he asked me if I did not believe in the Catholick Church. I said I believe that Church whereof Christ is the head.

Then the said Bishop, Dost thou not believe that the Pope is Supream Head of the Church? And I said, No, Christ is the Head of the True Church.

Bish. So do I believe also: but the Pope is Gods Vicar upon Earth, and the Head of the Church, and I believe that he hath power to forgive sins also.

Fort. Then said I, the Pope is but a Man, and the Prophet David said, that no Man can deliver his Brother, nor make agreement for him unto God: For it cost more to redeem their Souls, so that he must let that alone for ever.

Bish. And the Bishop again fetching about a great circumstance, said, Like as the Belweather weareth her Bell, and is the Head of the Flock of Sheep: so is the Pope our Head. And as the Hives of Bees have a Master Bee that bringeth the Bees to the hive again: so doth our Head bring us home again to our True Church.

Fort. Then I asked him, whether the Pope were a Spiritual Man: and he said, Yea. And I said again, They are spiteful Men; for in seventeen Months there were three Popes, and one poisoned another for that presumptuous fear of Antichrist.

Bish. It is maliciously spoken (said he) for thou must obey the power and not the Man. And thus was the Pope denied to be Supream Head.

Well, said he, why sayst thou to the Ceremonies of the Church?

Fort. And I answered, All things that are not planted by my Heavenly Father, shall be plucked up by the roots, saith Christ. For they are not from the beginning, neither shall they continue to the end.

Bish. They are good and godly and necessary to be used.

Fort. Saint Paul called them weak and beggarly.

Bish. No that is a lye.

Fort. I hearing that, said, that Saint Paul writeth thus in the fourth to the Galatians, You foolish Galatians (saith he) who have bewitched you, that ye seek to be in bondage to these weak and beggarly Ceremonies? Now which of you do lye? you or S. Paul? And also it is said, that works instituted, and enjoined without the commandment of God, pertain not to the Worship of God, according to the text, Matth. 23. In vain do Men Worship me with Mens traditions and commandments. And S. Paul saith, Wherefore do ye carry us away from the Grace of Christ to another kind of Doctrine? And Christ openly rebuked the Scribes, Lawyers, Pharisees, Doctors, Priests, Bishops, and Hypocrites, for making Gods commandments of none effect, to support their own tradition.

Bish. Thou liest, there is not such a word in all the Scriptures, thou naughty Heretic! Thou art worse then all other Heretics for Hooper (said he) and Bradford allow them to be good, and thou dost not. Away with him.

Here you may perceive, how that the Catholick Church cannot err, but whatsoever they say must needs be true. And so my Lord Bishop cannot lye, as it may appear to all Men plainly in the Text.

The Third Examination of John Fortune before the Bishop of Norwich.

The next day I was brought before the said Bishop again, where he made a Sermon upon the sixth Chapter of St. Johns Gospel, of Chrills words, I am the Bread that came down from Heaven, &c. And thereupon had a great bibble babble to no purpose. So in the end I was called before him, and he said to me:

Bish. How believest thou in the Sacrament of the Altar? Dost thou not believe, that after the consecration, there is the real substance of the Body of Christ?

Fort. And I answered him, that is the greatest plague that ever came into England.

Bish. Why so?

Fort. I said, if I were a Bishop, and you a poor Man as I am, I would be ashamed to ask such a question. For a Bishop should be apt to teach and not to learn.

Bish. I am appointed by the Law to teach, so are not you.

Fort. And I said, Your Law breaketh out very well: for you have burned up the true Bishops and Preachers, and maintained liars to be in their stead.

Bish. Now you may understand that he is a Traitor: for he denieth the higher powers.

Fort. I am no Traitor: for Saint Paul saith, All Souls must obey the higher powers, and I resist not the higher powers, concerning my Body, but I must resist your evil Doctrine wherewith you would infect my Soul.

Adock. Then said a Doctor, My Lord, you do not well; let him answer shortly to his Articles.

Bish. How sayest thou? make an answer quickly to these Articles.

Fort. Saint Paul saith, Heb. 10. Christ did one Sacrifice once for all, and set him down on the right hand of his Father, triumphing over Hell and Death making intercession for sins.

Bish. I ask thee no such question, but make answer to this Article.

Fort. If it be not God before the Consecration, it is not God after: for God is without beginning and without ending.

Bish. Then said he, lo, what a stiff Heretic is this? He hath denied all together: how sayest thou? Is it Idolatry to worship the Blessed Sacrament or no?

Fort. God is a Spirit, and will be worshipped in Spirit and Truth.

Bish. I ask thee no such question: answer me discreetly.

Fort. I answer that this is the God Manicism, that robbeth God of his honour.

Bish. It is pity that the ground beareth thee, that thou hast a Tongue to speak. Then said the Scribe; Here are a great many more Articles.

Bish. Then said the Bishop, Away with him: for he hath spoken too much.

Another Examination of John Fortune.

And when I came to mine Examination again, the Bishop asked me if I would stand unto mine answer that I had made before: and I said, Yea: for I had spoken nothing but the truth. And after that he made a great circumstance upon the Sacrament.

Then I desired him to stand to the Text, and he read the Gospel on Corpus Christi day, which said, I am the Bread which came down from Heaven: believest thou not this? And I said, Yea truly.

And he said, Why dost thou deny the Sacrament? Because your Doctrine is false, said I.

Then said he, how can that be false which is spoken in the Scripture? And I said, Christ said, I am the Bread, and you say the Bread is he. Therefore your Doctrine is false, said I.

And he said, Dost thou not believe that the Bread is he? And I said, No.

Bish. I will bring thee to it by the Scriptures.

Fort. Hold that fast my Lord: for that is the best Argument that you have yet.

Bish. Thou shalt be burned like an Heretic.

Fort.

Another Examination of John Fortune before the Bishop of Norwich.

Catholick Prelates obstinacious to higher powers so long as they make their display, but when they do otherwise, then they examine them.

Other talks between John Fortune and the Bishop of Norwich.

John 6.

Fort. Who shall give judgment upon me ?

Bish. I will judge an hundred such as thou art, and never be shaven upon it.

Fort. Is there not law for the spirituality as well as for the Temporality ? And Sir Clement Higham said, Yes. What meanest thou by that ?

Fort. When a Man is perjured by the Law, he is cast over the Bar, and sitteth no more in judgment. And the Bishop is a perjured Man, and ought to sit in judgment of no Man.

Bish. How provest thou that ?

Fort. Because you took an Oath in King Henries days to resist the Pope. So both spiritual and temporal are perjured, that here can be no true judgment.

Bish. Thinkest thou to escape judgment by that ? Nor for my Chancellor shall judge thee. He took no Oath, for he was then out of the Realm.

M. Higham. It is time to weed out such fellows as you be, indeed.

Bish. Good fellow, why believest not thou in the Sacrament of the Altar ?

Fort. Because I find it not in Gods Book, nor yet in the Doctors. If it were there I would believe it with all my heart.

Bish. How knowest thou it is not there ?

Fort. Because it is contrary to the second Commandment : and seeing it is not written in Gods Book, why do you then rob me of my Life ?

Then the Bishop having no more to say, commanded the Bailiff to take him away.

And thus much touching the Examinations of this Man. Now whether he dyed in fire, or was otherwise prevented with death, as I said before, I am uncertain.

In the Register of Norwich this I do find, that his Sentence of Condemnation was drawn and registered; but whether it was pronounced, in the said Register it is not expressed, according as the usual manner of the Notary is to declare, in the end of the sentence. Nevertheless this is most certain, that he never abjured nor recanted, howsoever it pleased the Lord by death to call him out of this World.

The death of John Careles in the Kings Bench.

About this time, the first day of July, amongst divers other prisoners which died the same year in the Kings Bench, was also one John Careles of Coventry a Weaver. Who though he were by the secret judgment of Almighty God prevented by death, so that he came not to the full Martyrdom of his Body, yet is he no less worthy to be counted in honour and place of Christs Martyrs, then other that suffered most cruel torments, as well for that he was for the same truths sake a long time imprisoned, as also for his willing mind and zealous affection he had thereunto; if the Lord had so determined it as well may appear by his Examination had before Doctor Martin. Which Examination because it contained nothing almost but wrangling interrogations, and matters of contention, wherein Doctor Martin would enter into no communication about the Articles of his accusation, but only urged him to detect his fellows, it shall not be greatly material therefore to express the whole, but only to except so much as pertaining to the question of predestination, may bring some fruit to the Reader.

The effect of John Careles Examination before Doctor Martin briefly declared.

First, Doctor Martin calling John Careles to him in his Chamber, demanded what was his name. To whom the other had answered, that his name was John Careles, then began Doctor Martin to demand at his pleasure upon that name, saying, that it would appear by his condition, by that time he had done with him, that he would be a true careles Man indeed. And so after other by-talk there spent about much needless matter, then he asked him where he was born.

Careles. Forsooth, faith he, at Coventry.

Martin. At Coventry ? what so farr, Man ? How comest thou hither ? Who sent thee to the Kings Bench to prison ?

Careles. I was brought thither by a Writ, I trow, what Anno he was I cannot tell. I think Master Marshal can tell 1556.

Marshal. In good Faith I cannot tell what the matter is ; but indeed my Lord chief Justice sent him from the Bar.

Mart. Well Careles, I would thou shouldst play the Wife Mans part. Thou art a handfom Man, and it is pity but thou shouldst do well, and save that which God hath bought.

Careles. I thank your good mastership most heartily : and I put you out of doubt, that I am most sure and certain of my Salvation by Jesus Christ; so that my Soul is safe already, whatsoever pains my Body suffer here for a little time.

Mart. Yea marry, you say truth. For thou art so predestinate to life, that thou canst not perish in whatsoever opinion thou dost dye.

Careles. That God hath predestinate me to eternal life in Jesus Christ, I am most certain, and even so am I sure that his Holy Spirit (wherewith I am sealed) will so preserve me from all Heresies and evil opinions, that I shall dye in none at all.

Mart. Go to, let me hear your Faith in predestination. For that shall be written also.

Careles. Your mastership shall pardon me herein. For you said your self ere while, that you had no Commission to examine my Conscience. I will trouble my self with answering no more matters then I needs must, until I come before them that shall have more Authority further to examine me.

Mart. I tell thee then I have Commission; yea, and commandment from the Council to examine thee: for they delivered me thy Articles.

Careles. Yea, I think indeed that your mastership is appointed to examine me of my Articles, which you have there in writings, and I have told you the truth. I do confess them to be mine own fact and deed; but you do now examine me of predestination, whereof my Articles speak nothing at all.

Martin. I tell thee yet again, that I must also examine thee of such things as be in controversy between thee and thy fellows in the Kings Bench, whereof predestination is a part, as thy fellow N. hath confessed, and thy self dost not deny it.

Careles. I do not deny it. But he that first told you that matter, might have found himself much better occupied.

Mart. Why? what if he had not told me? thinkest that I would not have known it? Yes, or else thou shouldst have withstood my Commission. For I tell thee truth, I may now examine thee of the Blessed Sacrament, or any other thing that I list, but that I would shew thee favour, and not be too hasty with thee at the first.

Marsh. Yea in deed Careles, Mr. Doctor hath Commission to examine you or any other of your fellows.

Martin. Yea marry have I, I tell thee the truth of it. Careles. Then let your Scribe set his pen to the paper, and you shall have it roundly, even as the truth is. I believe that Almighty God our most dear loving Father, of his great mercy and infinite goodness, did elect in Christ.

Careles. Tush, what need all that long circumstance? Write, I believe God elected, and make no more ado.

Careles. No, not so M. Doctor. It is an high mystery, and ought reverently to be spoken of. And if my words may not be written as I do utter them, I will not speak at all.

Mart. Go to, go to, write what he will. Here is more business then needeth.

Careles. I believe that Almighty God our most dear loving Father, of his great mercy and infinite goodness (through Jesus Christ) did elect and appoint in him before the Foundation of the Earth was laid, a Church or Congregation, which he doth continually guide and govern by his Grace and Holy Spirit, so that not one of them shall ever finally perish. When this was written, M. Doctor took it in his hand and read it, saying :

Mart. Why, who will deny this?

Careles.

Anno 1556. Carel. If your Mastership do allow it, and other learned Men when they shall see it, I have my hearts desire.

Mart. And do you hold none otherwise, then is there written?

Carel. No verily, nor never did.

Mart. Write what he saith, otherwise he holdeth not. So that was written. It was told me also, that thou dost affirm, that Christ did not dye effectually for all Men.

Carel. Whatsoever hath been told you, it is not much material unto me. Let the tellers of such tales come before my face, and I trust to make them answer. For indeed I do believe that Christ did effectually dye for all those that do effectually repent and believe, and for no other: so that was written also.

Mart. Now Sir, what is Trews Faith of Predestination? He believeth that all Men be predestinate, and that none shall be damned. Doth he not?

Carel. No forsooth, that he doth not.

Mart. How then?

Carel. Truly I think he doth believe as your Mastership and the rest of the Clergy do believe of predestination, that we be elected in respect of our good works, and so long elected, as we do them, and no longer.

Mart. Write what he saith, that his fellow Trew believeth of predestination as the Papists do believe.

Carel. Ah Master Doctor, did I so term you? Seeing that this my Confession shall come before the Council, I pray you place my terms as reverently as I speak them.

Mart. Well, well, write that Trew is of the same Faith as the Catholics be.

Carel. I did not so call you neither, I wonder what you mean.

Mart. You said the Clergy, did you not Careles?

Carel. Yes forsooth did I. So then it was written of the Clergy.

Mart. Now Sir, what say you more?

Carel. Forsooth I have no further to say in this matter.

Mart. Well Careles, I pray thee proveth thyself a wife Man, and do not cast away thy life wilfully.

Carel. Now the Lord he knoweth, good M. Doctor, I would full gladly live, so that I might do the same with a safe Conscience. And your Mastership shall right well perceive that I will be no wilful Man, but in all things that I stand upon I will have sure ground.

Mart. Now the Lord knoweth, good Careles, that I would gladly make some means to preserve thy Life. But thou speakest so much of the Lord, the Lord; wilt thou be content to go with my Lord Fitzwater into Ireland? me thinks thou art a goodly tall fellow to do the Queen service there. How sayest thou?

Carel. Verily Master Doctor, whether I be in Ireland, France, or Spain, or any place else, I am ready to do her Grace the best service that I can, with Body, Goods and Life, so long as it doth last.

Mart. That is honestly said, I promise thee, every Man will not say so. How say you M. Marshall? this Man is meet for all manner of service. Indeed thou art worthy, Careles, to have the more favour.

Carel. Indeed Sir, I hope to be meet and ready unto all things that pertain unto a true Christian subject to do. And if her Grace or her Officers under her do require me to do any thing contrary to Christ's Religion, I am ready also to do my service in Smithfield for not observing it, as my Bed-fellow and other Brethren have done, praised be God for them.

Mart. By my troth thou art a pleasant fellow as ever I talked with of all the Protestants, except it were Tomson. I am sorry that I must depart with thee so soon; but I have such business now, that I can tarry with thee no longer. Well yet thou canst not deny, but you are at jar amongst yourselves in the Kings Bench, and it is so throughout all your Congregation: for you will not be a Church.

Carel. No Master Doctor that is not so. There is a thousand times more variety in opinions among your Doctors, which you call of the Catholic Church, yea and that in the Sacrament, for the which there is so much Blood shed now a days, I mean of your late Doctors and new Writers; as for the old they agree wholly with us.

Mart. No, Careles, this is not so; there thou art deceived.

Carel. Verily it is so, Master Doctor, I am not deceived therein any thing at all; as it hath been, and is evidently proved by such as God hath indued with great learning. Then he turned to the Marshal, and whispered with him a while.

Mart. Turning unto me again, he said, Farewell Careles: for I cannot tarry no longer with thee now, my business is such.

Carel. God be with you, good Master Doctor, The Lord give your Mastership health of Body and Soul.

Mart. God have mercy good Careles, and God keep thee from all errors, and give thee Grace to do as well as I would with my self.

Carel. I thank your good Mastership, I pray God I may do always that is acceptable in his sight. Whereunto they all said, Amen. And so I departed with a glad heart; God only have the whole praise, Amen.

It appeareth by the Examination of the foresaid John Careles, that he endured prisoner the space of two whole years, having Wife and Children. In the which his captivity, first being in Coventry jail, he was there in such credit with his Keeper, that upon his word he was let out to play in the Pageant about the City with his companions. And that done, keeping touch with his Keeper, he turned again into prison at his hour appointed.

And after that being brought up to London, he was induced with such patience and constant fortitude, that he longed for nothing more earnestly, than to come to the promotion to dye in the fire for the profession of his Faith: and yet it so pleased the Lord to prevent him with death that he came not to it, but died in the prison, and after was buried in the fields in a dunghill.

In the mean time while he was in Prison in the Kings Bench, it chanced he was in great heaviness and perturbation of mind and Conscience, whereupon he wrote to Master Philpot being then in the Colehouse. Upon the occasion hereof M. Philpot sent an Epistle consolatory unto him, specified before among M. Philpots Letters. Unto the which Epistle John Careles maketh answer again as followeth.

Letters of John Careles.

A Letter of John Careles answering to the loving Epistle or Letter sent to him before by M. John Philpot.

A Faithful friend is a strong defence, whose findeth such a one, findeth a treasure.

A Faithful friend hath no peer, the weight of Gold and Silver is not to be compared to the goodness of his Faith.

A Faithful friend is a medicine of life, and they that fear the Lord shall find him, Eccles. 6.

The Father of mercy and God of all consolation, comfort you with his eternal Spirit (my most dear and Faithful loving friend, good Master Philpot) as you have comforted me by the mighty operation of the same; the everlasting God be praised therefore for ever, Amen.

Ah my dear heart and most loving brother, if I should do nothing else day and night so long as the days of Heaven do endure, but kneel on my knees, and read Psalms, I can never be able to render unto God condign thanks, for his great mercy, fatherly kindness, and most loving compassion extended unto me most vile, sinful, wicked, and unworthy wretch. Oh that the Lord would open my mouth and give me a thankful heart, that from the bottom of the same might flow his continual praise. Oh that my sinful flesh (which is the cause of sorrow) were clean separated from me, that I might sing Psalms of thanksgiving unto the Lords name for ever; that with good Samuels Mother I might continually record this noble verse following, the which by the good experience I have found most true, praised be my good God therefore.

A wrong faith of predestination believing to be elected in respect of good works.

D. Martin presented favour to Careles.

More variety in the Popes Church then is amongst the Protestants.

A Letter of John Careles to M. Philpot.

1 Reg. 2.
John Careles raised up by the Lord out of great heavens.

The Lord (faith that good Woman) killeth and maketh alive: He bringeth down to Hell, and fetcheth up again. Praise be the Lord for ever, yea, and praised be his name, for that he hath given me true experience and lively feeling of the same. Blessed be the Lord God, whose mercy endureth for ever, which hath not dealt with me according to my deep deserts, nor destroyed me in his displeasure when I had justly deserved it. Oh what reward shall I give again unto the Lord for all the great benefits that he hath done for my Soul? I will gladly receive the Cup of Salvation at his hand, and will worship his Name with Prayer and with Praise.

Ah my dear heart, yea most dear unto me in the Lord, think not this sudden change in me, to be some fickle plantain of my foolish head (as in deed some other would surely suspect it to be;) for doubtless it is the marvellous doing of the Lord; most merciful unto me his unworthy Creature. God for his great mercies sake give me Grace to be more thankful unto him then I heretofore have been, and keep me that I never fall forth of his favour again.

And now, my dear Brother and most blessed Messenger of the Lord, whose beautiful feet have brought much glad tidings to my Soul, what shall I do or say unto you, in the least part to recompence the Fatherly affection and Godly care that you continually keep for me? Oh that God would give me the Spirit of fervent Prayer, that I might yet that way supply some little part of my duty toward you. Ah my true loving friend, how soon did you lay aside all other business, to make a sweet plaister for my wounded Conscience, yea, and that out of a painful pair of stocks, which place mult needs be uneasy to write in? But God hath brought you into a straight place, that you might set my Soul at liberty. Out of your pinching and painful seat, you have plentifully poured upon me your precious Nard, the sweet favour whereof hath greatly refreshed my tired Soul. The Lord likewise refresh you, both Body and Soul, by pouring the oyl of his gracious Spirit in your sweet heart.

Mal 4.

Ah good Jeremy, hath Phasor put thee into the Stocks? why, now thou hast the right reward of a Prophet. Thy glory never began to appear until now. I doubt not but shortly, in stead of Abiham the Son of Shapham, Jesus the Son of the living God will come and deliver thee forth of the hands of all thine enemies, and will also make good, against them and their Antichristian Synagogue, all the words that thou hast spoken in his Name. The Lord hath made thee this day a strong defended Tower, an Iron Pillar, and a brazen Wall against the whole rabble of Antichrist, and though they fight against thee never so fiercely, yet shall they not overcome thee, for the Lord himself is with thee to help and deliver thee; and he will rid thee out of the hands of the wicked, and will deliver thee out of the hands of the Tyrants. And in that you are not busied in casting pearls before swine, nor in giving the holy things unto dogs, you are much to be commended in my simple judgment. And sure I am, that your circumspect and modest behaviour hitherto hath been as much to Gods glory, and to the shame and confusion of your enemies, as any Mens doings that are gone before you.

Wherefore mine advice and most earnest desire is, with all other of your loving friends, that you still keep that order with those blood-thirsty Bitcheeps, Bishops I should say, that you have begun. For though in conclusion they will surely have your Blood, yet shall they come by it with shame enough, and to their perpetual infamy whiles the World doth endure. They would indeed condemn you in hugger mugger, to darken Gods Glory if it might be: But Satans thoughts are not unknown to you, and the depth of his subtilty is by you well foreseen. Therefore let them do whatsoever God shall suffer them to do for I know all things shall turn to your best. Though you lye in the dark, strowed with the Bishops black coal-dust: yet shall you be shortly restored unto the heavenly Light, and made as white as Snow in Salmon, and as the wings of a Dove that is covered with Silver Wings, and her Feathers like Gold. You know the vessel, before it be made bright, is soiled with Oil, and other things, that it may scour the better.

Oh happy be you that you be now in the scouring house: for shortly you shall be set upon the Celestiall shelf as bright as Angels. Therefore my dear heart, I will now according to your loving request, cast away all care, and joy rejoyce with you, and praise God for you, and pray for you day and night; yea, I will now with Gods Grace sing Psalms of praise and thanksgiving with you. For now my Soul is turned to her old rest again, and hath taken a sweet nap in Christs lap. I have cast my care upon the Lord, which careth for me, and will be Careless, according to my name, in that respect you would have me. I will leave out my unseasonable addition as long as I live: for it can take no place where true faith and hope is resident. So soon as I had read your most godly and comfortable Letter, my sorrows vanished away as smook in the wind, my Spirit revived, and comfort came again, whereby I am sure the Spirit of God was Author of it.

Oh my good M. Philpot, which art a principal Pot-indeed filled with most precious liquor, as it appeareth by the pteous pouring forth of the same; Oh Pot most happy, of the high Potter ordained to honour, which doth contain such heavenly treasure in the earthen vessel; Oh Pot thrice happy, in whom Christ hath wrought a great miracle, altering thy nature, and turning Water into Wine, and that of the best, whereout the Master of the Feast hath filled my cup so full, that I am become drunken in the joy of the Spirit through the same: When Martyrdom shall break thee (O vessel of honour) I know the fragrant favor of thy precious Nard will much rejoyce the heavy hearts of Christs true Members, although the *Judas*es will grudge and murmur at the same. Yea, and burst out into words of slander, saying, it is but loist and waste.

Be not offended, dear heart, at my Metaphorical speech: For I am disposed to be merry, and with David to dance before the Ark of the Lord; and though you play upon a pair of Organs not very comely or easie to the Flesh, yet the sweet sound that came from the same, causeth me thus to do. Oh that I were with you in Body, as present I am in Spirit, that I might sing all care away in Christ: for now the time of comfort is come. I hope to be with you shortly, if all things happen right. For my old friends of Coventry have put the Council in remembrance of me, not six days ago, saying, that I am more worthy to be burned then any that was burned yet. Gods blessing on their hearts for their good report. God make me worthy of that dignity, and hasten the time, that I might set forth his glory.

Pray for me, dear heart, I beseech you, and will all your company to do the same, and I will pray God for you all, so long as I live. And now farewell in Christ, thou blessed of Gods own Mouth. I will for a time take my leave, but not my last farewell. Blessed be the time that ever I came into the Kings Bench, to be joynd in love and fellowship with such dear Children of the Lord. My good Brother Bradford shall not be dead whiles you be alive: for verily the Spirit of him doth rest on you in most ample wise. Your Letters of comfort unto me in each point do agree, as though the one were a copy of the other. He hath planted in me, and you do water, the Lord give good increase. My dear Brethren and fellow Prisoners here, have them humbly and heartily commended unto you, and your company, mourning for your misery, but yet rejoycing for your pteous consolation and comfort in Christ. will, for his glory and our eternal comfort, dissolve the same, and separate us asunder again for a time. Wherefore I thought it good, yea, and my bounden duty, by this simple Letter to provoke, stir, and admonish you, to behave your self in all your doings, sayings, and thoughts, most thankfully unto our good God for the same. And therefore (my dear Wife) as you have heartily rejoiced in the Lord, and oftentimes given God thanks for his goodness, in bringing us together in his Holy Ordinance: even so now I desire you, when this time of our separation shall come, to rejoice with me in the Lord, and to give him most hearty thanks, that he hath (to his glory and our endless commodity) separated us again for a little time, and hath mercifully taken me unto himself, forth of this miserable world, into his celestial Kingdom; believing and hoping also assuredly, that God of his goodness, for his Son Christ's sake, will shortly bring you, and your dear Children thither to me, that we may most joyfully together sing praises unto his glorious name for ever. And yet once again I desire you for love of God, and as ever you loved me, to rejoice with me, and to give God continual thanks for doing his most merciful will upon me.

I hear say that you do oftentimes use to repeat this godly saying, The Lords will be fulfilled. Doubtless it rejoiceth my poor heart to hear that report of you, and for the Lords sake, use that godly prayer continually, and teach your Children and family to say the same day and night: and not only say it with your tongues, but also with your heart and mind, and joyfully submit your will to Gods will in very deed, knowing and believing assuredly, that nothing shall come to you or any of yours, otherwise then it shall be his Almighty and Fatherly good will and pleasure, and for your eternal comfort and commodity. Which thing to be most true and certain, Christ testifieth in his Holy Gospel, saying, Are not two little Sparrows sold for a farthing, and yet not one of them shall perish without the will of our Heavenly Father? And he concludeth saying, Fear not ye therefore, for ye are better then many Sparrows. As though he should have said, If God have such respect and care for a poor Sparrow, which is not worth one farthing, that it shall not be taken in the lime-twig, net, nor pitfall, until it be his good will and pleasure; you may be well assured, that not one of you (whom he so dearly loveth, that he hath given his only dear Son for you) shall perish, or depart forth of this miserable life without his Almighty good will and pleasure.

Therefore dear Wife, put you trust and confidence wholly and only in him, and ever pray that his will be fulfilled, and not yours, except it be agreeing to his will; the which I pray God it may ever be, Amen. And as for worldly things, take you no care, but be you well assured the Lord your dear God and Father will not see you nor yours lack, if you continue in his love and Chastity fear, and keep a clear Conscience from all kind of Idolatry, Superstition and wickedness, as my trust is that you will do, although it be with the loss and danger of this temporal life. And good Margaret, fear not them that can kill both Body and Soul, and cast them into Hell Fire. Let not the remembrance of your Children keep you from God. The Lord himself will be a Father and a Mother, better then ever you or I could have been unto them. He himself will do all things necessary for them; yea, as much as rock the cradle, if need be. He hath given his Angels charge over them, therefore commit them unto him. But if you may live with a clear Conscience (for else I would not have you to live) and see the bringing up of your Children your self, look that you nurture them in the fear of God and keep them far from Idolatry, Superstition, and other kind of wickedness; and for Gods sake help them to some learning if it be possible, that they may increase in virtue and godly knowledge, which shall be a better dowry to marry them withal, then any worldly substance; and when they be come to age, provide them such husbands as fear God, and love his holy word; charge you take heed that you match them with no Papists, and if you live and marry again your self (which thing I would with you to do, if it need, require, or else not) good Wife take heed how you bestow your self that you and my poor Children be not compelled to wickedness. But if you shall be able well to live God true Widow, I would Counsel you so to live still, for the more quietness of your self and your poor Children. Take heed Margaret, and play the wife Womans part: You have warning by other, if you will take an example. And thus I commit you and my sweet Children unto Gods most merciful defence. The blessing of God be with you; and God send us a merry meeting together in Heaven. Farewel in Christ; Farewel mine own dear Hearts all. Pray, pray.

To my good Brother, Mr John Bradford.

The peace of God in Jesus Christ, the eternal comfort of his sweet Spirit, which hath surely sealed you unto eternal Salvation, be with you and strengthen you in your joyful journey towards the celestial Hierusalem (my dear Friend and most faithful Brother Mr Bradford) to the setting forth of Gods glory, and to your eternal joy in Christ, Amen.

Ever since that good Mr Philpot shewed me your last Letter (my dear Heart in the Lord) I have continued in great heaviness and perplexity; not for any hurt or discommodity that I can perceive coming towards you, unto whom doubtless death is made life and great felicity, but for the great loss that Gods Church here in England shall sustain by the taking away of so godly, so worthy, and necessary an instrument, as the Lord hath made you to be. O that my life and a thousand such wretched lives more might go for yours. Oh, why doth God suffer me and such other Caterpillars to live, that can do nothing but consume the Alms of the Church, and take away you, so worthy a workman and labourer in the Lords Vineyard? But wo be to our sins and great unthankfulness, which is the greatest cause of the taking away of such worthy instruments of God, as should set forth his glory, and instruct his People. If we had been thankful unto God for the good Ministers of his word, we had not been so soon deprived both of it and them. The Lord forgive our great ingratitude and sins, and give us true repentance and faith, and hold his hand of mercy over us, for his dear Son Christ's sake. Take not away all thy true Preachers forth of this Realm (O Lord) but leave us a seed, lest England be made like unto Sodom and Gomorrah, when thy true Lots be gone.

But what go I about to mingle your mirth, with my mourning, and your just joy with my dejected sorrow? If I loved you indeed, as I have pretended, I should surely rejoice with you most heartily, and praise God on your behalf from the very bottom of my Heart; I should praise God day and night for your excellent election in and through his great mercy, and should give him most humble thanks for your Vocation by his Gospel, and your true knowledge in the same; I should earnestly praise him for your sweet justification, whereof you are most certain by Gods Grace and Spirit, and should instantly pray unto him for your glorification, which shall shortly ensue; I should rejoice and be glad to see you so dignified by the Crown of Martyrdom, and to be appointed to that honour, to testify his truth, and to seal it with your Blood; I should highly extol the Lord, who hath given you a Glorious Victory over all your enemies visible and invisible, and hath given you grace and strength to finish the Tower that you have begun to build. Finally, if I loved you, I should most heartily rejoice and be glad to see you delivered from this Body of sin, and vile prison of the flesh, and brought into that Heavenly Tabernacle where you shall be safely kept, and never offend him more.

This and much more should I do, if I had a good heart towards God, or you his dear Child. But (alas) I am an Hypocrite, and do seek nothing but mine own commodity. I would have Gods everlasting providence give place to my peevish will and purpose, although it were to the hindrance of his glory and your sweet commodity. God forgive me my horrible ingratitude, sins and offences against him: and good Brother, do you forgive me my great negligence and unthankfulness towards you, and henceforth I promise you, I will put my will to Gods will, and pray that the same may be fulfilled in you, as long as you be on this earth; and when you are taken hence, I will most heartily praise the Lord for you, so long as I have my being in this world. Ah my dear Heart, now I must take my leave of you, and as I think, my Ultimum vale in this life, but in the life to come I am right well assured we shall merrily meet together, and that shortly I trust. And in taking of my leave of you (my dear Heart in the Lord) I shall desire you faithfully to remember all the sweet messages that the Lord our good God and most dear loving Father hath sent you by me his most unworthy Servant, which as they are most true, so shall they be most truly accomplished upon you eternally; and for the more assurance and certification thereof to your godly Conscience, he hath commanded me to repeat the same unto you again, in his own name and word.

Therefore now give ear and faithful credence. Harken O ye Heavens, and thou Earth give ear, and bear me witness, the great day, that I do here faithfully and truly the Lords message unto his dear Servant, his singularly beloved and elect Child John Bradford. John Bradford, thou man so specially beloved of God, I pronounce and testify unto thee in the word and name of the Lord Jehova, that all thy sins whatsoever they be, be they never so many, so grievous or so great, be fully and freely pardoned, released and forgiven thee, by the mercy of God in Jesus Christ thine only Lord and sweet Saviour, in whom thou dost undoubtedly believe. Christ hath cleansed thee with his blood, and clothed thee with his righteousness, and hath made thee in the sight of God his Father, without spot or wrinkle; so that when the fire doth his appointed office, thou shalt be received (as a sweet burnt sacrifice) into Heaven, where thou shalt joyfully remain in Gods presence for ever, as the true inheritor of his everlasting Kingdom, unto the which thou wast undoubtedly predestinate and ordained by the Lords infallible purpose and decree, before the foundation of the world was laid. And that this is most true that I have said, I call the whole Trinity, the Almighty and Eternal Majesty of God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, to my record at this present; whom I humbly beseech to confirm and stablish in thee the true and lively feeling of the same, Amen. Selah.

Now with a merry heart and joyful spirit, something mixed with lawful tears, I take my farewell of you mine own dear Brother in the Lord; who send us shortly a merry meeting in his Kingdom, that we may both sing praises together unto him with his holy Angels and blessed Spirits for ever and ever. Farewel thou blessed in the Lord, Farewel in Christ, depart unto my rest in the Lord; and pray for me for Gods sake.

As I had made an end of this simple Letter, I heard some comfort both of good Mr. Philipps Servant and yours: but (alas) I do scarcely believe them. Well, I will hope in God, and pray all night that God will send me some comfort to morrow, and if the Lord give you sparing to morrow, let me hear four words of comfort from you, for Gods sake. The blessing of God be with you now and for ever, Amen.

Yours for ever in the Lord Jesus,
J. Careles, living in hope against hope.

In reading this Letter of John Careles to Mr. Bradford above prefixed, wherein he maketh so much mention of a certain Letter of his sent to him, and of the great exceeding consolation he received of the same, thou wilt with peradventure (good loving Reader) in thy mind, to have some sight also of the said Letter of Mr. Bradford. Wherein to satisfy thy desire, or rather to prevent thy petition, I have herunto annexed the same, to the intent thou maist not only understand the contents thereof, but also receive fruit thereof to thy consolation likewise. The purport of the Letter here followeth.

Mr. Bradford to Careles.

Almighty God our dear Father, through and for the merits of his dearly beloved Son Jesus Christ, be merciful unto us, pardon us our offences, and under the wings of his mercy protect us from all evil, from henceforth and for ever, Amen. Anno 1556.

Dear Brother Careles, I heartily pray you to pray to God for me, for the pardon of my manifold sins and most grievous offences, which need none other demonstration unto you than this, namely, that I have behaved my self so negligently in answering your godly triple Letter, which are three witnesses against me. God lay not them, nor any other thing to my charge to condemnation, though to correction, nor my will, but his will be done. Concerning your request of absolution (my dearest Brother) what shall I say, but even as truth is? that the Lord of all mercy, and Father of all comfort, through the merits and mediation of his dear Son thy only Lord and Saviour, hath clearly remitted and pardoned all thy offences (whatsoever they be, that ever hitherto thou hast committed against his Majesty); and therefore he hath given to thee as to his Child (dear Brother John Careles) in token that thy sins are pardoned; he (I say) hath given thee a penitent and believing heart, that is, a heart which desireth to repent and believe: For such a one is taken of him (be accepting the will for the deed) for a penitent and believing heart indeed.

Wherefore (my good Brother) be merry, glad, and of good cheer, for the Lord hath taken away thy sins; thou shalt not die. Go thy ways; the Lord hath put away thy sins. The East is not so far from the West, as the Lord hath now put thy sins from thee. Look how the Heavens be in comparison of the Earth, so far hath his mercy prevailed towards thee his dear Child, John Careles, brought Christ the Beloved. Say therefore with David, Praise the Lord, O my Soul, and all that is within me praise his holy Name: for he hath forgiven thee all thy sins; as truly he hath. And hereof I desire to be a witness. God make me worthy to hear from you the like true message for my self. Mine own dearly Beloved, you have great cause to thank God most heartily that he hath given you such repentance and faith; the Lord increase the same in you and me a most miserable wretch, whose heart is harder than the Adamants Stone, or else I could not thus long have stayed from writing unto you. If I live and may, I purpose and promise you to make amends. Pray for me, my most dear Brother, I heartily beseech you, and forgive me my long silence. God our Father be with us for ever, Amen.

Yours in the Lord, J. Bradford.

To my most dear and faithful Brethren in Newgate, condemned to die for the testimony of Gods everlasting Truth.

The everlasting peace of God, in Jesus Christ, the continual joy, strength and comfort of his most pure, holy, and mighty spirit, with the increase of faith and lively feeling of his eternal mercy, be with you, my most dear and faithful loving Brother Tymis, and with all them that of my dear Hearts in the Lord, your faithful fellow-Soldiers, and most constant Companions in bonds, yea of men condemned most cruelly for the sincere testimony of Gods everlasting Truth, to the full finishing of that good work, which he hath so graciously begun in you all, that the same may be to his glory, the commodity of his poor afflicted Church, and to your everlasting comfort in him, Amen.

Ah my most sweet and loving Brethren, and dearest Hearts in the Lord, what shall I say, or how shall I write unto you, in the least point or part to utter the great joy that my poor heart hath conceived in God, through the most godly example of your Christian constancy and sincere confession of Christs Verity? Truly my tongue cannot declare, nor my pen express the abundance of spiritual mirth and gladness, that my mind and inward man hath felt, ever since I heard of your hearty boldness, and modest behaviour before that bloody Butcher, in the time of all your crafty examinations, especially at your cruel condemnation, in their cursed Confistory place. Blessed be God the Father of all mercy, and praised be his name, for that he hath so graciously performed upon you his dear Darlings, his most sweet and comfortable promises, in not only giving you the continual aid, strength and comfort of his holy and mighty Spirit unto the faithful confession of his Christ, for whose cause (O most happy men) ye are condemned to die: but also in giving you such a mouth and wisdom, as all your wicked enemies were not able to resist, but were fain to cry, Peace, peace, and not suffer you to speak. As truly as God liveth (my dear Brethren) this is not onely unto you a most evident Probation that God is on our side, and a sure certainty of your everlasting saluation in him, but also to your cruel Adversaries (or rather Gods cursed enemies) a plain demonstration of their iust eternal wo and damnation, which they shall be full free shortly to feel, when ye shall full sweetly posside the place of felicity and pleasure prepared for you from the beginning.

Martyrs.

Anno 1556.
The ceremonies to be used in the Mass, as they are now used, are contrary to the Gospel, and therefore should be abolished.

Therefore (my dearly beloved) cease not so long as ye be in this life, to praise the Lord with a lusty courage, for that of his great mercy and infinite goodness, he hath voucht you worthy of this great dignity, to suffer for his sake not onely the loss of goods, Wife, and Children, long imprisonment, cruel oppression, &c. but also the very deprivation of this mortal life with the dissolution of your bodies in the fire. The which is the greatest promotion that God can bring you or any other unto in this vale of misery, yea so great an honour, as the highest Angel in heaven is not permitted to have; and yet hath the Lord for his dear Son Christs sake reputed you worthy of the same, yea and that before me and many other, which have both long looked and longed for the same.

Alh my most dear Brother Tym, whose time resteth altogether in the hands of the Lord, in a full happy time comest thou into this troublesome world, but in a much more blessed hour shalt thou depart out of the same: so that the sweet saying of Solomon, or rather of the Holy Ghost, shall be full well verified upon thee, yea and all thy faithful fellows, Better is the day of death (saith he) then the day of birth. This saying cannot be verified upon every man, but upon thee my dear Brother, and such as thou art, whose death is most precious before God, and full dear shall your Blood be in his sight. Blessed be God for thee my dear Brother Tym, and blessed be God again that ever I knew thee, for in a most happy time I came first into thy company. Pray for me, dear Brother, pray for me, that God will once vouch me worthy of that great dignity whereunto he hath brought you.

Alh my loving Brother Drake, whose Soul now draweth nigh unto God, of whom ye have received the same, full glad may you be that ever God gave you a life to leave for his sake: Full well will he restore it to you again in a thousand fold more glorious life. Praise God, good Brother, as you have a great cause, and pray for me, I beseech you, which am so much unworthy (so great are my sins) of that great dignity whereunto the Lord hath called you and the rest of your godly Brethren; whom I beseech you to comfort in the Lord, as you can full well; praised be God for his gifts, which you have heartily applied to the setting forth of his glory, and the commodity of his poor afflicted Church. Which thing shall surely redound to your everlasting joy and comfort, as you shall most effectually feel ere ever it be long, though the wicked of the world judge far otherwise.

Alh mine own hearts, and most dearly beloved Brethren, Cavel, Ambrose, and both the Spurges; blessed be the Lord on your behalf, and praised be his name, which hath given you such a Glorious Victory; Full valiant have you shewed your selves in the Lords fight, and full faithful in your painful service. Faint not, but go on forward as ye have most godly begun, for great shall your reward be at the end of this your travel. Alh my good faithful Brethren all, what shall I say, or what shall I write unto you? but even the same that good Elizabeth did say to her godly Kinswoman Mary the blessed Mother of Christ, Happy art thou (quoth that good Woman) which hast believed: for all things which the Lord hath spoken to thee, shall be fulfilled. So I say to you (my dear Hearts in the Lord) happy are ye all, you twice happy shall you be for evermore, because ye have steadfastly believed the most sweet promises which God the Father hath made unto you with his own mouth, in that he hath promised you (which are the faithful seed of the believing Abraham) that ye shall be blessed ever, world without end. The promises of God you most sweet Father as ye do believe; so do ye bear record that God is true. The testimony whereof ye have full worthily borne to the world, and shortly will full surely seal the same with your Blood, yea even to morrow, I do understand. Oh constant Christians! O valiant Souldiers of the high Captain Jesus Christ: who for your sake hath conquered the Devil, Death, Sin and Hell, and hath given you full victory over them for evermore. Oh worthy witnesses, and most glorious Martyrs, whose invincible faith hath overcome that proud, sturdy, bragging Prince of the world, and all his wicked army; over whom ye shall shortly Triumph for evermore. Alh my sweet Hearts, the everlasting treasures are full surely laid up for you in Heaven. The inaccessible and most Glorious Crown of Victory is already made and prepared for you, to be shortly clapt upon all your happy heads. The Holy Angels of your Heavenly Father are already appointed to conduct your sweet Souls into Abrahams Bosom. All the Heavenly Hosts rejoyceth already, for that they shall shortly receive you with joy and felicity; into their blessed fellowship, Selah.

Rejoyce which double joy, and be glad my dear Brethren, for doubtless ye have more cause then can be expressed. But (alas) I that for my sins am left behind, may lie and lament with the holy Prophet, saying, Woe is me that the day of my joyful rest are prolonged. Ah cursed Satan, which hath caused me so sore to offend my most dear loving Father, whereby mine exile and Banishment is so much prolonged. Oh Christ my dear Advocate, pacify thy Fathers wrath, which I have justly deserved, that he may take me home to him in his sweet mercy. O that I might now come home unto thee with thy blessed Brethren. Well, thy will O Lord be effectuously fulfilled, for it is onely good, and turneth all things to the best, for such as thou in thy mercy hast chosen.

And now farewell my dear hearts, most happy in the Lord: I trust in my good God, yet shortly to see you in the Celestial City, whereof undoubtedly the Lord hath already made you free Citizens. Though you be yet with us for a little time, your very home is in Heaven, where your treasure doth remain with your sweet Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ, whose calling you have heard with the ears of your hearts, and therefore ye shall never come into judgment, but pass from death to life. Your sins shall never more be remembered, be they never so many so grievous, or so great: for your Saviour hath cast them all into the bottom of the Sea; he hath removed them from you, as far as the East is from the West, and his mercy hath much more prevailed over you, than is distance between Heaven and Earth; and he hath given you for everlasting possession of the same, all his holiness, righteousness, and justification, yea and the Holy Ghost into your hearts, wherewith ye are surely sealed unto the day of redemption, to certifye you of your eternal election, and that ye are his true adopted Sons, whereby ye may boldly cry unto God, Abba dear Father, for evermore: so that now no creature in Heaven, Earth nor Hell, shall be able to accuse you before the Throne of the Heavenly King. Satan is now cast out from you; he himself is judged, and hath no part in you. He will once more bite you by the heel, and then he hath done, for at that time you shall quise his head through your own good Christ, and so have you final victory for evermore. In joyful Triumph whereof, ye shall sweetly ascend into the place of eternal rest, whither your eldest Brother Christ is gone before you to take possession for you, and to prepare your place under the Holy Altar, with Crammer, Latimer, Ridley, Rogers, Hooper, Sanders, Farrar, Taylor, Bradford, Philpot, with many other, who will be full glad of your coming, to see six more of their appointed number that their Blood may so much the sooner be revenged upon them that dwell on the Earth.

Thus I make an end, committing you all to Gods most merciful defence, whose quarrel ye have defended, whose cause ye have promoted, whose glory ye have set forth, and whose name ye have constantly confessed. Farewel for a while my dear hearts in the Lord, I will make as much haste after you as I may. All our dear Brethren salute you. They pray for you, and praise God for you continually. Blessed be the dead that die in the Lord,

Lord, for they rest from their labours, faith the Holy Ghost, and their works follow them.

Your own John Careles, a most unprofitable servant of the Lord. Pray, pray, pray.

Ye heard before the Letter of Thomas Whittle, written to John Careles, wherein he yieldeth great thanks unto him for the singular joy and consolation received by his Letters. The copy of which letters sent unto him if any be disposed to peruse, here under followeth to satisfie his desire.

To Mr. Green, Mr. Whittle, and certain other prisoners in Newgate, condemned, and ready to be burnt for the testimony of our Lord Jesus.

Another letter of J. Careles, wherein he doth animate Green, Whittle, and the rest of those company unto their martyrdom.

THe everlasting peace in Jesus Christ, the continual comfort of his most pure and Holy Spirit, be with you my dear and faithful Brethren and Sisters of Newgate, the Lords appointed sheep unto the slaughter, to the good performance of the great and noble work of the Lord, which he hath so graciously begun in you all; that the same may redound to the setting forth of his glory, and to the commodity of his Church, and to your own everlasting comfort in him. So be it.

Alh my dear Hearts, and most faithful Brethren and Sisters in the Lord, what high lauds and praise, yea what humble and continual thanks am I bound to give to God our Father for you and on your most happy behalf, who so mightily hath magnified himself in you thus far forth, in giving you his holy and mighty Spirit, to the constant confessing of Christs verity, even to the cruel condemnation, and I doubt not but he will do the same to the death. Oh happy and blessed are you that ever you were born, that the Lord will vouch you worthy of this great dignity, to die for his sake. Doubtless it is the greatest honour that God can give you in this life. Yea if they be so blessed of God that die in the Lord, as the Holy Ghost faith they be how much more blessed and happy then are you that die not only in the Lord, but also for the Lord. O that it were the good will of God, that the good hour were now come, that I might go with you. Ah that my fins made me not unworthy of such an excellent dignity.

Be thankful dear Hearts, be thankful and rejoice in the Lord: for mighty is his mercy towards you, and great is your reward in Heaven the which you like faithful persons have plucked to you with a godly violence of an invincible faith. Oh worthy Warriours of the most high Captain! Oh constant confessors of the everlasting verity! how glorious a Crown of Victory shall you shortly receive, which is prepared for all such as do continue to the end? Oh you sweet Saints of the Lord, how precious shall your death be in his sight? Oh how dear are your Souls to your Redemer, in whose hand they shall most joyfully rest, and the pains of death shall never touch you? Oh how blessed shall you be, when Christ shall appear, at the which time you shall receive your Bodies again full of immortality? Oh how joyful shall you be, when Christ according to his promise shall knowledge you before his Father and his Holy Angels, as you have most constantly confessed him to be your Lord and only Saviour before men?

Oh blessed Green, thou meek and loving Lamb of the Lord, how happy art thou to be appointed to die for his sake? A full dainty dish art thou for the Lords own tooth. Fresh and Green shalt thou be in the House of the Lord, and thy fruits shall never wither nor decay. Although thou go here forth sowing thy good fruit with tears, the time shall come that thou shalt reap with joy and gladness the fruits of everlasting life, and that without ceasing. Be merry therefore and fear not, for it is thy Fathers will to give thee a Kingdom, wherunto he hath chosen thee before the foundations of the world were laid.

Oh happy Minister, thou man of God, how glad mayest thou be of Gods most gracious favours, which hath prevented thee in the day of thy trial? Oh happy Peter, whose part thou hast well played; therefore thy reward and portion shall be like in to his. Now hast thou great experience of mans infirmity, but much more proof and taft, yea sense and feeling of Gods abundant bottomless mercy. Although Satan desired to sift thee, yet Christ thy good Captain prayed that thy faith should not fail. Gods strength is made perfect by thy weakness, and his grace is sufficient for thee his dear Child. Thine example did so encourage and strengthen thy poor Brethren, that God is every way glorified by thee, and shortly will be glorified thee with himself, with that glory which he hath prepared for thee his elect dearling before the world was made. Therefore rejoice and be glad, for thou hast good occasion, in finding such favour in his sight.

This is most true (O my other Brethren, whom I do not know, neither have I heard much of you) happy are you that ever you were born, and blessed be our God which hath given you such victory over the bloody Beast, shortly shall you be clothed in large white garments, and fine robes of righteousness, and so shall you follow the Lamb on Mount Zion with new songs of mirth and melody, for your delivery forth of Satans power and tyranny. God for evermore be blessed for you, and strengthen you to the end, as I doubt not but he will: for he never failed them that put their trust in him.

O my dear and faithful Sister Joan Warne, what shall I say to thee? Thy trial hath been great: thy victory in Christ hath been notable. Thou hast overcome many a sharp shower and storm. Shortly shalt thou arrive at the haven of quiet rest, and receive a reward due to a constant Martyr. Thou shalt go home to thy heavenly Father, and possesse for ever the inheritance which Christ hath purchased for thee, where thy earthly parents be, still looking for thee, which have triumphed over Antichrist most victoriously. Oh blessed parents of happy Children, which have shewed such an example as the like hath been seldom seen! I salute thee dear Sister of like constant mind, whose constant example is worthy of continual memory. Praised be God for you mine own sweet Sisters, which hath made you play such wide virgins parts. He hath plentifully poured the oil of his Spirit into the lamps of your faith, so that the light thereof shall never be extinct. You shall enter with your Bridegroom into everlasting joy, wherunto you were chosen in him from the beginning.

Oh my dear Brethren and Sisters, you blessed Saints of the Lord, how much, and how deeply am I bound to praise God for you both day and night. Pray, pray for me (my dear Hearts) for the tender mercy of God, that I may be made worthy to follow your trace. Oh that I had run the race of my life as far as you have done yours and were as nigh my journey as you are to be unto yours. But alas, I ly like the lame man at the pools side by Sillemans porch, and every man goeth into the place of health before me. But God will appoint me one, one day to put me in. I trust my Lord of Londons Colehoufe is empty, and all his Officers Idle. Therefore they must shortly fetch more sleep to the Shambles; for he is the common slaughter slave of all England. But happy are you that are passed through the pikes, and delivered out of his hands, and from all the angels of the darkness of this world, which long tempted you in the Wilderness of the fame: but now shall the Angels of God come and minister unto you; for they are your servants to hold you up in their hands, that you shall not hurt your foot, nor one hair of your head shall perish. They shall carry you up to heaven in a fiery chariot, though you leave your mantle behind you for a time, until God restore the same again in a more ample and glorious sort.

Thus in haste, as it doth appear, I am constrained to make an end, committing you all to Gods most merciful defence; who ever have you in his blessed keeping, desiring you all to remember me in your godly and faithful prayers, as I will not forget you in mine, by Gods grace. The blessing of God be with you all my dear Brethren and Sisters. All our Brethren and fellow prisoners here have them most heartily commended unto you, and pray for you without ceasing. God send us a merry meeting in his Kingdom. Amen.

By your Brother and unfained lover, John Careles, prisoner, abiding his most merciful will and plea, etc.

Another
Letter of Jn. Careles, privately written to his bedfel-low Wm.
Tyms.

To my dear and faithful Brother William Tyms, prisoner in Newgate.

THe everlasting peace of God in Jesus Christ, with the continual joy, comfort, and strength of his sweet Spirit, be multiplied, and daily more and more increased in your good heart (my most faithful and dear Brother Tyms) to the full quieting of your Conscience, and beating back of all the fiery darts of the wicked, that you may shortly receive the glorious Crown of Victory, and in the same Triumph over all your enemies, for ever more, Amen.

I cannot express the exceeding great joy and consolation of my poor heart, considering the marvellous Works of God most graciously wrought upon you, not only in proving you and trying your faith by his great and huge crosses both inwardly and outwardly, but also in giving you so great consolation and constancy in the midst of the same. Faithful is God, and true of his promises, who hath said; That he will never suffer his chosen Children to be tempted above their strength, but in the midst of their temptation will make an escape for them, by such means as may make to his glory and their everlasting consolation. My dear heart, great cause have you to be of good comfort, I see in you as lively a token of Gods everlasting love and favour in Jesus Christ, as ever I perceived in any man. In respect whereof, I do even with my heart love, honour, and reverence you, beseeching God for his glorious Names sake, in the Bowels and Blood of our Lord and only Saviour Jesus Christ, to finish his good work in you, as I doubt not but he will do, according to his infallible promises, yea I am well assured thereof, forasmuch as you have so effectually received his Holy Spirit into your heart, as a pledge and a sure seal of your eternal redemption, and a testimony of your adoption in Christ Jesus. For which cause Satan so fore envieth you, that he hath now bent all his fierce Ordinance against you, thinking thereby utterly to destroy the invincible Fort of your faith, founded most firmly upon the unmoveable Rock Christ, against the which neither the Devil, Sin, nor yet Hell Gates shall ever prevail, Selah.

Therefore mine own bowels in the Lord, be not discomforted for this your conflict, which doubtless shall greatly increase your Crown of Glory, Triumph and Victory; but take a good heart unto you, and buckle boldly with Satan, both in himself and his subtle members. It is the very divine Ordinance of God, that all his regenerate People shall be tempted, proved, and tried, as we see by the example of our Saviour Christ; who as soon as he was Baptized, was straightways led of the Holy Ghost into the Wilderness, there to be tempted of the Devil. But there got he such a Glorious Victory of Satan, that he could never since finally prevail against any of his poor members, but in every assault that he maketh either inwardly or outwardly, he getteth a foil, and taketh shame; so that now he rageth with all the spite possible, specially because he knoweth his time is but short. Saint James testifieth that he is but a very coward, that will soon flee if he be faithfully resisted. And as for his tempting tools, the Lord hath made them manifest unto us, so that he cannot deceive us though he assault us; For as S. Paul saith; His very thoughts are not unknown to us, as it doth in you largely appear, praised be the Lords Name therefore.

You see (dear Brother) that now to molest you and such as you are, that be even passing from this vale of misery, he hath but two ways, or two pieces of Ordinance to shoot at you, with the which he cannot hurt you, because you have two Bulwarks to defend you. The first of these terrible Guns that Satan hath shot at you, is the very fame that he continually shooteth at me, that is to say, fear and infidelity; for the ugliness of death and horror of my sins, which be so many, grievous, and great. But this pellet is easily put away with the sure shield of faith, in the most precious death and Blood-shedding of our dear Lord and only Saviour Jesus Christ, whom the Father hath given unto us wholly to be ours for evermore, and with him hath given us all things, as Paul saith; so that though we be never so great sinners, yet Christ is made unto us holiness, righteousness, and justification. He hath clothed us with all his merits, mercies, and most sweet sufferings, and hath taken unto him all our misery, wretchedness, sin, and infirmity. So that if any should now be condemned for the same, it must needs be Jesus Christ, which hath taken them upon him. But indeed he hath made satisfaction for them to the uttermost jot; so that for his sake they shall never be imputed to us, if they were a thousand times so many more as they be. This do you most effectually feel and know (dear Brother) a great deal better than I can tell you, blessed be God therefore.

And now Satan, seeing that he cannot prevail with his boysterous battery against this Bulwark or Iath, which doth so quench all his fiery darts, that they can do you no harm, but rather do you good service to cast you down, under the mighty hand of God, that he may take you up by his only grace and power, and so you may render him all the glory by Jesus Christ (which thing the enemy can in no wise abide) therefore he shooteth off his other Piece most pestilent, to provoke you to put some part of your trust and confidence in your self, and in your own holiness and righteousness, that you might that way rob God of his glory; and Christ of the honour and dignity of his death. But blessed be the Lord God, you have also a full strong Bulwark to beat back this pestiferous pellet also, even the pure Law of God, which proveth the best of us all damnable sinners in the sight of God, if he would enter into judgment with us according to the severity of the same, and that even our best works are polluted and defiled in such sort, as the Prophet describeth them. With which manner of speaking our free-will Pharisees are much offended; for it telleth all mans righteousnesses to the ground (I had like to have said to the bottom of hell) and extolleth only the righteousness of Jesus Christ, which is allowed before God, and is freely given to all those that firmly believe, as blessed be God you do.

Alh my good Brother Tyms, Satan hath but his hand in a wrong box when he beginneth to tempt you, either to gain-glory or mistrust: for you are an old beaten fouldier, and have had good experience of these manner of temptations, both by your self and other, whom you know well were beloved of God. Be of good cheer therefore dear heart, be of good cheer, for now Satan hath wrought all his malice, he hath done all that he can, and hath shot off all his last Peces, wherewith he had thought to have done most mischief; but now he seeth he cannot prevail (the strong Tower of our faith being so invincible) he will pluck up all his tents, and get him to some other place to practise the like assaults, and then will the Angels of God come and minister unto you the most sweet and heavenly consolations of the Holy Ghost. To him therefore who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that ever we can desire or think, I do most heartily commit you, with all the rest of your godly prison-fellows, who comfort, strengthen, and defend you with his grace and mighty operation of his Holy Spirit, as he hath hitherto done, that you having a most glorious Victory over the subtle Serpent, and all his wicked seed, may also receive the Crown of glory and immortality prepared for you before the foundations of the World were laid, and is so surely kept for you in the hands of him whose promise is unfallible, that the Devil, sin, death, or hell, shall never be able to deprive you of the same. The blessing of God be with you now and for evermore, Amen. Pray, pray, pray for me.

Your own for ever,

John Careles.

THe peace of God in Jesus Christ, and the eternal comforts of his sweet Spirit, be with you my dear and faithful Sister, to the full accomplishment of that good work which he hath most graciously begun in you; that the same may be effectually to the setting forth of his glory and to your everlasting Consolation in him, Amen.

Another letter of Jn.
Careles to his sister M. C., a sister and sister of the Gospel.

My loving and faithful Sister in the Lord, I thank you for all your loving kindness shewed unto me in your fervent and faithful Prayers; and for your most godly and comfortable Letter, whereby you do not only much increase my joy and comfort, but also put me in remembrance of my duty towards you.

Blessed be the Lord God, which of his great mercy hath so beautified his Church in these our days, that even unto many godly women he hath given most excellent gifts of knowledge and understanding of his Truth, so that they are not only well able to inform their own Consciences in all things necessary to salvation, but also most sweetly comfort their sorrowful Brethren and Sisters that sustain any trouble for the testimony of Gods Truth, yea, and that which is more, even in the midst of their great conflicts of Conscience. Of which most happy number of godly and virtuous women (my dear Heart) you are one, and that of the chiefest, being plentifully indued with the gifts of Gods most gracious Spirit, as it doth full well appear in your daily doings. God only have the praise therefore.

Forasmuch then as God hath given you the gift to write, I shall most heartily desire you to let me hear from you sometimes, be it never so little, for truly I take great comfort and courage thereby, especially in my poor Conscience, which is sore assaulted of subtle Satan, and in a manner oppressed of my sins. Pray (dear Sister) that God may give me true, hearty and earnest repentance, and increase my faith, for they are both the good gifts of God only, and far pass the reach of my power, to take at my pleasure.

Therefore (dear Sister) if you help me to beg the fame of our dear loving Father, I am sure that he both can and will give them in his good time. As for the fear of death, or terror of the fire, I most heartily thank my good God, I feel it not; only it is mine own sins and unthankfulness which holdeth hard battel, and wageth strong war against me, which only goeth about to separate me from my good Captain Christ, that I should not enjoy his glorious victory; but God being on my side (as I am sure he is) that cannot continually prevail against me. Though God for a time permit Satan to take his pleasure on me, as he did upon Job, yet I doubt not but in the end all shall turn to my profit, through the merits of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to whose most merciful defence I commit you (dear Sister) with all the rest of the Lords elect. Farewel in Christ.

Yours unfeignedly, John Careles.
Pray, pray, pray, pray.

To my dear Brother T. V.

The everlasting peace of God in Jesus Christ, the continual comforts of his most pure and holy Spirit, be with you my most dear Friend and faithful Brother V. to the increase of your Faith, and comfort of your sorrowful Spirit, which is to the Father a sweet sacrifice through Christ, for whose sake he will never despise your humble and contrite heart, but doth favourably accept the same, and will in most ample wise perform the desire thereof to his glory, and your eternal comfort in him.

In the midst of my manifold crosses and troubles, wherein I am constrained to flee unto God for refuge and succour by earnest and faithful Prayer, I cannot forget you my dear heart in the Lord, but esteeming your state for mine own, I do pour forth my complaint for you, as I do for my self, and rather more, as I think present need doth require, desiring most heartily to hear the good success of the same in you. The Lord God, for his great mercies sake, accomplish my desire, as I doubt not but he will, when he seeth it good and meet to his glory, and to your comfort and commodity. Oh that I might once see you so merry in Christ, as you have just cause to be, that you might say with David, Psal. 57. Awake my glory, awake Lute and Harp, bring forth the Psalter with the merry Song, that I might sing a new Song of praise and thanksgiving unto the Lord, for the light of his favourable countenance, his help and deliverance. Oh, that would refresh me as a most precious

Oil, and gladden my poor heart, which is assaulted with sorrow more ways than one. I doubt not but the same shall by your means receive much comfort, though for a time it doth mourn with you, that we may be made both glad together, yea, and that with such gladness as shall continue for ever. But in the mean space (I say) most happy are you, that so heartily mourn for the absence of the Bridegroom. If you were not a wedding Child, you could never do it. Only Christs true Disciples do mourn for his absence: therefore shall they doubtless rejoice at his presence, which will be so much more joyful, by how much the absence is more sorrowful.

Therefore (my good Brother) take a good heart unto you, and be of good cheer. Say with the Prophet David, Psal. 42. O my Soul, why art thou so heavy, and why art thou so disquieted within me? O put thy trust in God, for I will yet give him thanks for the help of his loving countenance, and because he is my God. Read Psal. 41. and 42. for your comfort, and consider that the holy King and Prophet, at the making and first saying of them, was even in the same case that you are now in; but he still comforted himself with the sweet Promises of God: and so do you my dear heart, for to you they do as well pertain as they did to him, and as surely shall they be performed upon you, as they were upon him: for he is one God and dear Father unto you both, and for his mercy, truth and promise sake, he must needs make good unto you all that he hath said. If his love towards you stood in the respect of your own merit and worthiness, you might well mourn, lament and complain; yea, you had good cause to doubt, fear, and mistrust. But seeing he loveth you only for and in Jesus Christ, who is your whole holiness, righteousness and redemption; lay away all mourning, lamenting, and complaining, banish from you all fear, mistrust, and infidelity, and know that as long as Christ doth continue Gods Son, so long must the love of the Father continue towards you immutable, and his good will unchangeable, and cannot be altered through any of your infirmities. For this is most true, that as long as the cause of any thing doth last, so long must the effect remain; but Christ is the whole cause why the Father loveth you, and he also continueth for ever; then must I needs conclude, that the love of the Father continueth towards you for ever, and (as the Psalms most joyfully so often sung: His mercy endureth for ever and ever.)

This is most true (mine own dear Heart) although why God the Lord for a time hide it from your senses, that you might be the more earnest in prayer to him for the feeling of it, and also the more thankful for it when he doth give the lively taste of it, as doubtless he will do ere ever it be long; and then shall you be well able to comfort other in the same state that you are now in, with the same comfort wherewith you are, and further shall be comforted of God.

Therefore lift up your hands that are now a little fallen down, and stretch forth the weak knees of your troubled mind, which now mourneth with a godly mourning, and therefore shall it be full well comforted with that sweet peace of God which passeth all understanding: and you are sure already to enjoy the blessing that Christ gave unto the godly mourners of Sion upon the Mount, at the first Sermon that he made. Oh happy V. in whole mourning company I had rather be, than in the house of mirth and banquetting of such as see not what cause they have to mourn and be sorry. But yet (my good Brother) use a measure in this your godly mourning, and make not your faithful Friends too much sorry for you. Let the persuasions of such godly Lovers as you do daily company withal, or rather the persuasions of the Holy Ghost by them, move you to some godly mirth and rejoicing. Consider that you are commanded of God by the mouth of Saint Paul thereto, Rejoice in the Lord (saith he) and I say again rejoice, Philip. 4. Mark how he doubleth the sentence, that we may perceive it is a most earnest and necessary thing he requireth. Obey the Commandment of God in this behalf; wherein, as you cannot but highly please him, so I assure you, you shall very much rejoice my poor heart, and the hearts of other which pray for you with mourning Tears, and make that cruel enemy enemy Satan and all your Adversaries sorry, which will rejoyce and laugh to see you mourn. Oh my good Brother, let it manifestly appear; that the Lord of his great mercy hath heard our faithful and hearty requests for you. Oh how would that rejoyce me in the midst of my troubles.

Therefore how to conclude; because the darkness constraineth me to make an end for this time, I say; my dear and faithful Brother, you in respect of the great cause you have of your own part through Christ, and for the glory and honour of Almighty God; the comfort, joy, and rejoycing of your dear Brethren and Sisters in Christ, also your own duty to the commandment of God; and last of all to vex, molest, and grieve Sabut my good Bridegroom is present, and biddeth me

I must needs be merry with him: and so he biddeth you to be, by my mouth, for he is present with you, although for sorrow you cannot know him, as Magdalen could not in the garden, until he spake unto her. The Lord God speak these words of comfort in your heart, and open the eyes of your mind, that you may perfectly perceive and feel his Blessed presence, and so rejoyce in the same for evermore, Amen. Comfort your heart in Christ, and cast your care upon him, for he careth for you.

Another

to faithful

Bernher, counselling him to be circumspect in these dangerous days.

The peace of God in Jesus Christ, the help, comfort, and assistance of his eternal Spirit be with you my dear and faithful Brother Augustine, and with all the rest of my good Brethren and Sisters of the houses of Baxterley and Manceter (which mourn for the misery of Gods People) to your everlasting consolation in him, Amen.

Right glad I am to hear (my dear and faithful Brother Augustine) that God of his great mercy and infinite goodness hath yet so graciously delivered and preserved you out of your enemies hands, beseeching Almighty God also from the bottom of my heart, to be your continual defence unto the end, as hitherto he hath most graciously been, that you may live and die both to Gods glory, the commodity of his Church, and to the increase of your own everlasting joy and comfort in him.

Know you (dear Brother) that I have received your Letter, for the which I heartily thank you. Indeed I think it very thort, although it seemeth something sharply to rebuke me in the beginning, for the breach of my promise in not writing to you of this long time. Well Brother, I am content to bear it with patience, considering that you are troubled otherwise (the Lord comfort you and all heavy hearts;) neither will I spend Ink and Paper for my purgation in this point. God he knoweth whether I be so mindless of my promise as it appeareth in your sight I am. Your request I will truly perform to the uttermost of my Power, as gladly as any poor wretch shall do in the world, and I thank God I have done no less of long time. And as my poor Prayer-er shall be a handmaid to wait upon you which way soever you ride or go; so I beseech you that my simple counsel may take some place in you, in this time of your Pilgrimage, which you pass in no small peril. God keep and preserve you for his Names sake.

I do not disallow, but much praise and commend your heartly boldness in putting your self in pres, when any one of Gods People needeth your help in any point.
But yet I would not have you thrust your self in danger, when you can do them no good, or at leastwise when they may well enough spare that good you would do them: For if you should then chance to be taken, you shall not only be no comfort unto them, but also a great discomfort; adding sorrow unto their sorrow.

I do not persuade you to absent your self from any place where your presence of necessity is required; for in all such places, I know; God will preserve you as he hath hitherto wonderfully done; praised be his Name therefore: or if it shall please him to permit you in any such place to be taken, I know he will most sweetly comfort your Conscience with this consideration; that it is the very providence and appointment of God; that you should there and then be taken up for a witness of his Truth unto the world: but I cannot allow; nor be contented that you should rashly or negligently thrust your self into that place where your wicked enemies do continually haunt, yea and lay wait for you when no necessity of your self, nor of any other of Gods People doth require your company. If they need any of your godly counsel, you may write unto them that thing that you think good; which (I dare say) will be sufficient unto them: For (continual thanks and praises be given unto the everlasting God) there is none of those that be cruelly condemned for Gods Truth, that now be weaklings; for they have manfully passed through the pikes, and they have boldly abiden the brunt of the Battle, and therefore I reckon the worst is past with them already. So that now and then a godly Letter from you to them shall do as much good, as your company shall do, and perchance more too; for writing sticketh longer in the memory than words do, yea though your Letters were as short to them, as your last was to me, so that the same be something sweeter, and not all thing so tharp.

This (dear Brother) is the simple counsel which I would gladly have you observe, partly for that I heartily pray for your preservation to the commodity of Christs Church; and partly for that I unfeignedly wish the peace, comfort, and tranquillity of your own Conscience, which I know will be quickly ready to accuse you, if you do any thing wherein you have not the Word of God for your warrant. For as in a glass that is clear, a small mote will soon appear: even so the good Conscience of Gods chosen Children, being more clear than crystal, will quickly accuse them at the least fault they do commit; whereas the wicked worldlings have their Conscience so clogged, and corrupted through the custom of sin, that they cannot once see or perceive their shameful deeds and wicked works, until God set the same before them for their utter destruction, and then despair they immediately. But seeing that God hath given you a clear Conscience, and a pure, sharp, quick and lively sight in your Soul, I would wish you to beware that you do nothing unadvisedly, but upon a good ground. For an accusing Conscience is a sore thing when death doth approach, and then Satan will not stick to tell you that you have too much tempted God, when peradventure you have done nothing so at all. For this cause (I say) partly I have thought it good to admonish you (as I have done often) to be circumspect, according to the counsel of Christ, which biddeth you beware of men. Other things I have not to write, for I know this bearer can certifie you of all things at large, better than I can declare it by writing.

I beseech you, good Augustine, help me forwards with your hearty prayers, for I trust I have but a small time to tarry in this troublesome world. Dr. Story told our Marshall that we should all be dispatched so soon as he came from Oxford, whither he and other bloody Butchers be gone to make slaughter of Christs sheep that lie there appointed to be slain. God for Christs sake put them and such like besides their cruel purpose, if it be his good will and pleasure, Amen good Lord. I pray you do my most hearty commendations to my dear Sister and Faithful Friend, good Mistress Mary Glover. I beseech God be her comfort, as I doubt not but he is:
I am very glad to hear that she doth so joyfully and so patiently bear this great Cross that God hath laid upon her. I pray God strengthen her, and all other his dear Saints unto the end, Amen. Commend me unto my dear and faithful Sister Elizabeth B. I thank her most heartily for my Napkin, and so I do your dear Brother for my Shirt. Truly that day that we were appointed

And trust me, truly if they had come, I would have stricken three strokes the more for your two fakes, as well as God would have abled me to have set them on, as by Gods grace I will not fail to do at the next skirmish that I come to. Wherefore I pray you pray for me, that I may be strong and hardy to lay on good load. Oh that I might so strike him down, that he should never be able to rise again. But that stroke be- longeth only unto the Lord, to strike at his coming, the which I trust will be shortly. Oh hasten it good Lord, and shorten these sorrowful and sinful days, for thy great mercies sake.

Farewel my dear and faithful loving Brother. The Lord defend, keep, and preserve you from the power of your enemies visible and invisible, and send us a most joyful and merry meeting here or elsewhere, as it shall please his goodnes to appoint us.

In the mean space I shall most earnestly desire you to pray for me, for I never had more need in my life, and doubtless you shall never want my poor prayer, if it shall please God to accept the prayer of so sinful a wretch as I am. The Lord impute not my sins to me, for Jesus Christ sake; unto whose most merciful defence I do most heartily commit you. The blessing of God be with you now and ever, Amen. I pray you do my most hearty commendations unto Mr. John Glover. I do not forget him in my daily prayers, and I trust he doth remember me.

The everlasting peace of God in Jesus Christ, the continual aid, strength, joy, and comfort of his most pure, holy, and mighty Spirit, with the increase of Faith, and lively feeling of his mercies be most effectu- ally wrought in your heart, my dear and faithful loving Brother Adlington, and in the hearts of all your other godly Prison-fellows, to the full finishing of that good work, which the Lord hath most graciously begun in you; that the same may be to the advancing and setting forth of his glory, the Commodity of his poor afflicted Church, and to your own eternal joy and comfort in him, Amen.

My most dear and faithful loving Brother in the Lord, I with all the rest of my loving Brethren here with me, do most humbly and heartily commend us unto you, with all faithful remembrance of you in our daily prayers, giving God earnest thanks on your most happy behalf, for that he hath given you such hearty boldness and Chris- tian constancy in the faithful confession of his everlasting verity. Blessed be God for thee my dearly beloved Brother, which hath vouched thee worthy of so great dignity, as to suffer for his sake, and setting forth of his glory. Oh glad in heart mayst thou be, to whom it is given, not only to believe in thy Lord and Christ most lively, but also to suffer for his sake, as one of his feeble sheep appointed to the slaughter. Be of good comfort therefore my good Brother; for your calling unto the Cross of Christ was after a marvelous sort. Surely, it was only the Lords appointment, and therefore he will well perform his own work in and upon you, to the great magnifying of his glory, and comfort of your Brethren, whose hearts are mightily refreshed, to hear how heartily you have behaved your self hitherto.

This present day I received a Letter from you, at the reading whereof my Brethren and I were not a little comforted, to see your Confidence so quickened in Christ and your continuance so steadfast in him; which things be the special gifts of God, not given unto every man, but to you his dear darling, elect and Chosen in Christ, and such as you be. And whereas you do require to know my simple mind concerning your answer unto Dr. Anno Story and the Chancellor; truly I say you did answer them very well: for there are but two Sacraments indeed that is to say, the Sacrament of Baptism, and the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ; as you have full well answered them, praised be God for his good gifts, who chuseth the weak to confound the strong, and the foolish to confound the worldly wise. If, when you come before them again, they do ask you what a Sacrament is, say you that a Sacrament, being mingled according to Christs institution, is a visible sign of an invisible grace, and hath the promise of Gods mercy annexed unto it, available to all such as do worthily receive it, and not unworthily worship it, as they would have us to do, contrary to Gods commandment. And these properties, belonging to Christs true Sacraments, cannot be applied unto any one of those five Sacraments which they have invented of their own brain, since Antichrist began to reign, to blind the People withal.

I perceive (dear heart) that upon Friday they do intend to condemn you, and give you your judgment.
Therefore I think they will have no great reasoning with you, but bid you answer them directly, either yea, or nay, to all such things as they have to charge you withal, which they have gathered of you since you came into their cruel hands. But if they will needs make many words with you, because you are but a simple man, and therefore perchance they will be the busier with you to trouble you with many questions, to comber your knowledge, and then seem to triumph over you and that Truth that you do hold; if (I say) they do this (as perhaps for some evil purpose they will) then be you so plain and as short as you can, saying roundly unto them these or such like words, as nigh as you can.

Be it known unto you, that I in all points do believe as it becometh a true Christian, and as I have been truly taught in the days of that good King Edward, of such godly Preachers and Prophets sent of God, as have sealed their Doctrine with their Blood, from whom I will dissent in no point: for I am a poor man without learning, but am commanded of God to follow the counsel of his constant Preachers, and so do I intend to do, God giving me grace and assistance thereto.

As for you, I know you to be none of Christs Shepherds, but ravening Wolves, which come to kill and scatter the flock of Christ, as the Lord said you should;
and doth will us to beware of you and your poysoned Doctrine, bidding us to judge you according to your fruits, whereby all men may see and know what ye be, that will not be wilfully blind. But the good Shepherds have given their lives for the defence of Christs flock; and I am commanded to follow their faithful and godly example, and to confess with them one Truth, even to the fire, if God shall see it good; and this as a true Christian I have hitherto done, and henceforth by Gods grace intend to do.

And if for the same God shall suffer you to take away my life, as you have done theirs, I am contented therewith: his will be done, for that only is good. But of this be you sure, the Lord will shortly call you to account for all the innocent Blood that is shed within this Realm; which you have brought into a most woful case, and made many a heavy heart in the same, and more I perceive you will make, so long as the Lord for our sins will suffer you to prosper, and until the time that your iniquities shall be full ripe. But then be you sure, the Lord will sit in judgment upon you, as well as you do now upon his Saints, and will reward you according to your deservings; to whom with my whole heart I commit my cause, and he will make answer for me, when the full time of my refreshing cometh. In the mean space, I will keep silence with this that I have said, trusting that I have sufficiently discharged my Confidence in confessing my Faith and Religion to you, declaring of what Church I am, even of the Catholick Church of Jesus Christ, which was well known to be here in England in our late good King Edwards days, by two special tokens which cannot deceive me, nor yet suffer me to be deceived; that is to say, the pure preaching of his holy Word, and the due administration of his holy Sacraments, which is not to be seen in your Romish

Church, and therefore it cannot justly be called the Church and Spouse of Christ. I believe in the holy Trinity, and all the other Articles of the Christian Faith contained in the three Creeds; and finally all the Canonical Scripture to be true in every sentence. And I detest all Sects both of the Arrians and Anabaptists, or any other that divide themselves from the true Church of Christ, which is his mystical Body, the ground and pillar of Truth, and the very House of the living God. And if for these things you take away my life, and make your selves guilty of my blood, you may; for I am in your hands as the Sheep brought to the shambles, abiding the grace of the Butcher. And be you sure your judgment sleepest not, but when you cry peace, peace, and all is safe, then shall your plagues begin like the sorrow of a Woman travelling with Child, according to Christs infallible promise.

This kind of Answer, my dear Heart, it shall be best for you to make; and by Gods grace I do intend to take the same order my self in time to come, when the Lord shall vouch me worthy of that great dignity, whereunto he hath called you. And if they shall laugh you to scorn; as I know they will, saying, thou art a Fool, and an unlearned Ass-head, and art able to make answer to nothing, &c. care you not for it, but still commit your cause unto God, who will make answer for you, and tell them that they have been answered again and again of divers godly and learned men; but all will not help: for you have one solution of all manner of questions, even a fair fire and faggots, this will be the end of your disputations. Therefore I pray you to trouble me no more, but do that which you are appointed, when God shall permit the time. I am no better than Christ, his Apostles, and other of my good Brethren that are gone before me.

1 Theft 5.
The Papists have one solution for all manner of questions.

This kind of answer will cut their Combs most, and edifie the people that stand by, so that the same be done coldly, with sobriety, meekness and patience; as I heard say our sweet Brethren Thomas Harland and John Oswald did at Lewes in Suffex, to the great rejoicing of the Children of God that were in those parts: and I hear say, that they were dissolved from this earthly Tabernacle at Lewes on Saturday last, and were condemned but the Wednesday before; so that we may perceive the Papists have quick work in hand, that they make such halt to have us home to our heavenly Father. Therefore let us make our selves ready to ride in the fiery Chariot, leaving these sorry Mantles and old Cloaks behind us for a time, which God shall restore to us again in a more glorious wife.

4 Reg. 2.

My good Brother Henry, you shall understand that bragging John T. hath beguiled his Keepers (who trusted him too well) and is run away from them, and hath brought the poor men into great danger by the same. The one of them is cast by the Councils commandment into the Gate-house at Wesminster, the other is fled forth of the Country for fear.

Free-will.

Thus you may see the fruits of our Free-will men, that made so much boast of their own strength. But that house which is not builded surely upon the unmoveable Rock, will not long stand against the boisterous winds and storms, that blow so strongly in these days of trouble.

But, my dearly beloved Brother, blessed be God for you, and such as you be, which have played the parts of wise builders. You have digged down past the land of your own natural strength, and beneath the earth of your own worldly wisdom, and are now come to the hard Stone and unmoveable Rock Christ, who is your only Keeper; and upon him alone have you builded your Faith most firmly, without doubting, mistrust or wavering. Therefore neither the storms nor tempests, winds nor weathers that Satan and all his wily workmen can bring against you, with the very gates of Hell to help them, shall ever be able once to move your house, much less to overthrow it; for the Lord God himself, and no man is the builder thereof, and hath promised to preserve and keep the same for ever. Unto his most merciful defence therefore I do heartily commit you and all your good company, desiring him for his sweet Son John Carcles sake, to comfort and strengthen you all, that you may be constant unto the very end; that after the final victory is once gotten, you may receive the immarcescible Crown of glory, of Gods free gift, through his great mercy in Jesus Christ our only Saviour. To whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost, be all honour, glory, praise, thanks, power, rule and dominion for ever and evermore, Amen. The blessing of God be with you all.

John Carcles.

To my most dear and faithful Brother T.V.

The everlasting peace of God in Jesus Christ, the continual joy and comfort of his most pure, holy and mighty Spirit, with the increase of faith, and lively feeling of his mercy, be with you my dear heart in the Lord, and faithful loving Brother T.V. to the full accomplishing of that good work which he hath so graciously begun in you, that the same by all means may be to the setting forth of his glory, to the commodity of his poor afflicted Congregation, and to the sweet comfort and quietness of your Conscience in him now and evermore, Amen.

A Letter of

of his persecutions and mourning for his sin.

With such due honour, love and reverence, as it becometh me to bear unto the sweet Saints and dearly beloved Children of God, I have me most heartily commended unto you my dear Brother V. with all earnest and faithful remembrance of you in my daily prayers, thanking God right heartily that you do likewise remember me in yours; assuring you that my poor heart doth daily feel great consolation thereby, God only have the praise for the same and all other his benefits. Ah my dear Heart in the Lord, well is me that ever I was born, that God of his great mercy and infinite goodness hath used me (most miserable wretch) at any time, as his instrument, to minister any thing unto you either by word or writing, that might be an occasion of your joy and comfort in the Lord, and a provoking of you to praise and thanksgiving unto God for the same, as your most loving and godly Letter seemeth to import. Oh, happy am I that the Lord hath appointed me unto so good a ground to sow his seed upon; but much more happy are you, whose heart the Lord hath prepared and made so meet to receive the same so effectually, giving thereto the sweet showers and heavenly dews of his grace and holy Spirit, that it may bring forth fruit in due season accordingly; the increase whereof we shall shortly reap together with perfect joy and gladness, and that continually.

Therefore, my dear Brother, I say unto you as good Elizabeth did to her dear cousin Mary, Luke 1. Happy are you, and happy shall you be for evermore, because you have believed. The most sweet and faithful promises of your Redeemer Jesus Christ you have surely laid up in the treasury of your heart. His comfortable dealings you have faithfully heard, his faithful admonitions you have humbly obeyed; and therefore you shall never come into judgment: your sins shall never be remembered; for your Saviour hath cast them all into the bottom of the Sea, he hath removed them from you as far as the East is from the West, and hath given you for an everlasting possession, his justification and holiness, so that now no Creature, neither in Heaven nor in Earth, shall be able to accuse you before the Throne of the heavenly King.

Remission of sins.
Math. 7.
Gal. 1. 10.

Satan is now judged, he is now cast out from you, he hath no part in you; you are wholly given unto Christ, which will not lose you: your steadfast faith in him hath overcome the sturdy and bragging Prince of the world; Christ hath given you the final victory over him and all his Army, that they shall never hurt you.

What would you have more? Oh my dear heart, how great treasures are laid up in store for you, and how glorious a Crown is already made and prepared for you?

And albeit the Holy Ghost doth bear witness of all these things in your heart, and maketh you more sure of certain thereof, than if you had all the outward Oracles in the world; yet I, being certainly persuaded, and fully assured by the testimony of Gods Spirit in my Conscience of your eternal and sure salvation in our sweet Saviour Jesus Christ, have thought it good, yea and my bounden duty, not only at this time to write unto you, and to shew you my joyful heart in that behalf; but also by the word and commandment of Christ to pronounce and affirm in the Name and Word of the heavenly King Jehovah, and in the behalf of his sweet Son Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom all knees shall bow, whom all Creatures shall worship, and also by the impulsion of the Holy Ghost, by whose power and strength all the faithful be regenerate; I do (I say) pronounce to thee my dear Brother T. V. that thou art already a Citizen of Heaven.

The Lord thy God in whom thou dost put all thy trust, for his dear Sons sake, in whom thou dost also undoubtedly believe, hath freely forgiven thee all thy sins, clearly released all thine iniquities, and fully pardoned all thy offences, be they never so many, so grievous, or so great, and will never remember them any more to condemnation. As truly as he liveth, he will not have thee die the death, but hath utterly determined, purposed, and eternally decreed, that thou shalt live with him for ever. Thy sore shall be healed and thy wounds bound up even of himself for his own names sake. He doth not, nor will he look upon thy sins in thee; but he respecteth and beholdeth thee in Christ, into whom thou art most assuredly grafted by Faith in his Blood, and in whom thou art most assuredly elected and chosen to be a sweet vessel of his mercy and salvation, and wast thereto predestinate into him before the foundation of the world was laid. In testimony and earnest whereof he hath given thee his good and holy Spirit, which worketh in thee Faith, Love, and unfeigned Repentance, with other godly virtues contrary to the corruption of thy nature.

Exercise of the true
Key of the Church.

Also he hath commanded me this day (although a most unworthy wretch) to be a witness thereof by the ministry of his holy Word, grounded upon the Truth of his most faithful Promises; the which thou believing shalt live for ever. Believest thou this my dear heart? I know well thou dost believe. The Lord increase thy Faith, and give thee a lively feeling of all his mercies, whereof thou art warranted and assured by the testimony of the Holy Ghost, who confirm in thy Conscience (to the utter overthrowing of Satan, and chase his most hurtful dubitations, whereby he is accustomed to molest and vex the true Children of God) all that I have said; and by Gods grace I will, as a witness thereof, confirm and seal the same with my Blood, for a most certain Truth.

Wherefore (my good Brother) praise the Lord with a joyful heart, and give him thanks for this his exceeding great mercy, casting away all dubitation and wavering, yea all sorrow of heart, and pensiveness of mind; for this, the Lord your God, and most dear and loving Father, commandeth you to do by me, nay rather by his own mouth and word pronounced by me. But now my dear Brother, after that I have done my message, or rather the Lords message, indeed I could find in my heart to write two or three sheets of Paper, declaring the joy I bear in my heart for you, mine own bowels in the Lord: yet the time being so short (as you do well know) I am here constrained to make an end, desiring you to pardon my slackness, and to forgive my great negligence towards you, promising you still that so long as my poor life doth last, my prayer shall supply that my pen doth want, as knoweth the Almighty God, to whose most merciful defence I do heartily commit you and all other his dear Children, as well as though I had rehearsed them by name, desiring them most heartily to remember me in their hearty and daily prayers, as I know right well they do; for I feel the daily comfort and commodity thereof, and therefore I neither will nor can forget them, nor you, or any such like. The blessing of God be with you all, Amen.

Yours for ever unfamously,
John Careles.

A Letter of Thanks to a faithful Friend of his, by whom he had received much comfort in his inward trouble.

I thank be God the Father of all mercy, for the great comfort and Christian consolation which he hath so mercifully ministered unto my poor afflicted heart by your means, my most dear and faithful Brother. Truly methinketh your words, or rather Gods words by you uttered, have a wonderful power and efficacy working in my heart at the hearing and reading of them. Rejoice therefore, my dear Brother, and be thankful unto God; for verily he both is and will be mightily magnified in you, and that divers and many ways, both to the strengthening of them that stand in his Truth, and also to the raising up of such as are fallen from the same. God make me thankful for you, and on your behalf; for verily great is the goodness of God towards me, in giving me acquaintance in faithful love and amity with you; Gods Name be praised for ever therefore, and he perform all his merciful promises upon you, as I doubt not but he will, for his sake in whom you trust.

I thank my God most heartily, and also you, my good Brother, for that you are careful for me in your faithful prayers, remembering my just deserved sorrows, as though they were your own, and labouring so much to solace the same. Ah my gracious good God, what am I, for whom thou and thy dear Children should be so careful? O sweet Lord, forgive me my great ingratitude and sin, and grant that I never abuse thy great benefits. O let the love of thine elect, which love me for thy sake, be a sure sign and token, yea a most firm testimony and seal to my sinful Conscience of thine everlasting love and mercy towards me in Christ; as verily it would and ought to be, if mine infidelity did not let it. Oh circumscribe therefore the foreskin of my heart, that I may with lively faith behold thy great love towards me in all thine elect, that I may always be thankful for the same, and love thee and them again most heartily and unfeignedly.

Ah my dear Heart, how sweetly and how truly, yea how godly and how comfortably have you rehearsed the sweet saying of Solomon concerning prosperity with true and Godly Friends: I will join with it the sentence which goeth a little before, for doubtless it may be well verified on you. A sure Friend (saith the wise man in Ecclesi. 6.) will be unto thee even as thine own soul, and a deal faithfully with thy household-folk. If thou suffer trouble and adversity, he is with thee, and bideth not his face from thee. A faithful friend is a strong defence: who so findeth such an one, findeth a treasure. A faithful friend hath no peer: the weight of gold is not to be compared to the goodness of his faith. A faithful friend is a medicine of life, and they that fear the Lord shall find him, &c. Lo (my dear Heart in the Lord) here is a lively image or description of you; for verily such an one have I alwaies found you unto me, not only forrowing for my great sorrow, but also oftentimes making me merry and joyful, with such joys as the world cannot feel. Now let the world brag of his fained friendship; but I will boast of this true friendship in God, and esteem it a more treasure than all transitory things.

And as for my mourning, dear brother, God hath made you to turn it unto mirth; for God hath put you in stead of them to be my comfort, whom he hath in his great mercy taken away. I trust henceforth to leave the mourning for my great loss, and to praise God for gaining unto himself so great glory by his chosen Children. God make me a true mourner of Sion, both for mine own sin and wickedness, and also to see his honour defaced, that I may be made meet and apt to bear the joyful and comfortable message that your beautiful feet shall bring me. God bless thee my dear Heart, and faithful loving Brother, and increase his good gifts of grace in thee, as he hath most happily begun, that you may daily more effectually feel and lively perceive the certainty of Gods with this grace wherein you stand, and firmly testify the same to the conversion or confounding of all gain-sayers, and to children, the comfort and confirmation of all Gods dear Children, Amen. Farewel mine own sweet Brother, Farewel as mine own Heart.

Your own in Christ,

John Careles.

Another Letter of John Careles, to a certain godly faithful Sister, by the names of E. K.

The grace and free mercy of God in Jesus Christ, the sweet consolations of the Holy Ghost, the guide of all Gods dear Children, be with you, strengthen and comfort you my dearly beloved Sweet Sister, E. K. now and ever, Amen.

Albeit (my dearly beloved Sister in Christ) as yet we did never see one another personally to any knowledge, yet by the virtuous report that I have heard of you, and also by the large loving Token that I have received from you, me think that I do even presently see you, and behold your person faithfully walking in the fear and love of God, joying and rejoicing with you in the spirit, as though we were freely talking together of Christs verity. The Lord God do I humbly beseech in the Bowels and Blood of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, that he will strengthen us both with his holy and mighty Spirit, that we may constantly continue in the confession of his Truth unto the end; that like as we now see one another presently in Spirit, we may also see one another personally in the glorious presence of God and his holy Angels, where undoubtedly we shall know one anothers personage, to our great joy, felicity, and endless comfort.

Preparation
to the Crois.

And now therefore dear Sister K. be strong in the Lord our God, for doubtless the time of tryal is at hand; a great persecution, with cruel murdering of Gods dear Saints is like to be very shortly in this woful wicked Realm of England. Therefore (dear Sister) for the love of God prepare you to the Crois with all diligence, and make your self ready to die with Christ, that you may also live with him for ever. There is no remedy, if you will be Christs Disciple, you must needs take up your Crois and follow him; for the Disciple must not look to be above his Master, nor the Servant to be better intreated then his Lord. If we were of the world (good Sister) no doubt the world would love us. But forasmuch as Christ hath chosen us out of the world to serve God in Spirit and verity, let us be well assured the world will hate us and persecute us, as it hath done our Lord and Master Christ. But yet let us be of good cheer, for Christ hath overcome the world. The pain is but short that we can feel here, but the pleasure is perpetual that we shall feel else where.

Consolation under the Crois.

Let us set before us the example of Christ, which abode the Crois, and despised the shame, in respect of the joy that was set before him; even so let us consider for whose sake we suffer, whose cause we defend, and what glorious reward we shall have at the day of our victory, and then doubtless the consolation of these things will make sweet all our sufferings, and soon swallow up all the sorrows that we are sowed in for Gods sake. I could recite divers Texts of the Scriptures to confirm this point. But I need not, for I am well assured that you do know them most perfectly already. The Lord give you strength, and assist you with his holy Spirit, that you may continually walk in all points according to your godly knowledge: And then shall you not do as the most part of our Gospellers do now a daies, the more is the pity.

Against Murther
Gospellers

There are a great many in England that do perfectly know, that the Idolatrous Mass is abominable, devilish, and detestable in the sight of God. And yet alas, they be not afraid to pollute and defile their bodies, which ought to be the temples of the Holy Ghost, with being present at it, so sinning against God and their own Conscience.

Exhortation to fly from the Mass.

But dear Sister K. do you fly from it both in body and Soul, as you would fly from the very Devil himself. Drink not of the Whore of Babels Cup by any means; for it will infect the body, and Poyson the Soul. Be not partakers of her sins (saith the Angel) lest ye be partakers of the plagues that shall shortly be poured upon her. O what an aray is this, that so many that know Gods Truth will now turn again and defile themselves in the filthy puddle of Antichrists stinking Religion? They go about to save their lives with their double dissimulation; but doubtless, they shall lose everlasting life by it; if they do not repent in time, and turn unto the Lord. But (dear Sister) my trust is, that you do utterly abhor the coming to any such thing. I hope that you will not by any means turn back into Egypt now, but that you will boldly venture through the wilderness of trouble and persecution, that you may come into the land that floweth with all kind of heavenly pleasures and joy, full delectations, and possess the same for ever.

Let us consider, how that every one of us doth owe unto God a death by nature, and how soon the Lord will require it of us we know not. O how happy are we then, if God of his good will appoint us to pay natures debt with suffering for his Truth and Gospels sake, and so making us his faithful witnesses with the Prophets, Apostles, Martyrs, and Confessors, yea, with his dearly beloved Son Jesus Christ, to whom he doth here begin to fashion us like in suffering, that we might be like him also in glory. Thus my dearly beloved Sister, I have been bold to trouble you a little with my rude and simple Letter, being made in haste as it doth appear. Yet I desire you to take it in good worth, as a token of my poor zeal unto you, and to accept my good will. And if it please God to spare me life and liberty, I trust hereafter to write unto you more largely. Fare ye well dear Sister, E. K. the Lord bless you and all yours, and pour upon you the heavenly dew of his grace. The Lord endue you with plentiful knowledge of his verity, and fill you with his holy and mighty Spirit, that you may continually rejoice in the comforts of the same now and ever, Amen. Pray, pray, pray with steadfast faith.

Your daily Oratour John Careles,

Prisoner of the Lord.

In the Letters of William Tynis, ye heard before much mention made of Agnes Glascock. This Agnes Glascock, through infirmity, and her Husbands perfections, was allured to go to Mass. For which cause the falling into great sorrow and repentance, was raised up again by the comfortable Letters of William Tynis, and John Careles, as before you may read; and after that was constant in the sincere profession of the Verity, and in danger for the same of persecution; unto whom John Careles writeth therefore his Letter, as followeth.

A Letter of John Careles to Agnes Glascock.

The everlasting peace of God in Jesus Christ, the continual aid, strength, and comforts of his most pure, holy and mighty Spirit be with you my dear and faithful Sister Glascock, to the good performance of that good work which God hath so graciously begun in you, to his Glory, the commodity of his poor afflicted Church and to your own eternal comfort in him, Amen.

A Letter of John Careles
to Mrs.
Agnes Glascock.

In our Lord I have my most humble and hearty commendations unto you, my dear Sister and most faithful Mother Glascock, with all remembrance of you in my daily prayers, giving God most hearty laud, praise, and thanks for you, and on your behalf, in that he of his great mercy hath hitherto so mightily strengthened you, constantly to cleave unto your Captain Christ, notwithstanding the great assaults and manifold temptations that you have had to the contrary. Doubtless (dear Heart) it cannot be expressed what joy and comfort it is unto my very Soul, to see how mightily the Lord hath magnified himself in you, and other his dear elect dearelings, whom he will shortly glorify with himself, as he hath done other of his sweet Saints, that are gone before you. Rejoyce therefore and be glad; for verily you have good cause, if you diligently consider the great dignity that God hath called you unto, even now in your old age, to be one of his worthy witnesses unto the world; and I think you shall with me and other your Brethren in bonds, seal the Lords verity with the testimony of your Blood. Surely (sweet Sister) this is the greatest promotion that God can bring you or any other unto, in this life; and an honour that the highest Angel in Heaven is not permitted to have.

What an high honour it is to offer for Christ.

Therefore

Therefore happy are you, O faithful Daughter of Abraham, that the Lord will now prefer you before many other, yea or any other of your age, that I do know in England. Oh faithful and virtuous Matron, which wilt not be moved from the sure Rock Christ, upon whom you have so firmly built your house, that neither storms nor tempests, neither yet Hell-gates, or any other temptations, shall ever be able to prevail against it. Full well doth it appear by your constant continuance, that you have plaid the part of a wife Builder, in counting the cost aforehand, belonging to the finishing up of your Tower. And I doubt not but (through Gods gift) you have sufficient to the performance thereof, that the hypocrites of their part shall have no just cause to triumph against you, or to mock you, saying, Lo, this woman began to build, but is not able to make an end. Therefore go on boldly and fear not; for God is faithful (as St. Paul saith) which will not suffer you to be tempted above your strength, but either he will give you grace and strength to stand unto the death (which is the gate and entrance into life) or else he will make such an out-caste for you, as shall be to the setting forth of his glory; the which above all other things, we that are his chosen Children ought to seek, yea even with the loss of our own lives, being yet well assured that the same shall not be shortened one minute of an hour before the time that God hath appointed.

He exhort-eth her to be strong.

Call therefore (dear Sister) all your care upon the Lord, which (as St. Peter saith) careth for you. Great is his Providence for you, and mighty is his love and mercy towards you. With his grace he will defend you, and with his holy Spirit he will evermore guide you, wherewith he hath surely sealed you unto the day of redemption; he hath also given you the same in earnest for the recovery of the purchased possession, which he hath prepared for you before the foundation of the world was laid. Be strong therefore, and take a good heart, as I hear say you be. God for ever be blessed for you, which hath so graft his love in your good heart, that nothing is able to separate you from the same, but will rather chuse to suffer adversity with the People of God, than to enjoy the pleasure of sin for a little season. Oh happy Woman, that canst find in thy heart to esteem the rebukes of Christ to be greater riches than all the treasures of the world, as good Moses did. Doubtless great is your reward in Heaven; which you shall shortly receive of his free gift, and not of any deserving.

The charity of Mrs.
Glascock
to the prisoned Saints.

Thus (dear Mother Glascock) I have been bold to trouble you with my rude and simple Letters, desiring you to take them in good worth, being done in great haste, as it doth appear, but yet proceeding from a poor heart which floweth over in love towards you, as my daily prayers for you can testify; which I trust shall supply that part of my duty towards you, that my Pen now wanteth. I thank you, dear Heart, for all your loving tokens, and for the great kindness you have hitherto shewed unto my poor Brother Tyms and his Wife and Children, with all other of Gods People, to whom you daily do good: the Lord recompence the same sevenfold into your bosom, as I doubt not but he will, according to his unfallible promises. I pray you have my hearty commendations unto your Husband. I beseech the Lord strengthen him in the confession of his Truth (as my trust is that he will) that we may all joyfully rest with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the Kingdom of God; unto the which he bring us, that with his most precious Blood hath bought us. The blessing of God be with you now and ever, Amen.

Your daily Orator and unfeigned Lover,
John Careles, Prisoner of the Lord.
Pray, pray, pray.

A brief Admonition written to Mrs. Agnes Glascock, in a Book of hers, when she came to the Prison to visit him.

There is nothing that the holy Scripture throughout doth so much commend unto us, as true faith and steadfast trust in the promises of Gods eternal mercies towards us in Jesus Christ. For from the same, as forth of the chief fountain and well-spring of life, do flow all kind of vertues and godly fruits, specially true love towards God, in the which we ought purely to serve him all the days of our life; and also Christian charity towards our Neighbours, as well to help them at all needs, as also not to hurt them by any means. Therefore pray earnestly for the increase of faith and lively feeling of Gods mercy; for all things are possible unto him that can undoubtedly believe. Faith is that thing which assureth us of Gods mercy, and whereby we vanquish all the fiery darts of the Devil; our victory that overcometh the world; the knife that killeth and mortifieth the flesh: and finally that which setteth us at peace with God, and quieteth our Consciences always before him, and maketh us merry and joyful under the Cross, with many more things than I can now express. Pray therefore for Faith, in faith. And for the Lords sake beware of Popery and Popish Idolatry, the Idol of the wicked Mass, and other Idolatrous service. Make not your Body, which is a member of Christ, a member of Antichrist. Remember that we shall receive of God according to that we do in the body, be it good or evil. Therefore glorifie God in your Body which is dearly bought. Betray not the Truth, lest the Lord deny you. If God be God, follow him. You cannot serve two Masters. I write not this as doubting you, but by the way of admonition. God keep you from all evil.

The efficacy of Faith.

My Sister dear, God give you grace,
With steadfast Faith in Christ; Name,
His Gospel still for to embrace,
And live according to the same.
To die therefore think it no shame,
But hope in God with faithful trust;
And he will give you praise with fame,
When you shall rise out of the dust.
For which most sweet and joyful days,
To God with Faith your prayer make:
And think on me while you pray,
The which did write this for your sake.
And thus to God I you betake,
Who is your Castle and strong Rock;
He keep you whether you sleep or wake,
Farewel dear Mrs. A. Glascock.

Another Letter of John Careles to Mistress A. G. to comfort her in her repentance, after she had been at Mass, fruitful for all them to be read, which have fallen, and are to be raised up again.

The peace of God in Jesus Christ, the eternal comforts of his sweet Spirit be with you, and strengthen then and comfort you my dear and faithful Sister, Amen.

Another comfortable
Letter of
John Careles
to Mrs. Agnes Glascock, being in great repentance for going to
the Mass;

Although the perillous daies be come, whereof Christ prophesied, that if it were possible the very elect should be deceived; yet let the true faithful Christians rejoyce and be glad, knowing that the Lord himself is their Keeper, who will not suffer one hair of their heads to perish without his Almighty good will and pleasure, neither will he suffer them to be further tempted than he will give them strength to bear; but will in the midst of their temptation make a way for them to escape out; so good and gracious a God is he to all his chosen Children. And though sometimes he do let his elect stumble and fall, yet (no doubt) he will raise them up again, to the further increase of their comfort, and to the setting forth of his glory and praise. Which thing (my dear and faithful loving Sister) I trust shall be well verified on you. For I do hear say, that by the manifold allurements, inticements, procurements, yea and inforcements that you dear heart have had, your foot hath chanced to slip forth of the way, to the great discomfort of your soul, and the heaviness of your heart: But my good Sister be of good cheer, for the Lord will not so leave you, but he will raise you up again, and make you stronger than ever you were; so that your fall shall turn to his glory and your profit. For if you had not by this proved the experience of your own strength, or rather your own weakness, you

Ann. 1586. you would have stood too much in your own conceit, or perchance have gloried in your self, and have despised and condemned other weak persons that have committed the like offence. Therefore now you may see what the best of us all can do, if God leave us to our selves. Which thing ought to move you to be diligent to call earnestly upon God for his grace and the strength of his Holy Spirit (without the which we are not able to stand one hour) and to be most thankful for the same when you have it, and then to be more circumspect in time to come.

To trust to Gods promises.

Therefore (dear Sister) seeing that you have done otherwise then the Word of God and your own conscience would allow; yet dear Heart, do you not think that God therefore will cast you clean away, but know that he hath mercy enough in store for all them that truly repent and believe in him, although the sins of them were as many in number as the sands in the Sea, and as great as the sins of the whole world. It is a greater sin to mistrust the mercy and promises of God, then to commit the greatest offence in the world. Therefore (good Sister) beware in any wife, that you do not once mistrust the promises of Gods mercy towards you; but know for a very surety, that all your sins be utterly forgiven you for Christs sake, be they never so many, so grievous, or so great.

Calumny of sin a perillous matter.

But now (dear Heart) take heed and beware that you do not cloak that sin; and increase the same daily, in communicating with the wicked in their Idolatry, and devilish doings at their den of thieves. Do not (I say) dear Sister, come at any of the Antichristian Service, left by little and little you utterly lose a good Conscience and at length esteem it for no offence as a great number do at this day; to the great perill of their Souls. The Lord be merciful to them, and give them grace to repent in time and turn to the Lord, and then they shall be sure to find mercy at the Lords hands as doubtless you have done, praised be his name therefore.

A.G. indicted by her husband to go to the mill.

Ah my dear Sister, you may now see the words of Christ verified upon your self, that a mans greatest foes shall be of his own household; for your husband hath gotten you to do that, which all the Tyrants in the world could never have made you to do. Doubtless he may be sorry for it. God give him grace to repent, or else, without doubt, it will be laid to his charge one day, when he would not by his will hear it for all the goods in the world. Well, I think my Brother Tyms will write him a Letter shortly that shall touch his Conscience, if he have any Conscience at all.

The railing up of a troubled Conscience his fall.

But now again to you dear Sister. The thing that is done cannot be undone, and you are not the first that hath offended, neither are you so good and so holy, as hath at a time slipt forth of the way. Therefore I would not have you to be so much discomforted as I hear say you be, as though God were not as able to forgive you your offence, as he was to forgive his dear Saints that offended him in times past; or as though God were not as merciful now, as ever he was. Whereas in very deed, There is with the Lord (as the Prophet saith) mercy and plentiful redemption, and his mercy far surmounteth all his works; and he never faileth any that put their whole trust and confidence in him, how great an offender or how wicked a Trespasser soever he be: No, he maketh their falls and backslidings many times to turn to their profit and commodity, and to the setting forth of his glory; as doubtless, dear Sister, yours shall do, if you put your whole faith, hope, and trust onely in his infinite and eternal sweet mercies.

God turneth all things to the best, to them that be his.

Satan when he cannot bring a man to his service, he persuades him with distrust of Gods mercy.

Oh what a subtle, crafty, lying Serpent is that Satan our old enemy? that when he seeth that he cannot make us to continue in our wickedness to do him service, would then bring us into a doubting and mistrusting of the mercy of God, which is the greatest offence that can be; yea, infidelity is the root and original of all other sins. Therefore (my sweet Sister) give no place to that cruel Adversary of mankind, who hath been a liar and a murderer from the beginning, but stedfastly believe the Lord, who hath sent you word by me his most unworthy servant, that all your sins be pardoned, forgiven, and clean released for Jesus Christs sake our onely Lord and Saviour. To whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost, be all honour, glory, praise, thanks, power, rule, and dominion for ever and for ever, Amen. Farewell, my dear Sister, be of good cheer. Believe in the Lord and you shall live for ever. The Lord increase your faith, Amen, Amen.

Your poor Brother, and daily faithful Orator John Careles, prisoner of the Lord. Pray for me.

Another Letter of John Careles to A. B. a faithful Minister of the Lord, containing certain fruitful precepts of Matrimony.

I beseech the same everlasting Lord (my dear and faithful Brother) that blessed young Tobias with his Wife Sarah, and brought them together in due time with reverence and fear, preserve and bless you both, and your seed after you that they may increase the number of the faithful by thousands and thousands. And as the Lord of his great mercy and fatherly providence hath been always careful for you, and now hath for your comfort accomplished his good work in coupling you with a faithful mate; so see that you be thankful for his providence towards you, that it may every way in you be an increase of love and godliness, yea of Christian Joy and gladness in these sorrowful days, but yet so, that you mourn with the true Mourners of Sion, and be sorry (yet in measure) for the hurt of the same. Pray also in faith for her prosperity, that the Lord may build up the Walls of Jerusalem again.

A Letter of J. Careles to B. a faithful servant of Christ.

Oh that the Lord would turn Sions Captivity as the Rivers into the South: Then should our hearts be made glad, and our mouths filled with laughter. Then would the Heathen Hypocrites say; The Lord hath done much for them. Oh, the Lord hath done great things for us already, whereof let us heartily rejoice and praise his name therefore. For though we now sow with tears, yet shall we be sure to reap with gladness: and as we now go forth weeping, bearing forth good seed, so shall we come again with joy, and bring our sheaves full of Corn. Yea the death of the Martyrs (which is most precious in his sight) shall be the life of the Gospel, spite of the Papists Hearts.

Pal. 141

The death of the Martyrs is the life of the Gospel.

Pray for me (dear Heart) that I may be counted worthy to sow some seed amongst the sweet Saints of the Lord, that I may reap the same again, without ceasing, at the harvest. It is now sowing time of the year, men say in the Country, and I think I shall make an end of sowing before all March be past; for I hear say that I shall prove how my plough will enter into the stony ground of the hard hearted Papists, within these four days. I hope to hold fast, and not to look back, neither for fear nor flattery, until I have made an end of sowing, and then will I let me down and rest me, and ask them all no leave, and look for the lively fruit and increase thereof with joy and gladness.

A sowing time in March.

My dear Brother, the time approacheth near (I praise God therefore) that I must put off this sinful tabernacle, and go home to my Heavenly Father, where divers of my dear Brethren are already looking and wishing for me. I beseech you therefore that you will help me forward with your faithful prayers, as I know you do, for I do feel the comfort and commodity thereof.

That you have observed my simple Counsel I am right glad; and I trust in the Lord God, you shall find comfort in the same. And that you may so do indeed, I have been so bold to write these few words unto you, because I shall see you no more in this corruptible life; therefore mark them well. First and above all things you must be very circumspect to keep the band of love, and beware that there never spring up the root of bitterness between you. If at any time there happen to rise any cause of unkindness between you, (as it is impossible always to be free from it) see that you weed up the same with all lenity, gentleness, and patience, and never suffer your self, nor your Wife to sleep in displeasure.

If you have cause to speak sharply, and sometimes to reprove, beware that you do not the same in the presence of other, but keep your words until a convenient time (which is the point of a Wife Man, faith Solomon)

F f f and

This counsel was that he should marry, notwithstanding certain letters whereby Satan sought to hinder his marriage. The root of bitterness to be weeded out with the spade of patience. How and when the husband ought to reprove.

and then utter them in the Spirit of meekness, and the groaning Spirit of perfect love; which you must also let sometimes to cover faults, and wink at them if they be not intolerable. Whatsoever loss and mischance shall happen unto you, take it patiently, and bear it merrily; and though the same should come partly through your wives negligence, yet let it rather be a loving warning to take heed in time to come, then a cause of sorrow for that which is past and cannot be helped. I know by mine own experience, that we are in this life subject to many inconveniences, and that of nature we are prone to displeasure, and ready to think unkindness for every little trifle, and specially with our best friends, yea soonest with our loving wives, which be most loth to displease us.

Not to take unkindness for every trifle.

But let us beware of this cankered corruption, and consider that we ought most of all in love to bear with them according to Christs example towards his congregation, for whom he gave himself to cleanse it, &c. I had thought to have treated this matter at large, but even now I am intermitted and otherwise letted. I doubt not but you know your duty therein a great deal better then I can declare it unto you; and as you know it, so will do it: but I love to be bold with you. I intend to write to your Wife very shortly, and so take my last farewell of you for ever in this world. And thus in great haste I am now constrained to make an end. The blessing of God be always with you.

Your own for ever, John Careles.
Pray, pray, pray with faith.

Another Letter of John Careles, to Elizabeth, Wife of the said A. B. containing certain godly precepts of Matrimony pertaining to her duty.

Another Letter of Mr. Careles to the wife of the party above specified.

The everlasting peace of God in Jesus Christ, the continual aid, strength, and comfort of his most holy and mighty Spirit, with increase of knowledge, faith, and perfect feeling of Gods eternal mercy, be with you my dear and faithful loving Sister E. B. and with your godly loving Husband and my dear and faithful Brother, to the full performance of that good which he hath so graciously begun in you, that in all things you may be made rich and blessed in him, and your feed after you, now and ever, Amen.

As I have been long desirous to write unto you (my dear Heart in the Lord) not only being thereto bound of duty, but also often provoked of him, to whom I owe my self and all that I am able to do (I mean even that blessed of the Lords own Mouth, whom God hath joynt with you in that holy and christian state of Matrimony) even so at the last I have obtained time and occasion in some part to perform that which I have long purposed. And forasmuch as the Lord of his great mercy and fatherly care and providence over you his dear Child, hath now graciously accomplished that good work amongst many others, which I (as a friend of the Bridegroom) have full heartily wished and often praised for; I think it good, yea and my bounden duty, to treat of such things as may be profitable to preserve mutual love and faithful amity between you, which I know Satan will chiefly labour to diminish, if he cannot altogether destroy the same, left by many joyful occasions you should be provoked continually to praise God for his good gift, which that enemy hath by all means sought to hinder from you.

Satan an enemy to all godly affairs.

As for all other things I know you are sufficiently instructed, and also have a most learned companion, who is well able further to teach you if need do require: But in this thing I know my experience is more then his. Therefore (my good Sister) first and before all things see that you do diligently consider, that as every good and perfect gift pertaining to Soul and Body, is given from above, and cometh from the Father of light: even so to whomsoever the Lord dealeth any of his benefits, of them he doth chiefly require always a thankful heart for the same; for else he will either take away his good gifts again, or turn the same to their great discommodity, and in the end to the increase of their damnation: so detestable in his sight is the sin of ingratitude. But to such as be thankful for his benefits, he doth not only to the old ever add new, but also maketh the commodity of his former gifts ever more and more to increase, until by them they are fully persuaded and thoroughly certified of his everlasting love in Christ Jesus, which is eternal life it self: so much doth he of his great mercy delight in a thankful heart.

The sign of ingratitude.

And so God loveth a thankful heart.

Therefore I do yet once again earnestly require you, that above all things you be thankful to God for his benefits; not only for your election, creation, redemption, and preservation; but also for his other temporal gifts, wherewith he hath induced you: amongst the which the chief and most excellent is (as testifieth the Holy Ghost) your good, godly, and faithful loving Husband. For (as the wife man faith) Goods and Possessions may come to a man by the death of his friends, but a good Wife is the gift of God, which the Lord will give for a good portion to such as fear him.

A good wife is the gift of God.

And the like is of a good Husband, as the Lord hath now given you, praised be his name therefore. He hath not given you, an Ignorant, Forward, Churlish, Brawling, Wallowing, Rioting, Drunken Husband, wherewith he hath plagued many other (as he might also have done you) but he hath given you a most godly, learned, gentle, loving, quiet, patient, thrifty, diligent, and sober husband, by whom he will nourish, cherish, keep, and defend you, instruct and teach you, yea care and provide for you and your Children (the which he will also by him give you) such things as be necessary for you. He hath not dealt so with every Body; and yet he hath done this much more for you my dear Sister, and will thereto increase joy and love between you. For as he delighteth in the love and godly agreement of Man and Wife together; so is it he God delighteth only that maketh them and all the whole household to be of one mind. Unto the which his gracious work he requirerh your diligence, and will use you as his instrument and mean, the more effectually to accomplish the same. And therefore I now require you to observe this my simple counsel, the which I have here written as a testimony of one mind. Unto the which his gracious work he requirerh your diligence, and will use you as his instrument and mean, the more effectually to accomplish the same. And therefore I now require you to observe this my simple counsel, the which I have here written as a testimony of one mind. Unto the which his gracious work he requirerh your diligence, and will use you as his instrument and mean, the more effectually to accomplish the same.

It is the duty of the husband to be of one mind with his wife.

Now as I have shewed you how you should be thankful unto God for his good gifts, so I exhort you, and (as much as in me lieth) charge you to be evermore thankful unto your dear loving husband, who hath given himself unto you; which is a more precious jewel in the Church of God, then perchance you are yet aware of. Think of your self unworthy to be matched with such a instrument of God; and also reverence evermore the gifts of God in him, and seek with true obedience and love to serve him, in recompence of his true and painful heart towards you. Be loath in any wife to offend him, yea rather be careful and diligent to please him, that his Soul may bless you if at any time you shall chance to anger him, or to do or speak any thing that shall grieve him, see that you never rest until you have pacified him and made him merry again.

The duty of the wife to love her husband.

If at any time he shall chance to blame you without a cause, or for that you cannot do therewith (which thing hapneth sometimes to the best man living) see that you bear it patiently, and give him no uncomely or unkind word for it; but evermore look upon him with a loving and cheerful countenance, and rather take the fault upon you, then seem to be displeased.

Be always merry and cheerful in his company, but not with too much lightness. Beware in any wife of swelling, pouting, or lowering, for that is a token of a cruel and unloving heart; except it be in respect of sin, or in the time of sickness.

Be not sorrowful for any adversity that God sendeth; but beware that nothing be spilt or go to waste through your negligence. In any wife see that you be quick and cleanly about his meat and drink, and prepare him the same according to his diet in due season. Go cleanly and well favouredly in your apparel, but beware of pride in any wife.

A cheerful countenance.

Temperance in apparel.

Finally, in word and deed shew your self wife, humble, merry, and loving towards him, and also towards such as he doth love, and then shall you lead a blessed life. I could speak of many things, the which I have learned and proved true by experience; but I know that you will do in all things much better then I can teach you, because you have that anointing that teacheth you all things, Anno 1556. things, who hath also given you an heart to obey, and serve him. Yet I trust you will not be offended for this, which I have written, but rather accept my good will towards you, whom I love in the Lord, as well as I do my Daughter Judith.

Thus as mine own Soul I commend you both to God, desiring him to bless you with all manner of spiritual blessings in heavenly things, and also with the dew of Heaven, and Fancies of the Earth, that in all things you may be made rich in Jesus Christ our Lord and only Saviour. The Lord increase and bless the fruit of your Bodies, that your Children may stand round about your table, thick, fresh, and lusty, like the Olive Branches. God give you both a long life, that you may see and bless your Children Children, unto the third and fourth Generation, and teach them the true fear and love of God, and that faith for the which they shall be accepted in his light.

God let you see the prosperity of Sion, for whose lying in the dust let your Hearts mourn. The Lord make perfect your love together in him, and always increase the same, and bring you both in peace to your graves, at a good age. And now I bid you both most heartily Farewell; and I think I shall now take my leave of you for ever in this life. I beseech you both to aid me with your continual prayers, (as I will not forget you in mine) that I may have a joyful Victory through Jesus Christ: To whose most merciful defence I do most heartily for ever commend you to be kept unblameable until his coming. The which I beseech him to hasten for his mercies sake.

Your own unfained, John Careles, prisoner of the Lord.

Here endeth the Letters of John Careles.

The History and Martyrdom of a learned and virtuous young Man, called Julius Palmer, sometime Fellow of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford, with two other Martyrs to wit, John Gwin, and Thomas Askin, burned together in Newbery, at a place there called the Sand pits.

Three Martyrs suffering at Newbery, Julius Palmer, John Gwin, Tho. Askin, Martyrs, July 16.
THe same Month of July, in which Careles, as before is declared, was released out of prison by death, in short time after, about the sixteenth day of the same Month of July, suffered these three godly and constant Martyrs above mentioned, at Newbery, in which number was Julius Palmer, sometime student and Fellow of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford, and afterwards School-master in the Town of Reading. Concerning whose story and Martyrdom here followeth although not so much as he deserved to have said, yet so much as sufficiently may set forth the great working of God in this young man.

Julius Palmer.

The story of Julius Palmer.
AS all Gods works are wondrous, in calling of all sorts of men to confirm his truth, and to bear witness unto his assured and infallible word, which the Adversaries have depraved and corrupted with their false glosses, to establish the fleshly Kingdom of Antichrist, and to purchase security in the World, which they seek to keep in there possession by all means possible, rather cursing with the Thunderbolt of Excommunication, burning, hanging, drowning, racking, scourging and persecuting by secret practice, and open violence the simple sheep of our Saviour Christ, then that their false forged packing should be detected, their estimation appeared, their kitchen cooled, their rents, revenues, goods, lands and possessions abated: I say, as Gods Works be wonderful, which chuse some of all sorts to confess his Gospel; so there is no one example in the whole godly fellowship of Martyrs, more to be marked, yea more to be wondered at, then this, that one, which all King Edwards days was a Papist within the University of Oxford, and so obdurate, as that he did utterly abhor all godly prayer, and sincere preaching, and almost of all them, with whom he lived, was therefore likewise abhorred, and (as I may say) pointed at with the finger, did yet after in Queen Maries time suffer most cruel death, at the Papists hands at Newbery in Berkshire, for the most ready and zealous profession of the blessed truth.

His Name was Julius Palmer, born in Coventry, where also his parents dwelt. His Father had sometime been Mayor of the City, and occupied Merchandise, albeit he was an Upholster by his mystery. How he was brought up in his young and tender years, from his first entering, we know not, but as we have learned, he was sometime scholar to Mr. Harley, which taught the free Schooler of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford; by whose diligence, and the goodness of his own capacity, he became a toward young scholar in prose and verse. For he had a very prompt and ready memory, a wit sharp and pregnant. He spake Latin with great facility of utterance, and wanted not competent knowledge in the Greek tongue; inso-much that divers times he supplied the Room of the Greek Reader in his house. He was a subtle disputant, both in the publick schools, and also at home. He used to say, that he was never so pleasantly occupied, as when he came to the hard debating of profound questions in Philosophy; so that he hath oftentimes watched and spent the whole night in the discussing and searching out the truth of deep and difficult questions, as De principiis, de infinitis, de vacuo, de tempore, de casu, & fortuna, &c. And this used he to do sundry times, with divers of his equals.

In familiar talk he greatly delighted, for the exercise of his learning, to defend the contrary to that which was affirmed, yet with modesty, and without all ostentation. For he greatly abhorred all overthwart cavelling, all frivolous talk, and unsavoury brabbling. He was not captious, but would reason so soberly, and with such probability, that even his Adversaries would no less marvel at the dexterity of his invention, then at his comely and decent behaviour in prosecuting the same.

And although he applied Divinity very lately, it appeareth that he recompensed the final time of his study with the greatness of his diligence bestowed in the same, and his late coming to the truth, with his earnest and zealous proceeding therein. For by the secret inspiration of Gods Holy Spirit, inwardly working in his heart, he gave an apparent signification in his young years, that if God had spared his life to age, he would have grown to such maturity and ripeness of judgment, as whereby he should have been an ornament to Christs Church, and an honour to his Country.

And some what to speak of his Civil behaviour, he was of manners courteous without curiosity, of countenance cheerful, without high looks, of speech pleasant, without affectation, he was affable and lowly as any Child, and yet quick spirited, and vehement in reasoning. He practised no deceit toward any man, for he was of such simplicity, that he was apter to be deceived, then to deceive, and he was so great a contemner of all reproaches and injuries, that he would say, None were to be counted valiant, but such as could despise injury.

In private study he was so insatiable, that he arose ordinarily every morning at four of the clock, and went not lightly to bed before ten at night. Inso-much that as he grew in years and understanding; so he came to be a Bachelor of Art, and at length, for the hope appearing in him, to the preferment of a fellowship in Magdalen Colledge, where also he was admitted to the office of a Reader in Logic, Anno 1550. Now if he had at the first favoured sincere Religion, so much as he followed his book, then had we had the less matter to note in him. But indeed he was so much (as is aforesaid) addicted to the Romish faith, that his company and conversation in the same house was altogether with such as were utter enemies to the Gospel of Christ. If he came to common prayer at any time, it was by violence and compulsion, for otherwise he came not. Sermons would he hear none himself, nor yet suffer his scholars to resort unto them by his good will: for he was fully persuaded, that they might be better occupied at home. The Preachers themselves he did both disdain and despise, and all such as were setters forth of sound doctrine beside. For the which contumacy and stubbornness, he was so oft called before the Officers of the Colledge, and punished sometimes by the purling, sometime by the lack of his commons, and otherwise by certain tasks, and exercises of learning, enjoined unto him, that divers supposed him to have endeavoured,

In the end, not long before the death of King Edward that godly Prince, certain slanderous Libels, and railing Verses, were privily fixed to the walls and doors in sundry places of the Colledge against the President, which was then Dr. Haddon, whereby was ministered further matter of trouble to Palmer. For whereas it was well known that he, and some of his Companions, had a very little while before spoken contumelious words against the President; it could not be now avoided, but that thereby arose a vehement firmness and suspicion, that he conspiring with others, had contrived, made and scattered abroad the said slanderous Writings. Great inquisition was made in the Colledge, to search out the Author of so malicious and despicable a deed, but nothing could be found and proved against Palmer, or any of his Companions. Now Palmer, being herupon examined by the Officers, did not only with stout courage deny the fact to have been his, but also spake further many reproachful words touching the said Officers, and sent the same to him in writing, whereby he was by them adjudged to be an unworthy Member of that Society. And so for this, and other Popish pranks (continuing obstinate still) he was expelled the House.

After he was thus dispatched of his Room, he was fain for his own maintenance to apply himself to be a teacher of Children in the house of Sir Francis Kneller, in the which Trade he continued until the coming in of Queen Mary. And when her Visitors were sent to Magdalen Colledge, under a title of Reformation (whereas all things were better afore) I mean to displace divers of the Fellows that were learned, and to put right Catholics (as they called them) in their rooms; then came this Julius Palmer, waiting to be restored to his Living again, of which he had been deprived before, thinking by good right to be restored of them, whose Faith and Religion (as he said) he did to the uttermost of his power defend and maintain. And indeed at length he obtained the same. Then after he was restored again to his House in Queen Marys reign, God dealt so mercifully with him, that in the end he became of an obstinate Papist, an earnest and zealous Gospeller.

Concerning whose conversion to the Truth, for the more credit to be given to the same, we have here put down a Letter written by one Mr. Bullingham, Fellow in some part of King Edwards time with the said Palmer, then also of the same faction of Religion with him, and toward the latter end of the said Kings Reign, a voluntary Exile in France for Papistry. In Q. Marys days, likewise a Chaplain unto Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester. And after the coming in of Queen Elizabeth such an one, as for his obstinacy was quite and clean dispatched from all his Livings by her Majesties Commissioners. And yet now (God be praised therefore) a most constant Professor, and earnest teacher of the Word of God. This Man at the request of a certain Friend of his in London, being desirous to know the certain truth thereof, wrote unto him concerning this Julius. The Copy of which Letter we thought good here to insert, for that the parties being alive can testify the same to be true and certain, if any man shall doubt thereof.

The Letter of Mr. Bullingham is this.

After Bullingham, I wish you and all yours continual health in the Lord. Hitherto have I not written any thing unto you concerning Julius Palmer, that constant witness of Gods Truth, for that his doings and sayings known unto me, were worn out of my remembrance; and to write an untruth, is were rather to deface and blemish, than to adorn and beautifie him. After his conversion to the most holy Gospel, I never saw his face. Wherefore the less have I to certifye you of. But so much as seemeth to me to serve much unto the purpose, here I commend unto you; and in witness that my sayings are true, I subscribe my name, willing, praying, and beseeching you to publish the same to the whole world. At what time I Bullingham intended to forsake England, and to flee into France for the wicked Popes sake, (which came to pass indeed: for in Roan I was for a time) this Julius Palmer and Richard Duck, brought me outwards in my journey till we came to London: where on a day Julius Palmer and I walked to St. James the Queens Palace; and as we leaned at the great Gate of that place, Palmer spake thus unto me. Bullingham, you know in what misery and calamities we are fallen for the Pope and his Religion. We are young men, abhorred of all men now presently, and like to be abhorred more and more. Let us consider what hangeth over our heads. You are departing into a strange Country, both friendless and monies, where I fear me you shall taste of fewer savours then hitherto you have done. And as for me, I am at my wits end. The face of Hell it self is as amiable unto me, as the sight of Magdalen Colledge; For there I am hated as a venomous Toad. Would God I were raked under the Earth. And as touching our Religion, even our Conscience bear witness that we taste not such an inward sweetness in the profession thereof, as we understand the Gospellers to taste in their Religion:

Yea, to say the truth, we maintain we wot not what, rather of will than of knowledge. But what then? Rather than I will yield unto them, I will beg my Bread. So Palmer bequeathed himself to the wide world, and I passed over into Normandy. At my return into England again, my chance was to meet Palmer in Pauls, where a Road was set up. (This our meeting was in the beginning of Queen Marys reign, and our miserable departing not long before the end of King Edwards days.) Then after our greeting, thus said Palmer. Bullingham, is this our god, for whom we have [sworn]? No Palmer, quoth I, it is an Image of him. An Image, quoth he? I tell thee plainly Bullingham, John Calvin (whose Institutions I have perused since our departure) telleth me plainly by Gods Word that it is an Idol, and that the Pope is Antichrist, and his Clergy the filthy sink-hole of Hell, and now I believe it. For I feel it sensibly. Oh that God had revealed these matters unto me in times past. I would have bequeathed this Romish Religion or rather irreligion to the Devil of Hell from whence it came. Believe them not Bullingham. I will rather have these knees pared of, then I will kneel to yonder Jacknape (meaning the Road.) God help me, I am born to trouble and adversity in this World. Well Palmer, said I, is the wind in that Corner with you? I warrant you it will blow you to little ease at the end. I will never have to do with you again. So I left Palmer walking in Pauls, who throw the element of fire is exalted above the elements, where eternal rest is prepared for persecuted Martyrs. Thus much is true, and let it be known that I Bullingham affirm it to be true. More I have not to say. In these words and deeds it appeareth that God had elected him. From Bridgewater, April 26. Anno 1562.

By me John Bullingham.

When he was by the Visitors restored to his Colledge, although he began something to favour and taste of Gods Truth, by conference and company of certain godly and zealous men abroad, in time of his expulsion, especially at the house of Sir Francis Kneller: yet was he not thoroughly perswaded, but in most points continued for a while either blind, or else doubtful. Neither could he chuse, but utter himself in private reasoning from time to time, both in what points he was fully resolved, and also of what points he doubted. For such was his nature alway, both in Papistry and in the Gospel, utterly to detect all dissimulation, inasmuch that by the means of his plainness, and for that he could not flatter, he suffered much too, both in King Edwards, and also in Queen Marys time. Whereas he might at the first have lived in great quietness, if he could have dissembled, and both done and spoken against his Conscience, as many stirring Papists then did. And likewise he might have escaped burning in Queen Marys time, if he would either have spoken, or kept silence against his Conscience, as many weak Gospellers did. But Palmer could in no wise dissemble.

Now whilst short space, God fo wrought in his heart, that he became very inquisitive, and careful to hear and understand, how the Martyrs were apprehended; what Articles they died for, how they were used, and after what sort they took their death. Inasmuch that he spared not at his own charges to find over one of his scholars, in the Company of a Bachelor of that house, to Glocester, to see and understand the whole order of Bishop Hoopers death, and to bring him true report thereof. Which thing some think he the rather did, because he was wont in King Edward's time to say; that none of them all would stand to death for their Religion. Thus he learned with what great, extreme and horrible cruelty the Martyrs of God were tried, and how valiantly they overcame all kind of torments to the end. Whereof he himself also did see more experience afterward, at the examination and death of those holy confessors and Martyrs which were burned at Oxford before his eyes; inasmuch that the first hope, which the godly conception of him, was at his return from the burning of Br. Ridley, and Bishop Latimer. At what time, in the hearing of divers of his friends, he brake out into these words and such like; Oh raging cruelty! Oh tyranny ragical, and more then barbarous!

Soon that day forward he studiously fought to understand the truth, and therefore with all speed he borrowed Peter Martyrs Commentaries upon the first to the Corinthians, of one of Magdalens yet alive, and other good books of other men. And so through hearty prayer and diligent search and conference of the Scriptures, at length he believed and embraced the truth with great joy; and so professed in the same, that daily more and more, he declared it both in word and deed: In such sort, as he never hated the truth more stubbornly before, than afterward he willingly embraced the same, when it pleased God to open his eyes, and to reveal unto him the light of his word. And now again when he should come to Church, in those days of Popery, there to be occupied among the rest, in singing of Responses, reading of legends, and such like stuff allotted unto him, he had as much pleasure, he said, to be at them, as a Bear to be baited, and worried with dogs. When he came, it was (as it appeared) more to avoid displeasure and danger; then for any good will, and ready affection.

At length through Gods grace, he grew up to such maturity and ripeness in the truth, that he spared not to declare certain sparks thereof in his outward behaviour and doings. For when he should keep his bowing measures at Confeſſion, (as the custom there was) in turning himself to and fro, sometime Eastward, sometime Westward and afterward knock his breast at the elevation time, against these Idolatrous Adorations his heart did so vehemently rise, that sometime he would absent himself from them, and sometime being there, he would even at the facing time (as they termed it) get him out of the Church to avoid those ungodly gestures, and Idolatrous Adoration.

To be short, perceiving after a while, that he was greatly suspected and abhorred of the President then being, which was Mr. Cole, and of divers others which before were his friends, and therewithal feeling great conflict and Torment of Conscience daily to grow, with his Conversation with Idolaters; feeling also that his new life and old living might not well nor quietly stand together, he addressed himself to depart the house. For he thought it not best to abide the danger of expulsion, as he did at the first; feeling the weather was now waxed warmer. And being demanded at that time of a special friend (who would gladly have persuaded him to stay there longer) whether he would go, or how he would live, he made this answer, Domini est terra, & plenitudo ejus, i. The earth is the Lords, and the fulness thereof. Let the Lord Work, I will commit my self to God, and the wide World.

Here I think it expedient, before I write of the painful furies that he suffered after he came abroad into the perilous gulphs, and deep sea of this wretched wide world, first, to rehearse one or two examples of his outward behaviour, at such times as he had recourse to the College after his last departure, whereby the Reader may yet better understand of his simplicity and plainness, and how far wide he was from all cloaked dissimulation in Gods cause, which certain godless persons have sought maliciously to charge him withall. Being at Oxford a certain time in Magdalen College, and having knowledge that the Spanish Frier John, who succeeded D. Peter Martyr, in the office of the Divinity Lecture) would preach there that present Sunday, he would not at the first grant to be present at it. At length a friend of his, a Fellow of that house, persuaded so much with him, that he was content to accompany his said friend to the Church. But suddenly as the Frier vehemently inveighed against Gods truth, in defending certain Popish Heresies, Palmer, having many eyes bent and directed towards him, departed from amongst the midst of the auditory, and was found in his friends chamber weeping bitterly. Afterward being demanded why he slipped away upon such a sudden, Oh said he, if I had not openly departed, I should have openly stopped mine ears. For the Friers blasphemous talk, in disproving, or rather depraving the verity, made mine ears not to glow, but my heart woe to smart, then if mine ears had been cut from my head.

It chanced another time, that the same friend of his, called Mr. Shipper, being then Burfar of the house, bade him to dinner in his chamber. Palmer not knowing what guests were also thither invited and bidden, hapned there (contrary to his expectation) to meet with the foresaid Frier, with whom were present Dr. Smith, Dr. Trelham, and divers other Papists, whose company Palmer could not well bear: and therefore whispering his friend in the ear, he said he would be gone, for that was no place for him. I will, saith he, to the Burfar's table in the great Hall. The Burfar understanding his mind, desired him of all friendship not to depart, alleging that it were the next way to bewray himself, and as it were of purpose to cast himself into the Briers, with many other persuasions, as the shortness of time would permit. In the end he condescended to his request and tarried. Now as he came to the fire side, the Frier saluted him cheerfully in Latine, for he could not speak English. Palmer with an amiable countenance returned him gently: But when the Frier offered him his hand, he casting his eye aside, as though he had not seen it, found matter of talk to another standing by, and so avoided it; which thing was well marked of some, not without great grudge of Thomas.

After they were set and had well eaten, the Frier with a pleasant look offering him the cup, said, Propino tibi, juvenis erudite, i. I drink to you, learned young man. Palmer at that word blushing as red as scarlet, answered, Non agnosco nomen, domine, i. I knowlege no such name O sir. And therewith taking the cup at his hand, he set it down by him, as though he would have pledged him anon after, but in the end it was also well marked, that he did it not. When dinner was done, being sharply rebuked of the said Burfar his friend, for his so unwise, uncivil and unseemly behaviour (as he termed it) he made answer for himself, and said, Oleum corum non demulcet, sed frangit caput meum, i. The oyl of these men doth not supple, but breaketh my head.

Another time, which was also the last time of his being at Oxford, not long before his death, one Barwick an old acquaintance of his, being sometime Clerk of Magdalens, and then Fellow of Trinity Colledge, a rank Papist, began to reason with him in his friends chamber aforesaid, and perceiving him to be zealous and earnest in the defence of the verity, he said unto him in the hearing of Mr. Thomas Parry, and others there present: Well Palmer, well, now thou art stout, and hardy in thine opinion, but if thou wert once brought to the stake, I believe thou wouldst tell me another tale. I advise thee beware of the fire, it is a shrewd matter to burn. Truly said Palmer, I have been in danger of burning once or twice, and hitherto (I thank God) I have escaped it. But I judge verily, it will be my end at the last, welcome be it, by the Grace of God. Indeed it is a hard matter for them to burn, that have the mind and Soul linked to the Body, as a thiefs foot is tied in a pair of fetters: but if a man be once able, through the help of Gods Spirit, to separate and divide the Soul from the Body, for him it is no more Maffery to burn, then for me to eat this pece of bread.

Thus much by the way concerning his plainness, without dissimulation, & how he feared not openly to shew himself more grieved in heart to hear the Word of God blasphemed, than to suffer any worldly pains. Now let us proceed in our story, and faithfully declare both the occasion and manner of his death. Fff 3. Within Unnatural words of a Mother may give the young curie, but Gods curie they cannot give, much less can the Pope.

The Father had been dead against the Son, the Mother against the Son, &c. Luke 11.

Within short space after he had yielded up his Fellowship in Oxford, he was through Gods providence (who never faileth them that first seek his glory) placed School-master by Patent in the Grammar-School of Reading, where he was well accepted of all those that feared God, and favoured his Word, as well for his good learning and knowledge, as also for his earnest zeal, and profession of the Truth. But Satan the enemy of all godly attempts, envying his good proceedings and prosperous success in the fame, would not suffer him there long to be quiet. Wherefore he stirred up against him certain double faced hypocrites, which by diffimulation and crafty insinuation had crept in, to understand his secrets, under pretence of a zeal to the Gospel. Which men he (suspecting no deceit) right joyfully embraced, making them privy of all his doings. For as he himself was then fervently inflamed with the love of heavenly Doctrine; so had he an incredible desire by all means possible to allure and incourage others to the profession of the same.

These faithful and trusty Brethren, so soon as they had found good opportunity, spared not in his absence to rifle his study of certain godly Books and Writings; amongst the which was his replication to Morewines Verbes, touching Winchesters Epitaph, and other Arguments both in Latine and English, written by him against the Popish proceedings, and specially against their unnatural and brutish tyranny, executed toward the Martyrs of God. When they had thus done, they were not ashamed to threaten him that they would exhibit the same to the Council, unless he would without delay depart out of their Coasts, and give over the School to a Friend of theirs. The Truth of this story appeareth in part by a Letter written with his own hand, out of Prison, eight days before he was burned; which because it is of certain credit, and came to our hands, therefore we are the bolder to avouch it for a Truth.

Thus then was this filly young man, for the safeguard of his life, forced to depart upon the sudden from Reading, leaving behind him in the hands of his enemies his stuff, and one quaters stipend, and so he took his journey toward Ensham, where his Mother then dwelt, hoping to obtain at her hands certain Legacies due to him by his Fathers last Will, which he should have received certain years before; and taking his journey by Oxford he requested certain of his Friends to accompany him thither. His Mother understanding his late and errand by Malter Shipper and his Brother (whom he had sent before to intreat for him) as soon as he beheld him on his knees, asking her blessing as he had been accustomed to do: thou shalt, said she, have Christs curie and mine wheresoever thou go. He pausing a little, as one amazed at so heavy a greeting, at length said, Oh Mother, your own curie you may give me, which God knoweth I never deserved, but Gods curie you cannot give me, for he hath already blessed me. Nay, faith she, thou wentest from Gods blessing into the warm Sun, when thou wast banished for an Heretic out of that worshipful House in Oxford, and now for the like Inaverry, art driven out of Reading too. Alas Mother, faith he, you have been misinformed. I was not expelled nor driven away, but freely resigned of mine own accord. And Heretic I am none, for I stand not stubbornly against any true Doctrine, but defend it to my power. And you may be sure, they use not to expel nor banish, but to burn Heretics (as they term them.) Well quoth she, I am sure thou dost not believe as thy Father and I, and all our Fore-fathers have done; but as we were taught by the new Law in King Edwards days which is damnable I heretick.

Indeed I confess, said he, that I believe that Doctrine which was taught in King Edwards time, which is not Heretic but Truth, neither is it new, but as old as Christ and his Apostles. If thou be at that point, faith she, I require thee to depart from my house, and out of my sight, and never take me more for thy Mother hereafter. As for money and goods I have none of mine, thy Father bequeathed nought for Heretics. Fagots I have to burn thee, more thou gettest not at my hands. Mother, faith he, whereas you have cursed me. I again pray God to bless you, and prosper your all your life long, and with like soft talk, sweet words and abundance of tears trickling down his cheeks, he departed from her, wherewith he so mollified her hard heart, that he hurried an old Angel after, him and said, take that to keep thee a true man.

Thus poor Palmer being destitute of worldly friendship, and cruelly repelled of her, whom he took to have been his surest friend, wist not which way to turn his face. Soon after, when he had bethought himself, it came to his mind to return secretly to Magdalen Colledge, upon the assured trust and alliance, that he had a privy Friend or two in that house. At what time, by the suite of one Alane Cope, then Fellow of the House, he obtained Letters Commendatory, from Master Cole President there, for his preferment to a School in Gloucestershire. So he getteth him away, committed by his Friends to Gods divine protection, of whom some accompanied him as far as Ensham Ferry, and some to Burford.

Afterward as he went alone, musing and pondering of matters, it came in his head (as he writeth in an Epistle to one of his Friends) to leave his appointed journey, and to return closely to Reading, trusting there by the help of Friends to receive his quaters stipend, and convey his stuff to the custody of some trusty Body. To Reading he cometh, and taketh up his lodging at the Cardinals Hat, desiring his Hostels instantly to assign him a close Chamber, where he might be alone from all resort of company. He came not so closely, but that this viperous generation had knowledge thereof. Wherefore without delay they laid their heads together, and consulted what way they might most safely proceed against him, to bring their old cankered malice to pass. And soon it was concluded, that one Mr. Hampton (which then bare two faces in one hood, and under the colour of a Brother played the part of a dissembling hypocrite) should resort to him under the pretence of friendship, to feel and fish out the cause of his repair to Reading.

Palmer as he was a simple man, and without all wrinkles of cloaked collusion, opened to him his whole intent. But Hampton earnestly perswaded him to the contrary, declaring what danger might ensue if this were attempted. Against his counsel Palmer replied very much, and as they waxed hot in talk, Hampton flung away in a fury, and said; as he had fished, so should he fowl for him. Palmer not yet suspecting such pretended and devised mischief, as by this crooked and pestiferous generation was now in brewing against him, called for his Supper, and went quietly to bed: But quietly he could not long rest there.

For within short space after, the Officers and their retinue came rushing in with Lanterns and Bills, requiring him in the King and Queens name to make ready himself, and quietly to depart with them. So this filly young man perceiving that he was thus Judasly betrayed (without opening his lips) was lead away as a lamb to the slaughter, and was committed to ward, whom the Keeper as a ravening Wolf of greedy of his prey, brought down into a vile, stinking, and blind dungeon, prepared for thieves and murderers, and there he left him for a time, hanging by the hands and feet in a pair of stocks, so high, that well-near no part of his Body touched the ground.

In this Cave or Dungeon he remained about ten days under the tyranny of this unmerciful Keeper.

Here by the way, gentle Reader, I have by a little digression to give thee to understand, concerning one Thomas Thackham, for that the said Thomas Thackham in the story of this Julius Palmer, was noted and named in our former Book, to be a doer and a worker against the said blessed Martyr: he therefore being not a little grieved, made his reply again in writing, for purgation and defence of himself against the false information of his slanderer. Albeit for his confusion in writing I pass not much upon, either what he hath written or can write. Only the thing that moveth me most is this; For that the said Thomas Thackham not long since, coming to me himself, hath so attested and deposed against the information, with such swearing and deep adjuration, taking the name of the Lord God to witness, and appealing to his judgment to the utter perdition of his Soul, if it were not false which by information was reported of him, and he faultless in the matter. Which being so, I could not otherwise refuse, but to give credit to his Oath, and upon the same to alter and correct so much as appertaineth to the

And now to our story again, concerning the process and accusation of Julius Palmer, omitting by the way the Names of Thomas Thackham; and Downer.

Here followeth the first Examination and accusation of Julius Palmer at Reading.

The first examination of Julius Palmer.

After this he was brought before the Major; and there by the procurement of certain false Brethren (the Lord knoweth what they were) who had been conversant with Palmer, and robbed his study, divers grievous and enormous Crimes were laid to his charge, as Treason, Sedition, furnished Murderer, and Adultery. To whom Palmer answered, that if such Horrible and Hainous Crimes might be proved against him, he would patiently submit himself to all kind of Torments that could be devised. But O ye cruel Blood-suckers (saith he) ye follow the old practices of your progenitors, the Viperous and Woolvish generation of Pharisees and Papists: but be ye well assured, that God already seeth your subtle devices and crafty packing, and will not suffer the outrageous fury of your Venemous Tongues and fiery Hearts to escape unpunished. All this while no mention was made of Heretic or Heretical writings.

Their greatest proofs against him were these.

Evidence put up against Palmer.

First, that Palmer said, the Queens Sword was not put in her hand to execute Tyranny, and to kill and murder the true Servants of God.

Item, that her Sword was too blunt toward the Papists, but toward the true Christians it was too sharp.

Note the Wopshipful process of the quarelling Papists.

Item, that certain Servants of Sir Francis Knolles and others, resorting to his lectures, had fallen out among themselves, and were like to have committed Murder, and therefore he was a fower of sedition, and a procurer of unlawful Assemblies.

Item, that his Hostess had written a Letter unto him (which they had intercepted) wherein she required him to return to Reading, and sent him her Commendations, by the token that the knife lay hid under the beam, whereby they gathered that she had conspired with him to murder her Husband.

Item, that they found him alone with his Hostess by the fire side in the Hall, the Door being shut to them forthwith. When the evidence was given up, the Mayor dismissed them and went to dinner, commanding Palmer to the Cage, to make him an open spectacle of ignominy to the eyes of the world. And Thackham, the better to cover his own shame, caused it to be bruted, that he was so punished for his evil life and wickedness already proved against him.

Palmer cleared himself.

In the afternoon Palmer came to his answer, and did so mightily and clearly defende their evidence, and defend his own Innocency, proving also that the said Letters were by themselves forged, that the Mayor himself was much ashamed that he had given such credit unto them, and so much born with them, so that he sought means how they might convey him out of the Country privily.

Note here the fruits of Romish Religion.

But here among other things this is not with silence to be passed over, that one John Galant, a zealous professor of the Gospel, a little after this came to the prison and found him some what better intreated then before. When he beheld him, O Palmer, saith he, thou hast deceived divers mens expectation: for we hear that you suffer not for righteousness sake, but for your own demerits.

John Galant, a zealous professor.

Oh Brother Galant, saith he, these be the old practices of that Satanical brood. But be you well assured, and God be praised for it, I have so purged my self, and detected their falsehood, that from henceforth I shall be no more molested therewith. And there having pen and ink, he did write some what whereby part of his story here rehearsed, is well confirmed. But now to these Bloody Advantages.

New police devised against Julius Palmer.

After this, when they saw the matter frame so ill favourably, fearing that if he should escape secretly, their doing would tend no less to their shame and danger, then to the Mayors dishonesty; they devised a new policy to bring to pass their long hidden and festered malice against him, which was by this extreme refuge. For, whereas before they were partly ashamed to accuse him of Heresie, seeing they had been counted earnest Brethren themselves; and partly afraid, because they had broken up his study, and committed theft: yet now left their iniquity should have been revealed to the world, they put both fear and shame aside, and began to reficist and rip up the old sore, the scar whereof had been but superficially cured, as you have heard; and so to colour their former practices with the pretence of his reformation in Religion, they charged him with the writings that they had stolen out of his study.

Thus Palmer was once again called out of the prison to appear before the Mayor, and Bird the Official, and two other Justices, to render an account of his faith before them; to answer to such Articles and Informations as were laid against him. And when they had gathered of his own mouth sufficient matter to intrap him, they devised a certificate, or bill of instructions against him, to be directed to Doctor Jeffrey, who had undertaken to hold his Visitation the next Tuesday at Newbery, which was the sixteenth of July. And thus were the false witnesses and bloody Accusers winked at, and the innocent delivered to the Lyon to be devoured. When it was therefore concluded that Palmer should be sent over to Newbery, the said Letters testimonial were conveyed over together with him; the contents whereof shall partly appear hereafter; In the mean time I think it good here to rehearse one example among other, both of charitable affection toward him, and of his modesty correspondent to the same.

Palmer called before the Mayor of Reading, Bird the Official, and two Justices.

Dr. Jeffrey the Bishopps Chancellor of Sarum.

Master Rider of Reading, a faithful witness of Gods Truth, hearing how cruelly Palmer had been dealt withal in the prison, and pined away for lack of necessities, and how evidently he had proved himself innocent before the Officers, of such Crimes as were objected against him, he sent to him his servant secretly the night before his departure to Newbery, with a bowed groat in token of his good heart toward him, requiring him to let him understand if he lacked necessities, and he would provide for him. Palmer answered, the Lord reward your Mr. for his benevolence toward me, a miserable subject in this world, and tell him that (God be praised) I lack nothing.

Mr. Rider of Reading a faithful favourer of Gods Gospel.

In the morning before they took their Journey, Thomas Atkin, alias Roberts, being fellow prisoner with him in Christs cause, sitting at breakfast, and beholding Palmer very sad, leaning to a window in the corner of the house, asked why he came not to breakfast. Because I lack money (saith Palmer) to discharge the shot. Come on man (quoth he) God be praised for it, I have enough for us both. Which thing when Mr. Rider heard of, it cannot be expressed, how much it grieved him that Palmer had deceived him with so modest an answer.

Thomas Atkin or Roberts, being fellow prisoner with Julius Palmer.

Thus to Newbery they came on Monday night, and forthwith they were committed to the comfortable Hosterie of the blind house, where they found John Guin, their faithful Brother in the Lord. Now how they came before the Consistory of Dr. Jeffrey, and how Palmer was examined, it doth in part appear by this examination hereunto annexed, which although it be not perfectly and orderly penned, as the report goeth it was spoken, nor perchance altogether in such form of words, yet as exactly as we are able to compact and dispose it, being gathered out of several notes of Richard Shipper, John Hunt, John Kirry of Newbery, Richard White of Marlborough, which were oculati testes, and present at the hearing thereof.

The second Examination and accusation of Julius Palmer at Newbery, in the hearing of more then three hundred persons.

The examination of Julius Palmer before the Bishop of Sarum, Dr. Jeffrey.

Dr. Jeff. Sir Richard Abbrides Knight, and then High-Sheriff of the Shire, Sir William Ramsford Knight, Mr. John Hinchcomb Esquire, and the Parson of Inglesfield. After the Prisoners were presented, the Commission read, and other things done in order accordingly, Doctor Jeffery called to Palmer, and said; Art thou that jolly Writer of three Half-penny Books that we hear of?

Palmer. I know not what you mean.

Jeff. Have you taught Latin so long, that now you understand not English?

To this he answered nothing.

Then Dr. Jeffery standing up said, We have received certain Writings and Articles against you, from the Right worshipful the Mayor of Reading, and other Justices, whereby we understand, that being convicted afore them, you were convicted of certain Heresies.

First, That you deny the Popes Holiness Supremacy.

Next, That there are but two Sacraments.

Thirdly, That the Priest sheweth up an Idol at Mass; and therefore you went to no Mass, since your first coming to Reading.

Fourthly, That there is no Purgatory.

Last of all, That you be a fower of Sedition, and have sought to divide the unity of the Queens Subjects.

The Sheriff. You were best see first what he will say to his own handy work.

Jeff. Ye say truth. Tell me Palmer, art thou he that wrote this fair Volume? Look upon it.

Palmer. I wrote it indeed, and gathered it out of the Scripture.

Jeff. Is this doggish Rhime yours also? Look.

Palmer. I wrote this, I deny not.

Jeff. And what say you to these Latin Verses, entitled Expedition, &c. Are they yours too?

Palmer. Yea Sir.

Jeff. Art thou not ashamed to affirm it? It came of no good spirit, that thou didst both rail at the dead, and slander a Learned and Catholick man yet alive.

Palmer. If it be a slander, he hath slandered himself: for I do but report his owne writing, and open the folly therein declared. And I reckon it no railing to inveigh against Annas and Caiaphas being dead.

Jeff. Saist thou so? I will make thee recant it, and wring peccavi out of your lying lips, ere I have done with thee.

Palmer. But I know, that although of my self I be able to do nothing, yet if you and all mine enemies both bodily and ghostly, should do your worst, you shall not be able to bring that to pass, neither shall ye prevail against Gods mighty Spirit, by whom we understand the Truth, and speak it so boldly.

Jeff. Ah, are you full of the Spirit? are you inspired with the Holy Ghost?

Palmer. Sir, no man can believe, but by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. Therefore, if I were not a Spiritual man, and inspired with Gods Holy Spirit, I were not a true Christian. Qui spiritum Christi non habet, hic non est ejus. i. He that hath not the Spirit of Christ, is none of his.

Jeff. I perceive you lack no words.

Palmer. Christ hath promised not only to give us store of words necessary, but with them, such force of matter, as the gates of Hell shall not be able to confound, or prevail against it.

Jeff. Christ made such a promise to his Apostles, I trow you will not compare with them.

Palmer. With the holy Apostles I may not compare, neither have I any alliance in mine own wit or learning, which I know is but small: yet this promise I am certain pertaineth to all such as are appointed to defend Gods Truth against his enemies, in the time of their persecution for the same.

Jeff. Then it pertaineth not to thee.

Palmer. Yes, I am right well assured, that through his grace it appertaineth at this present to me, as it shall (I doubt not) appear, if you give me leave to dispute with you before this audience, in the defence of all that I have there written.

Jeff. Thou art but a beardless Boy, start up yesterday out of the Schools, and darrest thou presume to offer dispute, or to encounter with a Doctor.

Palmer. Remember Master Doctor, Spiritus ubi quis furat. And again, Esse infantium &c. And in another place, Abicandisti heri a sapientibus &c. i. The Spirit breatheth where it pleaseth him, &c. Out of the mouth of Infants, &c. And thou hast hidden these things to place or from the wife, &c. God is not tied to time, wit, learning, place, nor person. And although your wit and learning be greater than mine; yet your belief in the Truth, and zeal to defend the same is no greater than mine.

Regist. Sir, if you suffer him thus impudently to trifle with you, he will never have done.

Jeffery. Well, ye shall understand, that I have it not in Commission at this present to dispute with you, neither were it meet that we should call again into question such Articles as are already discussed, and perfectly defined by our Mother the holy Church, whom we ought to believe without why, or wherefore, as the Creed telleth us. But the cause why ye be now called hither, is that ye might be examined upon such Articles as are ministered against you, and such matter as is here contained in your hand-writing, that it may be seen whether you will stand to it, or nay. How say you to this?

Palmer. By your holy Church you mean the Synagogue of Rome, which is not universal, but a particular Church of shavelings. The Catholick Church I believe, yet not for her own sake, but because she is holy, that is to say, a Church that grounded her belief upon the word of her Spouse Christ.

Jeffery. Leave railings, and answer me directly to my question. Will you stand to your writing, or will you not?

Palmer. If you prove any sentence therein comprized, not to stand with Gods Word, I will presently recant it.

Jeffery. Thou impudent Fellow, have I not told thee, that I came not to dispute with thee, but to examine thee?

Here the Parson of Inglesfield pointing to the Pix, said, What seest thou yonder?

Palmer. A Canopy of silk bordered with gold.

Parson. Yea, but what is within it?

Palmer. A piece of Bread, in a Clout, I trow.

Parson. Thou art as forward an Heretic as ever I talked withal. Here was much spoken of Confiteor, and other parts of the Mass.

Parson. Do you not believe that they which receive the holy Sacrament of the Altar, do truly eat Christs natural Body?

Palmer. If the Sacrament of the Lords Supper be ministered, as Christ did ordain it, the faithful Receivers do indeed spiritually and truly eat and drink in it Christs very natural Body and Blood.

Parson. The faithful Receivers? Ye cannot blear our eyes with such sophistry. Do not all manner of Receivers, good and bad, faithful and unfaithful receive the very natural Body in form of Bread?

Palmer. No Sir.

Parson. How prove you that?

Palmer. By this place, Qui manducat me, vivet propter me. i. He that eateth me, shall live for me.

Parson. See that fond Fellow, whilst he taketh himself to be a Doctor of the Law, you shall see me prove him a stark foolish Daw. Do you not read likewise, Quicumque invocaverit nomen Domini, salvus erit? i. id est, Who ever invocateth the Name of the Lord, shall be saved? Ergo, Do none but the godly call upon him? Therefore you must mark how St. Paul answereth you. He saith, that the wicked do eat the true Body to their condemnation.

As Palmer was bent to answer him at the full, the Parson interrupted him, crying still, what saist thou to St. Paul?

Palmer. I say, that St. Paul hath no such words.

Parson. See, the impudent Fellow denieth the plain Text. Qui edit & bibit corpus Domini indigne, reus erit judicii. i. He that eateth and drinketh the Body of the Lord unworthily, is guilty of judgment.

Palmer. I beseech you lend me your Book.

Parson. Not so.

The Sheriff. I pray you lend him your Book. So the Book was given over to him.

Palmer.

Dr. Jeff. Sir Richard Abbrides Knight, and then High-Sheriff of the Shire, Sir William Ramsford Knight, Mr. John Hinchcomb Esquire, and the Parson of Inglesfield. After the Prisoners were presented, the Commission read, and other things done in order accordingly, Doctor Jeffery called to Palmer, and said; Art thou that jolly Writer of three Half-penny Books that we hear of?

Palmer. I know not what you mean.

Jeff. Have you taught Latin so long, that now you understand not English?

To this he answered nothing.

Then Dr. Jeffery standing up said, We have received certain Writings and Articles against you, from the Right worshipful the Mayor of Reading, and other Justices, whereby we understand, that being convicted afore them, you were convicted of certain Heresies.

First, That you deny the Popes Holiness Supremacy.

Next, That there are but two Sacraments.

Thirdly, That the Priest sheweth up an Idol at Mass; and therefore you went to no Mass, since your first coming to Reading.

Fourthly, That there is no Purgatory.

Last of all, That you be a fower of Sedition, and have sought to divide the unity of the Queens Subjects.

The Sheriff. You were best see first what he will say to his own handy work.

Jeff. Ye say truth. Tell me Palmer, art thou he that wrote this fair Volume? Look upon it.

Palmer. I wrote it indeed, and gathered it out of the Scripture.

Jeff. Is this doggish Rhime yours also? Look.

Palmer. I wrote this, I deny not.

Jeff. And what say you to these Latin Verses, entitled Expedition, &c. Are they yours too?

Palmer. Yea Sir.

Jeff. Art thou not ashamed to affirm it? It came of no good spirit, that thou didst both rail at the dead, and slander a Learned and Catholick man yet alive.

Palmer. If it be a slander, he hath slandered himself: for I do but report his owne writing, and open the folly therein declared. And I reckon it no railing to inveigh against Annas and Caiaphas being dead.

Jeff. Saist thou so? I will make thee recant it, and wring peccavi out of your lying lips, ere I have done with thee.

Palmer. But I know, that although of my self I be able to do nothing, yet if you and all mine enemies both bodily and ghostly, should do your worst, you shall not be able to bring that to pass, neither shall ye prevail against Gods mighty Spirit, by whom we understand the Truth, and speak it so boldly.

Jeff. Ah, are you full of the Spirit? are you inspired with the Holy Ghost?

Palmer. Sir, no man can believe, but by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. Therefore, if I were not a Spiritual man, and inspired with Gods Holy Spirit, I were not a true Christian. Qui spiritum Christi non habet, hic non est ejus. i. He that hath not the Spirit of Christ, is none of his.

Jeff. I perceive you lack no words.

Palmer. Christ hath promised not only to give us store of words necessary, but with them, such force of matter, as the gates of Hell shall not be able to confound, or prevail against it.

Jeff. Christ made such a promise to his Apostles, I trow you will not compare with them.

Palmer. With the holy Apostles I may not compare, neither have I any alliance in mine own wit or learning, which I know is but small: yet this promise I am certain pertaineth to all such as are appointed to defend Gods Truth against his enemies, in the time of their persecution for the same.

Jeff. Then it pertaineth not to thee.

Palmer. Yes, I am right well assured, that through his grace it appertaineth at this present to me, as it shall (I doubt not) appear, if you give me leave to dispute with you before this audience, in the defence of all that I have there written.

Jeff. Thou art but a beardless Boy, start up yesterday out of the Schools, and darrest thou presume to offer dispute, or to encounter with a Doctor.

Parson. But Saint Hierome's Translation hath Corpus. Palmer. Not so Mr. Parson, and God be praised that I have in the mean season, shut up your lips with your own Book.

Jeffrey. It skilleth no matter whether ye write Bread or Body, for we be able to prove that he meant the Body. And whereas you say, they eat it spiritually, that is but a blind shift of default.

Palmer. What should I say else?

Jeffrey. As holy Church faith, really, carnally, substantially.

Palmer. And with as good Scripture, I may say, grossly or monstrously.

Jeffrey. Thou speakest wickedly. But tell me, Is Christ present in the Sacrament or no?

Palmer. He is present.

Jeffrey. How is he present?

Palmer. The Doctors say, modo ineffabili. Therefore why do ye ask me? Would God ye had a mind ready to believe it, or a tongue able to express it unto you.

Jeffrey. What say you to the Baptism of Infants?

Palmer. I say, that it standeth with Gods Word, and therefore it ought of necessity to be retained in the Church.

Jeffrey. Ye have forgotten your self I wis, for ye write that Children may be saved without it.

Palmer. So I write, and so I say.

Jeffrey. Then it is not necessary to be frequented and continued in the Church.

Palmer. Your Argument is not good, Mr. Doctor.

Jeffrey. Will you stand to it?

Palmer. Yea, Mr. Doctor, God willing.

Jeffrey. Note it, Registrar.

More of his Examination in that time and place is not yet come to our hands: whensoever God sendeth it, I will impart and communicate the same to the Reader. In the mean season we are credibly informed of this; that Sir Richard Abridges, the same day after dinner, sent for him to his lodging, and there, in the presence of divers persons yet alive, in Newbury and elsewhere, friendly exhorted him to revoke his Opinion, to spare his young years, wit, and learning. If thou wilt be conformable, and shew thyself corrigible and repentant, in good faith (said he) I promise thee before this Company, I will give thee meat and drink, and books, and ten pound yearly, so long as thou wilt dwell with me. And if thou wilt set thy mind to marriage, I will procure thee a Wife and a Farm, and help to stuff and fit thy Farm for thee.

How sayst thou?

Palmer thanked him very courteously, and made him further answer concerning his Religion somewhat at large, but very modestly and reverently, concluding in the end, that as he had already in two places renounced his living for Christs sake, so he would with Gods grace be ready to surrender and yield up his life also for the same, when God should send time.

When Sir Richard perceived that he would by no means relent: Well Palmer (saith he) then I perceive one of us twain shall be damned. For we be of two Faiths, and certain I am there is but one Faith that leadeth to life and salvation.

Palmer. O Sir, I hope that we both shall be saved.

Sir Richard. How may that be?

Palmer. Right well Sir. For as it hath pleased our merciful Saviour, according to the Gospels Parable, to call me at the third hour of the day, even in my flowers, at the age of four and twenty years, even so I trust he hath called, and will call you at the eleventh hour of this your old age, and give you everlasting life for your portion.

Sir Rich. Sayst thou so? Well Palmer well, I would I might have thee but one month in my house, I doubt not but I would convert thee, or thou shouldst convert me.

Then said M. Winchcom, Take pity on thy golden years, and pleasant flowers of lusty youth, before it be too late.

Palmer. Sir, I long for those springing flowers, that shall never fade away.

Winchcom. If thou be at that point, I have done with thee.

Then was Palmer commanded again to the Blind-house; but the other two silly men were led again the same After-noon to the Confortory, and there were condemned, and delivered to the Secular power of the Sheriff there present, by name Sir Richard Abridges.

It is reported also, that Doctor Jeffrey offered Palmer a good Living if he would outwardly shew himself conformable, keeping his Conscience secret to himself, or at least declare that he doubted which was the truest Doctrine. But I cannot affirm it for a Surety.

The next Morning the 16. of July, Palmer was required to subscribe to certain Articles, which they had drawn out, touching the cause of his Condemnation. In the Front whereof, were heaped together many hateful terms, as horrible, heretical, damnable, devilish and execrable Doctrine. To these words Palmer refused to subscribe, affirming that the Doctrine which he professed, was not such, but good and sound Doctrine.

Jeffrey. Ye may see, good People, what shifts these Heretics seek, to escape burning, when they see justice minifred unto them. But I tell thee, this stile is agreeable to the Law, and therefore I cannot alter it.

Palmer. Then I cannot subscribe to it.

Jeffrey. Wilt thou then crave mercy, if thou like not justice, and revoke thy heresie?

Palmer. I forsake the Pope, and his Popelings, with all Popish heresie.

Jeffrey. Then subscribe to the Articles.

Palmer. Alter the Epithetions, and I will subscribe.

Jeffrey. Subscribe, and qualifie the matter with thine own Pen. So he subscribed. Whereupon Doctor Jeffrey proceeded to read the Popish Sentence of his cruel Condemnation, and so was he delivered to the charge of the Secular power, and was burned the same day in the After-noon, about five of the Clock.

Within one hour before they went to the place of Execution, Palmer in the presence of many people, comforted his Fellows with these words. Brethren (saith he) be of good cheer in the Lord, and faint not. Remember the words of our Saviour Christ, where he saith, Happy are you when men revile you and persecute you for righteousness sake. Rejoice and be glad, for great is your reward in Heaven. Fear not them that kill the body, and be not able to touch the soul. God is faithful, and will not suffer us to be tempted further than we shall be able to bear it. We shall not end our lives in the fire, but make a change for a better life. Yea for Coals, we shall receive Pearls. For Gods holy Spirit certifieth our spirit, that he hath even now prepared for us a sweet Supper in Heaven for his sake which suffered first for us.

With these and such like words, he did not only comfort the hearts of his silly Brethren that were with him appointed as Sheep to be slain, but also wrestled out plentiful tears from the eyes of many that heard him. And as they were singing a Psalm, came the Sheriff Sir Richard Abridges and the Bayliffs of the Town, with a great company of harnessed and weaponed men to conduct them to the fire. When they were come to the place where they should suffer, they fell all three to the ground, and Palmer with an audible voice pronounced the 31. Psalm, but the other two made their prayers secretly to Almighty God.

And as Palmer began to arise, their came behind him two Popish Priests, exhorting him yet to recant and save his Soul. Palmer answered and said, Away, away, tempt me no longer. Away, I say, from me all ye that work iniquity: for the Lord hath heard the voice of my tears. And so forthwith they put off their rayment, and went to the Stake and kissed it. And when they were bound to the post, Palmer said, Good People, pray for us, that we may persevere to the end. And for Christs sake beware of Popish Teachers, for they deceive you.

As he spake this, a Servant of one of the Bayliffs, threw a Fagot at his face, that the blood gushed out in divers places. For the which fact the Sheriff reviled him, calling him cruel Tormentor, and with his walking Staff brake his Head, that the blood likewise ran

The Martyrdom of the three godly Saints.

A notable spectacle in the Martyrdom of Jesus Palmer.

Among other things this is also to be noted, that after their three Heads by force of the raging and devouring flames of Fire, were fallen together in a lump or cluster, which was marvellous to behold, and that they all were judged already to have given up the Ghost, suddenly Palmer, as a man waked out of sleep, moved his tongue and jaws, and was heard to pronounce this word Jesus. So, being resolved into ashes, he yielded to God as joyful a Soul (confirmed with the sweet promises of Christ) as any one that ever was called beside to suffer for his blessed Name. God grant us all to be moved with the like spirit, working in our hearts constantly to stand in defence and confession of Christ's holy Gospel, to the end, Amen.

A memorable Story of one Agnes Wardall in the Town of Ipswich, pursued for the true Faith of Christ's Gospel.

A notable Story of Agnes Wardall of Ipswich. Dr. Argentine Schoolmaster, Mr. Butler Constable, Phil. Ulmer, Edm. Leach, J. Steward, Matthew Butler Apothecary, a curious singing Man, a fine player of the Organs, a perfect Papist, and a diligent promoter of good men. This Butler being then

About the said month of July, in this present year, 1556. there was one Richard Argentine, Doctor of Physick, otherwise called Richard Sexton, with certain other dwelling in the Town of Ipswich, not many in number, but in heart and purpose mightily bent to impugn and impeach the growing of Christ's Gospel and favourers of the same. In the number of whom were Philip Ulmer, Edmund Leach, John Steward, and Matthew Butler Apothecary, a curious singing Man, a fine player of the Organs, a perfect Papist, and a diligent promoter of good men. This Butler being then Constable in the Town of Ipswich, as he was in the watch by night upon Cornhill, cometh to him Doctor Argentine in great haste, giving him intelligence of one Agnes Wardall, being then lately come home to her house in Ipswich. Whereupon immediately, such a way was contrived between them, that the said Agnes Wardall forthwith should be apprehended: but God, in whose providence the direction of all things consisteth, by whose disposition they have their operation, so graciously provided for his Servant, and so prevented their malignant devices, that they came to no great effect in working, although on the contrary part there wanted no good will, as here consequently you shall further understand.

This Agnes Wardall was a Woman that lived in Gods fear, and was at defiance with their Romish trash, desiring rather with hard fare and evil lodging to be abroad, than to be at home in her house, and among the tents of the ungodly: her Husband also being a man living in the fear of God, and for the testimony of his Conscience being also hunted, by force of the Law was constrained to avoid his house, and got into a Crair with an honest man, serving as a Saylor, a faculty not of him before frequented, nor he a man nimble for that trade, because God had given him an impediment by reason of a stumped foot, unfit to climb to top and yard; yet so it pleased God to enable him with his strength, that he was strong and lusty to do good service, as they can well witness that were of his company.

The said Agnes Wardall chanced on a day to come home to see her poor House and Children, which was under the guiding of a young Maid, and being espied news was born to Dr. Argentine: who having knowledge thereof, as is aforesaid, went speedily unto the Apothecary the Constable aforesaid, and informed him what a notable Cure was to be wrought on Wardall's Wife in the apprehending of her. Which was more like to speed than mine, had not the mighty providence of God wrought contrary to their expectation.

This being known to the Constable, the Watch was charged speedily, and each Company sent to his place. And Argentine and Butler took unto them a good number, Agnes Wardall driven by persecution to serve in a ship.

Agnes Wardall persecuted by Dr. Argentine and his Maces.

1556. Anno number, and forth they go into the house of this poor woman to lay hands upon her, and beset the house on the forehide and backside, lying open in the fields, and other time were sent to the house of his Mother, which was not far from his house. This done one knockt at the street door where Argentine and Bulwer was, with one of their weapons, and no answer was made; the second time somewhat harder, but had no answer. In the mean time they fearing that some conveyance was made knocked the third time more hard then before.

There was not far from the door where they knocked, a certain Day-window, where one might look out and speak: And so at the third knocking, a woman who at that time was tenant to R. Wardall's Mother, and had but two nights before lye in the house, speaking out hard by their ears, asked who was there?

Ah Sirrah, quoth Argentine, are you so nigh and will not speak? How fortun'd it that ye spake not at the first, being so nigh? How fortun'd it, quoth the woman? Marry I shall tell you; I am but a stranger here, and I have heard say, that there be spirits walking here about, which if a man do answer at the first call or second, he stands in great danger, and I was never so afraid of my life. At this her answer they laughed, and commanded her to open the door in the Queens name, for they were the Queens watch.

Agnes Wardall being at that time in bed in an inner Chamber, having her Maid with her, and her two Children being at that time very heavy asleep, heard not the knocking. Her Maid hearing at the second knock, called and thogged her Dame, and with much ado awak'd her, and said, The watch is at the door. What? thou yest, said she. Yes truly said the Maid, and hath knockt twice. With that she arose with all speed, and put on her cloaths very slightly, and took with her a Buckram Apron, which afterward she cast on her head, when she was fain to creep in a ditch with nettles, and so pass'd down into a Parlour, wherein stood a Cupbord with a fair Press, into the which the Maid did lock her.

And immediately went up to a Chamber which was hard by the street, where she might see and speak to the Watch, and said, Who is there? Then they bade her open the door. And she said, We have no Candle. And they said, Open the door, or we will lay it on the floor. With that she came down and opened the door. Then asked they the Maid, who is within? And she said, none but a woman that dwelleth with us, and two Children. Then said they, where is thy Dame? Truly said she I cannot tell, she is not within. She was here in the evening, said they. Yea said the Maid, but she went forth I know not whither. Notwithstanding they charged her that she knew where she was, which she denied. Then got they a Candle light at one of the neighbours houses, and came in, and in the entry met the woman which had answered them at the window, and said she was afraid of Sprites. Argentine looking upon her, clapt her on the back, and said, Thou art not the woman whom we seek for.

So entred they the house, and searched a Parlour next the street where the woman lay which was his Mothers Tenant, and a young Child that suckt on her breast, and not only in the bed, turning it down past all honest humanity, but also under the bed, behind the painted Clothes, and in the Chimney, and up into the Chimney, and finding the bed hot, said, Who lay here in the Bed? The woman said I and the Child. And none else, quoth they? No said the woman. When they could find nothing there for their purpose, from thence they went into an inner Parlour, in the which stood the Cupbord wherein she was, and searched the Parlour which was but a little one. And one of the Company, laying his hand on the Cupbord, said, This is a fair Cupbord, the may be here for any thing that is done. That is true faith another of them. Notwithstanding, they looked no further, but went from that into the Chamber aloft, wherein the said Agnes had lye with her Maid and Children, with all other rooms and chambers.

At length they came down into the Yard, where they found a horsetied at a pale eating of shorn grass. Then asked they the Maid, whose Horse is this? She answered, it is her Horse indeed, and she came in before night and went abroad again, but I know not whither. Then were they in good hope to find their prey, and besetted them with speed, and went into an out-chamber that was in the Yard, in which was a Boy in bed of 12. or 14. years old. And being in his dead sleep, they suddenly awak'd him and examined him for his Dame. Who answered, he knew not where she was, and unto that stood firmly, although their threats were vehement, not only to the poor silly Boy, but also to the good simple plain Maid. Then caught they him to arise and dress him, and sent both Maid and Boy up to the Cage, where they put the Maid, but kept the Boy among their trusty Souldiers, so that one of them should not speak with another.

Now while some were on the Cornhill, and other some searching the neighbours houses and backside, the wife of Wardall being in the Press fast locked up, and almost smothered for want of breath, desired the woman her Mothers Tenant, when she heard her in the Parlour, to let her out. She asked her where the Keys were, who answered they were in a Hamper, which she found, and shaid to unlock the Press, and of a long time could not. Then desired she her to break it open; for (said she) I had rather fall into their hands, then to kill my self. Then went she to her Mothers Tenant and fought for her Husbands Hammer and Chisel, to break it open, but could not find it, nor any thing else to break it open withal; and came again and told her she could find nothing to break it open with.

Then said she, assay again to open it, for I trust God will give you power to open it. And being within in much extremity, she heartily prayed unto God; who heard her prayer and helped her: for at the first assay and turn of the Key, it opened easily. When she came out, she looked as pale and as bleak, as one that were laid out dead by the wall, and as she her self looked afterward when she was dead as the same woman reported, which then let her out, and was also at her death long after in the Queens Majesties Reign that now is, and all on a vehement sweat as the like drops of rain.

Then went she out into the backside, where was a pale toward the fields for the defence of the garden, wherein was one or two loose pales, by the which both she and her Husband had divers times used to come and go in and out, so went she out into the fields. And passing one little field, and over a stile, througged her self in a low ditch with nettles, and covered her head with the Buckram Apron afore mentioned, and so crept low, and lay in the ditch. After long search when they could not find her in the Town, certain of the Watch returned again to the fields side; among whom was one George Manning, with John Bate the Crier of the same Town coming together. This Manning was a simple honest plain man, but Bate a very enemy, and one that in Queen Marius time would have been a Priest as it was reported, but that he was married.

Manning epying where she lay, gave a hem, and another made a noise with his Bill, he being before Bate; at the which the lay still, and at the last they departed to the street side to the Constable. All this time the Maid was in the Cage, and the Boy with the other of the watch until perfect daylight. Then went they up, and let out the Maid, and sent her home, and the Boy also; but they made the Maid believe they had found her Dame. Who answered, if ye have her, keep her fast.

On the morrow, Manning sent her word to beware that she should hide her self no more for fear.

Thus by the might and Power of God was his faithful Servant delivered from their cruelty, and they known to be his Adversaries, not only at that time, but divers times after and before. Notwithstanding, the said Argentine, at his first coming to Ipswich, came in a Servants Coat. And then being in the days of K. Henry the Eighth, he would accountably use the reading of Lectures himself, in the which he was well commended at that time. After obtained the office of Usher of the free Grammar School, and the Master being dead, got to be Master himself. And being married to a very honest woman remained there the days of *K. plague, and Queen Mary came to her Reign, none more but in all Papistry and superstition then he, Painting the posts of the Town with Verat Regina Maria, and in every Corner.

I furthermore, after the death of his Wife (which was an honest woman) he was made a Priest, taking upon him divers times to preach (but never without his white Miniver-hood) such Doctrine as was shameful to hear, saying Mass, and carrying about the pix in high processions. Furthermore, leading the Boy S. Nicholas with his Miniver-hood about the streets for Apples and Belly-chaar. And who so would not receive him, he made them Hereticks, and such also as would not give his Fagot to the Bonfire for Queen Mary's Child. And thus continued he at Ipswich the most part of Queen Mary's days, molesting their good men, some for not going to the Church, some for not being confessed, some for not receiving, &c. till at length, toward the end of Queen Mary he came to London, and in this Queens time began to shew himself again a perfect Protestant. And thus much of Argentius. Ex testimonio. Petri Moonati.

The trouble of Peter Moon and his Wife, and of other godly Protestants at Bishop Hoptons Visitation in Ipswich.

IN the year of our Lord God, 1556. the Scene or Visitation being kept before Whitsonide in the Town of Ipswich in Suffolk, by Dr. Hepton being then Bishop of Norwich, and Miles Dunning, being then his Chancellor, divers and sundry godly Protestants, through the accusation of evil men, were fore troubled and presented before him: among whom were accused one Peter Moon a Taylor, and Anne his Wife, for their disobedience to the Law, in not shewing their readiness to come to the Church, and to be partakers of such Roguish Observances as at that time were used.

*Peter Moon
B. Hopton.*

And first the said Peter Moon was commanded to come before the Bishop, where he was examined of three sundry Articles, to wit: 1. Whether the Pope were supreme Head: 2. Whether King Philip and Queen Mary were right Inheritors to the Crown: 3. And whether in the Sacrament of the Altar was the very Body of Christ substantially and really there present.

3. Articles objected to Peter Moon.

Unto the which the said Peter being timorous and weak, fearing more the face of man then the heavy wrath of God, affirmed, and in manner granted unto their demands. Whereupon the Bishop being in good hope, that although he had not come to the Church, nor received the Sacrament of the Altar, nor been ready to do his duty as the law had commanded; yet there shewing his mind, said, that he liked well the man: for such as have been (said he) earnest in evil things, will also be earnest in that that is good and godly, if once they be won.

through in-

Thus as this spiritual Father was commanding his carnal Child, and rather preferring him to Hell-fire, then unto the sincere Word and Commandments of God, it chanced amongst many others in the Chamber, was one of the Portmen of the same Town, named Smart, an earnest member of their Romish Law, doing of a very good Conscience that he did, who after the death of Queen Mary lived not many years, but rendered his life in godly repentance, protesting, that if God should suffer him to live, he would never be the man he had been before, what Laws soever should come again: so that before the time of his sickness he frequenting earnestly the Sermons in the same Town, made by divers godly learned men, would weep as it had been a Child, being notwithstanding of courage as stout a man as any was in Ipswich. Such is the marvellous mercy of God in calling to his Kingdom, whom, and when he pleaseth.

This Portman afore said, perceiving the Bishop thus, as it were, at an end with the said Moon, and so he like to be discharged, said unto the Bishop; My Lord, indeed I have good hope in the man and that he will be conformable: but my Lord, he hath a perilous woman to his Wife. For I will tell you my Lord, she never came to Church yet, since the Queens Reign, except it were at Eventing, or when she was Churched. And not then until Mass were done. Wherefore your good Lordship might do a good deed to cause her to come before you, and to see if you could do any good. And therefore I beseech your good Lordship to command him to pray her to come before your Lordship.

1556.*

At which words Moon was somewhat stirred, in that he said command him to pray her to come before your Ldp. And he said unto him, under my Lords correction I speak, I am as able to command her to come before my Lord, as ye are to command the worst Boy in your house. Yea, my Lord, said the other, I cry your Lordship mercy: I have informed your Lordship with an untruth, if this should be so. But if he be so able as he saith, he might have commanded her to have come to Church in all this time, if it had pleased him. Well said the Bishop, look you come before me at Afternoon, and bring your Wife with you; I will talk with her.

*Peter Moon
commanded to bring his Wife before
the Bishop.*

As my Lords Dinner at that time was serving up, Moon departed and tarried not to take part thereof, having such an hard breakfast given him before to digest. At Afternoon Moon delayed and waited his time, bethinking when he might most conveniently come, especially when his Accuser and his wives should not have been there. And according to the commandment came with his Wife, which was not so secretly done, but his Accuser had knowledge thereof, and came with all expedition in such poof speed, that in manner he was windless entering into the Bishops Chamber.

The Bishop hearing that Moon and his Wife were come, called for them, and said to Moon; Is this your Wife, Moon? Yes, my Lord, said he. O good Lord (said the Bishop) how a man may be deceived in a woman? I promise you a man would take her for as honest a woman, by all outward appearance, as can be. Why, my Lord, said Moons Wife, I trust there is none that can charge me with any dishonesty, as concerning my Body; I delie all the world in that respect.

Nay (quoth the Bishop) I mean not as concerning the dishonesty of thy Body: but thou hadst been better to have given the use of thy Body unto twenty sundry men, then to do as thou hast done. For thou hast done as much as in thee lyeth, to pluck the King and the Queens Majesties out of their Royal seats through thy disobedience, in shewing thyself an open enemy unto Gods Laws, and their proceedings.

Then began the Bishop to examine the said Moon again, with the afore said Articles; and his Wife also. And the hearing her Husband relent, did also affirm the same, which turned unto either of them to no small trouble of mind afterward, but, yet neither were they like thus to escape, but that in the mean time Dunning the Bishops Chancellor came up in great haste, and brought news to the Bishop, that there were such a number of Hereticks come, of which some came from Boxford, some from Lanham and about from the Cloth-countrey, that it would make a man out of his wits to hear them: and there are among them both Hereticks, and Anabaptists, said he. And thus Doctor Dunning with his blustering words interrupting Moons Examination, went down again as the Devil had driven him, to keep his fir among them, and to take order what should be done with them.

The Bishop beginning to bewail the state of the Country, in that it was so infected with such a number of Hereticks, and rehearsing partly their Opinions to those that were at that time in the Chamber, Moons Wife had a young Child, which she herself nursed, and the Child being brought into the yard under the Bishops Chamber, cried, so that she heard it, and then said; My Lord, I must have done with me. My Child crieth beneath, I must go give my Child suck, with such like words. And the Bishop being (as it were) out of wind to talk their deliv- with them any more, said; Go your way, I will talk with you in the morning; look ye be here again in the morn- ing: with this they both departed.

And beneath in the stone-Hall of the same house, the Chancellor Dunning being very busy about his bloody business, espied Moon and his Wife coming, and must needs pass by the place where he stood, and said: Nay soft, I must talk with you both; for ye are as evil as any that are here to day. To whom Moons Wife answered; My Lord hath had us in excommunication, and therefore ye shall have nought to do with us. Nay quoth he,

A Letter sent from the Bayliffs, Lieutenant, and Jurates of St. Peters Port, to the Dean and Curates of the Isle of Garnsey

A Letter of the Bayliff to the Dean of Garnsey.

After Dean and Justices in your Court and Jurisdiction, after all amicable recommendations, please to you to know that we are informed by the disposition of certain honest men, past before us in manner of an inquiry; in the which inquiry Katherine Cawches, and her two daughters, have submitted themselves in a certain matter criminal: Wherein we be informed that they have been disobedient to the commandments and ordinances of the Church, in contemning and forsaking the Mass, and the ordinances of the same, against the will and commandment of our Sovereign Lord the King and the Queen. Whereof we send you the said matter, so far as much as the matter is spiritual, to the end you may proceed therein after your good discretion, and as briefly as you can possible, and also that it pertained to your office, recommending you to God, the which gave you grace to do that which pertained to right and justice. Written the first day of the month of July, in the year of our Lord 1556.

After these Letters and Information thus addressed to Jacques Amy Dean, and to other of the Clergy, the said women were again convened before the Justice aforesaid with his Assistants. In the presence of whom they being examined of their Faith, concerning the Ordinances of the Romish Church, made their Answer that they would obey and keep the Ordinances of the King and Queen, and the Commandments of the Church, notwithstanding that they had said and done the contrary in the time of King Edward the Sixth, in shewing obedience to his Ordinances and Commandments before. After which Answer taken, they were returned again to Prison, until the other had an answer of their Letter from the Dean and his Complices. During which time, the Dean and Curate gave their Information touching the said women, and delivered the same to the Bayliff and Jurates, condemning and reputing them for Hereticks, the women neither hearing of any Information, neither yet being ever examined at any time before of their Faith and Religion. Whereupon when the said Bayliff and Jurates understood that the said Dean and Curates had not examined the women of their Faith, they would not sit in Judgment on that day, but ordained the women to come first before the Dean and Curates to be examined of their Faith. And so the Officers, at the commandment of the Justices, did fetch and present them before the said Dean and Curates. The which being accomplished and done, they were examined apart severally one from another: After which Examination, they incontinently were returned again into Prison.

The names of the Persecutors which fate upon the death of the three women.

Then the fourteenth day of the said Month of July, in the year aforesaid, after the Examination above specified before Elier Gosselin Bayliff, in the Presence of Thomas Devicke, Pierres Martine, Nicholas Cary, John Bloude, Nicholas de Lisle, John Leverchaunt, John le Fever, Pierres Bonamy, Nicholas Martine, John de la Marche, Jurates; Sir Jacques Amy Dean, and the Curates, did deliver before the Justice, under the Seal of the Dean, and under the signs of the Curates, a certain Act and Sentence, the sum whereof was, that Katherine Cawches and her two daughters were found Hereticks, and such they reputed them, and have delivered them to Justice, to do execution according to the Sentence; of the which the tenor followeth.

The Sentence.

Katherine Cawches, Perrotine Maffley, Guillemine Gilbert, wrongfully condemned by the Dean and Justices.

The unjust Sentence of the Dean against the 3. Marys.

Anno 1556. Sollicitudo Catholica.

When this was done, commandment was given to the Kings Officers to go to the Caffle to fetch the said women, to hear the Sentence against them in the presence aforesaid. And they appearing before them, said in the ears of all the Auditory, that they would see their Accusers, and know them that have depose against them, because they might make Answers to their sayings and personages, and to have their Libel accordingly; for they knew not that they had offended the Majesties of the King and Queen, nor of the Church, but inirely would obey, serve, and keep the Ordinances of the King and Queen, and of the Church, as all good and true Subjects are bound to do. And for any breach of the King and Queens Laws that they had done, they required Justice. All which their Reasons and Allegations notwithstanding, the said poor women were Condemned, and adjudged to be burnt, until they were consumed unto ashes, according to a Sentence given by Elier Gosselin Bayliff: of the which Sentence the tenor hereafter followeth.

The three women willing to be comforted to the Queens Ordinances, were notwithstanding Condemned.

The effect of the Sentence in English.

The 17. (or some other think the 27. day of the month of July, 1556. Elier Gosselin Bayliff, in the presence of Thomas Devicke, Pierres Martine, Nicholas Cary, John Bloude, Nicholas Devic, John le Marchant, John le Reg, John Bayliff, Pierres Bonamy, Nicholas Martine, and John de la Marche, Jurates, Katherine Cawches, Perrotine Maffley, Guillemine Gilbert, the said Perrotine and Guillemine daughters to the said Katherine, are all condemned and judged this day to be burned, until they be consumed to ashes in the place accustomed, with the confiscation of all their goods, moveables, and heritages, to be in the hands of the King and Queens Majesties, according and after the effect of a Sentence delivered in Justice by Mr. Dean and the Curates, the 13. day of the month of July, in the year aforesaid, in the which they have been approved Hereticks.

The wilful Sentence and Murther of Elier Gosselin Bayliff, against the three innocent women in Garnsey.

After which Sentence pronounced, the said women did appeal unto the King and Queen, and their honourable Council, saying, That against reason and right they were condemned, and for that cause they made their Appeal; notwithstanding they could not be heard, but were delivered by the said Bailiff to the King and Queens Officers, to see the Execution done on them according to the said Sentence.

The time then being come, when these three good Servants and holy Saints of God, the innocent Mother and two daughters should suffer, in the place where they should consummate their Martyrdom were three Stakes set up. At the middle Post was the Mother, the eldest daughter on the right hand, the youngest on the other. They were first strangled, but the Rope brake before they were dead, and so the poor women fell in the fire. Perrotine, who was then great with Child, did fall on her side, where happened a rueful fight, not only to the eyes of all that there stood, but also to the ears of all true-hearted Christians that shall read this History. For as the belly of the woman burst asunder by the vehemency of the flame, the infant being a fair Man-child, fell into the fire, and effusions being taken out of the fire by one W. Hovse, was laid upon the Grass.

The Mother and two daughters made their Appeal to the King and Queen, but could not be heard.

Then was the Child had to the Provost, and from him to the Bayliff, who gave sentence that it should be carried back again and cast into the fire. And so the Infant baptized

Now forsomuch as this story percase, for the horrible strangeness of the fact, will be hardly believed of some, but rather thought to be forged, or else more amplified of me then truth will bear me out, therefore to discharge my credit herein, I have not only foretold thee a little before, how I received this story by the faithful relation both of the French and English; of them which were there present witnesses, and lookers upon; but also have hereto annexed the true supplication of the said Inhabitants of Garnsey, and of the Brother of the said two Sisters, complaining to the Queen and her Commissioners, concerning the horribleness of the Act; which Supplication, for the more evidence, here under followeth to be seen.

To the Right Honourable, and the Queens Highness most gracious Commissioners, for the hearing and determining of matters of Religion and causes Ecclesiastical.

Most lamentably and woefully complaining, sheweth unto your gracious and Honourable Lordships, your poor and humble Orator Matthew Cawches, of the Isle of Garnsey, that where Jaques Amy Clerk, Dean of the Isle aforesaid, assisted by the Curates there, against all Order, Law, and Reason, by colour of a Sentence of Heresie, pronounced against Katherine Cawches, the Sister of your Honours said Suppliant, and Perotine and Guillemine her two Daughters, did cause the said Katherine, being a poor Widow, and her said two Daughters most cruelly to be burned, although the said persons, nor any of them, did hold, maintain, or defend any thing directly against the Ecclesiastical Laws then in place, under the Reign of the late Queen Mary, but in all things submitted themselves obediently to the Laws then in force: and yet the cruelty of the said Dean and his Accomplices, in perpetrating such Murder as aforesaid, raged so far, that whereas, whilst the said persons did consume with violent Fire, the womb of the said Perotine being burned, there did issue from her a goodly Man-Child, which by the Officers was taken up and handled, and after in a most despicable manner thrown into the Fire, and there also with the silly Mother most cruelly burnt: In tender consideration whereof, and forsomuch as this Bloody Murder was not in due order of any Law, or in any manner according to Justice, but of meer malicious hatred, as the true Copy of the whole proceedings in this matter, by the said Dean and his Accomplices, here ready to be shewed to your Honours, will make very plain and manifest: It may therefore please your good and gracious Lordships, of the zeal that you bear to Justice, and for our Lord Jesus Christs sake, to have due consideration in Justice of such horrible Murder, so cruelly committed as aforesaid, according to the right demerit thereof. And that it may please your Honourable Lordships to order and decree also, that all the goods of all the said parties, by pretence aforesaid wrongfully taken as confiscate, may be delivered your said poor beseecher, to whom of right they do belong. And your Honours said Suppliant will daily pray to God for your long preservation, to his glory, and your everlasting health.

This Supplication being presented in manner aforesaid to the Queens Honourable Commissioners, in the year 1562. such order therein was taken, that the matter being returned again down to the said Country, further to be examined, the Dean thereupon was committed to Prison, and dispossessed of all his Livings. So that in conclusion, both he, and all other partakers of that Bloody Murder, whether of Conscience, or for fear of the Law, were driven not long after to acknowledge their trespass, and to submit themselves to the Queens pardon. The terror of whose several submission, as they are left in the Rolls, I thought here to publish to the World, for a memorial of the more truth of this story.

A Defence of this Garsney Story against Mr. Harding.

And thus have you the true narration of this History, discoursed without corrupting or falsifying any part or sentence thereof, no less faithfully of my part reported, then I received of them, who dwelling in the same Isle, and being present the same time, were best acquainted with the matter, and have given sufficient evidence, not only to me, but also to the Queens Highness Com.

Defence of this Garsney Story against Mr. Harding.

Anno 1556. Commissioners, concerning the same, as both by the Letter of the Bailiff, by the Sentence of the Dean, by the Supplication of the Plaintiff, and submission of the Parties, and likewise by the Queens pardon granted unto them, may well appear.

By all which proofs and circumstances thus debated, it remaineth manifest for all men to perceive, what cruelty and wrong was wrought against these poor women above specified, and no less matter offered, in a case so unjust, justly to expostulate, or rather to wonder at the hard hearts of these men, but especially of the Catholic Clergy of Garnsey, who professing the Gospel of Peace and Charity, should after the example of Christ walk in the steps of meekness and mercy, and yet contrary, not only to all Christian Charity and Manifestation, but also against all order of Equity or Humanity, were so extreme and rigorous to condemn them to the burning fire, under the pretended colour of Heresie. Who if they had been Hereticks indeed, yet mercy would have corrected the error, and saved life; equity would have considered mans weak fragility, at least true justice would have heard both the Parties advisedly, and also substantially have surveyed the cause, and not have rushed out the Sentence of Death so hastily as they did: yea, and though they had been Hereticks indeed, yet true Christian Charity would have stretched further, and at least have given them leisure and respite of time to reclaim themselves. But now what is here to be said? they being no Hereticks at all, as neither it could then, nor yet can be proved. For by King Edwards Religion (which was objected to them) were Hereticks, yet were they then no Hereticks, when they revoked the same; and if Queen Maries Religion were Heresie, then were they much more Hereticks themselves, which condemned them of Heresie.

But most of all we have herein to wonder at Master Harding, who in his late Rejoynder, written against the Bishop of Salisbury, notwithstanding all these evidences and demonstrations so certain and manifestly appearing, yet goeth about first to deny the story, terming it to be a fable; and afterward being forced to fly ad status infancie, to admit the story, he removed ad translationem criminis; and there seeking by all means to clear the Clergy from the spot of cruelty, transference the whole blame only upon the women that suffered; but principally upon Persine, whom he specially charged with two Capital Crimes; to wit, Whoredom and Murder.

And first, touching his Accusation of Whoredom, let us hear how he proveth this matter: Because (he saith) by story it is granted, that she was with child: and yet the Historiographer doth not declare (neither durst for shame) who was her Husband, or Father to the Child, &c. As though that Historiographers, being occupied in setting forth the Persecution of Gods People, suffering death for Religion and Doctrine of Christ, were bound, or had nothing else to do but to play the Sumner, and to bring forth who were Husbands to their Wives, and Fathers to their Children; which new found Law of History being never required before, nor observed of any Story writers. If Mr. Harding now shall exact of me, first let him begin with himself, and shew us (as wife as he is) who was his own Father, if he can. And yet I think not contrary, but his Mother was an honest woman. And no less also do I think of this of Persine aforesaid; whereof more shall be said (God willing) hereafter.

But in the mean time here cometh in the cavilling Objection of Mr. Harding, who beareth the Reader in hand, as though for shame I durst not, or of purpose would not express it, &c. My answer whereunto is this: First, to express every minute of matter in every Story occurrent, what Story-writer in all the world is able to perform it? Secondly, although it might be done, what reasonable Reader would require it? Thirdly, albeit some curious Readers would so require, yet I suppose neither requirer, nor convenient to be observed. And fourthly, what if it were not remembered of the Author? What if it were to him not known? What if it were of purpose omitted, as a matter not material to the purpose? Many other causes besides might incur, which the Reader knoweth not of. And shall it then by and be imputed to shame and blame, whatsoever in every narration is not expressed? or doth Mr. Harding himself, in all his Sermons, never premit any thing that conveniently might be inferred? Who was the Husband of this Persine, the Historiographer hath not expressed; I grant: and what thereof? Erge, Thereupon conclude he, that for shame I durst not. Nay, I may marvel rather, that he durst for shame utter such untidy Arguments, or so affectantly pronounce of another mans mind and purpose, which is as privy to him, as then it was to me unknown what was her Husbands name. And though it had been known, what was that material in the Story to be uttered? or what had it relieved the cruel parts of them, which burned both the Mother and Infant together, though the Infants Father had been expressed? And how then did I for shame conceal that which was not in my knowledge at that time (if I would) to express, nor in my suspicion to misdeem?

Nevertheless, if he be so greatly desirous (as he pretendeth) to know of me; who was this Infants Father, I will not stick with Mr. Harding, although I cannot swear for the matter, yet to take so much pain for his pleasure, to go as near as I may. For precisely and determinately to point out the right Father, either of this, or any Child; I trow, neither will Mr. Harding require it of me, neither is he able peradventure himself, being asked, to demonstrate his own. And yet, as much as I may, to satisfy his dainty desire herein, and partly to help the innocency of the woman, touching this demand, Who should be the Infants Father: Who, say I, but his own Mothers Husband? the name of which Husband was David Jones, a Minister, and married to the said Persine in King Edwards time, in the Church of our Ladies Castle Parish at Garnsey; the party which married them being called Mr. Noel Regner a Frenchman, and yet alive, witness hereunto, and now dwelling in London in S. Martins le grand.

Thus then, after my knowledge, I have shewed forth, for Mr. Hardings pleasure, the right Husband of this Persine, and what was his name, who was also alive, his wife being great with Child, and partaker of the Persecution of the same time, and a Schoolmaster afterward in Normandy, &c. Now if Mr. Harding can take any such advantage hereof to disprove that I have said; or be so privy to the begetting of this Child, that he can prove the said David Jones, which was the right Husband to this Wife, not to be the right Father to this Infant, let him shew herein his cunning by what mighty demonstrations he can induce us to deem the contrary; and as I shall see his reason, I shall shape him a answer, in such sort (I trust) that he will perceive, that Whoredom, whereof I may know it, shall find no bolstering by me; I wish it might find as little amongst the chaste Catholics of Mr. Hardings Church.

From this I proceed now to the second part of his infamous Accusation, wherein he chargeth her of Murder. A strange Case, that the which was murdered her self, with her Child, and died before him, should yet be accused to murder the Child. Murder doubtless is an horrible iniquity in any person; but the Mother to be murderer of her own Infant, it is a double abomination, and more then a Monster, so far disagreeing from all Nature, that it is not lightly to be furnished of any, without vehement causes of manifest probation.

Wherefore, to try out this matter more thoroughly touching this murdering Mother, let us see: First, what hand did the lay upon the Child? None. What weapon had she? None. Did she then drown it; or cast it in some pond, as we read of the Strumpets at Rome, whose Childrens heads were taken up in Pope Gregories Mote by hundreds, what time Priests began first to be restrained of a lawful Wedlock: witness the Epistle of Volusianus? or else did she throw it by the walls into some private corner, as I am credibly certified; that in the eighth year of Queen Elizabeth, certain Scaples and other young Infants bones were found and taken out with a stick in the hole of a stonie wall, in Lenton Abbey, by certain Gentlemen within the Country of Northampton, James Barusse, Richard Loveis, and W. Love.

Or otherwise did she take any hurtful drink to impoisonate the Child within her, as commonly it is reported few Nunneries to have been in England, wherein such a Tree hath not been growing within their ground, meet for practising of such a purpose? Neither so, nor so. What then? did she purposely and wittingly thrust her self in jeopardy, to the destruction of her Child, when she needed not, as Pope Joan, when she might have kept her Bed, would needs adventure forth in Procession, where both she her self, and her Infant perished in the open street?

Mr. Harding proven Pe-rotine to be a murderer.

Well then, thus much by this hitherto alledged and granted, we have gotten this woman here to be accused of murdering her Child, which neither laid hand upon it, nor used weapon against it; neither used any other practise in drowning, hanging, breaking, burying, poisoning, or any other wilful means, whereby to destroy it. And how then? by what manner of way was this woman a murderer of her young Babe? Forsooth (saith Mr. Harding) when she was accused and condemned to be burned, she did not claim the benefit of her Belly, whereby the life both of her self for the time might have been delayed, and the Child preserved.

Whether she did or no, I have not perfectly to say; no more, I ween, hath Mr. Harding. Howbeit this is certain, and by witness known, that she uttered no less to her Ghostly Father in Confession. And what if she had opened the same to the Judges? They would (saith he) have spared her life for the time, and so the Innocent had been preserved. And how is Mr. Harding sure of this, more then was the life spared of the young Lady, and Multres sometime of Mr. Harding, who suffered, notwithstanding she was reported of some to be with Child; because the Law (saith he) is beneficial to women in her case, claiming the benefit thereof.

of Perotine.

The Law so giveth, I grant. But it followeth not therefore, whatsoever the Law giveth or prescribeth, the same to be put by and by in execution. But many times the Law goeth as it pleaseth them which have the handling of the Law. As for example; the Law willeth none to be condemned by Sentence of Death for Heresie, which the first time revoke their opinion, and yet contrary to this Law they condemned her unlawfully. Again, the like Law, none to be executed for Heresie, before the Writ be sent down De Comburendo, and yet contrary to this Law, without any such Writ, (as far as I yet understand) they burned her most cruelly. And what Law then was here to be looked for of these men, who in their doings herein seemed neither to observe Law, nor to regard Honesty, nor much to pass for Charity? And albeit she had claimed never so much the privilege of the Law, what had that availed with those men, whose hunting altogether (as by their own proceedings may appear) seemeth to be for the household goods of these women, which after their death immediately they incoached into their own hands.

Lack in the Judges.

But be it admitted, that neither she demanded this benefit of the Law, nor that the Judges would ever have denied her, if she had so done; yet it had been the part of a grave Accuser, before he had been descended into such a railing action of murder against a poor woman now dead and gone, first to have advised wisely with himself, whether it might be, that she had no such intelligence what benefit the Law would have given, in case it had been required. For not unlike it is, and well may be thought, rather yea, than no, that the simple woman, brought up all her life long in her Mothers house in an obscure Island, and in such an out-corner of the Realm, far off from the Court, and practise of English Laws, never heard before of any such benefit of the Law; and therefore upon meer simplicity, and for lack of skill required it not, because she knew not what to require. Peradventure also her Senies might be so affonied with the greatness and fuddeness of the fear, that it was out of her remembrance. Certes, it had been the duty of the Judges, which knew the Law, and having of the woman before them, could not be ignorant of her case, to have questioned with her thereof, and to have holpen her simplicity in that behalf. Or at least; if they

to blame.

But all this denieth Mr. Harding, and to aggravate the matter, inferreth, that the not of any simple unskilfulness of the Law, but only of meer wilfulness, for a voiding of worldly shame, concealed her own turpitude, and so became a murderer of her Babe, &c. These be the words of Mr. Harding, written by him not of any sure ground, but only upon his Catholick conjecture; for other demonstration certainly to prove this true, he bringeth none. Wherefore to answer conjecture by conjecture, thus I reply to him again, That in case she had been asked the question of the Judges and Inquiritors, whether she had been with child, and then had denied the same; or else if she, by any other colourable means, had cloaked her being with child, whereby it should not appear, this Accuser might have spoken probable advantage against the woman. Now, as Perotine as she was never demanded of their parts any such question, nor did ever deny any such matter; so to answer this man with as good probability, I hold, that in case they had required that matter of her, she would never have denied it. And therefore whereas she is accused for her not uttering of her being with Child; why may she not, by as good reason again be defended for not denying the same?

The state of
Mr. Harding's Accusation.

But she should have uttered it, saith he. It had been well done, say I; and I would she had: but yet that is not the question between him and me, what she should have done, but why she did it not. Mr. Harding wandering in his blind fumes, phantaseth the cause only to be, for hiding her dishonesty, and for that she would not shame the Gospel. So that in summa, to this effect tendeth all his Accusation.

Perotine being big with child, at her Condemnation did not shew it to the Judges:

Ergo, She did it to conceal her turpitude, and because she would not shame the Gospel.

Mr. Harding
Argument.

But here this Accuser must understand, if he have not forgot his Logick, that such Arguments which do truly hold a signis, do always presuppose, that the signs which go before the things signified, must be necessary, perpetual and firm, as is between causes natural and their effects. Otherwise, if the signs be doubtful, voluntary, or accidental, there is no firm consequent can proceed thereof.

The Argument accused.

Now, if the said Accuser should be put to his proof, how to justify this his sequel to be true by evident demonstration, that she did it only for covering her dishonesty; I suppose verily he should be found to say more than he is able to make good, and in conclusion should be brought into the like case, as were the Pharisees, who coming to accuse the Adulterers before Christ, went away mute, with as much shame out of the Temple, as the woman her self came in, having not one word to answer. For, a man to pronounce assuredly upon the secret cogitation and intent either of man or woman, farther than by utterance of speech is to him signified, passeth his capacity, and is to be left only to him, which is scrutans corda & renes Deus.

Arguments of signs and conjectures, how they hold.

But forasmuch as Mr. Harding worketh (as I said) by surmises, confirming every thing to the world, let us see what may be surmised as much again to the contrary, concerning the quality of this surmised murder: wherein divers things are to be considered, as hereunder followeth.

The first Conjecture is this, That such manner of women, which for worldly shame are disposed to murder their children, have other ways to compass that wickedness, then by silence keeping. Now, as touching this Perotine going to be burned, neither could this silence save her, if she would, from worldly shame, neither is it to be thought any such intent ever to be in her, to murder her child; as might well appear in her Mothers house, where if she might have continued her whole time out, she intended no less but honestly to be brought to bed, and to nurse up her Child, neither caring for shame of the world, nor fearing any slander to the Gospel. Whereby may be

The first Conjecture.

Anno 1556. be argued, that no such intent of murder was ever in her thought.

For how is it like that she, which had gone so long with Child, almost to the full time of her deliverance; and never thought, nor wrought any hurt to the Infant all that while, should now, going to her own death, mind more hurt to her child, then she did before, hoping her self to live?

The second conjecture. Secondly, how knoweth Master Harding to the contrary, but that she was known in the Town to be with Child, and went boldly abroad without note of any shame, before the time she came in trouble? Which being true, shame then could be no cause, why she should conceal her Child more now after her Condemnation, then she did before she was condemned.

The third conjecture. Thirdly, admit the case it was not known before, what advantage thereby should rise to her being now appointed to dye, by concealing her being with Child? She should have eschewed (saith M. Harding) the publick shame and obloquy of the World, in that none should have known her to be with Child. First, what shame was it for a married Wife to be noted to be with Child? Again, what gain had that been to her, to avoid the shame and fame of the World, which had not to live in the World, being now condemned to dye?

The fourth conjecture. Fourthly, how is it like, that for shame she meant to conceal that from the World, which both knew she should not live in the World, and also suffer that kind of death whereby her Child could not be hidden from the sight of the World, though she had gone about her self never so much to conceal it?

The fifth conjecture. Fifthly, how is it like, that any Woman, going to such a sharp punishment of Fire to be consumed, would let for any Worldly shame to rescue her own Life from so bitter torment, at least so long as the might, beside a safeguard also of her Child, if by any means she had any remedy.

The sixth conjecture. Sixthly, forasmuch as Master Harding doth so hainously charge her with the wilful murdering of her own natural Child, let all indifferent Consciences thus consider with themselves, what was the cause that moved her so willingly to recant as she did, but partly to save her own Life, and especially the poor innocent? Whereby it is manifest to be understood, what a motherly affect on she had to save her infant, if the Fathers of the spirituality had not been so cruel, against all order of Law to cast both her and her Child away, all this her said recantation notwithstanding.

The seventh conjecture. Seventhly and lastly, when Master Harding hath weighed all that ever he can against this poor Peronne, yet is all the same but a by-matter from this principal purpose pretended, supposing thereby, through his depraving of her, to justify and excuse the Popes Holy Clergy, which wrought her death. Which will not be: For whatsoever her Life was besides, yet forasmuch as the cause of her death and condemnation was neither for theft, whoredom, nor murder, but only and merely for Religion, which deserved no death, I therefore having in my story no further to deal, as I said before, so do I say again, that the cause of her condemning was wrongful, her death was cruel, the sight of the Babe was rueful, the proceeding of the Judges was unlawful, the whole story is pitiful, and of all this the Priest and Clergy were the Authors principal. All which being considered, and well expended, Master Harding, I trust, may stand sufficiently contented. Or if he think murder to be a thing, which ought not (as it ought not indeed) lightly to be passed over, let him then find out murder where it is, and tell us truly without affection of partiality, where the true murder lieth; whether in the poor Woman, which together with her Child was murdered, or in them, which without all Law and Conscience brought them both to death.

The conclusion of this defence. Briefly and finally to conclude with this Man, whatsoever the Woman was, she is now gone. To bite so bitterly against the dead is little honesty. And though the accusation had in it some truth, yet this accusation here needed not. Now the same being false, it is too much unmerciful. At least being doubtful and to him unknown, charity would have judged the best. Humanity would have spared the dead. And if he could not afford her his good word; yet he might have left her cause unto the Lord, which shall judge both her and him. To pray for the dead he findeth in his Mass; but to backbite the dead, he neither findeth in his Mass; Matens, nor Evensong. And no doubt but in his Dirige and Commendations he commendeth many a one, less deserving to be commended then this Woman; let Catholick affection be set aside. And though the merits of her cause deserved not his commendations, yet did she never deserve at Master Hardings hand to give her such a Kriselen (as they say) after her departure. Cruelly she suffered enough alive, though Master Harding had not added this cruel invective to her former afflictions: wherein notwithstanding he hurseth not her, but hurseth peradventure himself, neither so much disdaineth her honesty, as he blemisheth his own. It hath been the manner of learned Men in time past, with their defending Oration ever to be more ready, then to accuse. And if they did at any time accuse, yet never but enforced; neither did they accuse any but such only as were alive, and that neither but in such matters, wherein either the Common-Wealth or themselves were vehemently touched.

Now if this grieve him so greatly, that in my story I have termed her to be a Martyr; let him consider the cause wherefore she suffered, which was neither for Felony, Murder, nor Whoredom, but only for the Religion in King Edwards time received; and when he hath considered that Religion, I shall cross her out of the Book and fellowship of Martyrs. In the mean time my exhortation shall be this to Master Harding.

First, that if he will needs become a writer in these so furious and outrageous days of ours, he will feast his Vein of writings with more mildness and charity, and not give such example of railing to others.

Secondly, that he will moderate his judging and condemning of other with more equity and indifference, and not to be so rash and partial. For if she be to be accounted a murderer, which so carefully went about by recantation to save both her self and her Child from the Fire; what is to be said of them which condemned her so cruelly, and caused both her and the Infant to be burned, notwithstanding that she for safeguard of their Lives had (as I said) recanted. And yet so partial is he, that in all this invective, crying out so intemperately against the Woman and the Child that were burned, he speaketh never a word of their condemners and true murderers indeed.

Thirdly, forasmuch as Master Harding is here in hand with infanticide, and with a casting away young Childrens lives, I would wish, that as he hath lifted the doings of this Woman to the uttermost, who was rather murdered then a murderer; so he would with an indifferent eye look on the other side a little upon them of his own Clergy, and see what he could find there amongst those wilful contemners of immaculate marriage. Not that I do accuse any of incontinency, whose lives I know not, but there is one above, that well knoweth and seeth all things, be they never so secret to Man, and most certainly will pay home at length with Fire and Brimstone when he seeth his time.

I say no more, and not so much as I might, following herein the Painters, which when their colours will not serve to expresse a thing that they mean, they shadow it with a veil. But howsoever the matter goeth with them, whether they may or may not be suspected touching this crime aforesaid of infanticide; most sure and manifest it is that they are more then worthily to be accused of homicide in murdering the Children and Servants of God, both men and women, wives and mayds, old and young, blind and lame, mad and unmad, discreet and simple innocents, learned with the unlearned, and that of all degrees, from the high Archbishop to the Clerk and Sexton of the Church, and that most wrongfully and wilfully, with such effusion of innocent Christian Blood, as crieth up daily to God for vengeance.

And therefore Master Harding, in my mind should do well, to spare a little time from these his invectives, wherewith he appeareth the poor Protestants of Murder, whom they have murdered themselves, and exercise his pen with some more fruitful matter, to exhort these spiritual Fathers first to cease from murdering of their own Children, Exhortation to M. Harding.

dren , to spare the Blood of Innocents , and not to persecute Christ so cruelly in his members as they do : And furthermore , to exhort in like manner these Agamils , and wilful rejecters of Matrimony , to take themselves to lawful wives , and not to resist Gods Holy Ordinance , nor encounter his Institution with another contrary Institution of their own devising , lest perhaps they prevented by fragility , may fall into danger of such inconveniences above touched : which if they be not in them , I shall be glad ; but if they be , it is neither their railing against the poor Protestants , nor yet their secret auricular confession , that shall cover their iniquities from the face of the Lord , when he shall come to reveal abscōdita tenebrarum , & judicare seculum per ignem .

The part of a true accuser.

And thus , for lack of further leisure , I end with Master Harding ; having no more at this time to say unto him , but with him to fear God , to embrace his truth , to remember himself , and to cease from this uncharitable railing and brawling , especially against the dead , which cannot answer him ; Or if he will needs continue still to be such a vehement accuser of other , yet that he will remember what belongeth to the part of a right accuser : First , that his accusation be true ; secondly , that no blind affection of partiality be mixt withal : thirdly , whosoever taketh upon him to carp and appeach the crimes of other , ought themselves to be sincere and upright , and to see what may be written in their own foreheads .

Whoredom and Murder be grievous offences , and worthy to be accused . But to accuse of Murder the parties that were murdered , and to leave the other persons untouched which were the true murderers , it is the part of an accuser , which deferreth himself to be accused of partiality .

As verily I think by this Woman , that if she had been a Catholick Papist , and a devout follower of their Church , as she was a Protestant , she had neither been condemned then alive of them , nor now accused , being dead , of M. Harding . But God forgive him , and make him a good Man if it be his will .

July 26.

AS the Bloody rage of this persecution spared neither man , woman nor child , wife nor maid , lame , blind nor cripple , and so through all Men and Women , as there was no difference either of Age or Sex considered , so neither was there any condition or quality respected of any person : but whosoever he were , that held not as they did on the Pope , and Sacrament of the Altar , were he learned or unlearned , wife , or simple innocent , all went to the fire , as may appear by this simple poor Creature and innocent Soul , named Thomas Moor , retaining as a Servant to a Mans House in the Town of Leicester , about the age of 24. and after manner of an Husbandman , who for speaking certain words , that his Maker was in Heaven , and not in the Pix , was thereupon apprehended in the Country , being with his friends . Who coming before his Ordinary , first was asked , whether he did not believe his Maker there to be , pointing to the high Altar . Which he denied .

Then asked the Bishop , How then , said he , dost thou believe ?

The young Man answered again ; as his Creed did teach him .

hanging about the Pix , what is within I cannot see . Why ? Dost thou not believe , said the Bishop , Christ to be there , Flesh , Blood , and Bone ? No , that I do not , said he .

Whereupon the Ordinary making short with him , read the Sentence , and so condemned the true and Faithful Servant of Christ to death , in Saint Margarets Church in Leicester ; who was burnt , and suffered a joyful and glorious Martyrdom , for the testimony of righteousness in the same Town of Leicester , the year of our Lord above mentioned , 1556. about the 26. of June .

To this Thomas Moor , we have also annexed the Answers and Examination of one John Jackson , before Doctor Cook , one of the Commissioners , for that it belongeth much unto the same time .

The Examination of John Jackson , had before Doctor Cook , the 11. day of March , Anno 1556.

First , when I came before him , he railed on me , and called me Hereticke . I answered and said , I am no Hereticke .

Cook . Yes quoth he . For M. Read told me , that thou wast the rankest Hereticke of all them in the King .

Bench .
Jackson . I said , I knew him not .
Cook . No , quoth he ? Yes , he examined thee at the King .

Bench .
Jack . I answered him , and said , he examined five other , but not me .

Cook . Then answer me : what sayest thou to the blessed Sacrament of the Altar ? tell me .

Jack . I answered , it is a diffute question , to ask me at the first dally , you promising to deliver me .

Cook . What an Hereticke is this , quoth he ?

Jack . I said , it is easier to call a Man Hereticke , then to prove him one .

Cook . Then he said , What Church art thou of ?

Jack . What Church , quoth I ? I am of the same Church that is builded on the Foundation of the Prophets and the Apostles , Jesus Christ being the head corner stone .

Cook . Thou art an Hereticke , quoth he .

Jack . I said , Yea , quoth I ? how can that be , seeing that I am of that Church ? I am sure that you will not say that the Prophets and Apostles were Heretics .

Cook . No , quoth he . But what sayest thou to the blessed Sacrament of the Altar again ? Tell me .

Jack . I answered him and said , I find it not written .

Cook . No , quoth he ? Keeper away with him .

Jack . Yet I tarried there long , and did talk with him , and I said ; Sir , I can be content to be tractable , and obedient to the Word of God .

Cook . He answered and said to me , that I knew not what the Word of God meant , nor yet whether it were true or not .

Jack . I answered , and said to him , yea that I do .

Cook . Whereby , quoth he ?

Jack . Hereby , said I . Our Saviour Christ saith ; Search the Scriptures , for in them you think to have eternal life . For they be they that testify of me .

Cook . This is a wise proof , quoth he .

Jack . Is it so , quoth I ? What say you then to these words that the Prophet David said ? Whatsoever he be that feareth the Lord , he will shew him the way that he hath chosen : his Soul shall dwell at ease , and his seed shall possess the land . The secrets of the Lord are among them that fear him , and he sheweth them his covenant .

Cook . Well , quoth he , you shall be rid shortly one way or other .

Jack . Then I said to him , my life lieth not in mans hands ; therefore no Man shall do more unto me then God will suffer him .

Cook . No , quoth he ? Thou art a stubborn and naughty fellow .

Jack . You cannot so judg of me , quoth I , except you did see some evil by me .

Cook . No , quoth he ? Why may not I judge thee , as well as thou and thy fellows judge us , and call us Papists ?

Jack . Why , quoth I ? that is no Judgment : but Christ

Jack. I am contented with that, quoth I; and so we departed. I answered no further in this matter, because I thought he should not have my Blood in a corner. But I hope in the living God, that when the time shall come, before the Congregation I shall shake their building after another manner of fashion. For they build but upon the sand, and their walls be dawbed with untempered mortar, and therefore they cannot stand long.

Of this John Jackson, besides these his foresaid Answers and Examination before D. Cook one of the Commissioners, no more as yet came unto our hands:

The Examination of John Newman, Martyr, which is to be referred to his story before.

John Newman was first apprehended in Kent, dwelling in the Town of Maidstone, and there was examined before D. Thornton Suffragan and others, at Tenterden. From thence he was brought to Boner, and there condemned with Master Denley and Packingham and burned at Saffron Walden, as is before storied. But because his Examinations and Answers before the Suffragan came not then to my hands, I thought here in this place to bestow them, rather than they should utterly be suppressed. And first what his answers were by writing to the said Suffragan after his apprehension, you shall hear by the tenor of his own words, as follow.

The copy of I may please you to understand, that for the space of all the time of King Edwards Reign, we were diligently intrusted with continual Sermons, made by such Men, whose faith, wisdom, learning, and vertuous living was commended unto all Men, under the Kings hand and Seal, and under the hands of the whole Council. These Men taught diligently a long time, persuading us by the allegations of Gods Word, that there was no Transubstantiation, nor corporal presence in the Sacrament. Their Doctrine was not believed of us suddenly, but by their continual preaching, and also by our continual Prayer unto God, that we might never be deceived, but if it were true that God would incline our hearts unto it; and if it were not true, that we might never believe it.

We weighed that they laboured with Gods Word, and we asked the advice of our friends; neither could we find that they Preached false Doctrine. We considered also, as we did learn, that the Kings Grace and his Council, and the most part of all the whole Realm, believed as they taught, because no Man Preached the contrary. Also we knew, that the Preachers were commanded by the King, and the Laws of the Realm, to Preach unto us such Doctrine, as was to the Authority of Gods Word agreeable, and none other. And by their diligent setting forth of it, by the Kings Commandment, and the consent of the whole Council, and by the Authority of the Parliament, we embraced it, and received it, as a very infallible truth taught unto us for the space of seven years. Wherefore until such time as our Consciences are otherwise taught and instructed by Gods Word, we cannot with safeguard of our Consciences take it, as many suppose at this time. And we trust in God, that the Queens merciful Highness, neither yet her most Honourable Council, will in a matter of faith use compulsion or violence, because faith is the gift of God, and cometh not of Man, neither of Mans Law; neither at such time as Men require it, but at such time as God giveth it.

The Examination and Answers of John Newman, Martyr, before Doctor Thornton, and others.

Irist, one of the Doctors, or one of the Bench, either the Archdeacon, or Fauced, or some other, whose Name John Newman doth not express, beginneth, asking in this wise.

Doctor. How say you to this? This is my Body, which is given for you.

Newman. It is a figurative speech, one thing spoken, and another meant, as Christ faith, I am a vine, I am a door, I am a Stone, &c. Is he therefore a material Ruse, a vine, or a door?

Doct. This is no figurative speech. For he faith, This is my Body, which is given for you. And so faith he not of the Ruse, vine, or door; but that is a figurative speech.

New. Christ faith, This cup is the New Testament in my Blood. If ye will have it so meant, then let them take and eat the Cup.

Doctor. Nay, that is not so meant; so it is a common phrase of speech among our selves: We say to our friend, Drink a Cup of drink, and yet we mean he should drink the drink in the Cup.

New. Why, if ye will have the one so understood, ye must so understand the other.

Doct. Nay, it is a common use of speech, to say drink a Cup of Ale or Beer: and therefore it is no figurative speech.

New. The often using of a thing, doth not make that thing otherwise then it is: but whosoever one thing is spoken, and another meant; it is a figurative speech.

Doct. Well, we will not stand here about. How say ye by the Real Presence? is not Christs Natural Body there that was born of the Virgin Mary?

New. No, I do not so believe, neither can I so believe; for the Soul of Man doth not feed upon natural things, as the Body doth.

Doct. Why, how then doth it feed?

New. I think the Soul of Man doth feed as the Angels in Heaven, whose feeding is only the pleasure, joy, felicity, and delectation that they have of God; and so the Soul of Man doth feed and eat, through faith, the Body of Christ.

Collins. Yea, but if the Body do not feed upon natural things, the Soul cannot continue with the Body: therefore the Body must needs feed upon natural things, that both may live together.

New. I grant it to be true: but yet the Soul doth live otherwise then the Body, which doth perish; therefore natural things do but feed the Body only. I pray you what did Judas receive at the Supper?

Collins. Marry, Judas did receive the very Body of Christ, but it was to his damnation.

New. Why? was the Devil entred into him before? Then he had both the Devil and Christ in him at one time.

Collins. Nay, the Devil did enter into him afterward. New. Yea, and before too: what do you think? had he but one Devil? Nay, I think he had rather a legion of Devils at the latter end.

Collins. Well, put case it be so, what say you to that?

New. Marry, if Christ and the Devil were both in Judas at once, I pray you how did they two agree together?

Collins. We grant they were both in Judas at that time; for Christ may be where the Devil is, if he will; but the Devil cannot be where Christ is, except it please Christ.

New. Christ will not be in an unclean person that hath the Devil.

Thornton. Why, will ye not believe that Christ was in Hell? yet ye will grant that the Devil is there; and so might he be in Judas if it pleased him.

New. Christ would not suffer Mary Magdalene to touch him, which fought him at his Grave, and did love him intirely; much less he will suffer an ungodly man to receive him into his unclean body.

Thorn. Yes, seeing God may do all things, he may do what he list, and be where he will: And doth not the Psalmist say, He is in Hell, and in all places? Why should we then doubt of his being there?

New. Though his Godhead be in all places, yet that is not sufficient to prove that his Humanity is in all places.

Thorn. No? Do you not believe that God is Omnipotent, and may do all things?

New. I do believe that God is Almighty, and may do all that he will do.

The Omnipotency of Christ doth not prove him to be really in the Sacrament.

Thorn. Nay, but if he be Omnipotent, he may do all things, and there is nothing impossible for him to do.

New. I know God is Almighty, and can do all that he will; but he cannot make his Son a liar, he cannot deny himself, nor can he restore Virginity once violated and defiled.

Thorn. What is that to your purpose? God doth not defile Virginity; we speak but of things that God doth.

New. Why? will ye have the Humanity of Christ in all places, as the Deity is?

Aburdity in the Popes Doctrine.

Thorn. Yea, he is in all places, as the Deity is, if it please him.

New. I will promise you that seemeth to me a very great Heresie; for Heaven and Earth are not able to contain the Divine Power of God: for it is in all places, as here and in every place; and yet ye will say, that where-soever the Deity is, there is also the Humanity; and so ye will make him no body, but a phantastical body, and not a body indeed.

Thorn. Nay, we do not say he is in all places, as the Deity is; but if it please him, he may be in all places with the Deity.

The Humanity of Christ may not be in all places.

New. I promise you that seemeth to me as great a Heresie as ever I heard of in my life, and I dare not grant it, lest I should deny Christ to be a very Man, and that were against all the Scriptures.

Thorn. Tush, what shall we stand reasoning with him? I dare say he doth not believe that Christ came out of his Mother, not opening the Matrice. Do you believe that Christ rose from death, and came thorow the stone?

New. I do believe that Christ rose from death, but I do not believe that he came thorow the stone, neither doth the Scripture so say.

Thorn. Lo, how say you? he doth not believe that Christ came thorow the stone: And if he doth not believe this, how shall he believe the other? If he could believe this, it were easie for him to believe the other.

Note the gross ignorance of this Subtlety.

New. The Scripture doth not say he went thorow the stone, but it saith the Angels of God came down, and rolled away the stone, and for fear of him the Keepers became even as dead men.

Thorn. Ah fool, ah fool! that was because the women should see that he was risen again from death.

New. Well, the Scripture maketh as much for me, as it doth for you, and more too.

Thorn. Well, let us not stand any longer about him. Back again to the Real Presence. How say ye? is the Body of Christ really in the Sacrament, or no?

New. I have answered you already.

Thorn. Well, do ye not believe that he is there really?

New. No, I believe it not.

Thorn. Well, will ye stand to it?

New. I must needs stand to it, till I be perswaded to a further truth.

Thorn. Nay, ye will not be perswaded, but stand to your own Opinion.

New. Nay, I stand not to mine own Opinion, God I take to witness, but only to the Scriptures of God, and that can all those that stand here witness with me, and nothing but the Scriptures: and I take God to witness, that I do nothing of presumption, but that which I do is only in regard of my Confidence; and if there be a further truth than I see, except it appear a truth to me, I cannot receive it as a truth. And seeing Faith is the gift of God, and cometh not of man (for it is not you that can give me Faith, nor any man else) therefore

I trust ye will bear the more with me, seeing it must be wrought by God; and when it shall please God to open a further truth to me, I shall receive it with all my heart, and embrace it. Anno 1556.

Thorn. had many other questions, which I did not bear away; but as I do understand, these are the chiefest: as for taunts, foolish and unlearned, he lacked none. Praise God for his gifts, and God increase in us strength.

The Argument of John Newman.

If the Body of Christ were really and bodily in the Sacrament, then who-soever received the Sacrament, received also the Body.

The wicked, receiving the Sacrament, receive not the Body of Christ:

Ergo, The Body of Christ is not really in the Sacrament.

Argument.

Ca- They which eat the Flesh, and drink the Blood of Christ, dwell in him, and he in them.

mes- The wicked dwell not in Christ, nor he in them: tres. Ergo, The wicked eat not the Flesh, nor drink the Blood of Christ.

Argument.

Ca- They that have Christ dwelling in them, bring forth much fruit. John 15. He that dwelleth in me, and I in him, bringeth forth much fruit, &c.

mes- The wicked bringeth forth no fruit of goodness: tres. Ergo, They have not Christs Body dwelling in them

Argument.

De- Where remembrance is of a thing, there is imported the absence thereof.

ti- Remembrance of Christs Body is in the Sacrament; Do this in remembrance of me, &c.

fi. Ergo, Christs Body there is imported to be absent.

Marry they will say, We see him not with our outward eyes; but he is commended under the Forms of Bread and Wine: and that that we see, is nothing but a Quality or an Accident. But let them shew me a Quality or an Accident without a Substance, and I will believe them. And thus much concerning Newman's Examinations and Arguments, whose Martyrdom is before expressed.

The Martyrdom of Joan Wasse, a blind woman, in the Town of Derby.

The first day of August, in the year above specified, suffered likewise at the Town of Derby a certain poor honest godly woman, being blind from her birth, and unmarried, about the Age of 22. named Joan Wasse, of the Parish of Alballovi. Of them that fate upon this innocent woman blood, the chiefest was Ralph Baise Bishop of the Diocess, Dr. Draicot his Chancellor, Sir John Perre Knight, Henry Vernon Esquire, Peter Finch Official of Derby, with the assistance also of divers other, Richard Ward, and William Bembridge the same time being Bayliffs of the Town of Derby, &c. First, after the above-named Bishop and Doctor Draicot had caused the said Joan Wasse to be apprehended in the Town of Derby, suspecting her to be guilty of certain Heresies, she was divers times privily examined, as well in Prison as out of Prison, by Finch the Official aforesaid: After that, brought to publick Examination before the Bishop; at last, was there burnt in Derby, as is aforesaid. Touching whose life, bringing up, and conversation, somewhat more amply we mind to discourse, as by faithful relation hath come to my hands.

First, This Joan Wasse was the daughter of one William Wasse, an honest poor man, and by his Science a Barber, who sometimes also used to make Ropes. His Wife had the same Joan and one other at one birth, and the same was blind. And when the was about 1556.

Anno

12. or 14. years old, she learned to knit hosen and sleeves, and other things, which in time she could do very well. Furthermore, as time served, she would help her Father to turn ropes, and do such other things as she was able, and in no case would be idle. Thus continued she with her Father and Mother, during their lives. After whose departure, then kept she with one Roger Waste her Brother, who in the time of King Edward the sixth, of blessed memory, gave her self daily to go to the Church to hear Divine Service read in the vulgar Tongue. And thus by hearing Homilies and Sermons, she became marvelously well affected to the Religion then taught. So at length having by her labour gotten and saved so much money as would buy her a New Testament, she caused one to be provided for her. And though she was of her self unlearned, and by reason of her blindness unable to read, yet for the great desire she had to understand, and have printed in her memory the sayings of the Holy Scriptures contained in the New Testament, she acquainted her self chiefly with one John Hurt, then Prisoner in the Common Hall of Derby for debts.

The earnest desire of Joan Waste to learn the Scriptures. John Hurt and John Peremerton read to her the Scriptures.

The same John Hurt being a sober grave Man, of the Age of threescore and ten years, by her earnest entreaty, and being Prisoner, and many times idle and without company, did for his exercise daily read unto her some one Chapter of the New Testament. And if at any time he were otherwise occupied or letted through sickness, she would repair unto one John Peremerton Clerk of the Parish Church of All-Saints in the same Town of Derby, or to some other person which could read, and sometime she would give a penny or two (as she might spare) to such persons as would not freely read unto her, appointing unto them afterward how many Chapters of the New Testament they should read, or how often they should repeat one Chapter upon a price.

A notable gift of God in a blind Woman.

Moreover, in the said Joan Waste this was notorious, that she being utterly blind, could notwithstanding, without a guide, go to any Church within the said Town of Derby, or at any other place or person, with whom she had any such exercise. By the which exercise she profited, that she was able not only to recite many Chapters of the New Testament without Book, but also could aptly impugn, by divers places of Scriptures, as well sin, as such abuses in Religion, as then were too much in use in divers and sundry Persons.

Joan Waste both blind and unlearned, yet was perfect in the Scriptures.

As this Godly Woman thus daily increased in the knowledge of Gods Holy Word, and no less in her life expressed the virtuous fruits and exercise of the same: Not long after, through the fatal death of blessed King Edward followed the woful ruin of Religion in the Reign of Queen Mary his sister. In which alteration, notwithstanding the general backsliding of the greatest part and multitude of the whole Realm into the old Papism again, yet this poor blind Woman, continuing in a constant Conscience, proceeded still in her former exercise, both being zealous in that she had learned, and also refusing to communicate in Religion with those which taught contrary Doctrine to that she before had learned in King Edward's time, as it is above declared.

For the which she was called and convented before the foresaid Bishop and Doctor Draicot, with divers other called in to bear witness.

Articles ministred unto her.

The Articles ministred unto her, and wherewith she was charged, were these: First, that she did hold the Sacrament of the Altar to be but only a memory or representation of Christs Body, and material Bread and Wine, but not his Natural Body, unless it were received. And that it ought not to be reserved from time to time over the Altar, but immediately to be received, &c.

Item, That she did hold, in receiving of the Sacrament of the Altar, she did not receive the same Body that was born of the Virgin Mary, and suffered upon the Cross for our redemption, &c.

Item, She did hold, that Christ at his last Supper did not bless the Bread that he had then in his hands, but was blessed himself, and by the virtue of the words of Consecration, the substance of the Bread and Wine is not converted & turned into the substance of the Body & Blood of Christ.

Item, That she did grant that she was of the Parish of All-Hallows in Derby, &c.

Item, That all and singular the premises are true and notorious by public report and fame, &c.

Whereunto she answered, that she believed therein so much as the Holy Scripture taught her, and according to that she had heard Preached unto her by divers learned Men. Whereof some suffered Imprisonment, and other some suffered death for the same Doctrine. Amongst whom the named, beside other, Dr. Taylor, who she said, took it of his Conscience, that that Doctrine which he taught was true, and asked of them, if they would do so in like case for their Doctrine: which if they would not, she desired them for Gods sake not to trouble her, being a blind, poor, and unlearned Woman, with any further talk, saying (by Gods assistance) that she was ready to yield up her Life in that Faith, in such sort as they should appoint.

And yet notwithstanding being prest by the said Bishop and Doctor Draicot, with many Arguments of Christs omnipotency, as, why was not Christ able as well to make the Bread his Body, as to turn Water into Wine, raise Lazarus from the dead: and such other like Arguments; and many times being threatened with grievous imprisonments, torments, and death: The poor Woman thus being, as it were, half astonished through their terrors and threats, and desirous (as it seemed) to prolong her Life, offered unto the Bishop then present, that if he would before that company, take it upon his Conscience, that that Doctrine which he would have her to believe concerning the Sacrament was true, and that he would at the dreadful day of Judgment answer for her therein (as the said Doctor Taylor in divers of his Sermons did offer) he would then further answer them.

Whereunto the Bishop answered, he would. But the Bishop Doctor Draicot his Chancellor, hearing that, said, My Lord, you know not what you do, you may in no case answer for an Heretick. And immediately he asked the poor Woman whether she would recant or no, and said she should answer for her self. Unto whose saying, the Bishop also reformed himself.

The poor Woman perceiving this, answered again, that if they refused to take of their Conscience that it was true they would have her to believe, she would answer no further, but desired them to do their pleasure, and so after certain circumstances, they pronounced Sentence against her, and delivered her unto the Bailiffs of the said Town of Derby aforesaid. Who after they had kept her about a Month or five weeks, at length there came unto them a Writ De heretico comburendo; by virtue whereof they were appointed by the said Bishop to bring her to the Parish Church of All-Saints at a day appointed, where Doctor Draicot should make a Sermon.

When the day and time was come that this Innocent Martyr should suffer, first cometh to the Church Doctor Draicot, accompanied with divers Gentlemen, as M. Thomas Powelbroad, Master Henry Vernon, Master De-thick of Newal, and divers other. This done, and all things now in a readiness, at last the poor blind creature and Servant of God was brought and set before the Pulpit, where the said Doctor being entered into his Sermon, and there inveighing against many matters, which he called Heresies, declared unto the people that that Woman was condemned for denying the Sacraments of the Altar to be the very Body and Blood of Christ really and substantially, and was thereby cut off from the Body of the Catholick Church; and said, that she was not only blind of her bodily eyes, but also blind in the eyes of her Soul. And he said, that as her Body should be presently consumed with material fire, so her Soul should be burned in Hell with everlasting fire, as soon as it shall you for my Name sake.

And so with many terrible threats he made an end of his Sermon, and commanded the Bailiffs and those Gentlemen to see her executed. And the Sermon thus ended, effoons the Blessed Servant of God was carried away from the said Church, to a place called the Windmill pit, near unto the said Town, & holding the foresaid Roger Waste her Brother by the hand she prepared her self, and desired fired the people to pray with her, and said such Prayers as she before had learned, and cried upon Christ to have mercy upon her, as long as Life served. In this mean season, the said Doctor Draicot went to his Inn, for great sorrow of her death, and there laid him down, and slept, during all the time of her execution. And thus much of Joan Waste.

Now, forasmuch as I am not ignorant (Faithful Reader) that this, and other Stories more, set forth of the Martyrs, shall not lack carpers and markers enow, ready to seek all holes and corners how to defame the memory of Gods good Saints, and to condemn these Histories, of lies and untruths, especially Histories wherein they see their shameful acts and unchristian cruelty detected and brought to light, therefore for better confirmation of this History above written, and to stop the Mouths of such Monies, this shall be to admonish all and singular readers hereof, that the discourse of this poor blind womans life and death, in such sort as is above prefixed, hath been confessed to be very true, by divers persons of worthy credit, and yet living; and also hath been specially perused and examined by W. Bainbridge, before mentioned, Bayliff then of Darby; who as well of his own knowledge, as by special inquiry and conference by him made, with divers others, hath certified us the same to be undoubted, beside the testimonial of John Cadman, Curate of the said Town, and of other also, upon whose honesty well known, and their report herein nothing differing from such as were best acquainted with that matter, I have been here the more bold to commit this Story to posterity, for all good Men to consider, and judge upon.

Edward Sharp.

September 8.
The Martyrdom of Edward Sharp at Bristol.

About the beginning of the next Month following, which was September, a certain godly, aged, devout person, and zealous of the Lords glory, born in Wiltshire, named Edward Sharp, of the age of forty years or thereabout, was condemned at Bristol to the like Martyrdom, where he constantly and manfully persisting in the just quarrel of Christs Gospel, for milking and renouncing the Ordinances of the Romish Church, was tried as pure Gold, and made a lively Sacrifice in the Fire in whose death, as in the death of all his other Saints, the Lord be glorified and thanked for his great grace of constancy; to whom be praise for ever, Amen.

The Martyrdom of four at Mayfield in Suffex.

Next after the Martyrdom of Edward Sharp, above said, followed four, which suffered at Mayfield, in Suffex; the 24. day of September, Anno. 1556. of whose Names, two we find recorded, and the other two we yet know not, and therefore according to our Register, hereunder they be specified, as we find them.

Which said four, being at the place where they should suffer, after they had made their prayer, and were at the Stake ready to abide the force of the Fire, they constantly and joyfully yielded their Lives for the testimony of the Glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ, unto whom be praise for ever and ever, Amen.

September 25.
The Martyrdom of a field Carpenter at a young man.

The day after the Martyrdom of these forsaide at Mayfield, which was the 25. of September, Anno. 1556. was the Martyrdom of a young man (which by science was a Carpenter, whose Name we have not) put to death, for the like testimony of Jesus Christ, at Bristol, where he yielding himself to the torments of the Fire, gave up his Life into the hands of the Lord, with such joyful constancy and triumph, as all the Church of Christ have just cause to praise God for him.

The Martyrdom of John Horn and a Woman.

Anno 1556.

Now not long after the death of the said young man at Bristol, in the same Month were two more Godly Martyrs consumed by Fire at Wotton Underledge, in Glocestershire, whose Names are above specified, which died very gloriously in a constant Faith, to the terror of the wicked, and comfort of the Godly. So gloriously did they the Lord work in them, that death unto them was Life, and Life with a blotted Conscience was death.

A pitiful Story concerning the unmerciful handling of William Dangerfield, and Joan his Wife being in Child-Bed, taken out of her House, with her sucking Infant of fourteen days old, and laid in the common jail amongst thieves and murderers.

When I had written and finished the Story of the Garnsey Women, with the young Infant there with them burned, and also had passed the burning of the poor blind woman Joan Waste at Darby, I well hoped I should have found no more such Stories of unmerciful cruelty shewed upon silly Women with their Children and young Infants: but now coming to the persecution of Glocestershire about the parts of Bristol, I find another Story of such unmercifulness shewed against a Woman in Child-Bed, as far from all charity and humanity, as hath been any other Story yet hitherto rehearsed, as by the sequel hereof may appear.

In the Parish of Wotton Underledge, not far from Bristol, was dwelling one W. Dangerfield, a right honest and godly poor Man, who by Joan Dangerfield his Wife had nine Children, and the now lying in Child-Bed of the tenth. This William after he had been abroad from his house a certain space, for fear of persecution hearing that his Wife was brought to Bed, repaired home to visit her, as natural duty required, and to see his Children, the being now delivered four days before.

The return of this Man was not so soon known to some of his unkind and uncharitable Neighbours, but they incensed with the Spirit of Papistry, citizens beset the house about, and there took the same William Dangerfield, and carried him to prison, and so at length he was brought to the Bishop, being then Brooke, in whose cruel handling he remained a certain space, so long, till his Legs almost were fretted off with Irons.

After the apprehension of the Husband, the Wife likewise was taken, with her young born Child, being but fourteen days old (as is said) out of her Child-Bed, and carried into the Common Jail, and there placed amongst thieves and murderers, where both she and her poor innocent found so small charity amongst the Catholic Men, that she never could come to any Fire, but was driven to warm the clothes that she should put about the Child in her bosom.

In the mean season while they lay thus inclosed in several Prisons, the Husband and the Wife, the Bishop began to practise not with the Woman first, as the Serpent did with Eve, but with the Man, craftily deceiving his simplicity with fair glozing words, falsely persuading him that his Wife had recanted, and asking him, wherefore he should more stand in his own conceit, then she being as well learned as he, and so subtly drew out a form of recantation, wherewith he deceived the simple Soul. Whereunto after that he had once granted that he would consent, although he had not yet recanted they suffered him to go to his Wife, where she lay in the Common Jail.

Then they with melting hearts opening their minds one to another, when he saw his Wife not released, and perceiving that he had not done well, he declared unto her the whole matter, how falsely he was circumvented by the subtle flatterings of the Bishop, bearing him in hand, that certainly she had recanted: and thus deceiving me (said he) brought this unto me, and so plucked out of his bosom the Copy of the recantation, wherunto he had granted his promise. At the sight whereof the Wife hearing what her Husband had done, her heart clave a sunder, saying, Alack, thus long have we continued one, and hath Satan so prevailed, to cause you to break your first vow made

The cruel handling of W. Dangerfield appeared in his own house.

W. Dangerfield appeared in his own house. No charity in Poverty to be used. The wife of W. Dangerfield taken with her young Infant out of Child-Bed, and had to prison.

Dangerfield made to believe falsely, that his Wife had recanted. Dangerfield upon hope of his Wifes recantation, consented to the Bishop.

Anno 1557. made to Christ in Baptism? And so departed the said William and Joan his wife, with what hearts the Lord knoweth. Then began he not a little to bewail his promise made to the Bishop, and to make his Prayer to Almighty God; desiring him that he might not live so long as to call evil good, and good evil; or light darkness, or darkness light; and so departed he home toward his house; where, by the way homeward (as it is affirmed) he took his death, and shortly after departed, according to his prayer, after he had endured in Prison twelve weeks.

After this, Joan his wife continued still in Prison with her tender Infant, till at last she was brought before that Bishop to be examined. Whereunto what her Answers were, it is not certainly known: Howbeit most like it is whatsoever they were, they pleased not the Bishop, as appeared by his ire increased against the poor woman, and her long continuance in the Prison, together with her tender Babe, which also remained with her in the Jail, partaker of her Martyrdom, so long as her milk would serve to give it suck, till at length the child, being starved for cold and famine, was sent away when it was past all remedy, and so shortly after died: And not long after the Mother also followed. Besides, the old woman, which was Mother of the Husband, of the age of eighty years and upward, who being left in the House after their apprehension, for lack of comfort there perished also.

And thus have ye in one Story the death of four together; first of the old Woman, then of the Husband, after that of the innocent Child, and lastly of the Mother. What became of the other nine Children, I am not perfectly sure, but that I partly understand, that they were all undone by the same.

This Story is reported and testified as well by others, as namely by Mrs. Bridges, dwelling in the same Town, and partaker then of the like Afflictions, and hardly escaped with her life.

A Shoemaker suffering in Northampton.

October. IN the Month of October following, was burned at the Town of Northampton a Shoemaker a true Witness and Disciple of the Lord, who according to the grace of God given unto him, cleaving fast to the found Doctrine and preaching of Gods Word, renounced the untrue and false coloured Religion of the Romish See, wherein many a good man hath been drowned.

After whom, not long after in the same Month of October, died also in the Castle of Chebester three godly Confessors, being there in Bonds for the like cause of Christs Gospel, who also should have suffered the like Martyrdom, had not their natural death, or rather (as it is to be suspected) the cruel handling of the Papists, made them away before, and afterward buried them in the field.

I read moreover that in this present year, to wit, Anno 1556. was burnt one called Hooke a true Witness of the Lords truth at Chebester.

Five famished in Canterbury Castle, by the unmerciful tyranny of the Papist, about the beginning of November.

As among all the Bishops, Boner Bishop of London, principally excelled in persecuting the poor Members and Saints of Christ; so of all Archdeacons, Nicholas Harpsfield Archdeacon of Canterbury (as may by mans sight appear) was the foremost, and of least Compassion (only Dunning of Norwich excepted) by whose unmerciful Nature and agraft Disposition, very many were put to death in that Diocess of Canterbury, not only in the bloody time of that Queen, but some also in the blessed beginning of this our most renowned Queen that now is, as by the grace of Christ hereafter shall appear.

Of those that suffered in Queen Mariess time within the aforesaid Diocess of Canterbury, some be recited already, with the order and forme down of such Articles as then were most commonly ministered to the Examinates by Thornton, Suffragan of Dover, and the said Nicholas Harpsfield, and others, as before in the Volume of this History may appear.

Now to proceed in order, and course of time where we left, next followeth the Month of November.

In the beginning whereof were together in the Castle of Canterbury, fifteen godly and innocent Martyrs, of which number not one escaped with their life, but either were burned, or else famished in Prison. Of the which two sorts, which is the easier death, God knoweth, it is hard to judge. Notwithstanding, the truth is, that of these fifteen, ten were burned and suffered in the fire, of whom in the next Book more shall follow hereafter, the Lord willing. The other five were pined and famished most unmercifully in the dreight Prison, of whom we have here presently to intreat. Whose names were these:

1. John Clark.
 2. Dunston Chittenden.
 3. William Foster of Stane.
 4. Alice, Perkins wife of Staplehurst.
 5. John Archer of Crambroke, Weaver.
- These were condemned to be burnt.

Of these five Prisoners, the first two were uncondemned, the other three last were condemned, and should have been burned, but suffered no less torments then if they had abided the fire, being macerate and pined to death by Famine. What their Articles and Answers were, I need not here to recite, seeing all they, in the time of Queen Mary, commonly suffered for one manner and sort of cause, that is, for holding against the seven Sacraments, against the Reality of Christs being in his Supper, for speaking against the Church of Rome, and determinations of the same, against Images set up and worshipped in the Church, for not coming to Church, and other like, &c.

First, William Foster, answering to these and like Articles, said, That he believed well in all the Articles of the Creed; but to believe that there be more Sacraments in the Church, and to pray to Saints either to profit us, or to pray for Souls in Purgatory to profit them, that Faith and Works do justify, or to allow the Popish Ceremonies in the Church, that he denied. Moreover he said, to carry Candles upon Candlemas-day, were as good for him as to carry a Dung-fork, and that it is as necessary to carry the Gallows about, if his Father were hanged, as the Crofs. To come to the Church he cannot, said he, with a safe Conscience. Concerning Fifth-days and Flesh-days, he granted it good to put difference therein, except where necessity required the contrary.

This William Foster was a Labouring man, of the age of forty years. He was apprehended and imprisoned by Sir Thomas Moyle Kt.

Alice Perkins for the like Confession, was condemned to be burned, for that she was not, neither would be confessed to the Priest, for that she received not the Sacrament of the Altar, because she would not pray to Saints; nor creep to the Crofs, &c. Being demanded of her age, she said that she was 49 years old, according to her old age; and according to her young age, since she learned Christ, she was one years age, and was committed by Mr. Roberts to Prison.

The Answer and Confession of John Archer of Crambroke was much in like sort. And although certain of these upon ignorant simplicity swerved a little in the number of Sacraments, some granting one Sacrament; that is, the body of Christ hanging upon the Crofs, some more; some less, &c. yet in the principal matter touching the Doctrine of Salvation for Faith to stay upon, and in disagreeing from the dreaming determinations of the Popish Church, they most agreed. Concerning the not praying to Saints, and for the Dead in Purgatory, for not creeping to the Crofs, for Faith only to justify, for taking of an Oath, and other such like, he granted as the other had done. This Father Archer, by his Occupation a Weaver of the Town of Crambroke, of the age of fifty years, was attached and imprisoned by Sir John Gifford Kt. And thus have ye the Cause and Imprisonment of these five their godly Prisoners. Now as touching the cruelty of their death, that ye shall not surmise the suspicion or relation thereof to proceed of my self, you shall hear their own testimony and certification by their own Letter, thrown out of the Prison, concerning the unmerciful dealing of the Catholick Tyrants in famishing them, as is aforesaid. The Words and Copy of their Letter is this.

The Prisoners Letters, declaring how they were handled and imprisoned in Prison.

BE it known to all men that shall read, or hear read these our Letters, that we the poor Prisoners of the Castle of Canterbury for Gods Truth, are kept and lye in cold Irons, and our Keepers will not suffer any meat to be brought to us to comfort us. And if any man do bring us any thing, as bread, butter, cheese, or any other food, the said Keeper will charge them that so bring us any thing, except money or rayment, to carry it them again; or else if he do receive any food of any for us, he doth keep it for himself, and he and his servants do spend it, so that we have nothing thereof; and thus the Keeper keepeth away our vituals from us. Inasmuch that there are four of us Prisoners there for Gods Truth, furnished already, and thus it is his mind to furnish us all: and we think he is appointed therunto by the Bishops and Priests, and also of the Justices, so to furnish us, and not only us of the said Castle, but also all other Prisoners in other Prisons for the like cause: notwithstanding we write not these our Letters, to that intent we might not afford to be furnished for the Lord Jesus sake, but for this cause and intent, that they, having no law so to furnish us in Prison, should not do it privily, but that the Murthers hearts should be openly known to all the world; that all men may know of what Church they are, and who is their Father. Out of the Castle of Canterbury.

The trouble and vexation of good people in the Diocess of Lichfield.

Mr. Kaine, Dr. Dracot, his Chancellor in Lichfield, cruel Persecutors.

THESE forefaid Months of September, November, and December, as they were troublesome to divers other places, and especially to the Diocess of Canterbury, by reason of the Archdeacon above named; so likewise they brought no little business in the Country to Lichfield and Coventry, by a cruel Bishop there, called Ralph Baine, and a more cruel Chancellor named Doctor Dracot, through the fierce Inquisition of whom great stir was there among the People, being called to examination of their Faith, and many caused to bear Fagots. Who, although they were not put to the torment of death, yet because it may appear what a number there is in the Countreies of England abroad, which in their hearts have a milliking of the Popes Romish Laws and Religion, if for fear they durst utter their minds, I thought to make a rehearsal of their names, which in the forefaid Diocess of Coventry and Lichfield, were taken in suspicion, and examined for their Religion.

The names of them that bare Fagots in the Diocess of Lichfield and Coventry.

And first amongst them that were detected and enjoyned to the Popish Penance, that is, to bear a Fagot, Candle, and Bends about in Procession, were Agnes Barman, detected, examined, and by witnesses convicted, and bare a Fagot the 12th of September. Likewise Margery Kury, Thomas Norris, Tho. Stiffe, Will. Kaime, Robert Kaines, Tho. Smith, John Borley the younger. Item, John Waterhouse, against whom came in witnesses and accusers Richard Caterbanke, J. Edge, William Smith, Robert Cooke, laying against him for seldom coming to the Church, for giving no reverence at the elevation of the Sacrament, but looking upon his Book, for not kissing the Pax, &c. Robert Bissh, Leonard West, Richard Bailey of the Parish of Whiteacre.

These were deprived.

Nicholas Cartwright, Doctor.
Richard Jurdian, Priest.
Edmund Grelke, Priest.
Thomas Whitehead, Priest.
William Taylor, Priest.
Anselme Sele, Priest.
Richard Slavy, Priest married.
Edward Hawkes, Priest married.
Robert Aston, Priest deprived.
Henry Ticks, Priest deprived.
Robert Messy, Priest, married and deprived.

Beside these were divers other, which in like sort were detected, accused and examined, although they bare no Fagot, but were dismissed; as Richard Kempe, John Frankling, William Marler, Julius Dudley, Eustache Byssacre, William Shene, Antony Afterwiltie, Thomas Stille, Henry Birdlin, William Mosley, John Leach, John Richardson, Antony Jonec, alias Pulton, Thomas Wilson, Thomas Lynacres, and Hugh Lynacres his Son, Isabel Parker, Martin Newman, William Enderby, Cicely Preston, Tho. Saulter, John Stamford Shoemaker, Richard Woodburne, Thomas Arnal Shoemaker, John Robinson, Hugh Moore Shoemaker, John Adale, Thomas Arch, Frances Ward, John Avines, Richard Fozall, Thomas Underdone, Richard Weaver.

The next Month following, being October, came under examination Joyce Lewes Gentlewoman, of whom we defer to speak until the next year, at what time she was burned.

Joyce Lewes Martyr, read hereafter.

These forenamed persons, with many more following in the next year after, although they did subscribe and relent through fear of death; yet for this cause I do here recite them, that by them it might appear, what a number there were, not only in the Country of Lichfield, but also in other parts, in heart set against the Popes proceedings, if that Fear rather than Conscience had not compelled them to the contrary.

The Conclusion of this Eleventh Book, with a brief Story of Sir John Checke, &c.

AND thus have ye the whole Persecution of this year declared, which was the year of our Lord 1556, and the fourth of Queen Maries Reign, with the Names and Causes of all them which suffered Martyrdom within the compass of the said year: the number of all which, slain and martyred in divers places of England at sundry times this year, came to above 84. Persons, whereof many were Women, Wives, Widows, and Maidens; besides them which otherwise by secret practise were made away, or driven out of Goods and Houses, or out of the Realm, or else within the Realm were put to Penance and coacted by forcible violence to Recant, save only that I have omitted the Story of Sir John Checke, Kt. and Schoolmaster sometime of K. Edward. The worthiness of which man deserveth much to be faid of him; but his fall would rather be covered in silence and oblivion. Only to note a word or two of a few things to the present Story most principally appertaining, it shall suffice.

The Conclusion of the 11th Book.

84. Martyrs and above in this year 1556, perished in this Realm.

A brief declaration of Mr. Checke Recantation.

First Mr. Checke being in the Country of Germany, out of all danger of Persecution, with many more of his own Country-men and Acquaintance, was not only in Safety, but also with Reputation accordingly esteemed among the Germans, and also well placed in the City of Straubourge. Where if he had contented himself to have remained, rather giving place to time, then to presume upon Adventures, peradventure it had been better with him. But what fatal instigation wrought in his mind I know not. In the end so it fell, that he would needs take his Journey with Sir Peter Carew, from High Germany unto Brussels, and that (as I have credibly heard of them which knew somewhat) not without the forecasting of his adventured Journey by the constellation of the Stars, and disposition of the Heavens above. For as he was a man famously expert, and travelled in the knowledge of sundry Arts and Sciences; so was he a little too much addicted to the curious prafitting of this Star Divinity, which we call Astrology. But howsoever it was, or whatsoever it was that the Stars did promise him, truth was, that men here in earth kept little promise with him. For having (as it is faid) King Philips safe conduct to pass and repass, and that by the means (as I find) of the Lord Payer, and Sir John Mal, pledging for his safeguard King Philips fidelity, he came to Brussels to see the Queens Ambassadors: and having brought the Lord Payer on his way toward England, in the return between Brussels and Antwerp he was taken with Sir Peter Carew by the Provost Marshal, spoiled of their Horfes, and clapped into a Cart, their Legs, Arms and bodies tied with Halters to the body of the Cart, and so shipped being blindfold under the Hatches, and so brought to the Tower of London.

Astrology.

Mr. Carew and Sir Peter Carew apprehended in their Journey to Antwerp.

Thus

Anno 1557. Thus the good man being intrapped, and in the hands now of his Enemies, had but one of these two ways to take, either to change his Religion, or to change his life, other remedy with those holy Catholicks there was none. Neither could his Conscience excuse him, nor Truth defend him, nor Learning help him.

Albeit Mr. Feknam, whether by the Queen suborned, or upon his own Devotion or Friendship toward his old Acquaintance, toke upon him the Defence and Commendation of Mr. Cheek, speaking in his behalf: yet no Mercy could be had with the Queen, but he must needs Recant, and so did he. The Copy of whole Recantation prescribed unto him, because it is known and in the hands of divers, it needeth not here to be exprest.

Then after this Recantation, he was through the crafty handling of the Catholicks, allured first to dine and company with them, at length drawn unawares to sit in place, whereas the poor Martyrs were brought before Boner and other Bishops to be condemned; the remorse whereof so mightily wrought in his heart, that not long after he left this mortal life. Whole fall, although it was full of Infirmity, yet his rising again by Repentance was great, and his end comfortable, the Lord be praised.

The death and repentance of Sir John Cheek

THE TWELFTH BOOK:

CONTAINING

The bloody Doings and Persecutions of the Adversaries; against the faithful and true Servants of Christ, with the particular Processes and Names of such as were put to slaughter from the beginning of January 1557. and the fifth year of Queen Mary.

The order and manner of the Cardinals Visitation in Cambridge, with the condemning, taking up, and burning of the Bones and Books of Bucer and Paulus Phagius, Anno 1557. January 9.

Visitation of Cambridge, with the burning of Martin Bucer's & Paulus Phagius's bones.

Cardinal Poole, three years after his return into England, having somewhat withdrawn his mind from other Affairs of the Realm, and having in all points established the Romish Religion, began to have an eye to the University of Cambridge, which place among others, specially feared to have need of Reformation out of hand. To perform this charge were chosen Cuthbert Sent, to perform that consecrated Bishop of Chester, Nicholas Ormanet an Italian, Arch-priest of the People of Badalon, in the Diocess of Veinon, professed in both the Laws, and bearing the name of the Popes Datary, Thomas Watton, elected Bishop of Lincoln, John Christopherson, elected Bishop of Chichester, and Henry Cole Provost of the Colledge of Eaton. There was good cause why the matter was especially committed to these persons. For as touching Ormanet, it is well known that he was a man of much estimation with Julius the third, at that time Bishop of Rome, and was appointed to come into England with Cardinal Poole, because without his knowledge (as in whom he put his chief trust and confidence) the Bishop would have nothing done that was of any importance or weight.

These persons thus appointed (in the mean while as the Visitors were addressing themselves to their Journey) sent their Letters with the Cardinals Citation before to Doctor Andrew Pern, Vice-Chancellor then of Cambridge, with the other Commissioners associate, commanding him to warn all the Graduates of the University, in their Name, to be in a readiness against the 11th day of January, betwixt eight and ten of the Clock, in the Church of S. Mary the Virgin: willing him especially to be there himself in Presence, and also to set forward all the residue, to whose charge it belonged, that they should search out all Statutes, Books, Priviledges, and Monuments appertaining to the University, or to any of the Colleges, or finally to any of themselves, and these to present the same before them at the day appointed, and every man to appear there personally: for they would not fail, but be there at the same time, to lay before them such things as should seem necessary to this charge of reforming the University, and further to give charge of all such things as should seem most for the profit and behoof of the same, together with such things as were to be done on their part, according as should seem most agreeable to the Decrees of the Canon Law.

This Citation of the Cardinal, being brought to Cambridge by Mr. Bullock, was first exhibited in the Convocation House of Regents, and there openly read by the Orator of the University the 11. of December.

After this, upon the 24. of December, which was Christmas-Eve, the Vice-Chancellor with the Heads of the Houses, meeting together in the Schools, it was there concluded, that the Visitors charges should be born by the University and Colleges (which then cost the University an hundred pound thick) and also that no Master of any Colledge should suffer any of the Fellows, Scholars, or Ministers to go forth of the Town, but to return before the Visitation.

On Friday the eighth of January, the Queens Commissioners, videlicet, Dr. Perne Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Segewicke, Dr. Harvey, Mr. Franch, Kyff, and another who is here nameless, and also Sir Jamys Dyer, the Recorder, Mr. Chapman, Evered sitting together in the Hall, certain were there called by the appointment of L. Hawes, and charge given what should be done. And first the Commission was read. Then were all the High-Constables called to bring in their Precepts, and sworn.

Also two of every Parish of ten or twelve hundreds, were sworn to inquire of Heresie, Lollardys, Conspiracy, Seditious Words, Tales, and Rumours against the King and Queen. Item, For Heretical and Seditious Books, for negligences and misdemeanors in the Church, for observation of Ceremonies, for Ornaments, and Stock of the Church.

We said at the first, that the Cardinal thought the University to have need of Reformation. The reason why he should think so, was this: either because the fame of long continuance since any man could remember, had cast off the yoke of the Bishop of Rome, and elevated to the wholesome Doctrine of the Gospel; or else by reason that both for the late Schisme, not yet worn out of memory, and for the Doctrine of Martin Bucer, who not long before openly in the said University interpreted holy Scripture, they saw many so fore corrupted and spotted with this infection, that (even as when fire is spread in a Town) unless a speedy remedy were adhibited out of hand, it were not possible to their thinking, to quench it many years after. Who also feared (if it were not looked to in time) lest this mischief should take root, and by little and little infect all the Members next unto it, which yet were whole and sound.

Preparation in Cambridge toward the Visitation.

The cause why the reformation was looked in kind.

This was the year of our Lord 1556. To the intent therefore to make a false for the Inquitors, of whom we spake before, came unto Cambridge the ninth day of January. And as they were yet in their Journey, and far from the Town, divers of the Masters and Presidents of the Colleges met them, and brought them courteously, first into the Town, and after to their Lodgings. They were entertained in Trinity College by Mr.

Mr. Christopher
John Christopher son of Trinity College, Bp. elect of Chichester.

John Christopher son of Trinity College, Bp. elect of Chichester. Malter of the same House, and lately before elected Bishop of Chichester. Notwithstanding they were divided, some to one place, and some to another, as occasion served, either to do their duties, or to show their good will: Some to the Kings College, and Doctor Wat on to St. Johns. But whether it were for the acquaintance of Christopher, or for the largeness of the House, which seemed most convenient for their purpose, they all took up their Lodgings in the said College with Mr. Christopher.

An Oration
gratulatory at their coming thither.

At their coming thither an Oration was made by a Fellow of the House, who in the name of all the rest, with long profection declared that they were most heartily welcome thither, and that He and his Fellows gave them great thanks, that it had pleased their Lordships to have so good opinion of them, as to chuse their house especially to lodge in, whereby they had both encouraged them to stand in hope of some further Benevolence towards them, and also done great worship to their College by their being there: wherefore they should look at their hand again for as much duty and reverence as lay in their power to perform.

To this Oration Mr. Stokes made answer, That this forward and earnest good wills and minds of theirs, in doing such courtesy, was right thankfully taken, both of him, and his, exhorting them to continue steadfastly in the same, and to proceed alow when need should require: for it was so far from any of their thoughts, to stop them in this their way, that they would rather halfe then forward to run through much hardship, being not without good cause persuaded to conceive good hope of their Benevolence towards them, in as much as they would do for them, whosoever might turn to their profit and commodity.

This day, for so much as it was toward Evening & ere they came, and the Sun was going down, was nothing else done. The next day, being the Tenth of January, they bestowed in recreating themselves after their Journey, and in setting other things at a stay. Nevertheless, to the intent the same should not escape altogether without doing somewhat, they interdicted the two Churches, namely St. Maries, where Mr. Bucer, and S. Michaels, where Paulus Phagius lay buried.

These men were dead a good while before, Paulus Phagius had scarce yet shewed the proof of his Wit and Learning, when he departed to God, 1549. Bucer lived but a little after. During which time somewhat by writing, but chiefly by reading and preaching openly (wherein the old man, being painful in the Word of God, never spared his age, nor regarded his health, he brought all men into such admiration of him, that neither his Friends could sufficiently praise him, neither his Enemies in any point find fault with his singular Life and sincere Doctrine. A most certain Token whereof may be his sumptuous Burial, solemnized with so great attendance and gladness of all the Degrees of the University, that it was not possible to devise more to the feeding out and amplifying of the fame. The whole manner and order of the doing whereof being written by Mr. Nicholas Carre, a Larnconian, in a little Treatise to Sir John Cheeke Kt. with an Epistle full of Consolation, as concerning his departure added thereunto, was sent afterward unto Peter Martyr, then abiding at Oxford.

From the Burial of Bucer and Phagius, unto the coming of these Visitors, were passed about three or four years more or less. And from the time that that blessed King Edward the Sixth, deceased, unto that day, the Priests never ceased to celebrate their Masses, and other kind of Ceremonies in those places, and that without scruple of Conscience, as far as men could perceive. But after the time that these Commissioners came thither, those things that before were accounted for sacred and holy, began to be denounc'd for prophane and unholy. For they commanded that all those Assemblies that should hereafter be made for the executing of holy Ceremonies, should be removed to the Kings Chappell, which is a place far more fitly than all the other.

Now was come the 11. day, in the which the Vice-Chancellor of the University, with the Masters and Presidents of Colleges, and all the other Graduates of every House, were commanded to appear before the said Commissioners in their Habits. It was commanded that the Scholars also should come in their Surplices, but that was not done. They assembled in great number to Trinity College, having the University Cross born before them, and in the Gatehouse a Fourn was let and covered, with Cushions and Carpet on the ground for the Visitors. Where the Vice-Chancellor, having on a Tithew Cope, sprinkled Holy-water on them, and purposed to cense them, but they refused it there, which notwithstanding afterward in the Queens College, and elsewhere, they refused not.

There Mr. John Stokes, common Orator of the University, made an Oration in the Name of all the rest. The Copy whereof I thought good here to exemplificate in Latin, as it was pronounced.

Mr. Stokes Oration to Queen Maries Visitors at Cambridge
An. 1557. January 11.

Academia, Reverendi Patres, in expectatione adventus vestri sollicita aliquandiu fuit: nunc presentia dominationum vestrarum valde recreata libentissime voluntate in vestros inuenit, & ad operam voluntatis sua vestram ece universa se suaque opera effudit. Convenit in hunc locum tota Cantabrigie frequentia, adiuncti omnes ordines, de quorum certa mihi & explorata ad hanc rem voluntate illud publica fide apud dominationes vestras affirmari, & separatim singulis, & conjunctim omnibus, optatissimum hunc adventum mirificis studiis, & consensientibus animis gratulari. Illud enim omnium animis habemus persuasum, & negotium hoc quod bodie no die, faciente Deo, excellentia vestra auspiciatur, ad Academia rationes fore accommodum, neque in re ad communem salutem tam necessaria opera aliquando vestram nobis defuturam. Per multa sunt ad hanc opinionem confirmanda, sed cetera non persequor: ea tantum oratione attingam, quae ita intime cum presenti negotio coherant, ut de illis ab o disjungi, nulla ratione possint. Alii sunt illa quidem numero certa & finita: verum re & virtute ita immensa, ut nulla dicendi facultate mea plene comprehendi possint: quoniam tamen antea sum professus summam esse Academiae laetitiam, canis, iussus de causis in adventu vestro suscepiam, quae o a vobis ut dicitur eas breviter recensere facies mihi aures prebeatis.

Reverendi in Christo Pater Cardinalis Polus, Legatus, qui religionem oppressam restituit, patrie ruinas suffulcit, Card. Pole. leges & decreta quae postliminio rediit, iste inquam, iste solus Anglus & vere noster Moyses, legationis vestrae auctor est, a cuius excellenti virtute in omnes sua patriae partes plurima commoda dimanant. Quo vinculo necessitudinis, affluens temporibus optima ab illo sperare licet, quod ex corpore finis ipsius Republicae est tamen & interior causa, quae nobis cum dominatione illius separatim intercedit. Superiore anno Academia procuratorem in se humanis accepit, quam liberari custodia non cepit tenere se velle literis significavit, ut non solum incommoda dimoveret, quibus studia nostra affigerentur, sed ut ornamenta adjuiceret ea, quorum splendore augeri dignitas Academiae aut maxime illustrari posset. Quae res & spem ante nostram confirmavit, et nunc in eam cogitavit, nem nos adducit, ut omnem illius humanitatem in hanc unam visitationem esse collectam putemus, in qua quidem ea a vobis expectamus omnia, quae unius Camellarii nostri insignis amor, praeter communem charitatem Academiae, quae pupillae suae propria p. licetur. Alii, unum quidem p. sine Republica dicitur. nunc h. c. m. p. re adesse posset, & Academiam suam tenebris & profunda nocte emer, am ipse suis radiis verae religionis splendore illustraret: verum optum nostrae publicae utilitas repugnat, quae valde impeditur sanctissima sedis Apostolice vos vicarios substituit, quorum naturas propter providentiam, personarum propter dignitatem, voluntates propter educationem aptissimas ad hanc rem esse judicavit. Itaque illud veri & ex animis istorum omnium affirmare possum, vos esse viros quorum religionem amamus, virtutem colimus, voluntatem, fidem, & consilium ad publicam salutem Anno salutem impendimus. Postquam enim singulari & præstantissima virtute Cardinalis Poli, Legati, & superiorum temporum caligine, & tenebris, lucem in republica respicere capimus, una certe gravissima etiam superioris ætatis mala sensimus, quibus profecto infiniti & miseris estantæa premeremur, tamen ad calamitatis nostræ magnitudinem accessit ejusdem ignorantia, ut (mea quidem opinione) eo magis simus miserabiles judicandi, quod tam turbulenta tempestate jactati ne moveri quidem nos, tam gravi & periculofo hæretis morbo oppressi, aut egrotare mentes nostras intelleximus. Valde enim periculofo est egrotatio illa, quæcunque sine doloris sensu naturam confici, & affectus sepe prius exinguit, quam egrotare se fateantur. Eiusmodi morbo Academia laborabat, quæ ad alias fortasse res facta ingeniofo & solers, in hac Religione causa, propter caput Ecclesiæ læsum, unde omnis sentiendi vis est, omnino hebes, stupida, & sine mente fuit, quoad tertio ante hunc anno divina antilissimi Patris Clementia Angliæ fere emortua miserata, iterum nos Ecclesiæ inseruit, corpus sensuq; recreat, cuius opæ convalescens Britannia, quam certa gehennæ pericula effugerit quivis facile intelligit. Idem Academia coram oculis, neq; quicquam mali a iam accidisse putat, quo nostra regio in hac religione vastitate & obscuritate miseris fuerit assistita. Non est opus recensere in hoc loco everfa Monasteria, spoliata Tempia, strages Sacerdotum, cædes Nobilium, motus & tumultus populi, totius regni egestatem, quæ et salunda accidere possent, tamen cum gravia sint ut opprimant, ultionis & vindictæ potius quam probandi causa in malos & nocentes insigne putamus. Sed sunt ista fortuna ludibria: Graviora sumus passi religionis & conscientie detrimenta. Pioras in Deum omni evanescit, virginis sacerdotum profectio ad libidinem soluta est, animus quasi conjunctus jacebat, quem nulle Ceremonie excitabant, ipsa mens opinionum veritate ita disticta, ita sibi ipsi dissonans, ut infinitis erroribus implicaretur. In hærent duo præcipue fontes, ex quorum rivulis & haussisse Academicam paulo liberalius, & illa potius ferme inebriatam consuevit.

Prior ortum habebat ex illa nostri violenta dissonantia à Catholice Ecclesiæ unitate, re non dissimili illius pugne, quam olim Menenius Agrippa, in intestina civium discordia, de corpore humano memorabat. Posterior ex immensa palude & ceno Wicleviano emanavit: quem celebris apud nos imo miserabilis de Sacramento Altaris pascet. De cuius rei veritate plerique suo sensu abundantes pro arbitrio quique suo statuerant. Nos Philosophos, nec illos quidem optimos, imitati ex Epicureorum schola ad scripturæ lumen aliquod attulimus. Quod enim Christus omnino, præcise, & sine exceptione, de vera & perpetua sui corporis presentia affirmavit (in cuius verbi veritate fundamentum fidei nostra collocatur) id nos ita sumus interpretati, ut maneamus & alienam Christi vocem judicarem, nisi illa Epicuri propria particula (quasi) adderetur, & quod Christiani corpus & sanguinem, id nos quasi corpus & sanguinem dicemus. Sed non est istius temporis præterita nimium meminisse, quæ utinam æterna oblivione obrui possent, neque ulla tanta labi memoria ad posteros nostros propagetur; tamen fuerunt attingenda generatim quidem, quod erranti consilio salutaris sit: membratim vero, quod Academia his vulneribus à Censoria potestate confecta, à Censoria medicina ad salutem reduci possulat. Ipsa vero pro se & suis spondet omnes in auctoritate vestra futuros, quos assiduis concionibus adeo ad penitentiam educit, ut & eos ad sanam religionem fidelissime transisse, & in eadem diligenti præsentis vite usu superioris ætatis damna sacrosancti pueri. Nam qui primi in hoc cursu sunt, acerrime contendunt in eo, quod tam voluntarie susceperunt: & qui pigrius egressi quasi pomeridiani horis ad hoc certamen accesserunt, ea certe præbent jam immutata voluntatis indicia, ut quomodo temere & juvenitè ad sana religione defecerant, ita non nisi maturi & cum iudicio ab hæresi deservisse videantur. Universis vero simul restituta & desiderata religio magis placere videtur, quam si assidue præcepta, neque ad tempus obscurata fuisset.

Quapropter Academia supplex & prostrata primum à Deo immortalis pacem & veniam petiit, precaturque ab eo, ut hodiernum diem ad suorum salutem conservandam & Rempublicam hanc constituendam illuxisse patiat. Deinde pro se, pro suis, pro universis, pro singulari, hanc petitionem ad celsitudines vestras affert, ut superiorum temporum offensas ex errore & injustitia professas præsentis dominum industria condonetur. De reliquis vero pro summa prudentia vestra, & singulari in nos amore, eam sententiam feratis, ut suorum causas vel iustitia vestra bonas inveniat, vel clementia bonas esse faciat. In utroque par erit beneficium, sive Academiam pro causarum æquitate judicaveritis, sive pro amoris vestri abundantia innocentem eam esse volueritis. When he had made an end of speaking, the Bishop of Chester answered thereunto, that they took in right good part, that the Mother the University had made for her a declaration of her good will toward them: for the which he gave most hearty thanks, desiring her to perform in deed, and in her works, the things that she had so largely promised of her self in words and communication.

The Answer of Mr. Ser. Bp. of Chester, to the Oration of John Stokes.

AS concerning their good wills, there was no cause to mistrust. For their coming thither was not to deal any thing roughly with such as fell to the amendment: but both the Cardinal himself, and they also, were fully minded to shew favour, desiring how to bring all things to peace and tranquillity, desiring nothing more earnestly, than that they which have erred and gone astray, should return into the right path again. The right Reverend Father, the Lord Cardinal, whom he wished to have been present, wished the self same thing also, desiring nothing so much as he with his own hands to sustain and hold up, now ready to fall, or rather to raise up already fallen to the ground, the University of his Ward: for he gladly taketh upon him the name and duty of her Guardian, whom it greatly grieved, that the infections of the times past had spread abroad so grievous Diseases, that even the University it self was touched with the contagious Air thereof. For he would gladly have come hither to visit and salute it, then to correct it, if the weighty affairs of the Realm would have permitted it. But now seeing he could not so do, he had appointed this Commission, in the which he had assigned them to be his Deputies, which (because they knew him to set so much store by the University) should exceed the more favour to it, and (because they themselves had been there brought up) would the more earnestly embrace it. The chief matter that they came for, tended to this end, that such as had erred should confess their faults, and return into the way again. For they were in good forwardness of healing, that acknowledged themselves to have offended. And therefore it was wisely propounded on his part, that he would not altogether excuse the faults of the University, nor of other men, but confess and acknowledge the Crime, as that there were many things had need to be corrected and amended.

The Commission signed by the Cardinal, and why?

The Cause declared.

The cause why they were sent thither, was to raise up them that were fallen, and to receive into favour such as were sorry and would amend, wherein, if (contrary to their expectation) they should not be able to do so much with some men as they would: yet notwithstanding, according to their duty, they would shew themselves so diligent for their part, as that no lack might be found in them. For it was more openly known, than that it could be denied, that many men did divers things of a forward wilfulness, and took stoutly upon them: wherewith as they were greatly moved and grieved (as reason was) so they covered to remedy the mischief. Against whom, if any thing should seem hereafter to be freightly determined, it was to be imputed to their own defects, and not to the wills of them. Neither ought such as are whole and found to be moved at the Chastisement of others, for so much as it pertained not only to the wiping out of the foul blot which now stuck on the University, but also to the health of many others which had taken much hurt by the infection of them. For their own parts they were more inclined unto mercy than rigor. However, considering that so great diseases could not by gentle medicines be healed, they were driven of necessity to use stronger. And yet if they would be contented to be brought Mercy more commended of all men, but rigor most commended in such as are most men expect.

again to their right minds, which thing they chiefly coveted (for they wished that all should amend and be led by wholesome counsel) and would yet at length wax weary of their Errors, and instead of them frequent again the ancient Customs of themselves, and of their Forefathers, they might boldly look for all kind of Humanity and Gentleness at their hands, in all this their business of Reformation, which they had now entered and begun, requesting no more of the University, but to do as became them: which being performed, he promised that their benevolence, neither in any publick nor in any private persons case, should in any wise be behind hand.

A Maf at the Kings
Colledge.

These things being finished, they were brought processionally to the Kings Colledge, by all the Graduates of the University, where was sung a Maf of the Holy Ghost with great solemnity, nothing wanting in that behalf that might make to the setting forth of the same. In this place it was marked that Nicholas Ormanet, commonly named Datary, (who albeit he were inferior in estate unto Chester being a Bishop, yet was superiour to them all in Authority) while the Maf was celebrating, stood standing, sitting, and sometime kneeling on his knees, observed certain Ceremonies, which afterward were required of all others to be observed, as in process hereof was to be seen.

From thence they attended all upon the Legates to St. Maries Church, which we declared before to have been interdicted. In the which place, for so much as it was suspended, although no Maf might be sung, yet there was a Sermon made in open Audience by Master Peacock in the Latin Tongue, preaching against Heresies and Hereticks, as Bilney, Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, &c. The which being ended, they proceeded effusions to the Visitation: Where, first Dr. Harvey did in the Cardinals name exhibit the Commission to the Bishop of Chester with a few words in Latin. Which being accepted, and by Master Clerk openly read to the end, then the Vice-Chancellor with an Oration did exhibit the Certificate under his Seal of Office with the Cardinals

Among whom was also Robert Brassey Master of Kings Colledge, a worthy old man, both for his Wisdom and his Hoar-hairs: Who hearing his own name recited next after the Vice-chancellors, said, He was there present as all the other were: nevertheless, forasmuch as the Reformation of his House was wholly referred to the discretion of the Bishop of Lincoln, not only by the Kings Letters Patents, but also by grant of Confirmation from the Bishop of Rome himself, under a Penalty, if he should suffer any Strangers to intermeddle, he openly protested in discharge of his duty, that unless their Commission gave them Authority and Jurisdiction upon the Colledge, either by express words or manifest sense, he utterly exempted himself from being present. This his Exception they took all in great displeasure; alleging that they were fully authorized for the order of the matter by the Cardinal, out of whose Jurisdiction, no place nor persons was exempted: wherefore he had done evil to call into question their Authority, so well known to all men. Chester seemed to be more moved with the matter than all the other; and that was because Brassey had a little before obtained the worship of that room, even utterly against his will, and maugre his head, he doing the worst he could against him.

After the formal Solemnity of these things thus accomplished, the Commission being read, and the Citation exhibited, all the Masters of Houses being openly cited, every man for a while departed home to his own House, with commandment to be at the Common Schools of the said University at one of the Clock the same day. When the Degrees of the University, commonly called Regents and Non-Regents, were assembled thither, they spent the rest of the day in reading over of Charters, granted to the University by Kings and Princes, in searching out of Bulls and Pardons from the Pope, and in perusing of other Monuments pertaining to the University.

January 12.
The citation at the Kings
Colledge.

The next day following, being the 12. of January, they resorted to the Kings Colledge to make Inquisition, either because the same for the worthiness thereof was chief and sovereign of all the residue, or else because that that House specially before all others had been counted, time out of mind, never to be without an Heretick (as they termed them) or twain. And at that present time, albeit that many now of late had withdrawn themselves from thence, yet they judged there were some remaining still. The order and manner how they would be entertained of every Colledge, when they should come to make inquisition, they themselves appointed, which was in this sort.

They commanded the Master of every House, together with the residue, as well Fellows as Scholars, apparelled in Priest-like Garments (which they call Habits) to meet them at the uttermost gate of their House towards the Town. The Master himself to be dressed in like fashion. Apparel as the Priest when he harroweth himself to Mass, saving that he should put on uppermost his Habit, as the rest did. The order of their going they appointed to be in this wise: The Master of the House to go foremost; next unto him, every man in his order as he was of degree, signiority, or of years. Before the Master there should be carried a Cross and Holy-water to sprinkle the Commissioners withal, and then after that the said Commissioners to be censured. And so after this meeting, and mumbled of a few Devotions, they determined with this Pomp and Solemnity to be brought to the Chappel.

Many thought they took more honour upon them than belonged to the state of man. Other some (forasmuch as at that time they not only pretended the Jurisdiction of the Cardinal; but also represented the Power and Authority of the Bishop of Rome himself, who was accounted to be more than a mortal man) said; it was far less then of duty appertained to his Holiness, in that the honour that was done to his Legates, was not done to them but to his Holiness. Now was the hour come, at which they appointed to meet: and being entered the Kings Colledge Gate, where they looked for the Master and Fellows of the House, seeing no man came to meet them, they proceeded forth to the Church door, where they stayed. There perceiving how the Master and the rest of the House were dressing themselves as fast as they could, in such order as was appointed before, they came in suddenly upon them, before they had set out any foot out of their places.

Then the Master first excused himself, that he was ready no sooner, acknowledging that it had been his duty to have been in a readines. Secondly, he said he was very glad of their coming, promising first in his own name, and after in the name of all the rest, as much reverence as might be, in all matters concerning their common utility, the which he doubted not but should be performed at their hands, according to his expectation. But like as he had done the other day in S. Maries Church, the same exception he made to them now also; the which his doing he befought them not to be offended withal. For seeing he did it only for the discharge of his duty, he had just cause to be held excused.

He had scarcely yet finished his Tale, but the Bishop of Chester with a frowning look and an angry countenance interrupting him of his talk, said, he needed not to repeat the things he had protested before, nor they to make answer any more to those things wherein they had sufficiently informed him before. He rather feared that their quarrel was not good, that they made such ado about it, and fought such starting holes. For so were defeated persons oftentimes wont to do, when for the pain and grief they are not able to abide a strong Medicine. As though that any man were able to grant so strong a privilege, as to withstand the Popes Authority. As for the Popes Letters, he said, must needs make on his side, and with such as were with him, and could not in any wise be alleged against him. Therefore he admonished him to desist from his unprofitable altercation, and to conform himself and his to such things as then were in doing.

After this they went to Mass. Which finished, with great solemnity, first they went to the high Altar of the Church, and having there fluted their gods, and searching whether all were well about him or no, they walked thorough all the inner Chappels of the Church. When they had sufficiently viewed all things, and had called forth by Name every Fellow and Scholar of the House, they went to the Masters Lodging, where first and foremost swearing them upon a Book to answer to all such Interrogatories as should be propounded unto them (as far as they knew) they examined first the Master himself, and afterward all the refused, every Man in his turn. But there were some that refused to take this Oath, because they had given their Faith to the College before, and also because they thought it against all right and reason to swear against themselves: For it was contrary to all Law, that a Man should be compelled to bewray himself, and not to be suffered to keep his Confidence free; when there is no manifest proof to be laid to his charge, but much more unjust it is, that a Man should be constrained to accuse himself. Nevertheless these persons also, after such altercation, at length (conditionally, that their Faith given before to the College were not impeached thereby) were contented to be sworn.

Three days long lasted the Inquisition there. This was now the third day of their coming, and it was thought that the case of Bucer and Phagius, was delayed longer then needed. For they looked to have had much altercation and business about the matter. Now, forasmuch as the present state of the case required good deliberation and advisement, the Vicechancellor and the Masters of the Colleges assembled at the common Schools, where every Man gave his verdict what he thought meet to be done in this matter of Bucer. After much debating, they agreed all together in this Determination; that forasmuch as Martin Bucer, while he lived, had not only sowed pernicious and erroneous Doctrine among them, but also had himself been a Sectary and famous Heretick, erring from the Catholick Church, and giving others occasion to fall from the same likewise: a Supplication should be made to the Lord Commissioners, in the Name of the whole University, that his dead Carcase might forthwith be digged up (for so it was needful to be done) to the intent that Inquisition might be made as touching his Doctrine, the which being brought in Examination, if it were not found to be good and wholesome, the Law might proceed against him: For it was against the rule of the Holy Canons, that his Body should be buried in Christian Burial. Yea, and besides that it was to the open derogation of Gods Honor, and the violating of his Holy Laws, with the great peril of many Mens Souls, and the offence of the Faithful, especially in so difficult and contagious a time as that was. Wherefore it was not to be suffered, that they, which utterly disflented from all other Men in the trade of their living, Laws, and Customs, should have any part with them in the honor of Burial. And therefore the Glory of God first and before all things ought to be defended, the infamy (which through this thing riseth on them) with all speed put away, no room at all left unto those Persons to rest in, who even in the same places where they lay, were injurious and noyfull to the very Elements, but the place ought to be purged, and all things so ordered as might be to the satisfying of the Consciences of the weak. In executing whereof so notable an example ought to be given to all Men, that no Man hereafter should be so bold to attempt the like.

They gave the same Verdict by common assent upon Phagius also. Unto this Writing they annexed another, by the which they lawfully Authorized Andrew Perne the Vicechancellor, to be the common Factor for the University. He was a Man meetest for the purpose, both for the Office that he bare, and also because that by the testimony of Christopher he was deemed to be the most Catholick of all others. This Supplication, confirmed by the consent of all the Degrees of the University and signed with their Common Seal the next day, which was the 13. of January, the Vicechancellor put up to the Commissioners. Note here, good Reader, what a feat of conveyance this was, to suborn the University under a colourable pretence to defile this thing of them by way of Petition. As who should say, if they had not done so, the other would never have gone about it of themselves.

But this glofe was soon found out. For the Commissioners had given the Vicechancellor Instructions in this behalf before. But now peradventure they thought by this mean to remove the envy of this Act from themselves.

Thus the Vicechancellor came unto the Commissioners, according to the appointment made the day before, at seven of the clock in the morning. He had scarce delivered the cause of his coming, but that he had not only obtained his fute, but also even at the very same time received the Sentence of Condemnation, for taking up Bucer and Phagius, fair copied out by Ornaments Dairy himself. This was to be confirmed by the consent of the Degrees of the University. Whereupon a Solemn Convocation, called Congregatio Regensium & non Regensium, for the same purpose was appointed to be at nine of the Clock; where the Graduates being assembled together, the demand was propounded concerning the Condemnation of Bucer and Phagius, and the Grace asked, which was this: Pleaseth it you that Martin Bucer, for the Heresies now recited, and many other by him written, preached, and taught, wherein he died without repentance, and was buried in Christian Burial, may be exhumed and taken up again? &c. After this Grace effions being granted, then was the Sentence of Condemnation, drawn by the Dairy openly read, and immediately another Grace asked, that the same might be Signed with the Common Seal. The which request was very lightly and easily obtained. And it was no marvel.

For now after the death of King Edward, since the time that the Government of the Realm came to the hand of Queen Mary, such persons being driven away as had rejected the Romish Religion (in whom well nigh alone rested whatsoever Wit and Learning was in the whole University besides) such a sort of Rascals were put in their room, that all places now swarmed with unlearned and unskilled Chaplains: To whom nothing was greater pleasure, then to cause all Men to speak flander and reproach of Bucer. There were divers yet left among them to speak against their demands. But they (because, as it commonly cometh to pass, that Might overcome Right) could nothing avail. For this is a common custom in all such matters and Ordinances, that look what the greater number decreeth, is published in the name of all: and that which the better part disalloweth, seemeth as though no Man at all disallowed it.

The next day being the 14. of January, all the Visitors (only Christopher Son clef of Chichester, excepted) came to the Kings College. Where, first going into the Church, and there making their Prayers at the Greefings, they so proceeded into the Stalls, there fitting all the Mass time, the company standing in their Copes, and singing a Solemn Respond in honor of the Visitors. After the Respond done, the Provost in the best Cope made to them his protestation, unto whom the Bishop of Cheser made Answer also in Latin, declaring that he could not perceive to what purpose his protestation was, notwithstanding they would accept it and bear with him. Then went they to Mass, which ended the Catholick Visitors approached up to the Altar, and took down the Sacrament, and searched the Pix, but first the two Bishops censured the Sacrament.

Then they went unto the Recessory, and opened the Chalice, Corporas Cases, and Charynatory, and viewed all those things. And so returning into the Provosts Chamber, divided themselves in Examination of the Provost, Viceprovost, and the rest of the company. The same day Doctor Baton Master of Gowen-Hall, bade the Vicechancellor, D. Young, D. Harvey, Swineborne, Massey, with others, hometo dinner. These Men immediately after dinner, caused the Common Seal of the University to be put to the foresaid Instrument of Condemnation, according as was determined the day before by the general consent of the Graduates of the University. And by and after, they carried the same to the Commissioners to their Lodging. The which when they had received, forasmuch as after more diligent perusing thereof, it liked them not in all points, some things they rased out, some they entierlined, other some they changed; so that in fine, they were faine to take the pain to ingross it new again.

Then were the Graduates dismissed, with commandment to resort forthwith to S. Maries Church, whither the Commissioners also repaired. When they had taken their places, Doctor Harvey presented to them before all the company, a new Commission to make inquest upon Heresie then newly sent from the Cardinal, which was read immediately by Vincent of Noally, *Ormanet*s Clerk. This done, Doctor Perne, who, as ye heard, was Factor for the University, exhibited to the Commissioners in the Name of the University the Sentence of the forefaid Condemnation. The Copy and Tenour whereof, hereafter (God willing) shall follow. This Condemnation, being openly read, then Doctor Perne aforefaid desired to send out process to cite Bucer and Phagius to appear, or any other that would take upon them to plead their cause, and to stand to the order of the Court against the next Monday: to the intent that when they had exhibited themselves, the Court might the better determine what ought to be done to them by Order of Law.

The Commissioners condescended to his request, and the next day process went out to cite the offenders. This Citation Vincent of Noally their Common Notary, having first read it over before certain witnesses appointed for the same purpose, caused to be fixed up in places convenient, to wit, upon S. Maries Church door, the door of the Common Schools, and the Cross in the Market stead of the same Town. In this was specified, that whosoever would maintain Bucer and Phagius, or stand in defence of their Doctrine, should at the eighth day of the same Month, stand forth before the L. Commissioners in Saint Maries Church, which was appointed the place of Judgment, and there every Man should be sufficiently heard what he could say. This commandment was set out with many words.

Shortly after, the matter drew toward Judgment. Therefore the next day before the day limited, which was the xvij. of January, the Vicechancellor called to him to Peterbouse (whereof he was Master) D. Young, D. Segiswike, and with them Bullock, Taylor, Parker, and Redman, Whitlock, Mitch, and certain others. These Men cast their Heads together how they might bear witness against Bucer and Phagius, to convince them of Heresie. For seeing the matter was brought in face of open Court, and because it might so come to pass, that some Patrons of their cause would come out, they thought it needful to have witnesses to dispose to depose of their Doctrine. What came of this their consultation, it is not perfectly known.

January 18.

The eighteenth day, the Vicechancellor, going to the Inquitors sitting at the Kings Colledge, did put them in remembrance, that the same was the day, in the which, by their Process sent forth the xvj. day before, they had commanded to appear in S. Maries Church, such as would take upon them to defend Bucer and Phagius by the Law. He desired therefore that they would vouchsafe to sit there, if perchance any Man would try the adventure of the Law. They lightly condescended thereunto. When the Vicechancellor had brought them thither, he exhibited unto them the Process of the Citation which he had received of them to publish a little before, saying, that he had diligently executed whatsoever the contents of the same required. After that they had taken their places, and that no Man put forth himself to answer for the Offenders, the Judges call aside Doctor Young, Doctor Segiswike, Bullock, Taylor, Maptide, Hunter, Parker, Redman, above mentioned. Also Brown, Gogman, Rud, Johnson, Mitch, Raven, and Carre, who had before written out the Burial of Bucer, with a singular commendation of him, and sent it to Sir John Cheek Knight. These Men taking first their Oath upon a Book, were commanded to bear witness against the Heresie and Doctrine of Bucer and Phagius. The 22. day of the same Month was limited to this jury to bring in their Verdict.

Other witnesses sworn

Bucer.

In the mean while, Ormanet and Doctor Watson abode at home in their lodging to take the deposition of them whom we shewed you before to have been called to Peterbouse and to have communicated with the Vicechancellor as concerning that matter, whose Depositions (as I told you) never came to light. The Bishop of Chester, and Doctor Cole this day visited them of Katherine Hall, where, as fast as could be learned, nothing was done worthy of rehearsal.

As Ormanet the Popes Datary was sitting at Trinity Colledge, John Dale one of the Queens Colledge came to him, whom he had commanded before to bring with him the Pix, wherein the Bishop of Romes God of Bread is wont to be enclosed. For Ormanet told them he had a precious Jewel; the same was a linen clout that the Pope had consecrated with his own hands, which he promised to bestow upon them for a gift. But Dale misunderstanding Ormanet, in stead of the Pix brought a Chalice and a singing cake called the Hoft, the which he had wrapped up and put in his Bosom. When he was come, Ormanet demanded if he had brought him the thing he sent him for. To whom he answered, he had brought it. Then give it me, quoth he. Dale pulled out the Chalice, and the singing Cake. When Ormanet saw that, he stepped somewhat back as it had been in a wonder, calling him block-head, and little better then a mad man, demanding what he meant by those things, saying; that he would him to bring none of that gear, and that he was unworthy to enjoy so high a benefit: yet notwithstanding, forasmuch as he had promised before to give it them, he would perform his promise. Whereupon with great reverence and ceremony, he pulled out the linen cloth and laid it in the Chalice, and the Bread with it, commanding them both for the Holiness of the thing, and also for the Author of it, to keep it among them with such due reverence as belonged to so holy a Relique.

About the same time the Commissioners had given commandment to the Masters of the Colledges, that every Man should put in writing what Books he had, with the Authors Names. And to the intent that every Man should execute it without deceit, they took a corporal Oath of them. This commandment some executed exactly and diligently; other some, forasmuch as they deemed it wrongfully, executed it slack enough.

We declare before that the xvij. day was limited for the day of Judgment. When the day came, and that neither Bucer nor Phagius would appear at their call in the Court, nor that any put forth himself to defend them; yet the courteous Commissioners would not proceed to Judgment, which nevertheless, for their condescency, in abetting themselves, they might have done, considering how that day was peremptory. But these Men, being bent altogether to equity and mercy, had rather shew some favour, then to do the uttermost they might by the Law. Whereupon Vincent published the second Process, and set it up in the same places, as in manner before. The meaning thereof varied not much from the first, but that it put off the Judgment day unto the 26. of the same Month. Upon the which day the Vicechancellor was sent for to their lodging, with whom they agreed concerning the order of publishing the Sentence. And because there should want no Solemnity in the matter, they commanded him further to warn the Major of the Town to be there at the day appointed with all his Burgeesses, which the Vicechancellor did speed with all readiness.

This day (as I said) was the twenty sixth of January 16. ary, which being now come, first all Degrees of the Mother University were assembled. And to fill up this Pageant, thither came also the Major and his Townsmen, and all met together in Saint Maries Church, to behold what there should be determined upon these Men. After long attendance, at length the Commissioners came forth, and went up to a Scaffold that was somewhat higher then the residue, prepared for the same purpose. When they had taken their places, Doctor Perne the Vicechancellor, the Player of this Enterlude fashioning his countenance with great gravity, reached to them the process that was lately published, to cite them, saying

When he had thus finished his tale, by and by the Bishop of Chesster, after he had a little viewed the people, began in manner as followeth.

The Oration of Doctor Scot Bishop of Chesster, before the Condemnation of Bucer and Phagius.

THE Oration of D. Scot Bishop of Chesster, before the Condemnation of Bucer and Phagius.

Whardest-femelling is here in these Pope Holy Catholicks.

Tyranny covered with the vilor of misery.

Susan transformed himself into an Angel of light.

O Lord God as though this were the doing of the Univerfity, and not your own!

The Wolf preceeded to be a Lamb.

As though the Cardinal first came hither; but partly induced at the intreaty of the Univerfity, and partly moved with the unworthiness of the cause it self: but especially for the care and regard we have of your health and salvation, which we covet by all means to preserve.

For you your selves are the cause of this business: you gave occasion of this confession, among whom this day ought to be a notable example, to remain as a memorial to them that shall come after, as in that which ye may learn not only to shake off the filth which ye have taken of these persons; but also to beware hereafter that ye fall no more so shameful as ye have done. But I trust, God will defend you, and give you minds to keep your selves from it.

But as concerning the parties themselves, whose case now hangeth in Law, they bear about the Name of the Gospel, whereas indeed they wrought nothing else then they and deceit. And so much the wicked were they, in that they sought to cover so shameful acts, with the cloak of fair and holy a Name. Wherefore it is not to be doubted, but that God will punish this despite, of it self wicked, to you pernicious, but the Authors thereof shameful and abominable.

But if God, as he is slow to wrath and vengeance, will wink at it for a time, yet notwithstanding if we, upon whom the charge of the Lords Flock leaneth, should permit so execrable crimes to escape unpunished, we shuld not live in quiet one hour.

When he had thus spoken, he recited the Sentence out of a scroll, and Condemned Bucer and Phagius of Heresie; the form and Tenor of which Sentence, framed after the barbarous rude stile of that Church, thus followeth.

After the Sentence thus read, the Bishop commanded their Bodies to be digged out of their graves, and being degraded from holy Orders, delivered them into the hands of the Secular Power. For it was not lawful for such innocent persons as they were, abhorring from all Bloodshed, and detesting all desire of Murder, to put any Man to death.

The effect of Doctor Pernes Sermon against Martin Bucer.

Over and besides this Oration and Sentence of Dr. Scot, came in also Pernes Vicechancellor, with his Sermon tending to the same effect, to the depraving of Master Bucer, taking for his theme the place of the 132. Psalm, Behold how good and pleasant a thing it is, &c.

Where beginning first with the commendation of concord, and of the mutual knitting together of the minds, he alleged, that it was not possible to hold together, unless the concord were derived out of the head, the which he made to be the Bishop of Rome, and that it also rested in the same.

After he had made a long protestation hereof he passed forth to Bucer, upon whom he made a shameful railing, saying, that his Doctrine gave occasion of division in the Common-Wealth, and that there was not so grievous a mischief, which by his means had not been brought into the Realm.

Although all Men might perceive by the Books he had compiled, what manner of Doctrine it was; yet notwithstanding (he said) he knew it more perfectly himself, then any did, and that he had learned it apart at the Authors hand himself.

For at such time as they had communication secretly ^{in Perns} among themselves, Bucer (said he) would oftentimes with he might be called by some other Name, then by the Name he had; for this purpose, as though knowing himself guilty of so grievous a Crime, he might by this means escape unknown to the world, and avoid the talk that went among Men of him.

Moreover, among other things he told how Bucer held opinion (which thing he should confess to him his own self) that God was the Author and wellspring, not only of good, but also of evil; and that whatsoever was of that sort flowed from him as from the head-spring and maker thereof. The which Doctrine he upheld to be sincere, howbeit, for offending divers Mens Consciences, he durst not put it into Mens heads.

Many other things he patched together of like purport and effect, as of the Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, of the marriage of Priests, of divorcements and of shameful usury also, as though he had deemed the same lawful to be used among Christian people, with divers other of the like sort.

In all which his allegations, considering how lowly, without all shame, he lied upon Bucer (as his writings evidently declare) he did not so much hinder his Name with railing upon him, as win unto himself an inexpressible infamy, by forging so shameful leavings upon so worthy a Man.

But what needeth witness to prove him a liar? his own Conscience shall make as much against him, as a number of Men.

It was reported for a truth, and that by his own familiar friends testified, that the said Doctor Pernes himself, either immediately after his Sermon, or else somewhat before he went to it, striking himself one the breast, and

Perns Sermon against Bucer

Anno 1557.

in manner weeping, wished at home at his house with all his heart, that God would grant his Soul might even then presently depart and remain with Bucers. For he knew well enough that his Life was such; that if any Man's Soul were worthy of Heaven, he thought his in especial to be most worthy.

Whiles he was thus talking to the people, in the mean time the leaves of the Church doors were covered over with Verles, in the which the young Men to flew their folly, which scarce knew him by sight, blazed Bucers Name with most reproachful Poetry.

These things being dispatched, Perns (as though he had sped his matter marvelously well) was for his labour; of courtesy bidden to dinner to Trinity Colledge by the Commissioners. Where, after the Table was taken up, they caused the Sentence of Condemnation to be copied out with all respect: which being signed with the Bishop of Cheshers Seal, the next day following was for a triumph sent to London, with divers of those Verles and slanderous Libels.

Besides this, they sent also their own Letters, wherein they both advertised the Cardinal how far they had proceeded in that matter, and also desired his Grace, that he would cause to be sent out of hand to Smith the Major of the Town, the Commandment, commonly called a Writ, for the burning of Hereticks. For unless he had the Queens Warrant to save him harmless, he would not have to do in the matter: and that which remained to be done in that case, could not be dispatched till that Warrant came.

M. Bucer writes for the Commissioners.

Whiles this Purfivant went on his journey, they wished to be brought unto them the Books that they commanded before to be searched out. For they determined to throw them into the Fire with Bucer and Phagius.

About the same time Doctor Watson taking occasion upon the day, because it was a high feast, in the which was wont to be celebrated the memorial of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin, made a Sermon to the people upon that Psalm, We have received thy mercy (O Lord) in the midst of thy Temple, &c. In the which Sermon he spake much reproach of Bucer and Phagius, and of their Doctrine.

He said, that these men, and all the Hereticks of our time that were of the same opinion (the which for the most part, he said, we budded out of Germany) among other things which they had perniciously put into mens heads, taught to cast away all Ceremonies. Whereas notwithstanding the Apostle himself commanded all things to be done in due order.

And upon that deed of the Blessed Virgin and Joseph, which was done by them as upon that day, it was manifestly apparent, that they with our Saviour, being then a little Babe, observed these Rites and Ceremonies for Catholic Men to teach. For he said, that they came to the Temple the same time with wax candles in their hands, after the manner of Procession (as they term it) in good order with much reverence and devotion, and yet we were not ashamed to laugh and mock at these things with the Hereticks and Schismatics.

As he was telling his tale of Christ, Mary, and Joseph, one of them that heard him, a pleasant and merry conceited fellow, turning himself to him that stood next him; And if it be true (quoth he) that this Man Preacheth, which of them I pray you (if a Man might spur him a question) bare the Cross before them? for that might not be missing in such Solemn Ceremonies. Not only this Man jested at the Preachers folly, but divers other also laughed at his manifest unthriftfulness, in Preaching these to vain and foolish Superstitions.

Mary and Joseph went a procession with wax candles, or else D. Watson said false.

A question to be spured so D. Watson.

The sudden swoon of Christopher.

While he was thus talking to his Audience, John Christopher (an elected Bishop of Cheshers, being stricken with a sudden sickness, fell down in a swoon among the pews: and with much ado, being scarce able a good while to come to himself again, in the mean time babbled man things unadvisedly, and as though he had been out of his wits. Some thought it came upon this occasion, because he had been greatly accused before the Commissioners for mispending and mis-ordering the goods of the Colledge; and therefore was grieved with the matter, knowing that they had been offended with him, by that that Orman had cancelled before his face a Lease of his, by the which he had let to farm to his Brother in Law a certain Minor of that Colledge, because the covenants seemed unreasonable.

By this time was returned again the Purfivant, who (as we before told) was sent to London with the Commissioners Letters, and brought with him a Warrant for the burning of these Men.

Upon the receipt whereof, they appointed the sixth day of February for the accomplishment of the matter. For it had hanged already a great while in hand.

Therefore when the said day was come, the Commissioners sent for the Vicechancellor, demanding of him in what case things stood, whether all things were in a readiness for the accomplishment of this business, or no. Understanding by him that all things were ready, they commanded the matter to be broached out of hand.

The Vicechancellor therefore taking with him Marshall the Common Notary, went first to St. Michaels Church, where Phagius was buried. There he called forth Andrew Smith, Henry Sawyer, and Henry Adams, Men of the same Parish, and bound them with an Oath, to dig up Phagius Bones, and to bring them to the place of execution. Marshall took their Oaths, receiving the like of Roger Smith and William Haffell the Town Sergeants, and of John Caper, Warden of the same Church, for doing the like with Bucer. Smith the Major of the Town, which should be their executioner (for it was not lawful for them to intermeddle in cases of Blood) commanded certain of his Town-Men to wait upon him in harness, by whom the dead Bodies were guarded; and being bound with Ropes, and laid upon Mens Shoulders (for they were inclosed in Chests, Bucer in the same that he was buried, and Phagius in a new) they were born into the midst of the Market street; with a great train of people following them.

This place was prepared before; and a great post was set fast in the ground to bind the Carcaffs to, and a great heap of Wood was laid ready to burn them withal.

When they came thither, the Chests were set upon end with the dead Bodies in them, and fastened on both sides with Stakes, and bound to the post with a long Iron Chain, as if they had been alive. First being forthwith put to, as soon as it began to flame round about, a great sort of Books that were condemned with them, were cast into the same.

There was that day gathered into the Town a great multitude of country folk (for it was Market day) who seeing Men born to execution, and learning by inquiry that they were dead before, partly detested and abhorred the extreme cruelty of the Commissioners toward the rotten Carcaffs, and partly laughed at their folly in making such preparative. For what needeth any weapon, said they? As though they were afraid that the dead Bodies, which felt them not, would do them some harm: Or to what purpose serveth that Chain wherewith they are tied, since they might be burnt loose without peril? for it was not to be feared that they would run away.

Thus, every Body that stood by found fault with the cruelties of the deed, either sharply or else lightly, as every Mans mind gave him. There were very few that liked their doing therein.

The purpose of D. Watsons Sermon against Martin Bucer.

IN the mean time that they were a roasting in the Fire, Watson went into the Pulpit in Saint Maries Church, and there before his Audience railed upon their Doctrine, as wicked and erroneous, saying, that it was the ground of all mischief that had happened of a long time in the common-weal. For behold (said he) as well the prosperity as the adversity of these years that have ensued, and ye shall find that all things have chanced unlookily to them that have followed this new found faith; as contrarily all things have happened fortunately to them that have eschewed it. What robbing and polling in these days of Queen Mary had been raised no so suddenly as all.

to the solemnizing of Ceremonies neglected; and that more is, the places themselves beaten down, Fleth and other kind of prohibited sustenance eaten every where upon days forbidden, without remorse of Conscience, the Priests had in derision, the Mass rayed upon, no honour done to the Sacraments of the Church; all estates and degrees given to such a licentious liberty, without check, that all things may seem to draw to their utter ruin and decay.

Watson dangerously de-paved the doctrine of the Protestants.

And yet in the mean time, the Name of the Gospel was pretended outwardly, as though that for it Men ought of duty to give credit to their erroneous opinions; whereas indeed there is nothing more discrepant, or more to the slander of Gods word then the same. For what other thing taught they to remain in that most Blessed and Mystical Sacrament of the Body of our Lord, than bare unleavened Bread? And what else do the remnant of them teach unto this day? whereas Christ by express words doth assure it to be his very Body. How perilous a Doctrine is that which concerneth the fatal and absolute necessity of Predestination? And yet they fit it out in such wise, that they have left no choice at all in things. As who should say, it skilled not what a Man purposed of any matter, since he had not the power to determine otherwise then the matter should come to pass. The which was the peculiar opinion of them, that made God the Author of evil, bringing Men through this perdition into such a careless security of the everlasting eternity, that in the mean season it made no matter either toward Salvation, or Damnation, what a Man did in this Life. These errors (which were not even among the Heathen Men) were defended by them with great stoutness.

Watson and Scot had both subser-vied to the doctrine of the Gospel in the Reign of King Edward the first.

These and many such other things he slanderously and falsely alledged against Bucer, whose Doctrine (in such sort as he himself taught it) either he would not understand, or else he was minded to slander. And yet he was not ignorant, that Bucer taught none other things then the very same whereunto both he and Scot, in the Reign of King Edward the sixth, had willingly assented, by subscribing thereto with their own hands: While he talked in this wise before the people, many of them that had written Verses before, did set up other new, in the which, like a sort of Water Frogs, they spued out their venomous malice against Bucer and Phagius. This was the last Act of this Enterlude, and yet there remained a few things to be done, among the which was the reconciling of two Churches, of our Lady, and of St. Michael, which we declared to have been interdicted before.

The reconciling of the Churches that were interdicted.

This was done the next day following, by the afore-said Bishop of Chester, with as much Ceremonial Solemnity as the Law required. But that impanate God, whom Bucers Carcass had chafed from thence, was not yet turned thither again; neither was it lawful for him to come there any more, unless he were brought thither with great Solemnity: As I suppose, during all the time of his absence, he was entertained by the Commissioners at Trinity Colledge, and there continued as a sojourner. For thither came all the Graduates of the University, the 8. of February of gentleness and curtesie, to bring him home again. Amongst the which number, the Bishop of Chester (worthy for his estate to come nearest to him, because he was a Bishop) took and carried him clad in a long Rochet, and a large Tipper of Sarcenet about his neck, wherein he wrapped his Idol also. Ormanet Datary had given the same a little before to the University, for that and such like purposes.

A Solemn Procession of sity and of the Townsmen.

When this Idol should return home, he went out the straightest and nearest way as other folks are wont to go, but he fetched a compass about the most part of the Town, and romed through so many of the streets, that it was a large hour and more, ere he could find the way into this Church again. I believe the ancient Romans observed a custom not much unlike this in their Procession, when they made Supplications at the Shrines of all their Gods. The order of which Procession was this: The Masters Regents went before, singing with a loud voice; Salve festa dies, &c. Next then followed the Bishop of Chester, about him went Ormanet and his fellow Commissioners, with the Masters of the Colleges, bearing every Man a long Taper light in his hand. After whom, a little space off, followed other Degrees of the University. Last behind came the Major and his Towns-men. Before them all went the Beadles, crying to such as they met, that they should bow themselves humbly before the Host. If any refused so to do, they threatened to send them forthwith to the Tolbooth. Their God being led with this pomp, and pacified with great sacrificed Hosts of Bucer and Phagius, at length sciled himself again in his accustomed room.

Scot of Chester Prayed with many words, that that day might be lucky and fortunate to himself, and to all that were present, and that from that day forward (now that Gods wrath was appeased, and all other things set in good order,) all Men should make themselves conformable to peace and quietness, namely, in matters appertaining to Religion. After this, they bestowed a few days in punishing and amercing such as they thought had deserved it. Some they suspended from giving voices either to their own preferment, or to the preferment of any other. Some they forbade to have the charge of Pupils, lest they should infect the tender youth (being pliable to take what print soever should be laid upon them) with corrupt Doctrine and Heresie, others they chastised wrongfully without any desert, and many a one they punished, contrary to all right and reason.

Last of all they set forth certain Statutes, by the which they would have the University hereafter ordered. Where in they enacted many things as concerning the election of their Officers of the University, of keeping and administering the Goods of the University, and of many other things. But especially they handled the matter very circumpectly for Religion. In the which they were so scrupulous, that they replenished all things either with open Blasphemy, or with ridiculous Superstition. For they prescribed at how many Masses every Man should be day by day; and how many Pater noster and Ave's every Man should say when he should enter into the Church, and in his entrance, after what sort he should bow himself to the Altar, and how to the Master of the house, what he should do there, and how long he should tarry, how many, and what Prayers he should say, what, and how he should sing, what meditations others should use while the Priest is in his Memento, mumbling secretly to himself, what time of the Mass a Man should stand, and when he should sit down, when he should make curtesie, when exclusively, when inclusively, and many other superstitious toys they decreed, that it was a sport then to behold their Superstitions, and were tedious now to recite them.

Moreover these Masters of good order, for fashions sake, ordained that every Man should put on a Surple's, not torn nor worn, but clean, forbidding them in any wise to wipe their Noses thereon.

These things thus set at a stay, when the Commissioners were now ready to go their ways, the University for so great benefits (which she should not suffer to fall out of remembrance many years after) coveting to shew some token of curtesie towards them again, dignified Ormanet and Cole with the degree of Doctorship for all the residue, saving Christopher, who now, by reason he was elected Bishop, preventing that degree, had received that order before. Thus at length were sent away these peace-makers, that came to pacify strifes and quarrels, who through provoking every Man to accuse one another, left such gaps and breaches in Mens hearts at their departure, that to this day they could never be closed nor joynted together again.

These Commissioners, before they departed out of the University, gave commandment, that the Masters of every House should copy out their Statutes, the which besides common Ordinances, contained in them certain rules of private order, for every House particularly Swinborn (who as I said, was Master of Clarehall) being demanded whether he would have those things ingrossed in Parchment or in Paper, answered, that it made no matter where in they were written: For the Paper, or lighter thing that were of less continuance, then Paper, would serve the turn well enough: For he said, a slenderer thing then that would last a great deal longer then those decrees should stand in force. Neither was the Man de-

After whom her Sister ELIZABETH succeeding in the Kingdom, raised to life again the True Religion. Whereupon, as the Church of Christ began by little and little to flourish; so the memory of Bucer and Phagius (although their bones were burnt by Cardinal Poole) was restored again by this goodly Qu. ELIZABETH, who gave then in Commission to Matthew Parker then Archbishop of Canterbury, and to Edmund Grindal then Bishop of London, and to Master Gualter Haddon and others: For the performance of which Commission, the said reverend Bishops addressed their Letters to the Vicechancellor, &c.

The Oration of Mr. Acworth, Orator of the University, at the restitution of Martin Bucer, and Paulus Phagius.

The Oration
of Mr. Acworth.

I Am in doubt, whether I may intreat of the praise and commendation of so great a Clerk (for the celebrating whereof, this assembly, and concourse of yours is made this day) or of the vices and calamities, out of the which we be newly delivered, or of them both, considering the one cannot be mentioned without the other. In the which times ye felt so much anguish and sorrow (my right dear Brethren) that if I should repeat them, and bring them to remembrance again, I fear me, I should not so much work a just hatred in us towards them, for the injuries received in them, as renew our old sorrow and heaviness. Again, men must needs account me unadvised and foolish in my doing, if I should think myself able to make him which hath lived before our eyes in praise and estimation, more famous and notable by my Oration which he by his living and conversation hath oftentimes polished. But the wickedness of the times, which endeavored to wipe clean out of Remembrance of Men the name that was so famous and renowned in every mans mouth, did much profit him. Inasmuch, that both in his life time all things redounded to his continual renown, and in especial after his decease, nothing could be devised more honorable, then with so solemn furniture and ceremonies, to have gone about to have hurt the memorial of such a worthy Man, and yet could not bring to pass the thing that was so fore coveted; but rather brought that thing to pass, which was chiefly sought to be avoided. For the desire that men have of the dead hath purchased to many men everlasting fame, and hath not taken away immortality, but rather amplified and increased the fame. By means whereof it cometh to pass, that he that will intreat of those things that pertain to the praise of Bucer after his death, cannot chafe but speak of the crabbedness of the times past, upon the which riseth a great increase and augmentation of his praise. But his life so excellently set forth, not only by the writings of the Clerks, Checke and Carre, and by the lively voice of the right famous Doctor Haddon, uttered in this place to the great admiration of all the Hearers, when his Body should be laid into his grave to be buried; and after his burial, by the goodly and most holy Preachings of the right reverend Father in Christ the Archbishop of Canterbury that now is, and of Dr. Redman, the which for the worthiness and excellency of them, ought to stick longer in our minds unwritten, then many things that are penned and put in print; but also by the great assembly of all the degrees of the University the same day, in bringing him to his grave and the next day after by the industry of every man that was endued with any knowledge in the Greek or Latin tongues; of the which, there was no man but let up some Verses, as witnesses of his just and unfeigned sorrow upon the walls of the Church: that neither at that time any reverence or duty which is due to the dead departing out of this life, was then overslipped, or now remaineth undone, that may seem to pertain either to the celebrating of the memorial of so holy or famous a Person, or to the consecrating of him to everlasting memory. Wear that time saw with our eyes this University flourishing by his institutions, the love of sincere Religion not only ingendred, but also confirmed and strengthened through his continual and daily preaching. Into-much that at such time as he was suddenly taken from us, there was scarce any man that for sorrow could find in his heart to bear with the present state of this life; but that either he wished with all his heart to depart out of this life with Bucer into another, and by dying to follow him into immortality, or else endeavored himself with weeping and sighing to call him again, being dispatched of all troubles, into the prison of this Body, out of the which he is escaped, lest he should leave us as it were standing in battel without a Captain, and he himself as one cashiered, depart with his wages, or as one discharged out of the Camp, withdraw himself to the everlasting quietness and tranquillity of the Soul. Therefore all men evidently declared at that time, both how sore they took his death to heart, and also how hardly they could away with the mixture of such a man. As long as the ardent love of his Religion (wherewith we were inflamed) flourished, it wrought in our Hearts an incredible desire of his presence among us. But after the time that the goodly man ceased to be any more in our sight, and in our eyes, that ardent and burning love of Religion by little and little waxed cold in our minds, and according to the times that came after (which were both miserable, and to our utter undoing) it began not by little and little to be darkened, but it altogether vanished away, and turned into nothing. For we fell again into the troublesomeness of the Popish Doctrine; the old Rites and Customs of the Romish Church were restored again, not to the garnishment and beautifying of the Christian Religion (as they furnished) but to the utter defacing, violating, and defiling of the same. Death was set before the eyes of such as persevered in the Christian Doctrine that they had learned before. They were banished the Realm that would not apply themselves to the time, and do as other men did: such as remained, were enforced either to dissemble, or to hide themselves, and creep into corners, or else as it were by drinking of the charmed cup of Circes, to be turned and altered, not only from the nature of Man into the nature of brute Beasts, but (that far worse and much more monstrous is) from the likeness of God and his Angels, into the likeness of Devils. And all England was infected with this malady. But I would to God the corruption of those times, which overwhelmed all the whole Realm, had not at least wise yet pierced every part and member thereof. Of the which there was not one, but that besides the grief that it felt, with the residue of the Body, by reason of the sickness and contagion spread into the whole) had some sorrow and calamity peculiarly by it self. And to omit the rest (of the which to intreat, this place is not appointed, nor the time requireth ought to be spoken) this dwelling place of the Muses (which we call the University) may be a sufficient witness what we may judge of all the rest of the Body. For certainly, my Brethren, the thing is not to be dissembled, that cannot be hidden. We, applying our selves to those most filthy times, have most shamefully yielded, like faint-hearted cowards, which had not the stomachs to sustain the Adversities of poverty, Banishment, and Death. Which in our living and conversation kept neither the constancy taught us by Philosophy, nor yet the patience taught us by Holy Scripture, which have done all things at the commandment of others. And therefore that which the Poet (although in another sense) hath trimly spoken, may well be thought to have been truly prophesied upon us:

*The times and seasons changed be:
And changed in the same are we.*

Divers of them that were of a pure and sincere judgment as concerning Religion, being driven from hence and distressed, the rest that remained taunted and felt of the inhumanity of them in whose hands the Authority of doing things here consisted; although to say the truth, I have used a gentler term then behoved. For it is not to be accounted inhumanity, but rather inhumanity and beastly cruelty: the which when they had spent all kinds of Torments and Punishments upon the quick, when they had cruelly taken from such as constantly persevered, life, from others riches, honours, and all hope of promotion, yet they could not be so satisfied; but that incensed and stirred with a greater fury, it began to outrage even against the dead. Therefore whereas in every singular place was executed a singular kind of cruelty, in sum, that there was no kind of cruelty that could be devised, but it was put in use in one place or other, this was proper or peculiar to Cambridge, to exercise the cruelty upon the dead, which in other places was extended but to the quick. Oxford burnt up the right reverend Fathers, Cranner, Ridley, and Laiimer the noble witnesses of the clear light of the Gospel. Moreover, at London perished these two Lanterns of light, Rogers and Bradford: In whom it is hard to say, whether there were more force of eloquence and utterance in preaching, or more holiness of life and conversation. Many other without number, both here and in other places were consumed to ashes for bearing record to the Truth. For what City is there that hath not flamed? I say not with burning of houses and buildings, but with burning of holy Bodies? But Cambridge, after there were no more left alive upon whom they might spue their bitter poison, played the mad Beelzebub against the dead. The dead men, whose living no man was able to find fault with, whose Doctrine no man was able to reprove, were by false slanderous Accusers indicted, contrary to the Laws of God and man, sued in the Law, condemned, their Sepulchres violated and broken up, their Carcasses pulled out and burnt with fire. A thing truly incredible, if we had not seen it with our eyes, and a thing that hath not lightly been heard of. But the hatredness of this wicked act was spread abroad as a common talk in every mans mouth, and was blown and dispersed through all Christendom. Bucer by the excellency of his wit and Doctrine known to all men, of our Country-men in manner craved, of many others intreated and sent for, to the intent he might instruct our Cambridge men in the sincere Doctrine of the Christian Religion, being spent with age, and his strength utterly decayed, forsook his own Country, refused not the tediousness of that long journey, was not afraid to adventure himself upon the Sea, but had more regard of the dilating and amplifying of the Church of Christ, than of all other things. So in conclusion he came, every man received and welcomed him: afterward he lived in such wife, as it might appear he came not hither for his own sake, but for ours. For he fought not to drive away the sickness that he had taken by troublesome travel of his long journey: and albeit his strength were weakened and appalled, yet he regarded not the recovery of his health, but put himself to immoderate labour and intolerable pain, only to teach and instruct us. And yet toward this so noble and worthy person, while he lived, were shewed all the tokens of humanity and gentleness, reverence and courtesy that could be; and when he was dead, the most horrible cruelty and spite that might be imagined. For what can be so commendable, as to grant unto the living, house and abiding place, and to the dead, burial? Or what is he that will find in his heart to give entertainment, and to cherish that person in his house with all kind of gentleness that he can devise, upon whom he could not vouchsafe to bestow burial when he is dead? Again, what an inconstancy is it, with great solemnity, and with much advancement and commendation of his virtues to bury a man honourably, and anon after to break up his Tomb, and pull him out spitefully, and wrongfully to slander him being dead, who during his life time always deserved praise? All these things have happened unto Bucer, who whilst he lived had free access into the most gorgeous buildings and stately palaces of the greatest Princes, and when he was dead, could not be suffered to enjoy so much as his poor grave. Who being laid in the ground nobly to his eternal fame, was afterward, to his utter defacing, spitefully taken up and burned. The which things albeit they did no harm to the dead (for the dead carcases feel not pain, neither doth the fame of godly persons depend upon the report of vulgar People, and the light rumours of men, but upon the rightful censure and just judgement of God) yet it reproveth and extremeth cruelty and unfeeling desire of revenge in them which offer such utter wrong to the dead. These persons therefore whom they have pulled out of their graves and burned, I believe (if they had been alive) they would have cast out of house and home, they would have driven out of all mens Company, and in the end with most cruel torments have torn them in pieces, being nevertheless Aliens, being strangers, and being also fetched hither by us out of such a Country, where they not only needed not to fear any punishment, but contrarywise were always had in much reputation, as well among the noble and honorable, as also among the Vulgar and common People. But yet how much more gentle then these men was Bishop Gardiner, otherwise an earnest defender of the Popish Doctrine? who against his own Country-men, let pass no cruelty whereby he might extinguish with fire and sword the light of the Gospel: and yet he spared foreigners, because the right of them is so holy, that there was never Nation so barbarous, that would violate the same. For when he had in his power the renowned Clerk Peter Martyr, then teaching at Oxford, he would not keep him to punish him, but (as I have heard reported) when he should go his way, he gave him wherewith to bear his charges. So that the thing which he thought he might of right do to his Country-men, he judged unlawful to do to strangers. And whom the Law of God could not withhold from the wicked murdering of his own Country-men, him did the Law of man bridle from killing of strangers, the which hath ever appealed all barbarous beastliness, and mitigated all cruelty. For it is a point of humanity for man and man to meet together, and one to come to another, though they be never so far separated and set asunder, both by Sea and by Land, without the which access there can be no intercourse of merchandise; there can be no conference of wits, which first of all ingendred learning, nor any commodity of society long to continue. To repulse them that come to us, and to prohibit them our Countries, is a point of inhumanity. Now to entertain them evil, that by our sufferance dwell among us, and have increase of household and household-stuff, it is a point of wickedness. Wherefore this cruelty hath far surmounted the cruelty of all others, the which, to satisfy the insatiable greediness thereof, drew to execution not only strangers, brought hither at our intreatance and sending for, but even the withered and rotten Carcasses digged out of their graves; to the intent that the immeasurable thirst which could not be quenched with shedding the Blood of them that were alive, might at the least be satisfied in burning of dead mens Bones. These (my Brethren) these, I say, are the just causes which have so fore provoked the wrath of God against us, because that in doing extrem injury to the dead we have been prone and ready; but in putting the same away we have been slow and slack. For verily I believe (if I may have liberty to say freely what I think) (ye shall bear with me, if I chance to cast forth any thing unadvisedly in the heat and hasty discourse of my Oration) that even this place, in the which we have so oftentimes assembled, being defiled with that new kind of wickedness, such as man never heard of before, is a let and hinderance unto us, when we call for the help of God, by means whereof our prayers are not accepted, which we make to appease the Godhead, and to win him to be favourable unto us again.

The Blood of Abel shed by Cain, calleth and crieth from the earth that sucked it up: likewise, the undeserved burning of these Bodies, calleth upon Almighty God to punish us, and crieth, that not only the Authors of so great a wickedness, but also the ministers thereof are unpure, the places defiled, in which these things were perpetrated, the Air infected which we take into our Bodies, to the intent that by sundry diseases and sicknesses we may receive punishment for so execrable wickedness. Look well about ye (my dear Brethren) and consider with your selves the evils that are past? and ye shall see how they took their beginning at Bucers death, following one in anothers neck even unto this day. First and foremost, when we were even in the chiefest of our mourning, and scarcely yet comforted of our loss for his death, the sweating sickness lighted upon us, the which passed swiftly thorow all England, and as it were in haste dispatched an innumerable company of men. Secondly, the untimely death of our most noble King Edward the sixth (whose life in virtue far more than the opinion of all men, and seemed worthy of immortality) Lapsed contrary contrary to mens expectation in that age, in which unless violence be used, few do die. The conversion of Religion, or rather the conversion and turning thereof into Paucity: The incursion and domination of strangers, under whose yoke our necks were almost subdued: The importunate cruelty of the Bishops against the Christians, which executed that wickedness, for making satisfaction whereof we are gathered together this day. These are the things that ensued after his death; but after his burning ensued yet grievous things: Namely, new kinds of plagues, and contagious diseases, unknown to the very Physicians, whereby either every mans health was impaired, or else they were brought to their graves, or else very hardly recovered. Bloody battels without victory, whereof the profit redounded to the enemy, and to us the slaughter with great loss. The which things do evidently declare, that God is turned from us, and angry with us, and that he giveth no ear to our prayers, and that he is not moved with our cries and sighs, but that he looketh that this our meeting and assembly should be to this end, that forasmuch as we have violated their Corps, we should do them right again; so that the memorial of these most holy men may be commended unto posterity unhurt and undefamed. Wherefore, amend yet at length (my Brethren) which hitherto, by reason of the variableness and unconformity of the times, have been wavering and unfixed in your hearts; shew your selves cheerful and forward in making satisfaction for the injury you have done to the dead, whom with so great wickedness of late ye indamaged and defiled; not censuring them with the perfumes of those odours and spices now worn out of use, and put to flight, but with a true and unfained repentance of the heart, and with prayer, to the intent that the heavenly Godhead, provoked by our doings to be our enemy, may by our humble submission be intreated to be favourable and agreeable to all our other requests.

When Acworth had made an end of his Oration, Mr. James Pilkington the Queens Reader of the Divinity Lecture, going up into the Pulpit made a Sermon upon the 112. Psalm. the beginning whereof is, Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord.

The Sermon of Dr. James Pilkington.

Where intending to prove, that the remembrance of the just man shall not perish, and that Bucer is blessed, and that the ungodly shall fret at the sight thereof, but yet that all their attempts shall be to no purpose, to the intent this saying may be verified, (I will curse your blessings, and bless your cursings,) he took his beginning of his own person; That albeit he were both ready and willing to take that matter in hand, partly for the worthiness of the matter itself, and especially for certain singular virtues of those Persons, for whom that Congregation was called, yet notwithstanding, he said, he was nothing meet to take that charge upon him.

For it were more reason, that he which before had done Bucer wrong, should now make him amends for the displeasure. As for his own part, he was so far from working any evil against Bucer, either in word or deed; that for their singular knowledge almost in all kind of learning, he embraced both him and Phagius with all his heart. But yet he somewhat more favoured Bucer, as with whom he had more familiarity and acquaintance. In consideration whereof, although that it was scarce convenient, that he at that time should speak, yet notwithstanding he was contented for friendship and courteous sake, not to fail them in their business. Having made this Preface, he entered into the pith of the matter, wherein he blamed greatly the barbarous cruelty of the Court of Rome, so fiercely extended against the dead. He said it was a more heinous matter then was to be born with, to have shed such extreme cruelty to them that were alive; but for any man to misbehave himself in such wise toward the dead, was such a thing as had not lightly been heard of: Saving that he affirmed this custom of excommunicating and cursing of dead folk, to have come first from Rome. For Eusebius reported in his writings, that Eutychius was of the same opinion, induced by the example of Josias, who slew the Priests of Baal, and burnt up the Bones of them that were dead, even upon the Altars. Whereas, before the time of Eutychius this kind of punishment was well near unknown, neither afterward usurped of any man (that ever he heard of) until nine hundred years after Christ. In the latter times (the which how much the further they were from the Golden-age of the Apostles, so much the more they were corrupted) this kind of cruelty began to creep further. For it is manifestly known, that Stephen the sixth Pope of Rome digged up Formosus, his last Predecessor in that See, and spoiling him of his apparel, buried him again in a lay-mans apparel (as they call it) having first cut off and thrown into Tyber his two fingers, with which according to their accustomed manner, he was wont to bless and consecrate. The which his unspeakable tyranny used against Formosus, within six years after, Sergius the third increased also against the same Formosus. For taking up his dead Body, and setting it in a Popes Chair, he caused his Head to be smitten off, and his other three fingers to be cut from his hand, and his Body to be cast into the River of Tyber, abrogating and annulling all his Decrees, which thing was never done by any man before that day. The cause why so great cruelty was exercised (by the report of Naucerius) was this; Because that Formosus had been an adversary to Stephen and Sergius when they lived to be made Bishops.

This kind of cruelty (unheard of before) the Popes awhile exercised one against another. But now, ere ever they had sufficiently felt the smart thereof themselves, they had turned the same upon their necks. Wherefore it was to be wished, that seeing it began among them, it might have remained still with the Authors thereof, and not have been spread over thence unto us. But such is the nature of all evil, that it quickly passeth into example, for others to do the like. For about the year of the Lord 1400. John Wickliffe was in like manner digged up, and burnt into ashes, and thrown into a Brook that runneth by the Town where he was buried. Of the which self-same sawce tasted also William Tracy of Gloucester, a man of a worshipful house, because he had written in his last will, that he should be saved only by Faith in Jesus Christ, and that there needed not the help of any man thereto, whether he were in Heaven or in Earth; and therefore bequeathed no Legacy to that purpose, as all other men were accustomed to do. This deed was done since we may remember, about the 22. year of the Reign of King Henry the Eighth, in the year of our Lord, 1530.

Now seeing they extended such cruelty to the dead, he said it was an easie matter to conjecture what they would do to the living. Whereof we have had sufficient trial by the examples of our own men, these few years past. And if we would take the pains to peruse things done somewhat longer ago, we might find notable matters out of our own Chronicles. Howbeit, it was sufficient for the manifest demonstration of that matter, to declare the beastly butchery of of the French King, executed upon the Waldenses at Cabrier, and the places near therabout, by his Captain Aimer, about the year of our Lord, 1545. than the which there was never thing read of more cruelty done, no not even of the barbarous Pagans. And yet for all that, when divers had shewed their uttermost cruelty both against these and many others, they were so far from their purpose, in extinguishing the light of the Gospel, which they endeavoured to suppress, that it increased daily more and more. The which thing Charles the fifth (then whom all Christendom had not a more prudent Prince, nor the Church of Christ almost a fiercer Enemy) easily perceived; and therefore when he had in his hand Luther dead, and Melancthon and Pomercen with certain other Preachers of the Gospel alive, he not only determined not any thing extremely against them, nor violated their graves, but also intreating them gently, sent them away, not so much as once forbidding them to publish openly the Doctrine that they professed. For it is the nature of Christs Church, that the more that Tyrants spurn against it, the more it increaseth and flourisheth. A notable proof assuredly of the providence and pleasure of God in sowing the Gospel, was that coming of the Bohemians unto us, to the intent to hear Wickliffe, of whom we spake before, who at that time read openly at Oxford.

and also the going of our men to the said Bohemians when persecution was raised against us. But much more notable was it, that we have seen come to pass in these our days; that the Spaniards, sent for into the Realm of purpose to suppress the Gospel, as soon as they were returned home replenished many parts of their Country with the same Truth of Religion, to the which before they were utter enemies. By the which examples it might evidently be perceived, that the Princes of this World labour in vain to overthrow it, considering how the mercy of God hath sown it abroad, not only in those Countries that we spake of, but also in France, Pole, Scotland, and almost all the rest of Europe. For it is said, that some parts of Italy (although it be under the Popes nose) yet do they of late incline to the knowledge of the heavenly Truth: Wherefore sufficient argument and proof might be taken by the success and increase thereof, to make us believe that this Doctrine is sent us from Heaven, unless we will wilfully be blinded. And if there were any that desired to be perverted more at large in the matter, he might advantageously consider the voyage that the Emperour and the Pope with both their powers together, made joyntly against the Bohemians. In the which the Emperour took such an unworthy repulse of so small a handful of his enemies, that he never almost in all his life took the like dishonour in any place. Hereof also might be an especial example of the death of Henry, King of France, who the same day that he had purposed to persecute the Church of Christ, and to have burned certain of his Guard whom he had imprisoned for Religion, at whose execution he had promised to have been himself in proper person, in the midst of his triumph at a Tourney, was wounded so sore in the head with a Spear by one of his own Subjects, that ere it was long after he died. In the which behalf, the dreadful judgments of God were no less approved in our own Country-men. For one that was a notable laughter-man of Christs Saints rotted alive, and ere ever he died, such a rank favour steamed from all his Body, that none of his Friends were able to come at him, but they were ready to vomit. Another, being in utter despair well nigh of all health, howled out miserably. The third ran out of his wits. And divers other that were enemies to the Church perished miserably in the end. All the which things were most certain tokens of the favour and defence of the divine Majesty towards his Church, and of his wrath and vengeance towards the Tyrants. And forasmuch as he had made mention of the Bohemians, he said it was a most apt example that was reported of their Captain Zisca; who, when he should die, willed his Body to be flayed, and of his skin to make a parchment to cover the head of a Drum. For it should come to pass, that when his enemies heard the found of it, they should not be able to stand against them. The like counsel (he said) he himself now gave them as concerning Bucer. That like as the Bohemians did with the Skin of Zisca, the same should they do with the Arguments and Doctrine of Bucer. For as soon as the Papists should hear the noise of him, their gewgaws would forthwith decay. For saving that they used violence to such as withstood them, their Doctrine contained nothing that might seem to any man (having but mean understanding in holy Scripture) to be grounded upon any reason. As for those things that were done by them against such as could not play the mad-men as well as they, some of them favoured of open force, and some of ridiculous foolishness. For what was this first of all? Was it not frivolous, that by the space of three years together, Mass should be sung in those places where Bucer and Phagius rested in the Lord, without any offence at all and as soon as they took it to be an offence, straightway to be an offence, if any were heard thereof that it should not be as good then as it was before as if that then upon the sudden it had been a heinous matter to celebrate it in that place, and that the fault that was past should be counted the grievous, because it was done of longer time before. Moreover, this was a matter of none effect, that Bucer and Phagius only should be digged up, as who should say, that he only had embraced the Religion which they call Heretic. It was well known how one of the Burgeses of the Town had been minded toward the Popish Religion.

Stephen Gardiner died at Winchester.

Who when he should die, willed neither ringing of Bells, Diriges, nor any other such kind of trifles to be done for him in his Anniversary, as they term it, but rather that they should go with instruments of musick before the Mayor and Council of the City, to celebrate his memorial, and also that yearly a Sermon should be made to the People bequeathing a piece of money to the Preacher for his labour. Neither might he omit in that place to speak of Ward the Painter, who albeit he were a man of no reputation, yet was he not to be despised for the Religion sake which he diligently followed. Neither were divers other more to be passed over with silence, who were known of a certainty to have continued in the same Sect and to rest in other Church-yards in Cambridge, and rather through the whole Realm, and yet defiled not their Masses at all. All the which persons (forasmuch as they were all of one Opinion) ought all to have been taken up, or else all to have been let lie with the same Religion; unless a man would grant, that it lieth in their power to make what they list lawful and unlawful at their own pleasure. In the condemnation of Bucer and Phagius, to say the truth, they used too much cruelty, and too much violence. For howsoever it went with the Doctrine of Bucer, certainly they could find nothing whereof to accuse Phagius, inasmuch as he wrote nothing that came abroad, saving a few things that he had translated out of the Hebrew and Caldee Tongues into Latin. After his coming into the Realm he never read, he never disputed, he never preached, he never taught; for he deceased soon after, so that he could in that time give no occasion for his Adversaries to take hold on, whereby to accuse him whom they never heard speak. In that they hated Bucer so deadly, for the allowable marriage of the Clergy, it wasth their own malice conceived against him, and a very slander raised by themselves. For he had for his defence in that matter (over and besides other helps) the testimony of Pope Pius the second, who in a certain place saith, that upon weighty considerations Priests Wives were taken from them, but for more weighty causes were to be restored again. And also the Statute of the Emperour, they call it the Interim, by the which it is enacted, that such of the Clergy as were married, should not be divorced from their Wives.

Thus turning his stile from this matter to the University, he reproved in few words their unfaithfulness towards these men. For if the Lord suffered not the Bones of the King of Edom, being a wicked man, to be taken up and burnt without revengement (as saith Amos) let us assure our selves he will not suffer so notable a wrong done to his godly Preachers unrevenge. Afterward, when he came to the condemnation (which we told you in the former action was pronounced by Pernes the Vicechancellor, in the name of them all) being somewhat more moved at the matter, he admonished them how much it stood them in hand, to use great circumspectness, what they decreed upon any man by their voices, in admitting or rejecting any man to the promotions and degrees of the University. For that he which should take his Authority from them, should be a great prejudice to all the other multitude, which (for the Opinion that he had of their Doctrine, judgment, allowance, and knowledge) did think nothing but well of them. For it would come to pass, that if they would bestow their promotions upon none but meet persons, and let the unmeet go as they come, both the Common-wealth should receive much commodity and profit by them, and besides that, they should highly please God. But if they persisted to be negligent in doing thereof, they should grievously endamage the common-wealth, and worthily work their own shame and reproach. Over and besides that, they should greatly offend the Majesty of God, whose commandment (not to bear false witness) they should in so doing break and violate. In the mean while that he was speaking these and many other things before his audience, many of the University, to set out and defend Bucer withal, beset the walls of the Church and Church-porch on both sides with Verbes; some in Latin, some in Greek, and some in English, in the which they made a manifest declaration how they were minded both toward Bucer and Phagius. Finally, when his Sermon was ended, they made common supplica-supplication and prayers. After thanks rendred to God for many other things, but in especial for restoring of the true and sincere Religion, every man departed his way.

Forasmuch as mention hath been made of the death of the worthy and famous Clerk, Martin Bucer, and of the burning of his Bones after his death, it shall not be unfruitful, as the place here serveth, to induce the Testimony or Epitaph of Dr. Redman, which came not yet in print, upon the decease of that man.

The Epitaph or Funeral Verse of Dr. Redman, upon the death of Mr. Bucer.

The despicable handling and madness of the Papiſts toward Peter Martyrs Wife at Oxford, taken up from her grave at the commandment of Cardinal Pool, and after buried in a dung-hill.

ANd because the one University should not mock the other, like cruelty was also declared upon the dead Body of Peter Martyrs Wife at Oxford, an honest, grave and sober Matron, while the lived, and of poor People always a great helper, as many that be dwelling there can right well testify. In the year of our Lord 1552. she departed this life, with great sorrow of all those needy persons, whose necessities many times and often she had liberally eased, and relieved. Now when Brooks Bishop of Glocester, Nicholas Ormanet Datary, Robert Morwen President of Corpus Christi Colledge, Cole and Wright Doctors of the Civil Law, came thither as the Cardinals Visitors, they among other things had in Commission to take up this good Woman again out of her grave, and to consume her Carcase with fire, not doubting but that she was of the same Religion that her Husband had professed before, when he read the Kings Lecture there. And to make a shew that they would do nothing disorderly, they called all those before them that had any acquaintance with her or her Husband. They ministrated an Oath unto them, that they should not conceal whatsoever was demanded. In fine, their answer was, that they knew not what Religion she was of, by reason they understood not her language.

To be short, after these Visitors had spent their business they came forth, they gate them to the Cardinal again, certifying him that upon due inquisition made, they could learn nothing upon which by the Law they might burn her. Notwithstanding, the Cardinal did not leave the matter so, but wrote down his Letters a good while after to Marshall, then Dean of Frideſwides, that he should dig her up, and lay her out of Christian burial, because she was interred nigh unto St. Frideſwides Relicks, sometime had in great reverence in that Colledge. Doctor Marshall like a pretty man, calling his Spades and Mattocks together in the Evening, when he was well whetted, caused her to be taken up and buried in a Dung-hill.

Howbeit, when it pleased God under good Queen Elizabeth to give quietness to his Church, long time persecuted with prison and death, then Dr. Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury, Edmund Grindall Bishop of London, Richard Goodrich, with divers others her Majesties high Commissioners in matters of Religion (nothing ignorant how far the Adversaries of the Truth had transgressed the bounds of all humanity, in violating the Sepulchre or Grave of that good and virtuous Woman) willed certain of that Colledge, in which this uncounteous touch was attempted or done, to take her out of that unclean and dishonest place where she lay, and solemnly in the face of the whole Town, to bury her again in a more decent and honest Monument. For though the Body being once dead, no great estimation were to be had, how or where the Bones were laid; yet was some reverence to be used toward her for Sex and Womanhood sake. Besides, to say the truth, it was great shame, that he which had travelled so far at King Edwards request, from the place wherein he dwelt quietly and had taken so earnest pains, being an Old man, in reading and setting forth the Truth all he could, with learning to teach and instruct, and so well deserved of that University; should with so ungentle a recompence of ingratitude be rewarded again, as to have his Wife that was a godly woman, a stranger, good to many, especially to the poor, and hurtful to none, either in word or deed, without just deserving, and beside their own Law, not proceeding against her according to the order thereof, spitefully to be laid in a stinking Dung-hill.

To all good natures the fact seemed odious, and of such as be indued with humanity, utterly to be abhorred. Wherefore Mr. Calsfield, then Sub-dean of the Colledge, diligently provided, that from Marshall Dung-hill she was restored and translated to her proper place again, the Bones of Peter Martyrs, which were laid in a cave any Cardinal will be so mad hereafter to remove, this Womans Bones again, it shall be hard for them to discern the Bones of her from the other. And to the intent the same might be notified to the minds of men the better, the next day after, which was Sunday, Mr. Rogers preached unto the People, in which Sermon by the way he declared the rough dealing of the Adversaries, which were contented to practice their cruelty against the living, but that they must also rage against one that was dead, and had lain two years in her grave. God grant them once to see their own wickedness, Amen.

Martyrs
Wives Bones

And thus much touching the noble acts and strangeness of this worthy Cardinal in both the Universities; whereunto it shall not be impertinent, here also consequently to adjoyn and set forth to the eyes of the world the blind and bloody Articles set out by Cardinal Pool, to be inquired upon, within his Diocess of Canterbury whereby it may the better appear what yokes and snares of fond and fruitless traditions were laid upon the poor flock of Christ, to intangle and oppress them with loss of life and liberty. By the which, wise men have to see what godly fruits proceeded from that Catholick Church and See of Rome. In which, albeit thou fellest (good Reader) some good Articles imparfed withal, let that nothing move thee; for else how could such Poyson be ministred, but it must have some honey to relish the Readers tast.

A History of ten Martyrs condemned and burned within the Diocese of Canterbury, for the Testimony of Jesus Christ, and Truth of his Gospel.

Mention was made a little before of the persecution in Kent. Wherefore we declared, that 15. were in the Castle of Canterbury imprisoned and condemned for Gods Word. Of the which 15. moreover we shewed and declared 5. to be sanctified unto death within the said Castle, and buried by the high-way, about the beginning of November. The other ten, in the first month of the next year following, which was the year of our Lord, 1557. were committed unto the fire, and there consumed to ashes, by Thornon, called Bishop or Suffragan of Dover, otherwise called Duke of Dover, and by Nicholas Harpfield the Archdeacon of the said Province.

The names of these ten godly and Christian Martyrs be these:

*John Philpot of Tenterden.
William Waterer of Reddingen.
Stephen Kempe of Norgate.
William Hay of Hulse.
Thomas Hudson of Salenge.
Matt. Bradbridge of Tenterden.
Thomas Stephens of Beddingden.
Nich. Final of Tenterden.
William Lowick of Cranbrooke.
William Prewing of Thornham.*

Of these ten godly Martyrs of Christ, six were burned at Canterbury, about the 15. of January, that is, Kemp, Waterer, Prewing, Lowick, Hudson, and Haie. Other two, that is, Stephens and Philpot, at Wye, about the same month. Other two, which were Final and Bradbridge, were burned both together at Ashford, the 16th of the same.

Concerning their Articles read before.

What the ordinary Articles were, commonly objected to them of Canterbury Diocese, is before rehearsed, save only that to some of these, as to them that follow after, as the time of their persecution did grow, so their Articles withal did increase to the number of two and twenty, containing such like matter as seemed to the maintenance of the Romish See.

To these Articles what their answers were likewise, needeth here no great rehearsal, seeing they all agreed together, though not in the same form of words, yet in much like effect of purposes: first granting the Church of Christ, and denying the Church of Rome, denying the seven Sacraments, refusing the Mass, and the hearing of Latin Service, praying to Saints, justification of Works, &c. And though they did all answer uniformly in some smaller things, as their learning served them, yet in the most principal and chiefest matters they did not greatly discord, &c.

The next Month following, which was February, came out another bloody Commission from the King and Queen, to kindle up the fire of persecution, as though it were not hot enough already; the contents of which Commission I thought here not to pretermite: not for lack of matter, whereof I have too much; but that the Reader may understand how Kings and Princes of this world, like as in the first persecutions of the Primitive Church under Valerianus, Decius, Maximian, Dioclesian, Licinius, &c. so now also in these latter perilous days, have set out all their main force and power, with Laws, Policy, and Authority to the uttermost they could devise against Christ and his blessed Gospel. And yet notwithstanding all these Laws, Constitutions, Injunctions, and terrible Proclamations provided against Christ and his Gospel, Christ yet still continueth, his Gospel flourisheth, and Truth prevaileth; Kings and Emperors in their own purposes overthrown, their devices dissolved, their Councils confounded; as examples both of this and of all times and ages do make manifest. But now let us hear the intent of this Commission, in Tenor as followeth.

The apprehension of two and twenty Prisoners sent up together for Gods Word, to London, from Colchester.

After this bloody Proclamation or Commission thus given out at London, which was February 8. the third and fourth years of the King and Queens Reign, these new Inquisitors, especially some of them began to ruffle, and to take upon them not a little; so that all quarters were full of persecution, and Prisons almost full of Prisoners, namely, in the Diocess of Canterbury, whereof (by the leave of Christ) we will say more anon.

In the mean time, about the Town of Colchester, the wind of persecution began fiercely to rise; inasmuch that three and twenty together, Men and Women, were apprehended

Anno 1557. apprehended at one clasp; of the which twenty three, one escaped: the other twenty two were driven up like a flock of Christian Lambs to London, with two or three Leaders with them at most ready to give their skins to be plucked off for the Gospels sake. Notwithstanding the Bishops, afraid be like of the number, to put so many at once to Death, sought means to deliver them, and so they did, drawing out a very easie submission for them, or rather suffering them to draw it out themselves; Notwithstanding divers of them afterward were taken again and suffered, as hereafter ye shall hear (God willing) declared. Such as met them by the way coming up, saw them in the Fields scattering in such sort, as that they might easily have escaped away. And when they entered into the Towns, their Keepers called them again into array, to go two and two together, having a band or line going between them, they holding the same in their hands, having another cord every one about his Arm, as though they were tied. And so were these fourteen Men and eight Women carried up to London, the People by the way praying to God for them, to give them strength. At their entering into London, they were pinioned, and so came into the City, as the picture here shortly after following with their Names also subscribed; doth describe. But first let us declare concerning their taking and their Attaches, contained in the Commissaries Letter written to Boner; then, the Indenture made between the Commissioners and the Popish Commissary. The Letter of the Commissary is this.

The Letter of the Commissary called Jo. Kingston Written to Bishop Boner.

After my duty done in receiving and accomplishing your Honourable and most loving Letters, dated the 7. of August: Be it known unto your Lordship, that the 28. of August, the Lord of Oxford, Lord Darcy, H. Tyrel, A. Brown, W. Bendlow, E. Tyrel, Rich. Weston, Roger Appleton, published their Commission, to seize the Lands, Tenements and Goods of the Fugitives, so that the owners should have neither use nor commodity thereof, but by Inventory remain in safe keeping, until the cause were determined.

And also there was likewise proclaimed the Queens Graces Warrant for the restitution of the Church Goods within Colchester and the hundreds thereof, to the use of Gods Service. And then were called the Parishes particularly, and the Heretics partly committed to my examination. And that divers persons should certify me of the Ornaments of their Churches, betwixt this and the Justices next appearance, which shall be on Michaelmas even next. And the Parishes which had presented at several times, to have all Ornaments with other things in good order, were exonerated for ever, till they were warned again, and others to make their appearance from time to time. And those names blotted in the Indenture, were indicted for Treason, Fugitives, or Disobedients, and were put forth by Mr. *Brown*s Commandment. And before the sealing, my Lord Darcy said unto me apart and Master *Bendlow*s, that I should have sufficient time to send unto your Lordship, yea, if need were the Heretics to remain in durance till I had an answer from you, yea till the Lord Legates Graces Commissioners come into the Country.

And Mr. Brown came unto my Lord Darcies House and Parlour belonging unto Mr. Barnaby, before my said Lord and all the Justices, and laid his hand on my Shoulder, with a smiling Countenance, and desired me to make his hearty Commendations to your good Lordship, and asked me if I would: and I said, Yea, with a good will. Wherefore I was glad, and thought that I should not have been charged with so sudden carriage.

But after dinner, the Justices counselled with the Bayliffs, and with the Jaylers, and then after took me unto them, and made collation of the Indentures, and sealed them; and then Mr. Brown commanded me this afternoon, being the 30. of August, to go and receive my Prisoners by and by. And then I said, it is an unreasonable commandment, for that I have attended on you here these three days, and this Sunday early I have sent home my men. Wherefore I desire you to have a convenient time appointed, wherein I may know whether it will please my Lord my Master to send his Commissioners hither, or that I shall make carriage of them unto his Lordship. Then Mr. Brown: We are certified, that the Council have written to your Master, to make speed, and to rid these prisoners out of hand: therefore go receive your prisoners in half. Then I: Sir, I shall receive them within these ten days. Then Mr. Brown: The limitation lieth in us, and not in you, wherefore get you hence.

Sirs ye have indicted and delivered me by this Indenture, whose Faith or Opinions I knew not, trusting that ye will grant me a time to examine them, lest I should punish the Catholics: Well, said Mr. Brown, for that cause ye shall have time betwixt this and Wednesday. And I say unto you Mr. Bailiffs, if he do not receive them at your Hands on Wednesday, set open your Door, and let them go.

Then I: My Lord, and Masters all, I Promise to discharge the Town and Countrey of these Heretics, within ten days. Then my Lord Darcy said; Commissary, we do and must all agree in one. Wherefore do ye receive them on or before Wednesday.

Then I: My Lord, the last I carried, I was going betwixt the Chappell and Saint Katherines Chappell, two hours and a half, and in great prease and danger: Wherefore this may be to desire your Lordship, to give in commandment unto my Mr. Sayer, Bailiff, here present, to aid me thorow his liberties, not only with Men and Weapons, but that the Town-clerk may be ready there with his Book to write the Names of the most busy Persons, and this upon three hours warning, all which both my Lord and Mr. Brown commanded.

The 31. of August, William Goodwin of Muchbirch Husbandman, this bringer, and Tho. Alley of Copford your Lordships apparator of your Confraternity in Colchester, covenanted with me, that they should hire two other Men at the least, whereof one should be a Bow-man, to come to me the next day about two of the clock at afternoon, so that I might recite this bargain before Mr. Archdeacon, and pay the Money, that is 46. Shillings 8 pence. Wherefore they should then go forth with me unto Colchester, and on Wednesday before three of the clock in the morning receive there at my hand within the Castle and Mote-hall, fourteen Men and eight Women, ready bound with gyves and hamp, and drive, carry, or lead and feed with meat and drink, as Heretics ought to be found continually, unto such time that the said William and Thomas, shall cause the said two and twenty Persons to be delivered unto my Lord of *London*s Officers, and within the safe keeping of my said Lord, and then to bring unto me again the said gyves, with a perfect token of or from my said Lord, and then this covenant is void, or else, &c.

Master *Bendlow*s said unto me in my Lord of *Oxford*s Chamber at the Kings Head, after I had said Mass before the Lords, that on the morrow after Holy Rood day, when we shall meet at Chelmsford for the Division of these Lands, I think Mr. Archdeacon, you, and Mr. Smith, shall be fain to ride with certain of the jury to those portions and manors in your part of Essex, and in like case divide your selves, to tread and view the ground with the Quest or else I think they will not labour the matter, and so do you say unto Mr. Archdeacon.

Alice the Wife of William Walley of Colchester, hath submitted here self, abjured her Erroneous Opinions, asked absolution, promised to do her solemn penance in her Parish Church at S. Peters on Sunday next, and to continue a Catholic and a faithful Woman, as long as God shall send her life. And for these Covenants, her Husband standeth bound in five pounds. Which Alice is one of the nine Women of this your Indenture; and she is big with Child. Wherefore she remaineth at home, and this done in the presence of the Bailiffs, Aldermen, and Town-clerk. And for that Mr. Brown was critised, there was no Curate at Lexdon, he enquired who was the former. The answer was made, Sir Francis Jobson. Who is the Parson? They of the Quest-men answered, Sir Roger Gheslew. When was he with you? Not these fourteen years. How is your Cure served? Now and then.

said for.

Who is the Patron? My Lord of Arundel. And within short time after, Sir Francis Jebson came with great courtie unto my Lord Darcies place. And of all Gentlemen about us, I saw no more come in: Sir Robert Smith Priest, sometime Canon of Bridlington, now Curate of Appledore in the Wild of Kent, came to Colchester the 23. day of August, with his wife big with Child, of late divorced, taken on suspicion, examined of the Lords, and Mr. Brown told me that they have received Letters from the Council for the attachment of certain persons, and especially of one Priest, whose name is Pullen (but his right name is Smith) doubting this Priest to be the said Pullen, although neither he nor his wife would confess the same.

Wherefore he lieth still in Prison, but surely this is not Pullen. If it please your Lordship to have in remembrance, that the houlholders might be compelled to bring every man his own wife to her own seat in the Church in time of Divine Service, it would profit much. And also there be yet standing Hospitals, and other of like foundation about Colchester, which I have not known to appear at any visitation, as the Masters and Lazars of Mary Magdalen in Colchester, the Proctor of St. Katherines Chappel in Colchester, the Hospital or Breadhouse of the foundation of the Lord H. Harney in Laremaryn, the Hospital and Beadman of little Horksey. Thus presuming of your Lordships goodness, I am more than bold ever to trouble you with this worldly business, beseeching Almighty God to send your honourable Lordship a con-dign reward.

From Eastthorp this present 30. day of August.

We found a Letter touching the marriage of Priests in the hands of the foresaid Sir Robert Smith. Also I desired Mr. Brown, the doer of all things, to require the Audience to bring in their unlawful Writings and Books; Who asked me, if I had proclaimed the Proclamation. I said, Yea. Then he said openly upon the Bench, that they should be proclaimed every quarter once. And then take the Constables and Officers, and they alone take and punish the offenders accordingly.

By your poor Beadman,

John Kingston, Priest.

The xxii. aforesaid prisoners thus sent from Colchester to London, were brought at length to Bishop Boner. As touching the order and manner of their coming and bringing, the said Boner himself writeth to Cardinal Pool, as you shall hear.

A Letter of Bp. Boner to Cardinal Pool.

B. Boner Letter to Cardinal Pool, concerning the prisoners aforesaid.

May it please your good Grace with my most humble obedience, reverence, and duty, to understand, that going to London upon Thursday last, and thinking to be troubled with Mr. Germaines matter only, and such other common matters as are accustomed, enough to weary a right strong Body, I had the day following to comfort my stomach withal, Letters from Colchester, that either that day or the day following, I should have sent thence 22. Hereticks, indicted before the Commissioners, and indeed I had, and compelled to bear their charges as I did of the other, which both stood me above twenty Nobles, a sum of money that I thought full evil bestowed. And these Hereticks notwithstanding they had honest Catholick Keepers to conduct and bring them up to me, and in all the way from Colchester to Stratford of the Bowe did go quietly, and obediently, yet coming to Stratford they began to take heart of grace, and to do as pleased themselves, for they began to have their guard, which generally increased till they came to Algate, where they were lodged Friday night.

And albeit I took order that the said Hereticks should be with me very early on Saturday morning, to the intent they might quietly come and be examined by me, yet it was between ten and eleven of the clock before they would come, and no way would they take, but thorow Cheapside, so that they were brought to my house with about a thousand persons. Which thing I took very strange, and spake to Sir John Gresham then being with me, to tell the Mayor and the Sheriffs that this thing was not well suffered in the City. These naughty Hereticks all the way they came thorow Cheapside, both exhorted the People to their part, and had much comfort & promise given, and being entred into my house, and talked withal, they shewed themselves desperate, and very obstinate; yet I used all the honest means I could, both of my self and others, to have won them, causing divers learned men to talk with them, and finding nothing in them but pride and wilfulness, I thought to have had them all hither to Fulham, and here to give Sentence against them. Nevertheless, perceiving by my last doing that your Grace was offended, I thought it my duty before I any thing further proceeded herein, to advertise first your Grace hereof, and know your good pleasure, which I beseech your Grace I may do by this trusty bearer. And thus most humbly I take my leave of your good Grace, beseeching Almighty God always to preserve the same. At Fulham, this 15th day of November. 1556.

Your Graces most bounden Bedesman and Servant, Edmund Boner.

tains what

dinal.

By this Letter of Bishop Boner to the Cardinal, is to be understood, what good will was in this Bishop to have the Blood of these men, and to have past with sentence of condemnation against them, had not the Cardinal somewhat (as it seemed) stayed his fervent headiness. Concerning the which Cardinal, although it cannot be denied by his Acts and writings, but that he was a professed enemy, and no otherwise to be reputed but for a Papist: yet again it is to be supposed, that he was none of the Bloody and cruel sort of Papists, as may appear, not only by slaying the rage of this Bishop, but also by the solicitous writing, and long Letters written to Cranmer, also by the complaints of certain Papists accusing him to the Pope, to be a bearer with the Hereticks, and by the Popes Letters sent to him upon the same, calling him up to Rome, and setting Frier Pero in his place, had not Queen Mary by special intreaty, kept him out of the Popes danger. All which Letters I have (if need be) to shew: and besides also, that it is thought of him that toward his latter end a little before his coming from Rome to England, he began somewhat to favour the doctrine of Luther, and was Card. Pool no less suspected at Rome: Yea, and furthermore, did there at Rome convert a certain learned Spaniard from Papiism to Luthers side: notwithstanding the pomp and glory of the world afterward carried him away to play the Papist thus as he did. But of this Cardinal enough.

Lutheran at Rome.

To return now to this godly company again, first how they were brought up in bands to London, ye have heard: Also how Boner was about to have read the sentence of death upon them, and how he was stayed by the Cardinal, ye understand. As touching their confession, which they articulated up in writing, it was too tedious to recite the whole at length. Briefly touching the Article of the Lords Supper (for the which they were chiefly troubled) thus they wrote, as here followeth.

The Supper of the Lord.

Whereas Christ at his last Supper, took Bread, and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and gave it to his Disciples, and said, Take, eat, this is my Body. And likewise took the cup and thanked, &c. We do understand it to be a figurative speech, as the most manner of his language was in parables and dark sentences that they which are carnally minded, should see with their eyes, and not perceive, and hear with their ears, and not understand, signifying this, that as he did break the Bread among them, being but one loaf, and they all were partakers thereof, so we through his Body, in that it was broken, and offered upon the Cross for us, are all partakers thereof, and his Blood cleanseth us from all sins, and hath pacified Gods wrath towards us, and made the atonement between God and us, if we walk henceforth in the light, even as he is the true light.

Their opinion & judgment of the Lords Supper. Christe saith to parables.

And in that he said further, Do this in remembrance of me, it is a memorial and token of the suffering and death of Jesus Christ: and he commanded it for this cause, that the Congregation of Christ should come together to shew his death, and to thank and laud him for all his benefits, and magnifie his Holy Name, and so to break the Bread, and drink the Wine, in Remembrance that Christ had given his Body, and shed his Blood for us.

The cause why the bread and cup was given in this Supper.

Thus you may well perceive, though Christ called the Bread his Body, and the Wine his Blood, yet it followeth not, that the substance of his Body should be in the Bread and Wine; as divers places in Scripture are spoken by Christ and the Apostles in like phrase of speech as in John 15. I am the true vine. Also in John 10. I am the Door. And as it is written in the 9: to the Hebr. and in Exod. 24. how Moses took the Blood of the calves, and sprinkled both the book and all the People, saying, This is the Blood of the covenant or Testament. And also in the 5. Chapter of Ezek. how the Lord said unto him concerning the third part of his hair, saying, This is Jerusalem &c.

How the figures, and ought to be spiritually examined, and not as Superstices ought to be examined.

Thus we see the Scriptures how they are spoken in figures, and ought to be spiritually examined, and not as Superstices ought to be examined. And as it is written in the 9: to the Hebr. and in Exod. 24. how Moses took the Blood of the calves, and sprinkled both the book and all the People, saying, This is the Blood of the covenant or Testament. And also in the 5. Chapter of Ezek. how the Lord said unto him concerning the third part of his hair, saying, This is Jerusalem &c.

After this confession of their faith and doctrine being written and exhibited, they also devised a Letter withal, in manner of a short supplication, or rather an admonition to the Judges and Commissioners, requiring that justice justice and Judgment, after the rule of Gods word, might be ministred unto them. The Copy of which their Letter I thought here also to shew unto the Reader in form as followeth.

A Letter or Supplication of the Prisoners to the Judges.

A Letter of request of the Prisoners to the Judges.

TO the right honorable audience, before whom these our simple Writings, and the Confession of our Faith shall come to be heard or seen, we poor Prisoners being fast in bonds upon the trial of our Faith, which we offer to be tried by the Scriptures, pray most heartily, that so far as God hath given you power and strength over us as concerning our Bodies, under whom we submit our selves as obedient subjects in all things due, ye being Officers and Rulers of the People, may execute true Judgment, keep the Laws of Righteousness, govern the People according to right, and hear the poor and helpless in Truth, and defend their cause.

God for his Son Jesus Christs sake, give you the wisdom and understanding of Solomon, David, Ezekias, Moses, with divers other most virtuous Rulers, by whose wisdom and most godly understanding, the People were justly ruled and governed in the fear of God, all wickedness was by them overthrown and beaten down and all godliness and virtue did flourish and spring. O God which art the most highest, the Creator and maker of all things, and of all men both great and small, and carest for all alike, which dost try all mens works and imaginations, before whose judgment seat shall come both high and low, rich and poor; we most humbly beseech thee to put into our Rulers hearts the pure love and fear of thy Name, that even as they themselves would be judged, and as they shall make answer before thee, so they may hear our causes, judge with mercy, and read over these our requests and confessions of our Faith, with deliberation and a godly judgment.

And if any thing here seemeth to your honourable audience to be erroneous or disagreeing to the Scripture, if it shall please your Lordships to hear us patiently, which do offer our selves to the Scriptures, thereby to make answer, and to be tried, in so doing we poor subjects being in much captivity and bondage are most bound to pray for your noble estate and long preservation.

The request of these men being so just, and their Doctrine so found, yet all this could not prevail with the Bishop and other Judges, but that Sentence should have proceeded against them incontinent, had not the goodness of the Lord better provided for his Servants, then the Bishop had intended. For as they were now under the edge of the Axe, ready to be condemned by Sentence, it was thought otherwise by the Cardinal, and some other wiser heads; fearing belike, lest by the death of so many together, some disturbance might rise peradventure among the People; and so it was decreed among themselves, that rather they should make some submission or confession, such as they would themselves, and so be sent home again, as they were indeed; howbeit divers of them afterward were apprehended and put to death. But in the mean space as touching their submission which they made, this it was, as in form here followeth.

The Submission or Confession of these aforesaid Prisoners.

An esse submission of the Prisoners.

BEcause our Saviour Christ at his last Supper took Bread, and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and gave it unto his Disciples, and said, Take, eat, this is my Body which is given for you, this do in remembrance of me, Therefore according to the words of our Saviour Jesus Christ, we do believe in the Sacrament to be Christs Body. And likewise he took the Cup, gave thanks, and gave it to his Disciples, and said, This is my Blood of the New Testament which is shed for many.

Therefore likewise we do believe that it is the Blood of Christ, according as Christs Church doth minister the same. Unto the which Catholick Church of Christ we do in this like as in all other matters submit ourselves, promising therein to live as it becometh good Christian men, and here in this Realm to use our selves, as it becometh faithful Subjects unto our most gracious King and Queen, and to all other Superiours both spiritual and temporal, Anno according to our bounden duties.

The names of them which subscribed to this submission, were these, John Atkin, Alyn Symfon, Richard George, Thomas Fireanne, William Munt, Richard Toly, Richard Gratzwicke, Thomas Winsley, Richard Rotbe, Richard Clark, Stephen Glover, Robert Colman, Thomas Merle, William Bonger, Robert Bercock, Margaret Hide, Elyn Euring, Christian Pepper, Margaret Feld, Alice Munt, Joan Winsly, Cysly Warren, Rose Alyn, Ann Whitelocke, George Barker, John Saxby, Thomas Locker, Alice Locker.

A Story of five other godly Martyrs, burned at one Fire in Smithfield, the Twelfth day of April.

TO proceed further in this Story of persecuted Martyrs, next in order follow five other burned at London in Smithfield in the foresaid year of the Lord 1557. April 12. whose names were these:

*Thomas Lashby, Henry Ramsey,
Thomas Thiriel.*

*Margaret Hide,
Agnes Stanley.*

Five Martyrs.

Who being, some by the Lord Rich, some by other Justices of Peace, and Constables (their own Neighbours) at the first accused, and apprehended for not coming to their Parish Churches, were in the end sent unto Boner Bishop of London, and by his commandment the 27. day of January were examined before Dr. Darbishire, then Chancellor to the said Bishop, upon the former general Articles mentioned.

Answers to the Articles

WHose Answers thereunto were, that as they confessed there was one true and Catholick Church, whereof they steadfastly believed, and thought the Church of Rome to be no part or member: so in the same Church they believed there were but two Sacraments, that is to say, Baptism, and the Supper of the Lord. Howbeit some of them attributed the title and honour of a Sacrament, to the holy estate of Matrimony, which undoubtedly was done rather of simple ignorance then of any wilful opinion, and are thereof to be adjudged as before is admonished.

Moreover, they acknowledged themselves to be baptized into the Faith of that true Church, as in the third Article is specified. And herein reading as well of these Articles, as also of the rest, mark I beseech you the crafty subtilty of these Catholick Companions, who intermixing certain points of Faith, and of the true Church with the idolatrous and superstitious manumery of their Romish Synagogue, cause the poor and simple People, for lack of knowledge, oftentimes to fall into their crafty nets.

For after they have made them grant a true Church with the Sacraments of the same, though not in such number as they would have them, and also that they were christened into the Faith thereof, that is, in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, they craftily now in the other their objections, defending as it were from the Faith of the Trinity, unto their idolatrous Mass and other superstitious Ceremonies, would make them grant that now in denying thereof they have severed themselves from the Faith of the true Church, whereunto they were baptized; which is most false. For though the true light of Gods Gospel and holy Word, was marvellously darkened, and in a manner utterly extinguished: yet the true Faith of the Trinity, by the merciful providence of God, was still preserved, and into the Faith thereof were we baptized, and not into the belief and profession of their horrible Idolatry and vain Ceremonies.

These things not thoroughly weighed by these poor, yet faithful, and true members of Christ, caused some of them ignorantly to grant, that when they came to the years of discretion, and understood the light of the Gospel, they did separate themselves from the Faith of the Church, meaning none other but only to separate themselves

Touching these Articles, read before.

Two Sacraments only.

Crafty dealing of the simple ignorance deceived.

1556. Anno themselves from the admitting or allowing of such their Popish and Erroneous Trash as they now had defiled the Church of Christ withal, and in not from their Faith received in Baptism, which in express words in their Answers to the other Articles they constantly affirmed, declaring the Mass and Sacrament of the Altar, to be most wicked Blasphemy against Christ Jesus, and contrary to the Truth of his Gospel, and therefore utterly they refused to assent unto and to be reconciled again thereunto.

These answers in effect of them thus taken by the said Chancellor, they were for that time dismissed; but the Bishop, taking the matter into his own Hands, the sixth day of March, propounded unto them certain other new Articles: the copy whereof followeth.

Other Articles objected by Boner, Bishop of London, against Thomas Lofely, Henry Ramsey, Thomas Thirrell, Margaret Hide, and Agnes Stanley, the sixth day of March, being the second time of the Examination.

1 Item, that thou hast thought, believed, and spoken, within some part of the City and Diocess of London, that the Faith, Religion, and Ecclesiastical Service here observed and kept, as it is in the Realm of England, is not a true and a laudable Faith, Religion, and Service, especially concerning the Mass, and the seven Sacraments, nor is agreeable to Gods Word and Testament, and that thou canst not find in thy Heart without murmuring, grudging, or scruple to receive and use it, and to conform thy self unto it, and as other Subjects of this Realm customably have done and do.

2 Item, that thou hast thought, &c. that the English Service set forth in the time of K. Edward the sixth, here in this Realm of England, was and is good and godly, and Catholic in all points, and that it alone ought here in this Realm to be received, used, and practised, and none other.

3 Item, likewise thou hast thought, &c. that thou art not bound to come to thy Parish Church, and there to be present, and hear Mass, Evensong, and other Divine Service, sung or said there.

4 Item, thou hast thought, &c. that thou art not bound to come to Procession to the Church, upon days and times appointed, and to go in the same with others of the Parish singing or saying then the accustomed Prayers used in the Church, nor to bear a Taper or Candle on Candlemas day, nor take Alms upon Asswades days, nor bear Palmes upon Palmes Sunday, nor to creep to the Crofs upon days accustomed, nor to receive and kiss the pax at Mass time, nor to receive Holy Water or Holy Bread, nor to accept and allow the Ceremonies and Usages of the Church, after the Manner and Fashion, as they are used in this Realm.

5 Item, thou hast thought, &c. that thou art not bound at any time to confess thy Sins to any Priest, and to receive Absolution at his Hands, as Gods Minister, nor to receive at any time the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, especially as it is used in this Church of England.

6 Item, thou hast thought, &c. that in matters of Religion and Faith, thou must follow and believe thine own Conscience only and not give credit to the Determination and common Order of the Catholic Church, and the See of Rome, nor to any member thereof.

7 Item, thou hast thought, &c. that all things do chance of an absolute and precise necessity, so that whether Man do well or evil, he could not chuse but do so, and that therefore no Man hath any free will at all.

8 Item, thou hast thought, &c. that the Fashion and Manner of Christening of Infants, is not agreeable to Gods Word, and that none can be Effectually Baptized, and thereby saved, except he have years of Discretion to believe himself, and so willingly accept or refuse Baptism at his Pleasure.

9 Item, thou hast thought, &c. that Prayers to Saints, or Prayers for the Dead, are not available, and not allowable by Gods Word, or profitable in any wise, and that the Souls departed do straightways go to Heaven or Hell, or else do sleep till the day of doom, so that there is no place of Purgation at all.

10 Item, thou hast thought, &c. that all such as in the time of King Henry the 8. or in the time of Queen

Mary in England, have been burned as Hereticks were no Hereticks at all, but faithful and good Christian People; especially Barnes, Garret, Jerome, Frith, Rogers, Hooper, Cardmaker, Latimer, Taylor, Bradford, Philpot, Crammer, Ridley, and such like, and that thou didst and dost allow, like, and approve all their Opinions, and dost mislike their Condemnations and Burnings.

11 Item, thou hast thought, &c. that fasting, and prayers used in this Church of England, and the appointing of days for fasting, and the abstaining from flesh upon fasting days, and especially in the time of Lent, is not laudable or allowable by Gods Word, but is Hypocritie and Foolishness; and that Men ought to have liberty to eat at all times all kinds of meat.

12 Item, thou hast thought, &c. that the Sacrament of the Altar is an Idol, and to reserve and keep it, or to honor it, is plain Idolatry and Superstition: and likewise of the Mass and Elevation of the Sacrament.

13 Item, thou hast thought, &c. that thou or any else, convented before an Ecclesiastical Judge concerning matters of Belief and Faith, are not, nor is bound to make answer at all, especially under an Oath upon a Book.

Their Answers to the Articles before objected

Their Answers to these Objections were, that as touching the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, ninth, tenth, and twelfth, they generally granted unto, saying that they denied the Souls of the departed to sleep till the day of Judgment, as is mentioned in the ninth Article.

And as concerning the sixth Objection, they thought themselves bound to believe the True Catholic Church, so far forth as the same doth instruct them according to Gods Holy Word, but not to follow the Determinations of the Erroneous and Babylonical Church of Rome.

As for the seventh, eighth, and thirteenth, they utterly denied, that ever they were of any such absurd Opinions as are contained therein, but they granted that Man of himself without the help and assistance of Gods Holy Spirit, hath no power to do any good thing acceptably in Gods sight.

To the eleventh they said, that true fasting and prayer, used according to Gods Word, are allowable and available in his sight, and that by the same word every faithful Man may eat all meats at all times, with thanksgiving to God for the same.

After this, the first day of April, they were again convented before the Bishop in his Palace at London, where little appeared to be done, except it were to know whether they would stand to their Answers, and whether they would recant or no. But when they refused to recant and deny the received and Infallible Truth, the Bishop caused them to be brought into the open Confessory, the third day of the same Month of April, in the forenoon, where first understanding by them their immutable constancy and steadfastness, he demanded particularly of every one what they had to say, why he should not pronounce the Sentence of Condemnation.

To whom Thomas Lofely first answered, God give me Grace and Strength to stand against you, and your Sentence, and also against your Law, which is a devouring Law, for it devoureth the flock of Christ. And I perceive there is no way with me but Death, except I would consent to your devouring Law, and believe that Idol the Mass.

Next unto him answered Thomas Thirrell, saying, My Lord, I say thus, if you make me an Heretic, then you make Christ and all the twelve Apostles Hereticks: for I am in the true Faith and right Belief, and I will stand in it, for I know full well I shall have eternal Life therefore.

The Bishop then asked the like question of Henry Ramsey: who said again, My Lord, will you have me to go from the Truth that I am in? I say unto you, that my Opinions be the very Truth, which I will stand unto, and not go from them: and I say unto you further, that there are two Churches upon the Earth, and we (meaning himself and other True Martyrs and Professors of Christ) be of the True Church, and ye be not.

Margaret Hides words to Anne.

Unto this question next answered Margaret Hide, saying, My Lord, you have no cause to give Sentence against me. for I am in the True Faith and Opinion, and will never forsake it; and I do with that I were more strong in it then I am.

Agnes Stanley
words to Anne.

Last of all answered Agnes Stanley, and said, I had rather every hair of my head were burned, if it were never to much worth, then that I will forsake my Faith and Opinion, which is the True Faith.

Lofely words
to Anne.

The time being now spent, they were commanded to appear again at afternoon in the same place: which Commandment being obeyed, the Bishop first called for Lofely, and after his accustomed manner willed his Articles and Answers to be read: in reading thereof, when mention was made of the Sacrament of the Altar, the Bishop with his Colleagues put off their Caps. Whereat Lofely said, My Lord, seeing you put off your Cap, I will put on my Cap, and therewithal did put on his Cap. And after, the Bishop continuing in his accustomed Periwations, Lofely again said unto him, My Lord, I trust I have the Spirit of Truth, which you detest and abhor, for the Wisdom of God is Foolishness unto you. Whereupon the Bishop pronounced the Sentence of Condemnation against him. And delivering him unto the Sheriff, called for Margaret Hide, with whom he used the like order of Exhortations.

The words

Hides to the Bishop.

To whom notwithstanding the said, I will not depart from my sayings till I be burned: and my Lord (quoth she) I would see you instruct me with some part of Gods

Word, and not to give me Instructions of the Holy Bread and Holy Water, for it is no part of the Scripture. But he, being neither himself, nor any of his, able rightly to accomplish her requests, to make short work, used his final Reason of Convincement, which was the Sentence of Condemnation. And therefore leaving her off, called for another, viz. Agnes Stanley, who upon the Bishops like periwations made this Answer.

My Lord, where you say I am an Heretick, I am none: neither yet will I believe you, nor any Man that is wile will believe as you do. And as for these that ye say be burnt for Heresie, I believe are True Martyrs before God: therefore I will not goe from my Opinion and Faith as long as I live.

Her talk thus ended, she received the like reward that the other had. And the Bishop then turning his tale and manner of enticement unto Thomas Thirlst, received of him likewise this final answer, My Lord, I will not hold with your Idolatrous ways, as you do: for I say, the Mass is Idolatry, and will stick to my Faith and Belief, so long as the Breath is in my Body. Upon which words he was also Condemned as an Heretick.

Last of all, was Henry Ramsey demanded if he would (as the rest) stand unto his answers, or else recanting the same, come home again, and be a member of their Church. Whereunto he answered, I will not go from my Religion and Belief as long as I live; and my Lord (quoth he) your Doctrine is naught, for it is not agreeable to Gods Word.

The strange dealing of the Bishops with Stephen Gyrowick
Martyr.

After these moreover in the Month of May followed three other that suffered in St. Georges-field in Southwark, William More, Stephen Gyrowick, with one King. Among other Histories of the persecuted and condemned Saints of God, I find the Condemnation of none more strange nor unlawfull then of this Stephen Gyrowick:

who first was condemned by the Bishop of Winchester and the Bishop of Rochester, which were not his Ordinaries.

Secondly, when he did appeal from these incompetent Judges to his right Ordinary, his appeal could not be admitted.

Thirdly, when they had no other shift to colour their inordinate Proceedings withal, they suborned one of the Priests to come in for a counterfeit and a false Ordinary, and fit upon him.

Fourthly, being openly convinced and overturned in his own Arguments, yet the said Bishop of Winchester Dr. White, neither would yield to the force of truth, nor suffer any of the Audience assistant once to say, God strengthen him.

Fifthly, as they brought in a false Ordinary to fit upon him; so they pretended false Articles against him which were no part of his Examinations, but of their devising, to have his Blood.

Sixthly

Anno Sixtily and lastly, having no other ground nor just matters against him, but only for saying these words; That which I said, I have said, they read the sentence of death upon him.

And this was the dealing of these men, which needs will be reputed for Catholick Fathers of the Spirituality, Successors of the Apostles, Disciples of Christ, pillars of the holy Church, and leaders of the People. Of whose doings and proceedings, how agreeable they are to the example of Christ and his Apostles, I leave to discuss, referring the judgment hereof to them; which know the Institution of Christs Religion and Doctrine.

Now least peradventure the disordered misrule of these Christmas Lords, will not be credited upon the simple narration of the story, ye shall hear the whole discourse of this process registered by the hand of the Martyr himself, who as he could tell best what was done; so I am sure would not testifie otherwise then the Truth was, according as you shall hear by his own declaration here following.

The last-named handling of St. Gratwick, written and testified by his own record.

The declaration of Stephen Gratwick concerning his own Story and Condemnation.

Upon the 25. day of May, in the year of our Lord, 1557. I Stephen Gratwick came before the Bishop of Winchester, Dr. White, into St. Georges Church in Southwark at 8. of the Clock in the morning, and then he called me before him, and said unto me.

B. Winch. Stephen Gratwick, how standeth the matter with thee now? Art thou contented to revoke thy Heresies, the which thou hast maintained and defended here within my Diocess, oftentimes before me; and also upon Sunday last ye stood up in the face of the whole Church maintaining your Heresies, so that you have offended within the liberty of my Diocess; and now I being your Ordinary you must answer to me directly, whether you will revoke them or not; the which I have here in writing, and if so be that you will not revoke them, then I will excommunicate you, and therefore note well what you do, for now I read here the Articles against you.

And so when he had ended, he bad me answer unto them.

Grat. My Lord, these Articles which you have here objected against me, are not mine, but of your own making. For I never had any of mine Examinations written at any time, and therefore these be the Objections that you lay against me as I have to get my Blood.

Wherefore I desire your lawful favour, to allow my lawful appeal unto mine Ordinary: for I have nothing to do with you. And whereas you do burden me, that I have offended within your Diocess, it is nothing so: for I have not entered either to preach or teach within your Diocess, but was apprehended by mine own Bishop and sent Prisoner into your Diocess, by the consent of the Council and mine own Ordinary, and therefore I so being in your Diocess, you have no cause to let my lawful appeal.

And with that there came the Bishop of Rochester, and was received at the Bishop of Winchester's hands with much gladness, according to their determinate purpose before invented. And so followed the Archdeacon of Canterbury. And then the Bishop again start up as a man half ravished of his wits for joy, embracing him with many gentle words, and said, that he was very glad of his coming, making ignorant thereof, as he thought it should appear to me. Then said Winchester.

B. Winch. Sir, I am very glad of your coming. For here I have one before me, who hath appealed unto you being his Ordinary. Then said the Archdeacon of Canterbury.

Arch. Can. I know this man very well. He hath been divers times before me. And then I answered and said:

Grat. My Lord, I am not of his Diocess, not by five miles: for his Diocess reacheth on that part but to the Cliffs of Lewes, and I dwelled at Bright Hempston, five miles beyond, in the Diocess of the Bishop of Chichester; and therefore I am not of his Diocess.

The B. of Rochester.

Catholick conveyance among these Bishops.

St. Gratwick, not of Roch. Diocess.

Then the Bishop of Winchester, the Bishop of Rochester, and the Archdeacon of Canterbury, cast their heads together, and laughed: and then they said, my Ordinary would be here by and by; and so they sent forth for a counterfeit instead of mine Ordinary; and then I saw them laugh, and spake unto them and said:

Grat. Why do ye laugh? are ye confederate together for my Blood, and therein triumph? you have more cause to look weightily upon the matter: for I stand here before you upon life and death. But you declare your selves what you are: for you are lapped in Lamb's apparel, but I would to God ye had Coats according to your assembly here, which is Scarlet Gowns; for I do here perceive you are bent to have my Blood.

And then came rushing in that counterfeit Bishop, who was the hired Servant to deliver me into the hands of the High Priest; and the Bishop hearing him come, with hast inquired of his man, who was there: and he said, My Lord of Chichester. Then the Bishop with hast rose up and said.

Winch. Ye are most heartily welcom, and required him to sit down; and then said the Bishop of Winchester to me, Lo here is your Ordinary; What have you now to say unto him?

Grat. I have nothing to say unto him. If he have nothing to say unto me, I pray you let me depart. Then answered my Counterfeit Ordinary and said.

Counterf. Here you stand before my Lords and me in trial of your Faith, and if you bring the Truth, we shall by compulsion give place unto you, as it is to be proved by the Word, And your Doctrine to be heard and embraced for a Truth.

Grat. Then I demanded of him whether he meant by Authority, or by the judgment of the Spirit of God in his members.

And he answered me, by Authority as well as by the Spirit.

Grat. Then I said. Now will I turn your own argument upon you: for Christ came before the High Priests, Scribes, and Pharisees, bringing the Truth with him, being the very Truth himself, which Truth cannot lie, yet both he and his Truth was condemned, and took no place with them: And also the Apostles, and all the Martyrs that died since Christ: therefore I turn your own Argument upon you, answer it if you can.

Counterf. Then he with a great heat of choler, said unto the Bishop of Winchester, Object some Articles against him, for he is obstinate, and would fain get out of our hands, therefore hold him to some particular: so that other answer could I not have of his Argument.

Winch. Then the Bishop of Winchester began to read his Objections of his own making against me, and bade me answer unto them. And I said:

Grat. No, except you would set the Law apart, because I see you are mindful of my Blood.

Winch. Now you may see he will not answer to these, but as he hath afore said. Then spake the Counterfeit Ordinary again, and said.

Counterf. My Lord, ask him what he saith to the Sacrament of the Altar. Then the Bishop asked me, as my Counterfeit Ordinary required him.

Grat. My Lord, I do believe that in the Sacrament of the Supper of the Lord truly ministered in both kinds, according to the institution of Christ, unto the worthy Receiver, he eateth mystically by faith the Body and Blood of Christ. Then I asked him if it were not the Truth. And he said, Yes. Then said I, Bear witness of the Truth.

Winch. Then the Bishop of Winchester, whose head being subtillest to gather upon my words, said, my Lord, see you not how he creepeth away with his Heresies, and covereth them privily? Note how he here separateth the Sacrament of the Altar from the Supper of the Lord, meaning it not to be the true Sacrament, and also how he condemneth our ministrations in one kind, and alloweth that the unworthy receiver doth not Eat and Drink the Body and Blood of Christ; which be fore matters truly weighed, being covered very craftily with his subtilty. Lord. he depart.

The Bishop of Winchester, counsellor of a state Ordinary against St. Gratwick.

See what men have of poor mans blood.

Here cometh in the vice to play.

Christ bringing the Truth could not be heard of the Scribes and Pharisees.

Objections of the Bishops own making.

The Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

The Sacrament of the Altar, no Sacrament.

The wicked man not the Body of the Lord.

Grat. My Lord, that is but your gathering of my words, for you before confelled the same sayings to be the Truth, and this you catch at me, and fain would have a vantage for my Blood; but seeing you judge me not to mean the Sacrament of the Altar, now come to the probation of the same Sacrament, and prove it to be the true Sacrament, and I am with you; or else if you can prove your Church to be the true Church, I am also with you.

But then he called to memory the last probation of the Church and Sacraments, how he before was driven to forsake the Scriptures, and to shew me by good reason how they might minister the Sacrament in one kind: and his reason was this, Like as a man or woman dyeth on a sudden, and so when we have given him the Body of Christ, in the mean time the party dieth, and so he eateth the Body of Christ, and not drinketh his Blood. And this was his simple shift in the proving of their Sacraments: so that he was now half abashed to begin that matter again.

But yet a little shift he brought in, and said:

Winch. What sayst thou by the administration of the Priests every day for themselves, and they minister in both kinds?

To that I answered, you have two administrations, for I am sure at Easter you minister but in one kind, and therefore it is not according to the Institution of Christ, but after your own imaginations.

Winch. Why then what shift thou to these words, Take, Eat, this is my Body. These are the words of Christ. Wilt thou deny them?

Grat. My Lord, they are the words of Scripture, I affirm them, and not deny them.

Rochefer. Why, then thou dost confesse in the Sacrament of the Altar to be a Real presence, the self same Body that was born of the Virgin Mary, and is ascended up into Heaven.

Grat. My Lord, what do you now mean? do you not also mean a visible Body? for it cannot be, but of necessity, if it be a Real presence, and a Material Body, it must be a visible Body also.

Winch. Nay, I say unto thee, it is a Real presence, and a Material Body, and an Invisible Body too.

Grat. My Lord, then it must needs be a Fantastical Body, for if it should be a Material and Invisible as you affirm, then it must needs be a Fantastical Body; for it is apparent, that Christ's humane Body was visible and seen.

Winch. Then the Bishop brake out and said, when didst thou see him? I pray thee tell me.

Grat. To that I answered and said, a simple argument it is; Because our corporal eyes cannot comprehend Christ, doth it prove or follow, that he is invisible, because we cannot see him?

Winch. And with that the Bishop began to wax weary of his Argument, and removed his talk to Judas in eating the Sacrament, and said, He eat him wholly, as the Apostles did.

Grat. And then I asked him, if he meant Christ's flesh and Blood, the which he speaketh of in the sixth of John and faith, He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my Blood, hath eternal life in me.

Winch. To that he answered and said, Yea.

Grat. Then said I, of necessity Judas must needs be saved, because he did eat the flesh, and drink the Blood of Christ, as you have affirmed, and also all the ungodly that die without repentance, because they have eaten your Sacrament, which you say is the flesh and Blood of Christ: therefore of necessity they shall receive the benefit thereof, that is, eternal life. Which is a great absurdity to grant, and then of necessity it must follow, that all that eat not, and drink not of your Sacrament, shall finally perish and be damned; for Christ faith, Except ye eat my flesh, and drink my Blood, you can have no life in you. And you have aforesaid that of your Sacrament, which you say is the same flesh and Blood that Christ, speaketh of: and here I prove, that all Children then that die under age to receive the Sacrament, by your own Argument must be damned, which is horrible blasphemy to speak. Now here I turn your own Argument upon you, answer it if you can.

Winch. My Lord, do you notice what deceitful Arguments he bringeth in here against us, mingled with sophistry, and keepeth himself in vantage, so that we can get no hold upon him? But I say unto thee, thou perverse Heretic, I see now, thou art a perverse Fellow. I had a better Opinion of thee, but now I see we lose our time about thee, yet I answer thee, St. Paul doth open the sixth of John plainly, if thou wilt see: for he faith, They eat Christ's Body, and drink his Blood unworthily, and that was the cause of their damnation.

Grat. My Lord, take heed ye do not add unto the Text, for he that addeth unto the Text, is accused of the God, and I am sure here you have brought more than Paul hath spoken: for he faith not, because they have eaten his Body and drank his Blood unworthily; but St. Paul faith, Whoever shall eat of this Bread, and drink of the Cup unworthily, shall be guilty of the Body and Blood of Christ. Note my Lord, he faith not as you have affirmed, but clean contrary. And with that they were all in a great rage.

Winch. And the Bishop of Winchester said, I belied the Text.

Grat. And then I called for the Text.

Winch. And he said, I asked thee even now if thou understoodst Latin, and thou saidst, whether I can or no, the People shall bear witness in English.

Grat. And so I called again for the Testament, whether it were Latin or English for the trial of the Text.

Winch. And then when the Bishop of Winchester saw that I cared not whether the translations I had, he stood up, thinking to beguile some simple man that had a Book there, and bade him that had an English Testament to bring it in, that he might get some hold at him that should bring a Testament: but God disappointed him thereof, and so he flew away from his matter, and began to rail upon me, and said my subtle Arguments should not serve: for if I would not answer directly, I should nevertheless be excommunicated. For (said he) I see a mad Toy in thine head; thou gloriest much in thy talk, and thinkest now the People are come about thee, that thou shalt encourage them with thy constant Heretical Opinion. For the last day when thou wast before me upon Sunday in St. Mary Overie Church, thou there reproved my Sermon, and hadst a thousand by thee at the least, to bid God strengthen thee: but now let me see him here that dare open his mouth to bid God strengthen thee; he shall die the death that thou shalt die.

Grat. To that I answered, My Lord, I know your cruelty doth extend more largely than your pity. Good experience so I have to say, for you keep men in Prison a year or two, taking their Books from them, permitting them not so much as a Testament to look upon for their Souls comfort, the which all men ought to have: and so you intreat them more like brute Beasts than Christian men.

Winch. No Sir, we will use you as we will use the Child: for if the Child will hurt himself with the knife, we will keep the knife from him. So because you will damn your Souls with the word, therefore you shall not have it.

Grat. My Lord, a simple Argument you bring to maintain and cover your fault. Are you not ashamed to make the word the cause of our damnation? I never knew any man but only you that did not affirm our sins to be the cause of our damnation, and not the word as you say: and therefore if your Argument be good, then this is good also; Because that some men do abuse drink; therefore the benefit of drink should be taken from all men, or any other such like good gift.

Winch. My Lords, here we lose much time, for this Fellow is perverse, speaking nothing but sophistry and perverse Questions: so that we can get no advantage upon him.

Then spake my Counterfeit Ordinary, as one half asleep all this while; yet somewhat with haste when he was awaked he began to tell his tale, and said:

Counterf. Read these Articles against him once more, and if he will not answer them, take him upon his first words; That which I said, that I have said.

Winch. Then the Bishop of Winchester began to read them again.

Grat.

The Bishop of Winchester's reason to prove the Sacrament in one kind.

The Catholics make a fantastical Body in the Sacrament.

If the wicked do eat the Body of Christ, they must needs be saved: and if infants eat him not, they must be condemned by the Popes Doctrine.

Anno 1557.

Falsheid in alledgeing the Scripture.

The Bishop failed of their purpose, and was in a rage.

No English Testament darst he bring.

The Bishop of Winchester proved of Gratwick in his Sermon, The Bishop of Winchester threatened them that pray to God to strengthen them.

The cruelty of Catholics upon Christian Prisoners.

A popish Similitude well applied.

Winch. overthrown in his own Similitude.

ANNO 1557. Grat. But I said unto him, I would not answer them, because they were none of mine Examinations, but Objections of their own making, because they would have my Blood. But yet I said, if they would let the Law apart, I would talk my Confidence freely to them.

Counterf. Then my Counterfeit Ordinary began to speak again, charging me with the saying of St. Peter, that I should render account of such hope as was in me.

Grat. So can I do, and, yet I shall not please you; for here I now render my hope as St. Peter willeth me: I believe only in Jesus Christ to have my salvation in him, by him, and through him; but I perceive you would have me render my Faith in such sort, as you may have my Blood and therefore you bring good Scriptures and evil apply them.

Winch. Why, this Fellow is perverted, and we shall get no more at his hands then we have already; therefore let us pronounce Sentence against him, for we do but lose our time.

Grat. Nay good my Lord; seeing you will needs have my Blood, let me say a little more for my self.

Upon Sunday last, when I was before you, you preached this which was a truth, and agreeable to the Doctrine of the Apostle St. James, and said, If any man think himself a religious man, and in the mean time seduce his Tongue or his heart, the same man's Religion is a vain Religion; and so for my Lord; you standing there in the Pulpit, in the mean time seduced your Tongue to slander us poor Prisoners being there present in Iron bonds, burdening us with the Sect of Arians, and with the Sect of Heretians, and with the Sect of Anabaptists, and with the Sect of Sacramentaries, and with the Sect of Pelagians.

And when we stood up to purge our selves thereof, you said you would cut out our Tongues, and cause us to be pulled out of the Church by violence. But there you gave your self a throw blow, for your Tongue in the mean time slandered your neighbour. For I, my Lord, will give my life against all these Heresies, the which you there burdened us withal, even as I will give my life against that wherein I now stand before you. And with that he was raging angry, and caught my Condemnation, and said.

Winch. Thou wilt grant here no more, but this word, that I have said, I have said: and here I gather matter enough to condemn thee, for this is a confirmation of all that thou hast heretofore said.

Grat. Then I answered, If you can prove that ever any of mine Examinations were written, it were enough: but you have nothing against me, but Objections of your own making.

Winch. Have at thee now. If thou wilt not yield, I will pronounce Sentence against thee, and so he proceeded forth onward space, cursing and bawling in Latin; so that I told him, If the People might hear it in English, they would think you an uncharitable Bishop.

Grat. And then I said, I say my Lord, and note what you do: for you have neither temporal Law nor spiritual here against me in any cause.

Then stepped forth a Gentleman, and said unto my Lord, Take heed what ye do: for he doth here say, that you have no title nor cause why you should condemn him.

Then the Bishop looked about him again, and asked me if I would recant.

I asked him, whereof I should recant.

Then said the Bishop. Are you there? Nay then I know what I have to do: and so he proceeded forth in reading my Condemnation. And there was another Gentleman which began to snip and snatch at me: and then said I, I would God I had known this ere ever I had come from home, I would surely have put on breeches, and not had my Skin thus torn. And all this while the Bishop read forth still.

At last his Chaplains cried, Stop, stop, my Lord: for now he will recant. And then the Bishop asked me again.

And I answered and said, My Lord, my Faith is grounded more steadfastly, then to change in a moment, it is no process of time can alter me, unless my Faith were as the waves of the Sea: and so the Bishop made an end, and delivered me into the hands of the Sheriff, to be carried Prisoner to the Marshalsey again. And when I was condemned, I desired God with a loud voyce, that he would not lay my Blood to their charge, if it were his good will; and so then they refused my prayer; and sent me away. Then I began to talk as I went, and they cried, Cut out his Tongue, or stop his mouth: and so I was brought to the Marshalsey, and lapped in Iron bands. Therefore I pray unto God that they unto whom this present writing shall come, may take example by my death and souldier-fare. So be it.

By me Stephen Gratwick, condemned for Gods everlasting Truth.

Here for want of time, I have left out many matters, because the Lord hath hastened the time, so that I have written but the briefest of the matter in probation of Faith, and the reward of Faith, the which the Bishop of Rochester, and I debated upon; the which matter I would have been very glad to have set down in writing.

Also much more talk there was, that the Bishop of Winchester and I had concerning my worldly Friends and personal Estate: for he played Satan with me, he carried me up to the mountains, and there told me, my learning was good, and my eloquence, and also my knowledge; save that I did abuse it, said he; and then he fell to praising of my person, that it was comely, and worthy to serve a Prince. Thus Satan flattered with me, so make me answer unto such Objections as he would lay against me, that I might fall into his Diocess.

Thus Stephen Gratwick this Christian Martyr, being wrongfully condemned by the Bishop of Winchester (as ye have heard) was burned with W. Moreau, and one King, in St. Georges-field, about the latter end of May.

Seven godly Martyrs, five Women and two Men burned at Maidstone for the Word of Truth, and professing the sincere Religion of Christ.

I Shewed a little before, how after the universal Proclamation was sent and set forth by the King and Queen in the month of February last, the storm of Persecution began in all places to rise (whereof some part also is declared before): but yet in no place more then in the Country and Diocess of Canterbury, by reason of certain the aforesaid Inquisitors, being now armed with Authority, but especially by reason of Richard Thornton Suffragan of Dover, and the Archdeacon of Cant. who of their own nature were so furious and cruel against the harmless flock of Christ, that there was no need of any Proclamation to stir up the Coals of their burning cruelty, by reason whereof many a godly Saint lyeth slain under the Altar; as in divers places of this Book well may appear.

And now to return to the said Diocess of Canterbury again, in the next month following, being the month of June, 18. day of the same, were seven Christian and true faithful Martyrs of Christ burned at Maidstone, whose names here follow:

Joan Bradbridge of Staplehurst.

Walter Appleby of Maidstone.

Petronil his Wife.

Edmund Allen of Frytenden.

Katherine his Wife.

John Mannings Wife of Maidstone.

Elizabeth a blind Maiden.

The names of the Martyrs.

As concerning the general Articles commonly objected to them in the publick Confistory, and the order of their Condemnation, it differeth not much from the usual manner exprest before, neither did their answers in effect much differ from the other that suffered under the same Ordinary in the foresaid Diocess of Canterbury.

Now as touching their Answers and manner of apprehension, and their private conflicts with the Adversaries, I find no great matter coming to my hands, save only of Edmund Allen some intimation is given me, how his troubles came, what was his cause and answers before the Justices, as here consequently ye shall understand.

K k 3 me,

The Examination of Edmund Allin.

The story of Edmund Allin, with his trouble and examination before Sir John
Baker.

This Allin was a Milner, of the Parish of Frytenden in Kent, and in a dear year, when as many poor People were like to Starve; he fed them, and sold his Corn better cheap by half then others did; and did not that once, but also fed them with the Food of Life, reading to them the Scriptures, and Interpreting them. This being known to the Popish Priests thereabout dwelling, by the procurement of them, namely, of John Taylor Parson of Frytenden, and Thomas Henden Parson of Stapleherst, he was maliciously complained of to the Justices, and brought before Sir John Baker Knight; who first sending for them, committed both him and his Wife to Ward, but not long after they were let out, I know not how, and so went over unto Calice. Where after that he had continued a certain space, he began to be troubled in Conscience, and there meeting with one John Webb, of the same Parish of Frytenden (who was likewise fled from the Tyranny of Sir John Baker, and Parson Taylor) said unto him, that he could not be in quiet there, whatsoever the cause was; for God (said he) had something to do for him in England: and thus shortly he returned home again to the Parish of Frytenden, where was a cruel Priest, there Parson, called John Taylor.

Edmund
Allin returneth again from Calice, and is apprehended.

This Parson Taylor, being informed by his Brother Sexton, that Edmund Allin the Milner and his Wife were returned, and were not at Mass time in the Church; as he was the same time in the midst of his Mass, upon a Sunday, a little before the elevation (as they term it) even almost at the lifting up of his Romish God, he turned him to the People in a great Rage, and commanded them with all speed to go unto their House, and apprehend them, and he would come to them with as much haste as might be possible. Which promise he well performed. For he had not so soon made an end of his missa, and the Vestments off his Back, but by he was at the House, and there laying hand of the said Allin, caused him again to be brought to Sir John Baker, with a grievous complaint of his exhorting and reading the Scriptures to the People, and so was he and his Wife sent to Maidstone Prison. Winned by Richard Fletcher Vicar of Crambrooke, and John Webb of Frytenden.

Mark what a holy Mass saying was here, and what a charitable Religion is this.

They were not so soon in Prison, but Mr. Baker immediately sent unto their House certain of his Men, John Dove, Thomas Best, Thomas Linley, Percivall Barber, with the aforesaid John Taylor Parson of Frytenden, and Thomas Henden Parson of Stapleherst, to take an Inventory of all the Goods that were in the house. Where they found in the bedstraw a casket locked with a padlock and so cutting the wist thereof, opened it, and found therein a sackcloth bag of money, containing the sum of thirteen or fourteen pound, partly in gold, and partly in silver. Which money after they had told, and put in the bag again, like good carvers for themselves, they carried it away with them.

The House Priest persecutor.

Besides also they found there certain Books, as Psalters, Bibles, and other writings. All which Books with the money, were delivered to the aforesaid Priest Thomas Henden, Parson of Stapleherst, and after in the Reign of this Queen, Anno 5. Reg. Elizabeth. was by right Law recovered from him again, as in records remaineth to be seen.

Thus good Edmund Allin and his Wife, being maliciously accused, wrongfully imprisoned, and cruelly spoiled and robbed of all their goods, were brought (as is aforesaid) before Sir John Baker the Justice, to be examined, who taunting and reviling him without all mercy and pity, asked him if those were the Fruits of his Gospel, to have Conventicles to gather People together, to make Conspiracies to sow Sedition and Rebellion; and thus he began with him to reason.

The talk or reasoning between Sir John Baker, Collins his Chaplain, and Edmund Allin.

The examination of Edmund
Allin before
Sir John
Baker.

Baker. Who gave thee Authority to Preach and inter-pret? Art thou a Priest? Art thou admitted thereunto? Let me see thy Licence.

Mart. Collins. Sir John Baker Schoolmaster said, Anno surely he is an arrant Heretick, and worthy to be burn- 1557.

Allin. And it may please your honour to give me leave to answer in the cause of my Faith, I am persuaded that God hath given me this Authority, as he hath given to all other Christians. Why are we called Christians, if we do not follow Christ, if we do not read his Law, if we do not Interpret it to others that have not so much understanding? Is not Christ our Father? Shall not the Son follow the Fathers Steps? Is not Christ our Master? and shall the Scholar be inhibited to learn and Preach his Precepts? Is not Christ our Redeemer? and shall not we praise his name, and serve him that hath redeemed us from Sin and Damnation? Did not Christ being but twelve years of age dispute with the Doctors, and interpret the Prophet Isaiah? and yet notwithstanding he was neither of the Tribe of Levi, which were Priests, but of the Royal Tribe of Juda, neither had taken any outward Priesthood; wherefore if we be Christians, we must do the same.

Collins. And it shall like your Honour, what a Knave is this, that compareth himself with Christ?

Baker. Let him alone, he will pump out anon an infinite heap of Heresies. Hast thou any more to say for thy self?

Allin. Yea that I have. Adam was Licenced of God, and Abraham was Commanded to Teach his Children and posterity, and so David Teacheth in divers Psalms; and Solomon also Preached to the People, as the Book of the Preacher proveth very well, where he Teacheth that there is no immortal felicity in this life, but in the next. And Noah taught them that were disobedient in his days, and therefore is called the eighth Preacher of Righteousness, in the second Epistle of Peter. Also in the 11 of Numbers, where Moses had chosen seventy Elders to help him to Teach and Rule the rest, Eldad and Medad Preached in the tents, wherefore Jehua being offended, complained to Moses, that Eldad and Medad did Preach without Licence. To whom Moses answered, and willed that all the People could do the like. What should I be long? most of the Priests were not of the Tribe of Levi and Aaron.

Preaching without licence in the Old Testament.

Col. These are Authorities of the Old Testament, and therefore abrogated; but thou art a fool, and knowest no School points. Is not the Law divided into the Law Ceremonial, Moral, and Judicial?

Colad. 1.

Allin. I grant that the Ceremonies ceased when Christ came, as St. Paul proveth to the Hebrews, and to the Galatians, where he saith, Let no man judge you in any part of the Sabbath day, new Moon, or other Ceremonies, which are figures of things to come: for Christ is the Body.

Col. And are not the Judicials abrogated by Christ? Allin. They are confirmed both by Christ in the fifth of Matthew, and by Paul in the 1. Epistle to Timothy. 4. The Law, saith he, is not set forth for the virtuous and godly, but for Men-killers, perjured, Adulterers, and such like.

Col. Thou art an Heretick. Wilt thou call the Judicials of Moses again? wilt thou have Adultery punished with Death? Disobedient Children to their Parents to be stoned? Wilt thou have Legem talionis? But thou art an Ass. Why should I speak Latine to thee thou Erroneous Rebel? Shall we now smite our eye for eye, tooth for tooth? thou art worthy to have thy teeth and tongue plucked out.

* Albeit the Judicials do

pedient for

Allin. If we had that Law, we should neither have Disobedient Children, neither Adulterers, neither false witness bearers, neither ruffians.

Baker. Master Collins, let us return to our first matter. Why didst thou Teach the People, whom thou didst didst feed both bodily and spiritually, being no Priest?

Allin. Because that we are all Kings to Rule our affections, Priests to Preach out the virtues and Word of God, as Peter writeth, and lively stones to give light to other. For as out of Flint stones cometh forth that, that is able to set all the world on fire; so out of Christians should spring the beams of the Gospel, which should inflame all the world. If we must give a reckoning of our Faith to every Man, and now to you demanding it, then must we study study the Scriptures, and practise them. What avail-eth it a man to have meat; and will eat none; and apparel, and will wear, none; or to have an occupation, and to teach none; or to be a Lawyer, and utter none? Shall every Artificer be suffered, yea and commended to practise his faculty and science, and the Christian forbidden to exercise his? Doth not every Lawyer practise his Law? Is not every Christian a follower of Christ? Shall Ignorance, which is condemned in all Sciences, be practised of Christians? Doth not Saint Paul forbid any mans Spirit to be quenched? Doth he prohibit any man that hath any of these gifts, which he repeateth, 1. Cor. 14. to practise the same? Only he forbiddeth Women, but no Man. The Jews never forbade any. Read the Acts of the Apostles. And the restraint was made by Gregory the ninth Pope of that name, as I heard one, a learned Man, preach in King Edwards days.

Pope Gregory the ninth first restrained all lay men to read and instruct themselves in Scriptures.

Shs bindeth, repentance lootheth, God forgiveth, man exhorteth. How man repenteth sin, or retaineth.

The Popes Keyes be the Keyes of Error.

Allin brought gain before Sir John Baker. Talk of the Sacrament.

This Popish practice that Christ had a glorified body at his Supper.

Collins. This villaine (and it like you Honour) is mad. My my Priesthood, I believe that he will say, that a Priest hath no more Authority then another man. Doth not a Priest bind and loose?

Allin. No, my sin bindeth me, and my repentance lootheth. God forgiveth sin onely, and no Priest. For every Christian, when he sinneth, bindeth himself, and when he repenteth, lootheth himself. And if any other be loosed from his sin by my Exhortation, I am said to loose him; and if he persevere in sin, notwithstanding my Exhortation, I am said to bind him, although it is God that bindeth and lootheth, and giveth the increase. Therefore faith Christ, Matth. 18. Wheresoever two or three are gathered together in my Name, there am I in the midst of them. & whosesoever sins they forgive they are forgiven; & they retain, they are retained. Neither hath the Pope any Keyes save the Keyes of Error; for the Key that openeth the lock to Gods Mysteries and to Salvation, is the Key of Faith and Repentance. And as I have heard learned men reason, Saint Austine and Origen, with other are of this opinion. Then they reviled him, and laid him in the Stocks all the night. Wherewith certain that were better minded, being offended with such Extremity, willed Allin to keep his Confidence to himself, and to follow Baruck Counsel in the sixth chapter. Wherefore when ye see the multitude of people worshipping them, bebind and before say ye in your hearts: O Lord, it is thou that ought onely to be worshipped.

Wherewith he was perswaded to go to hear Mas the next day, and suddenly before the facing went out, and considered in the Church-yard with himself, that such a little cake between the Priests fingers could not be Christ, nor a material Body, neither to have Soul, Life, Sinews, Bones, Flesh, Legs, Head, Arms, nor Breast, and lamented that he was seduced by the Place of Baruck, which his Confidence gave him to be no Scripture, or else to have another meaning: and after this he was brought again before Sir John Baker, who asked why he did refuse to worship the blessed Sacrament of the Altar.

Allin. It is an Idol.

Col. It is Gods Body.

Allin. It is not.

Col. By the Mas iris.

Allin. It is Bread.

Col. How provest thou that?

Allin. When Christ sat at his supper, and gave them Bread to Eat.

Col. Bread, knave?

Allin. Yea Bread; which you call Christs Body. Sate he still at the table, or was he both in their Mouths, and at the table? If he were in their Mouths, and at the table, then had he two Bodies, or else had a Fantastical Body; which is an absurdity to say it.

Baker. Christs Body was glorified, and might be in more places then one.

Allin. Then he had more Bodys then one; by your own placing of him.

Col. Thou Ignorant Ass, the Schoolmen say; that a glorified Body may be every where.

Allin. If his Body was not glorified til it rose again, then was it not glorified at his last supper; and therefore was not at the table, and in their Mouths by your own reason.

Col. A glorified Body occupieth no place.

Allin. That which occupieth no place, is neither God; nor any thing else: but Christs Body, say you, occupieth no place; therefore it is neither God, nor any thing else. If it be nothing, then is your Religion nothing. If it be God, then have we four in one Trinity, which is the person of the Father, the person of the Son, the person of the Holy Ghost, the humane nature of Christ. If Christ be nothing, which you must needs confess; if he occupieth no place, then is our study in vain, our Faith frustrate, and our hope without reward.

Col. This Rebel will believe nothing but Scripture. How knowest thou that it is the Scripture but by the Church? and so saith St. Austin.

Allin. I cannot tell what St. Austin saith, but I am perswaded, that it is Scripture by divers Arguments: First, that the Law worketh in me my condemnation. The Law telleth me that of my self I am damned; and this damnation, Mr. Collins, you must find in your self, or else you shall never come to repentance. For as this grief and sorrow of Conscience, without Faith, is desperation; so is a glorious and Romish Faith, without the amendment of a mans Sins, Presumption.

The second is the Gospel, which is the Power and Spirit of God. This Spirit (saith S. Paul) certified my Spirit, that I am the Son of God, and that these are the Scriptures.

The third are the wonderful Works of God, which cause me to believe that there is a God, though we glorifie him not as God, Rom. 1. The Sun, the Moon, the Stars and other his works (as David discourseth in Psal. 19.) declare that there is a God, and that these are the Scriptures because that they teach nothing else but God and his Power, Majesty, and Might; and because the Scripture teacheth nothing different from this prescription of nature. And fourthly, because that the Word of God gave Authority to the Church in Paradise, saying, that the seed of the Woman should break down the Serpents Head. This seed is the Gospel; this is all the Scriptures, and by this we are assured of eternal life; and these words, The seed of the Woman shall break the Serpents Head, gave Authority to the Church, and not the Church to the Word.

Baker. I heard say, that you spake against Priests and Bishops.

Allin. I spake for them; for now they have so much living, and especially Bishops, Archdeacons, and Deans, that they neither can nor will teach Gods Word. If they had a hundred pounds a piece, then would they apply their study; now they cannot for their affairs.

Col. Who will then set his Children to school?

Allin. Where there is now one set to school for that end, there would be forty, because that one Bishop dividing divided into thirty, or forty parts, would find so many as well learned men as the Bishops be now, who have all this living, neither had Peter or Paul any such revenue.

Baker. Let us dispatch him; he will marr all.

Col. If every man had a hundred pounds, as he saith, it would make more learned Men.

Baker. But our Bishops would be angry, if that they knew it.

Allin. It were for a Common-wealth to have such Bishoppicks divided, for the further increase of learning.

Baker. What sayst thou to the Sacrament?

Allin. As I said before.

Baker. Away with him. And thus was he carried to Prison, and afterward burned. And thus much touching the particular story of Edmund Allin and his Wife. Who with the five other Martyrs above named, being seven, to wit, five Women and two Men, were altogether burned at Maidstone, the year and Month aforementioned, and the 18. day of the same Month.

Another story of like cruelty, shewed upon other seven Martyrs, burnt at Canterbury, three Men, and four Women.

their carnal Kingdom, presume so highly to violate the precise Law of Gods Commandments, in slaying the lumple poor Lambs of the glorious Congregation of Jesus Christ, and that for the true Testimony of a good Conscience, in confessing the immaculate Gospel of their Salvation? What Heart will not lament the murdering mischief of these Men? who for want of work do so wrack their time on silly poor Women, whose weak imbecility the more strength it lacketh by natural imperfection, the more it ought to be helped, or at least pitied, and not oppressed of Men that be stronger, and especially of Priests that should be charitable.

But blessed be the Lord Omnipotent, who supernaturally hath induced from above such weak Creatures with such manly stomach and fortitude, so constantly to withstand the uttermost extremity of these pitiless persecutors: as he did before strengthen the Mother of the seven Sons in the Maccabees, and as he hath done since with divers and sundry other godly Women in these our later days, partly before mentioned, and partly to be mentioned hereafter, as here presently may appear by the Martyrdom of seven herunder following, of the which were four Women and three Men, burnt together at Canterbury the 30. of the said Month of June: in the year aforesaid, whose Names are these:

As it were too tedious exactly and particularly to prosecute the several story of every one of these godly Martyrs; so I cannot pass over untouched the cruel and unchristian handling of Alice Benden during her Imprisonment, according as I have received by the faithful Relation of them which best were acquainted with her, and partly also some doers in the matter, being her own natural Brethren. The story is thus.

The order of the Imprisonment and tragical handling of Alice Benden, Wife of Edward Benden of the Parish of Staplehurst, in the County of Kent, for the Testimony of Christs Gospel.

persecutor.

First Alice Benden was brought before one Mr. Roberts of Cranbrook, in said County, the 14. day of October, in the year of our Lord, 1556. of whom she was demanded why she would not go to the Church. And she answered, that she could not so do with a good and clear Conscience, because there was much Idolatry committed against the glory of God. For the which with many mocks and taunts she was sent to Prison, where she lay fourteen days. For on the 20. day of October her Husband required his neighbours, the wealthy Men of Staplehurst, to write to the Bishop of Dover, who had the Chief Government of the tyrannical sword in Kent for those days, which they did, desiring him to send her home.

Alice Benden

by force of her neighbours.

Wherefore the Bishop called her before him, and asked her if she would go home, and go to the Church. Whereunto she answered; If I would have so done, I need not to have come hither. Then wilt thou go home, and be thriven of thy Parish Priest? And she said, No, that would she not.

Well, said he, go thy ways home, and go to the Church when thou wilt. Whereunto she answered nothing. But a Priest that stood by, said; She saith, she will my Lord. Wherefore he let her go, and she came forth with home.

Sir J. Gifford
commandeth Alice Benden to the Castle of Canterbury.

On the Saturday following, her Husband willed her to go to the Church; which she both then and else when refused to do. Wherefore on the Sunday fourteen days after, he going to the Church, came into the company of divers Inhabitants of the same Parish; among whom, through his fond talk and behaviour, he procured her to be sent to Sir John Gifford, who commanded her to Prison again: yea, and the more to utter his own flame, they said her Husband took money of the Constable to carry her to prison, the price of his Wives Blood, meaning indeed to carry her to Prison himself. But she having much more care of his honesty and good report, then he had regard (as it is easie to see) of his own life, and now left ashamed of his foake and unnatural request, chose rather to commit her self willingly into the hands of her enemies, then that the world should witness against her Husband of so fainorous a fact. Wherefore she went to the Constable, desiring him to go with her. But he answered that he could not so do, but granted her his Boy to go with her, with whom she went to Prison, namely, the Castle of Canterbury, according to the Commandment given.

Where this one thing is worthy to be noted, that while she was in this Prison, she practised with a Prison-fellow of hers, the Wife of one Petkin, to live both of them with two pence half-penny a day, to try thereby how well they could sustain penury and hunger, before they were put to it. For they had heard, that when they should be removed from thence to the Bishops Prison, there livings should be but three farthings a piece a day, and did indeed both so live for fourteen days ere she was from thence removed.

The 22. day of January following, her Husband went again to the Bishop, desiring him to deliver his Wife out of Prison: but he said she was an obstinate Hereticke, and would not be reformed; and therefore said that he could not deliver her.

Then said he; My Lord, she hath a Brother, whose Name is Roger Hall, that resorteth unto her. If your Lordship could keep him from her, she would turn; for he comforteth her, giveth her money, and perswadeth her not to return or relent.

This occasion was not so soon given, but it was as quickly taken, and as cruelly put in execution. For the Bishop commanding her upon the same to a Prison called Monday hole, there also he gave a strait charge, that if at any time her Brother came, he should be taken and apprehended.

This prison was within a Court where the Prebend Chambers were, being a vault beneath the ground, and being before the Window inclosed with a pale, of height, by estimation, four foot and a half, and distant from the same three foot, so that the looking from beneath, might only see such as stood at the pale. After this, her Brother sought often for her, with no less danger of life then diligence. But for the unknown situation of the place, it being also but rarely used for a Prison, and the matter as clofly kept, as it was secretly done, he could never come to understand of her being there, until through Gods merciful will and unfeared providence, he coming thither very rathe in the morning, her Keeper being then gone to the Church to ring (for he was a Bellringer) chanced to hear her voice, as she poured out unto God her sorrowful complaints, saying the Psalms of David: and there could he no otherwise relieve her, but by putting money in a Loaf of Bread, and sticking the same on a Pole, and so reached it unto her; for neither with Meat nor Drink he could sustain her. And this was five weeks after her coming thither. All the which time no creature was known to come at her, more then her Keeper.

Her lying in that Prison was only upon a little short straw between a pair of Stocks and a stone wall; being allowed three farthings a day, that is, half penny Bread, and a farthing Drink, neither could she get any more for her Money. Wherefore she desired to have her whole allowance in Bread, and used water for her Drink. Thus did she lie nine weeks. During all which time she never changed her apparel; whereby she became at the last a most pitious and loathsome Creature to behold.

At her first coming into this place, she did grievously bewail with a great sorrow and lamentation, and reasoned with her self; why her Lord God did with his so heavy justice suffer her to be sequestered from her loving fellows into so extreme misery.

In these dolorous mournings did she continue, till on a night as she was in her sorrowful supplications, rehearsing this verse of the Psalms; Why art thou so heavy O my Soul? And again, The Right Hand of the most high can change all: she received comfort in the midst of her miseries, and after that continued very joyfull until her delivery from the same.

About the 25. day of March, in the year of our Lord, 1557. she was called before the Bishop, who demanded of her, whether she would now go home, and to the Church or no, promising her great favour, if she would be reformed and do as they did.

Alice Benden
called before
the Bishop.

Anno 1557. To whom she answered, I am thoroughly persuaded by the great extremity, that you have already shewed me, that you are not of God, neither can your doings be goodly; and I see, faith she, that you seek my utter destruction, shewing how lame she then was of cold taken, and for lack of food, while she lay in that painful Prison; whereby she was not able to move her self without great pain.

Then did the Bishop deliver her from that filthy hole, and sent her to Wolgate, where after she had been changed, and for a while been clean kept, her Skin did wholly so pill and scale off, as if she had been with some mortal venom poisoned. Here she continued till the latter end of April. At which time they called her before them, and with others condemned her, committing her then to the Prison called the Castle. Where she continued till the slaughter-day, which was the nineteenth day of June, when by terrible fire they took away her life.

When she was at the Stake, she cast her Handkerchief unto one John Banks, requiring him to keep the same in memory of her, and from about her middle she took a white Lince, which she gave to the Keeper, desiring him to give the same to her Brother Roger Hall, and to tell him that it was the last band that she was bound with, except the Chain. A shilling also of Philip and Mary she took forth, which her Father had bowed and sent her when she was first sent to Prison, desiring that her said Brother should with obedient salutations render the same to her Father again, and shew him that it was the first piece of money that he sent her after her troubles began, which (as she protested) she had kept, and now sent him to do him to understand, that she never lacked money while she was in Prison.

With this Alice Benden were burned also the residue of the other blessed Martyrs above named, being seven in number. Who being brought to the place where they should suffer for the Lords cause at Canterbury, undressed themselves joyfully to the fire; and being ready thereto, they all (like the communion of Saints) kneeled down, and made their humble prayers unto the Lord, with such zeal and affection; as even the enemies of the Cross of Christ could not but like it. When they had made Invocation together, they rose and went to the Stake, where being compassed with horrible flames of fire, they yielded their Souls and lives gloriously into the hand of the Lord.

This Braddridges Wife, when she was condemned of the Bishop to be burned, had two Children named Patience and Charity. Who then said to the Bishop, that if he would needs burn her, yet he trusted, that he would take and keep Patience and Charity, meaning her two Children. Nay, quoth the Bishop, by the Faith of my Body, I will meddle with neither of them both.

The Troubles and Examinations of Matthew Plaisie.

Matthew Plaisie.

Unto these holy Martyrs of Kent above specified, whereof seven suffered at Maidstone, and seven at Canterbury, I thought not unmet here also to be adjoined the Examination of Matthew Plaisie, a Weaver of the same County of Kent, and a faithful Christian. Who being apprehended and imprisoned likewise for the testimony of a good Conscience, in the Castle of Canterbury, was brought to Examination before the Bishop of Dover, and Harsfield the Archdeacon, as here is to be read and seen.

The Examination and Answers of Matthew Plaisie, Weaver, of the Parish of Stone, in the County of Kent, before Thornton Bishop of Dover, Harsfield Arch- deacon, Collins Commissary, and other Inquisitors

Anno 1557.

First, when I came before the Bishop, he asked me whether I were not of that Diocese, and where I dwelt; for that was my first Article.

Ans. I answered, I was of the Parish of Stone in Kent, and subject unto the King and Queen of England.

Bishop. Then he said, I was indicted by twelve men at Ashford, at the Sessions, for Heresy.

Ans. I said, that was sooner said then proved.

Bish. Then he said, it was the Truth that he had spoken to me, for he had whereby to prove.

Ans. Then I desired him to let me hear it, and I would answer to it.

Bish. But he said he would not do so, but I should answer to my Article, yea or nay.

Ans. I said, he could not; for I was not at Ashford, and therefore he had nothing to lay to my charge. But now I perceive you go about to lay a net to have my Blood.

Arch. After many words betwixt the Bishop and me, the Archdeacon said; Peace, peace, we do not desire thy Blood, but we are glad to hear that thou art no Heretic, with many flattering words, and said; yet I was suspected suspected of Heresie; and if I would be content to confesse how I did believe as concerning those Articles, they would gladly teach me.

Ans. But I said, I do not think so, for I talked with one of your Doctors, and after long talk, he would needs know how I did believe in the Sacrament, and I recited unto him the Text, and because I would not make unto him an exposition, he would teach me nothing: yet I prayed him for my learning to write his mind; and if it were the truth, I would believe him; and this I did desire him for the love of God, but it would not be.

Arch. Then said he, it was not so, he durst swear upon a Book.

Ans. I said, it would be so proved.

Arch. Then he stood up with a long process, and said, he would tell me the truth, and was sure that the same Doctor did believe as he did.

Ans. I asked him how he knew that, seeing St. Paul doth say, that no man knoweth what is in man, but the spirit which dwelleth in him: but if you wilt what Christ meant by these words, I require mercy and not sacrifice, Matth. 12. you would not kill Innocents.

Bishp. The Bishop began with me again, and charged me in the King and Queens Name, and the Lord Cardinals, to answer yea or nay to the Articles that followed.

Ans. Then I commanded in his Name that should come in flaming fire with his mighty Angels to render vengeance to the disobedient, and to all those that believed not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, which should be punished with everlasting damnation, that he should speak nothing but the truth grounded upon Christ and his Apostles, and then I would answer him, or else not.

Bishp. Then he was very angry, and said, If I would not answer, he would condemn me indeed, unless I would answer every Article.

Ans. Well, said I, if you do, you shall be guilty of my Blood, and prove your self a Murderer.

Archd. Then the Archdeacon took the Articles in his hand, and read the second Article, which was, that I was a Christian man, and did believe in their Mother the Catholick Church, and the determination thereof.

Ans. I said, I was a Christian man indeed, and therefore they had nothing against me.

Archd. Then said he, what saist thou to the Catholick Church, which hath so long continued, except it were nine or ten years, that this Heresie hath sprung up here in this Realm?

Ans. I said, no man can accuse me of any thing spoken against the Catholick Church of Christ.

Bishp. Then said the Bishop, dost thou not believe the Creed?

Ans. Yes verily, I believe my Creed, and all that is written in the Testament of Christ, with therof the Scriptures.

Bishp. Then, saith he, thou dost confesse that there is a Catholick Church, I am glad of that; but tell me, is the King and Queen of that Church, or no?

Ans. Well, said I, now I perceive, you go about to be both mine Accuser and also my Judge, contrary to all right. I confesse Christ hath a Church upon Earth, which is built upon the Apostles and Prophets, Christ being the Head thereof, and as touching the King and Queen, I answer, I have nothing to do with any mans Faith but mine own: neither came I hither to judge; for I judge not my self, but the Lord must judge me.

Bishp. Then said he: Is there no part of that Church here in England?

Ans. Well, I perceive you would faine have something to lay to my charge. I will tell you where. Christ saith, Where two or three be gathered together in his name, there is he in the midst among them.

Then the Arch-deacon stood up with his mocks, to put me out of countenance, and said to the People, that I had no wit, but that I thought all they were deceived for long time, and that half a dozen of us should have the Truth in a corner, and that all they should be deceived, with such like taunts and mocks; but would not suffer me to speak one word.

Arch. Then he read the Article of the Sacrament, and said, I did deny the Real presence to be in the Sacrament after it was once consecrated, and that I said, Christs Body was in Heaven, and no where else, and that the Bread was nothing but a sign, token, or remembrance.

Ans. Then I said, you have to shew where and what my words were, and herof we talked a great while.

Bishp. At the last the Bishop was so angry, that he charged me in the Kings, Queens, and Cardinals name before the Mayor and his Brethren, taking them to witness, if I did not say yea or nay, he would condemn me.

Ans. Then I said, seeing you have nothing to accuse me of, wherefore should I so answer?

Archd. Then the Archdeacon said, I was guilty; and said I was like a thief at the Bar, which would not confesse his fault, because his Accusers were not present; with a great many words, and would not let me open my mouth against him.

Ans. Then I saw whereabouts they went, granting to answer them by the word, or else I think they would have condemned me for holding of my peace; and this was my beginning, I believe that Christ took Bread, and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and gave it to his Disciples, and said, Take, eat, this is my Body which is given for you, this do in remembrance of me.

Arch. Dost thou believe that Christ meant even as he said?

Ans. I said, Christ was no dissembler, but he spake the very truth.

Archd. Thou hast very well said, we will make the best of thy words. Then he praised me with many words, going about to prove it his Body real and substantial, and said, Christ called himself Bread: and this to prove, when Christ said, This is my Body, the Bread was his Body, said he, indeed, real and substantial, not so long and so big as it hung on the Crose, as the Capernautes did think; but we eat it, as mans weak nature can eat Christ. Therefore when he had said, This is my Body, the Bread was his Body in very deed.

Ans. Then I asked him, what Christ meant by these words, Which is given for you?

Arch. He said, Christ spake that by the Bread also; but it was not written in Matthew, but Luke had those words.

Ans. Then I asked him, if Christs Body were made of Bread, whether that was given for our redemption, or whether the Bread was crucified for us, or not?

Arch. Then he said, No, by St. Mary, I say not so.

Ans. You have said the truth indeed, and even as I believe.

Arch. Then he stood up with a great many of words, Christ called and said, that I did think it but bare Bread still, as other is his Body; Bread is; but he was sure Christ called it his Body, and made it his Body, and then it was his Body indeed; for he would believe Christ.

Ans. When he had spoken his pleasure by me, thinking to have condemned me by their Law, I said, he had not judged right of me, for I had not so spoken, but did believe the words of Christ as well as he, and as much as he could prove by the Word.

Arch. Then he would hear what I did say it was.

Ans. I said, I did believe it was that he gave them.

Arch. Then he asked me, what was that he gave them.

Ans. I said, that which he brake.

Arch. Then he asked me, what was that he brake?

Ans. I said, that he took.

Arch. What was it that he did take?

Ans. I said, the Text saith, he took Bread.

Arch. Well then, thou saist it was but Bread that his Disciples did eat, by thy reason.

Ans. Thus much, I say, Look what he gave them, they did eat it indeed.

Arch. Why, then was not that his Body that they did eat?

Ans. It was that which he brake.

Arch. Well, said he, I perceive thy meaning well enough; for thou dost think it is but Bread still, and that he was not able to make it his Body.

Ans. That is your exposition upon my mind.

Arch. Then said he, what didst thou receive when thou didst receive last?

Ann. 1557. Answ. I said, I do believe, that I did eat Christs flesh, and drink his blood. For he saith. My flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed.

Arch. Then he said, I had well answered, thinking to have had some advantage at my hand, and prayed me to tell him, how I did eat his flesh and drink his blood.

Ans. Then he said, I must answer you by the word which Christ saith; He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him.

Arch. Then he faced out the matter with Sophistry, and said I did eat Christ, as that Church was in his eye, with many such mocks, but would not let me answer one word.

Commis. Then the Commissary did ask me, if I did not remember St. Paul, which did rebuke the Corinthians for their evil behaviour, and because they made no difference of the Lords Body, and brought in to prove his matter, how he called himself Bread in the sixth of John. So Paul saith, So oft as ye eat of this Bread (meaning Christs Body) unworthily, ye eat and drink your own damnation, because ye make no difference of the Lords Body. For thus saith Christ, The bread that I will give you is my flesh. Now it is no Bread, but it is his flesh. And thus he alledged every Scripture false, to make up the matter.

Ans. Then I said, I did believe the words of St. Paul very well, even as he had spoken them. For thus he saith, He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own damnation, because he maketh no difference of the Lords Body.

Commis. What is the cause that he eateth his own damnation?

Ans. I said, St. Paul declareth it plainly with these words, If ye had judged your selves, ye should not have been judged of the Lord.

Arch. Then the Archdeacon said, he marvelled why I would not say, that he called the Bread his Body, seeing Crammer, Ridley and Latimer, with many others, said he, called it his Body.

Ans. I said, you have condemned them as Hereticks, and you would have me say with them, because you would kill me.

Arch. Then he said, In that they said it was his Body, they did say the truth.

Ans. I asked wherefore they were killed, seeing they said the Truth.

Bish. Then said the Bishop, that he had all their Answers, and that they did not believe as they said. For they said, Christ called it his Body, but it was not his natural Body: but thou shalt answer me by and by, whether it be his Body or not, or else I will anger thee.

Ans. Then I said, I had answered him by the Word already, and did believe it also; therefore if he did condemn me for that, my Life was not dear unto me, and I was sure he should not scape unpunished: for God will be revenged upon such Murderers.

Arch. Then the Archdeacon intreated me to be ruled by him, and take mercy while it was offered; for if I were condemned, I must needs be burned. Yet he would not say but my Soul might be saved; with many more words, and desired me that I would believe him, for he would speak the truth: beginning how Christ fed five thousand People with four Loaves, and how he turned the Water into Wine, even so Christ took Bread and blest it, and when he had done, he brake it and said, This is my Body, and then he commanded them to eat it: and therefore it must needs be his Body.

Ans. Then I desired him to speak the Text right, or else I would not believe him.

Arch. Then he stood up, and put off his Cap, and thanked me for teaching of him, and said, I was a stubborn Fellow, and took scorn to be taught.

Ans. I said, I ought to hold him accursed, if he taught Doctrine contrary to Christ and his Apostles.

Arch. Then he asked me, whether I did believe that Christ did give that he took, or not?

Ans. I said, I do believe as much as can be proved by the Scriptures, and more I will not believe.

Arch. Then he began with Moses Rod, how God commanded him to lay it down, and it was turned into a Serpent. Seeing that this was by Moses being but a man, how much more Christ being both God and Man took one thing, and gave to his Disciples another?

Ans. I said, his comparison was nothing like, for Moses Rod when it was laid down, he saw that it was turned into a very Serpent indeed; but in this Sacrament no man can see either quality or yet quantity to be changed.

Bish. Then said the Bishop, that mine Opinion and Faith was like unto the Capernautes.

Ans. I said, theirs was more like their Opinion than mine.

Arch. The Archdeacon asked me, whether Christ took not one thing, and gave another?

Ans. I said, look what he brake he gave unto them, and bade them eat; and other answer I will make none, contrary to the Word.

Arch. Then he said, he marvelled why I would not believe them, seeing this learning had continued this fifteen hundred years; neither yet did I say, as other had before, how Christ did call it his Body.

Ans. Then I said, when Crammer, which was here Bishop, was in authority, he said, that he did hold the truth, and commanded us to believe him, and he hath given his life for his Opinion, and would you have me to believe you, because you say, that you hold the Truth? and that which makes me believe chiefly, is the Scripture, which I am sure is the Truth indeed.

Bish. The Bishop said, he had spoken the truth, and that I would not believe.

Ans. I said, if he did not now speak the truth, I was sure he had spoken the truth; for he had preached before Doctrine clean contrary unto this.

Then were the rest of my Articles read; which I answered, and in every Article he had up this Breaden God. And they sent for a Candle-light, and I thought they would have condemned me, but God would not suffer their cruel hearts to have their pleasure that time: blessed be his Name for evermore, Amen.

Arch. Then the Archdeacon was angry, and began to chide with me, because I would not desire a day of the Bishop, and said, I was a naughty stubborn Fellow, and said, it had been my duty to have desired him to have been good to me, that I might have a day.

Ans. Then I said, I have spoken the truth; and therefore I would ask him no day, except he would give me a day of his own mind.

Commis. Then said the Commissary, Dost thou not think that thou maist be deceived, seeing he may be deceived that hath gone to study all the days of his life?

Ans. I said, Yea, I might be deceived in that I was a man; but I was sure Gods Word could not be deceived.

Commis. Then he prayed me to be content, and confessed that I might learn, and said, they would be glad to teach me.

Ans. And I said, I would be as glad to learn as any man. And thus they rose up and went away, saying nothing.

What became of this Matthew Plaife after, whether he died in Prison, or was executed, or delivered, I have as yet no certain knowledge.

his Father, Brother, Kinsfolks, and Friends, also of his sundry Examinations and courageous Answers before the Bishops: and lastly of his Condemnation, and of his Letters sent to his faithful Friends, here followeth to be declared by his own words, and relation reported. Which Richard Woodman, by his occupation was an Iron-maker dwelling in the Parish of Warbleton, in the County of Suffex; and Diocess of Chichester of the age of thirty years and somewhat more. The occasion of his first apprehension was this:

Faithfully preaching contrary to himself.

There was one Fairebanke, who sometimes had been a married Priest, and served the Cure of Warebleton, where he had often perwaded the People not to credit any other Doctrine, but that which he then preached, taught and set forth in King Edwards days. And afterward in the beginning of Queen Maries Reign, the said Fairebanke, turning head to tail, preached clean contrary to that which he had before taught.

Whereupon Richard Woodman, hearing him in the Church of Warbleton so to preach contrary to himself, admonished him of his inconstancy, how before time he had taught them one thing, and now another, and desired him to teach them the Truth. For the which words he was apprehended, and brought before Master John Albornham, Master Tenison, and Master Culpepper, and Master Roberts, Justices of Peace in the County of Suffex, and by them committed to the Kings Bench, where he continued from June, the space almost of a year and half; and from thence was transferred by Doctor Story into Boners Colehouse, where he remained the space of a month before he came to Examination.

At length, the same day when Master Philpot was burned, which was the 18. of December, he with four other Prisoners was delivered and set at liberty by Bener himself. Notwithstanding, shortly after he was sought for again, and at last found out and taken by means of his Father, Brother, and certain other his acquainted Friends, and so was sent up again to London to Bishop Boner, where he remained in the Colehouse eight weeks. He was there six times examined, and twenty six times before, so that his Examinations were in all thirty two, from his first apprehension to his condemnation. Touching the whole discourse whereof, so far as the matter is something strange, and will peradventure scarce find credit upon my narration, with them which deny all things that like them not to believe, ye shall hear himself speak and testify both of the manner of his Troubles, and also his own Examinations by himself recorded, in order as followeth.

*The Certificate of R.
Woodman
concerning the truth of his own story and trouble.*

Gentle Reader, here you shall perceive how the Scriptures be partly fulfilled on me being one of the least of his poor Lambs. First, you shall understand, that since I was delivered out of the Bishop of London's hands, which was in the year of our Lord 1555, and the same day that Mr. Philpot was burned, which was the 18. of December, I lay in his Colehouse eight Weeks lacking but one day: and before that I was a year and a half almost in the Kings Bench after my first apprehension, for reproving a Preacher in the Pulpit, in the parish of Warbleton, where I dwelt. Wherefore I was at two Sessions before I was sent to Prison, and carried to two more Sessions while I was in Prison, twice before the Bishop of Chichester, and five times before the Commissioners; and then sent to London's Colehouse, and many times called before him, as it appeareth by my Examinations which I have wrote, the which Examinations the Bishop of Chichester now hath, for they were found in my house when I was taken, wherein is contained all the talk which I had before them asforesaid. Also there be in London that had Copies of the same of me, when I was in the Colehouse.

*The first ap-
of R. Woodman.*

And it pleased God to deliver me with 4. more out of the Butchers hands, requiring nothing else of us but that we should be honest men, and members of the true Catholick Church that was builded upon the Prophets and Apostles, Christ being the head of the true Church, the which all we affirmed that we were members of the true Church, and purposed by Gods help therein to die. And hereupon we were delivered; but he willed us many times to speak good of him. And no doubt he was worthy to be praised, because he had been so faithful an aid in his Masters Devils business. For he had burnt good Master Philpot the same morning, in whose Blood his heart was so drunken (as I supposed) that he could not tell what he did, as it appeared to us both before and after. For but two days before, he promised us that we should be condemned that same day that we were delivered, yea, and the morrow after that he had delivered us, he sought for some of us again, yea, and that earnestly. He waxed dry after his great drunkenness, wherefore he is like to have Blood to drink in Hell as he is worthy, if he repent it not with speed. The Lord turn all their hearts, if it be his will.

This have I written, chiefly to certifye all People how we were delivered, because many carnal Gospellers and Papists have said, that it was prescribed that we should be so delivered, because they think that God is subject to man, and not man to God. For if they did, they would not blaspheme him as they do, or if they thought they should give account for it. Have not many of them read how God delivered Israel out of Egypt? Daniel out of the Lions Den? Sydach, Misach, and Abednego, out of the burning Oven? with divers other such like examples; yea, God is the same God that he was then. He is no older, nor less in power, as some count him in wondering at his works. Now to the matter.

After I was delivered, the Papists said that I had consented to them, whereof they made themselves glad; the which was the least part of my thought (I praise God therefore) as they well perceived and knew the contrary within a while. For I went from Parish to Parish, and talked with them, to the number of 13. or 14. and that of the chiefest in all the Country; and I angered them so, that they with the Commissioners complained on me to my Lord Chamberlain, that was then to the Queen. Sir John Gage, shewing him that I baptized Children, and married Folks, with many such lies, to bring me into their hands again. Then the Commissioners sent out certain Citations to bring me to the Court. My Lord Chamberlain had directed out four or five Warrants for me, that if I had come there, I should have been attached and sent to Prison straight-way. Which was not Gods will; for I had warning of their laying await for me, and came not there, but sent my deputy and he brought me word that the Bayliffs waited for me there, but they mist of their prey for that time, whereupon they were displeased.

Then within three days after, my Lord sent three of his men to take me, whose names were Deane, Jessrey, and Frances. I being at plough with my Folks, right in the way as they were coming to my house, least mistrusting them of all other, came to them and spake to them, asking them how they did. And they said, they arrested me in the King and Queens Name, and that I must go with them to their Master the Lord Chamberlain. Which words made my flesh to tremble and quake, because of that sudden. But I answered them, that I would go with them. Yet I desired them, that they would go to my House with me, that I might break my Fast, and put on some other gear, and they said, I should. Then I remembered my self, saying in my heart; Why am I thus afraid? they can lay no evil to my charge. If they kill me for well doing, I may think my self happy. I remembered how I was contented gladly before to die in that quarrel, and so had continued ever since; and should I now fear to die? God forbid, that I should; for then were all my labour in vain.

So by and by I was perwaded, I praise God, considering it was but the frailty of my flesh, which was loth to forgo my Wife and Children, and goods: for I saw nothing but present death before mine eyes. And as soon as I was perwaded in my mind to die, I had regard of nothing in this world, but was as merry and glad, and joyfull, I praise God, as ever I was. This battle Anno 1557. lasted not a quarter of an hour; but it was sharper than death it self for the time, I dare say.

Woodman seeks for their Warrant. So when I had my breakfast, I desired them to shew me their Warrant, thinking thereby I should have seen wherefore I was arrested, to the intent I might the better answer for my self, when I came before their Master. And one of them answered, they had not their Warrant there. Which words made me astonished,

How God worketh for his Servants. and it was put in my mind by God, that I need not go with them, unless they had their Warrant. Then said I to them, That is marvel that you will come to take a man without a Warrant. It seemeth to me, that you come of your own mind to get thank of your Master; for indeed I heard say (said I) that there was four or five Warrants out for me, but they were called in again, because I had certified my Lord the Commillary, by a Letter that I had sent to them, that I was not faulty in that they laid to my charge, of Follies: the which I never did; for I was never Minister appointed to do any such thing: wherefore set your hearts at rest, I will not go with you (said I) unless you will carry me by force, and if you will do so, at your own adventures. And so I rose from the board, and stepped into my Chamber, meaning to do from them if I could possible, feeling God had made the way so open for me. I meant to play Peters part with them, but God would not it should be so, but sent a fear amongst them, that as soon as I was gone into my Chamber, ere ever I could come out again, they were gone out of my House.

The unorderly doings of the Papists in attaching men and their Warrant. When I saw that, I knew it was Gods doing, to set me at liberty once again. Yet I was compelled to speak to them, and said, If you have a Warrant, I desire you for Gods sake to shew it me, and I will go with you with all my heart; if not, I desire you to depart in Gods Peace and the Kings: for surely I will not go with you without the order of the Law; for I have been too simple in such things already. For before I was sent to Prison first, I went to the Justices to two Sessions, without any Warrant or Commandment, but had word by one of their men, and I went justly to them, and they sent me to Prison, and kept me there almost a year and three quarters, without all right or equity, as it is openly known, nor hearing my cause gently, debated. And (he seemeth strange to me, that I should be thus evil handled; and therefore I will go to none of them all henceforth, without the extremity of the Law.

Woodman refreshes to go with them, unless they shew their Warrant. Then one of them answered me, and said, We have not the Warrant here, but it is at home at my House; the worst is, you can but make us fetch it. Then I said, Fetch it if you will; but if you come in my House before you have it at your own adventure be it. So I shut my door, and went my way out at the other door. So they got help to watch my House, whilst one of them fetcht the Constable and many more, thinking to have had me in my House, and to have taken me in my House, and carried me away with a licence; but I was gone before, as God would have it. Notwithstanding they sought every corner of my House, but could not prevail. I mistrusted they would search it again that night, and kept me abroad; and indeed there came seven of his men and the Constable, and searched my House.

Gods great work, how the persecutors which came to take Woodman went away without him. And when they saw that they could not meet with me, they were ready to rent their Coats, that I had escaped them so, knowing they should have such a check of their Master. When I heard that they had sought so for me again, I perceiving that they were greedy of their prey, came home, and my Wife told me all things.

Woodman escaped the hands of his officers. Then I supposed that they would lay all the Country for me, and the Sea-coast, because I should not go over, and then I thought that they would not mistrust that I would dare be night home. So I told my Wife, that I would make my lodging in a Wood not past a flight thot from my House, as I did indeed, even under a Tree, and there had my Bible, my Pen, and mine Ink, and other necessities, and there continued six or seven weeks, my Wife bringing me meat daily as I had need. Yea, I thought my self blessed of God, that I was counted worthy to lye in the Woods for the Name of Christ. Then there came word into the Country, that I was seen and spoken to in Flan-

Woodman sought for his Warrant. ders; whereupon they left laying in wait for me: for they had laid all the Country for me, and the Sea-coast from Portsmouth to Dover, even as God put in my mind they would. So when all was hush, I went abroad among our Friends and Brethren, and at length I went beyond the Sea both into Flanders and in France; but I thought every day seven year or ever I were at home again. So I came home again as soon as it was possible. I was there but three weeks, but as soon as I was come home, and it was once known among Baal's Priests, they could not abide it, but procured out Warrants against me, causing my House to be searched sometimes twice in a week. This continued from S. James tide to the first Sunday in Lent. Otherwhile I went privily, otherwhile openly, otherwhile I went from home a fortnight or three weeks, otherwhiles I was at home a month or five weeks together, living there most commonly and openly, doing such works as I had to do; and yet all mine enemies could lay no hands on me, till the hour was full come: and then by the voice of the Country, and by manifest proofs, mine one Brother, as concerning the flesh, delivered me into their hands, by that he knew that I was at home.

Woodman sought for his Warrant. For my Father and he had as much of my goods in their hands, as I might have 50 l. for by the year clear, and thereunto prayed. It was a Lordship and an Honor, and half an Honor that I had delivered into their hands to pay my debts, and the rest to remain to my Wife and Children. But they had reported that it would not pay my debts; which grieved me sore. For it was 200 l. better than the debts came to. Which caused me to speak to some of my Friends, that they would speak to them to come to some reckoning with me, and to take all such money again of me as they were charged with, and to deliver me such Writings and Writs as they had of mine again, or to whom I would appoint them.

Woodman sought for his Warrant. So it was agreed betwixt my Father and me, that I should have it again, and the day was appointed that the reckoning should be made and sent to me that same day that I was taken; my Brother supposing that I should have put him out of most of all his occupancies, that he was in: for it was all mine in a manner that he occupied, as all the Country can, and do well know. Whereon (as it is reported) he told one Cardillar, my next Neighbour, and he told some of Mr. Gages men, or to Mr. Gage himself; and so he sent to his Brother, and his Brother sent twelve of his men (he being Sheriff) in the night before I was taken, and lay in the Busses not far from my House, till about 9. of the clock, even the hour that was appointed amongst themselves; for about the same time they thought to have had me within my House.

Woodman sought for his Warrant. They had taken a Man of mine, and two of my Children that were abroad in the Land, and kept them with them till their hour was appointed to come in; and then a little Girl, one of my Children, saw them come together, and came running in, and cried, Mother, Mother, yonder cometh twenty men. I sitting in my Bed, and making of Shoo-thongs, heard the words, and suspected straightway that I was betrayed, I stir'd out of my Bed and whipt on my Hofe, thinking to have gone out of the doors or ever they had been come. My Wife being amazed at the Childs words, looked out at the door, and they were hard by. Then she clapped to the door, and barred it fast, even as I came out of my Chamber into the Hall, and so barred the other: So the House was beset round straightway, and they bade open the doors, or else they would break them in pieces. Then I had no shift, but either I must shew my self openly, or make some other remedy.

Woodman sought for his Warrant. So there was a place in my House that was never found, which was at the least, I dare say, twenty times, and sometimes almost of twenty men searched at once, both by night and by day. Into which place I went: And as soon as I was in, my Wife opened the door, whereby incontinent they came, and asked for me; and the said I was not at home. Then they asked her wherefore she shut the door, if I were not at home. She said, because she had been made afraid divers times with such as came to search us; and therefore she shut the door. For it is reported (faith she) that whosoever can take my Husband, shall hang him or burn him straightway; and therefore I doubt they will serve me or my Children so; for I think they may do so unto us as well as to him, the said. Well, said they, we know he is in the House, and we must search it, for we be the Sheriffs men; let us have a Candle. It is told us, there be many secret places in your House. So she lighted a Candle, and they fought up and down in every corner that they could find, and had given over, and many of them were gone out of my House into the Church-yard, and there talking with my Father, and with some that he had brought with him.

This betake was his brother.

Now when they could not find me, one of them went to him that gave them word that I was at home, and said, we cannot find him. Then he asked them whether they had fought over a window that was in the Hall (as it was known afterward) for that same place I had told him of my self. For many times when I came home, I would fend for him to bear me company; yet as it chanced, I had not told him the way into it. Then they began to search anew. One looked up over the window, and spied a little Loft, with three or four Chests, and the way went in betwixt two of the Chests, but there could no man perceive it. Then he asked my wife which was the way into it. Here is a place that we have not fought yet. When she thought they would see it by one means or other, she said, the way was into it out of a Chamber they were in even now. So she sent them up, and cried, Away, away. Then I knew there was no remedy, but made the best shift for my self that I could. The place was boarded over, and fast nailed, and if I had come out that way that I went in, I must needs come amongst them all in the Hall. Then I had no shift, but set my shoulders to the boards that were nailed to the Rafter to keep out the rain, and braked them in pieces, which made a great noise, and they that were in the other Chamber, seeking for the way into it, heard the noise, and looked out of a window, and spied me, and made an out-cry. But yet I got out, and leaped down, having no shoes on.

Woodman at length, after long seeking, found out.

So I took down a Lane that was full of sharp finders, and they came running after, with a great cry, with their Swords drawn, crying, Strike him, strike him. Which words made me look back, and there was never a one nigh me by an hundred foot: and that was but one, for all the rest were a great way behind. And I turned about hastily to go my way, and stepped upon a sharp finder with one foot, and saving of it, I stepped into a great miry hole, and fell down withal, and ere ever I could arise and get away, he was come in with me. His name is Parker the wild, as he is counted in all Suffolk. But if I had had on my shoes, they had been like to have gone away errandless, if there had been five hundred more, if I had caught the plain ground once, to the which I had not a stone cast: But it was not Gods will; for if it had, I should have escaped from them all, if there had been ten thousand of them.

Woodman.

Then they took me and led me home again to put on my shoes, and such gear as I had need of. Then said John Fauconer, Now your Master hath deceived you. You said, you were an Angel, and if you had been an Angel, why did you not flee away from us? Then said I, what be they that ever heard me say that I was an Angel? It is not the first lye by a thousand that they have made of me. Angels were never begotten of men, nor born of women; but if they had said, they had heard me say, that I do trust I am a Saint, they had not said amiss. What, do you think to be a Saint? Yea that I do, and am already in Gods fight, I trust in God; for he that is not a Saint in Gods fight already, is a Devil. Therefore he that thinketh scorn to be a Saint, let him be a Devil. And with that word they had brought me to mine own door; where met with me my Father, and willed me to remember my self.

Every true Christian man is a Saint in Gods sight.

To whom I answered, I praise God, I am well remembered whereabouts I go. This way was appointed of God for me to be delivered into the hands of mine enemies, but you unto him by whom I am betrayed. It had been good for that man, that he had never been born, if he repent not with speed. The Scriptures are now fulfilled on me: For the Father shall be against the son, and the brother shall deliver the brother to death, as it is this day come to pass. Then said one, He doth accuse his father; a good child indeed. I accuse him not, but say my mind; for there was no man knew me at home, but my father, my brother, and one more, the which I dare say would not hurt me for all the good in this Town.

There was one George Beching that married one of my sisters, and he thought that I had meant him, that he had betrayed me; and he said, Brother, I would you should not think that I was the cause of your taking. To whom I answered, that I meant him not; I meant one that was nearer of my blood than he was. Then said one of Laufs, that I had been a Gosseller, and stood from them when I was brought to a Sessions to Laufe, and he said, I thought you would have been an honest man when you were at Laufe, and I offered Halfpenny the Sheriff to be bound for you, that you should go home to your wife, and come to him again. Then I remembered what he was, and said, Be you the Pewterer? And he said, Yea. Then said I; It is happened to you according to the true Proverb, as A Pewterer saith S. Peter, The dog is turned to his vomit again, and the sow that is washed, to wallow in the mire, and the end of all such will be worse than the beginning. Then his mouth was stopped, so that he had nothing to say.

All this while I stood at my door without; for they would not let me go in. So I put on my shoes and my cloaths, then they put on an harness about my arms made of a dogs flip, which rejoiced my heart, that I was counted worthy to be bound for the Name of God. So I took my leave of my wife and children, my father, and other of my friends, never thinking to see them more in this world. For it was so thought of all the Country, that I should not live six days after my taking; for they had so unles God would grant it, I know what God can do; but what he will do, I know not: but I am sure he will work all things for the best for them that love and fear him. So we drank and went our way, and came to Fittle about three of the clock. And thus much touching the cause, and effect of the troubles of Richard Woodman. Now let us see his Examinations, which follow in this order.

The first Examination of Richard Woodman, before Dr. Christopheron Bishop of Chichester, Dr. Story, Dr. Cooke, and others.

I first, you shall understand, that I was sent from the Sheriff to London, the 12. day of April, in the year of our Lord 1557 and afterward upon the 14. day of the same Month I was brought before the Bishop of Chichester, and Dr. Story, and Dr. Cooke. So the Sheriffs men delivered my Warrant and me to the Bishop. Then the Bishop asked me what my name was. My name (quoth I) is Richard Woodman.

Richard Woodman brought before the Bishop, Dr.
Story, Dr.
Cooke.

Chick. I am sorry for you, and so are all the worshipful men of your Country. For it hath been reported to me, that you have been a man of good estimation of all the Country, amongst the poor and rich, till now of late. Wherefore look well upon your self, your wife and children, your father, and other of your friends, and be ruled. Think not your self wiser than all the Realm. Be informed, and you shall have their favours all, as much as ever you had.

Wood. You have charged me with many things wherein I have never offended: as, if you will give me leave, I will shew you.

Chick. Yes, I pray you say your mind.

Wood. If it please you, you have charged me as though I made my self wiser than all the Realm; God doth know, I stand to learn of every man that will or can teach me the truth. And whereas you say, I have been well esteemed both of the poor and rich, God doth know, I know not that I have given any just offence, either to rich or poor. And as for my wife and children, God doth know how I love them in him, and my life self. My life, my wife, and my children are all in Gods hands, and I have them all as I had them not, I trust according to S. Pauls words. But if I had ten thousand pounds of gold, I had rather forego it the King, all then them, if I might be in choice, and not displease God. Chick. The Sheriff took pains to come to me of love, he said, which he bare to you, as to himself; and said you were desirous to speak with me.

Wood. I thought it meet to appeal to mine Ordinary. For they go about to shed my blood unrighteously. For they have laid many unjust things to my charge.

Where-

Anno 1557. Dr. Story a great pillar of blood by his own confession. Wherefore I thought it meet to appeal to you; that if you can find any fault in me meet to be reformed by Gods Word, I stand to be reformed; and likewise if my blood shall be shed unrighteously, that it might be required at your hands, because you have taken upon you to be the Physician of our Country.

Story. Is not this a perverse Fellow, to lay to your charge, that his blood shall be required at your hands? Thinkest thou that thou shalt be put to death unjustly, that thy blood should be required? No, if he should condemn an hundred such Hereticks as thou art: I helped to rid a good foot of you. And I promise thee, I will help to rid thee too, the best that I can.

Wood. Then I would have answered him, but the Bishop desired us both to give him place.

Chib. Well, Neighbour Woodman, I call you Neighbour, because ye be one of my Diocess; and you are sent to me, that I should give you spiritual counsel: for I am your spiritual Pastour. Therefore hear what I shall say to you.

Wood. First, I desire you to hear me a few words. You have said, you will give me spiritual counsel. Be you sure that you have the Spirit of God?

Chib. No, I am not sure of that.

Wood. No? be you not sure of that?

Chib. No, by S. Mary, I dare not be so bold to say so; I doubt of that.

Wood. Then you be like the Waves of the Seas, faith S. James, that be tossed about with the wind, and be unstable in all your ways, and can look for no good thing at the Lords hand: Yea, ye are neither hot nor cold, and therefore God will spue you out of his mouth, as faith S. John. Then they were in a great fury, especially Dr. Story, saying:

Story. What a perverse Fellow is this? He hath the Devil within him, and is mad. He is worse than the Devil. Now I perceive that it is true that is reported by thee, and it is the pride of all such Hereticks to boast themselves.

Chib. Yea surely, he is sent to me to learn, and taketh upon him to teach me.

Wood. I seeing their blindness and blasphemy, it made my heart melt, and mine eyes gush out with tears, saying: The Jews said to Christ, he had the Devil, and was mad, as you have said here by me. But I know the Servant is not above his Master. And God forbid, that I should learn of him that confesseth that he hath not the Spirit of God.

Chib. Why, do you think that you have the Spirit of God?

Wood. I believe verily that I have the Spirit of God.

Chib. You boast more than ever Paul did, or any of the Apostles, the which is great presumption.

Wood. I boast not in my self, but in the gift of God, as Paul did; for he said, he believed verily that he had the Spirit of God, making thereof no doubts, in 1 Cor. 7.

Chib. It is not so, you belie the Text.

Wood. If it be not so, let me be burned to morrow.

Story. Thou shalt not be burned to morrow, but thou shalt be burned within these six days, I promise thee.

Chib. If it be so, it is wrong translated, as it is in a thousand places more.

Wood. Then one looked in a Latin Testament, and another in a Greek Testament, and they said it was in them both that Paul supposed that he had the Spirit of God, but he was not sure.

Chib. Even so I hope and suppose that I have the Spirit of God, but I am not sure.

Wood. If that place be wrong translated, and so many places of the Bible as you say, then I may say with Christ; it cannot be avoided, but offences must be given; but woe unto them by whom they come. I may say, woe unto false Translators: For cursed are they that add or take away. But take you heed that you belie not the Translators. I believe they had the fear of God more before their eyes than you report of them. And yet if that place be wrong translated, I can prove by places enough, that Paul had the Spirit of God, as I my self, and all Gods Elect have.

Chib. How prove you that?

Wood. No man can believe that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost, first to the Corinthians the fifth Chapter. I do believe that Jesus Christ is my Redeemer, and that I shall be saved from all my sins by his death and bloodshedding, as Paul and all the Apostles did, and as all faithful people ought to do, which no man can do without the Spirit of God. And as there is no damnation to them that are in Christ Jesus; so is there no salvation to them that are not in Christ Jesus. For he that hath not the Spirit of Christ, is none of his, but is a Cast-away, as he faith in the same Text. And again, We have not received the spirit of bondage, to fear any more, but we have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba Father. The same Spirit certifieth our spirits, that we are the Sons of God. Here are proofs enough, that Paul was sure that he had the Spirit of God. Also S. John faith, He that believeth that Christ is come in the flesh, is an Antichrist, and denieth both the Father and the Son: which is sin against the Holy Ghost, which shall never be forgiven in this world, nor in the world to come. Beside all this, He that believeth in God, dwelleth in God, and God in him. So it is impossible to believe in God, unless God dwell in us. Oh good God! what more injury can be done unto thee, then to mistrust that we have received thy holy Spirit by thy gift? Thus may all men see their blindness, and whose Servants they be, as they do declare themselves, both by their words and deeds.

Story. Oh my Lord, what an Heretick is this fame? Why hear you him? Send him to Prison to his Fellows in the Marshalsey, and they shall be dispatched within these twelve days.

Wood. When I heard him say so, I rejoiced greatly in my heart, desiring God, if it were his will, to keep him in that mind. For I looked surely to have gone to the Bishop of Londons Colchouse, or Lollards Tower, yea, I thought my self happy, if I might have gone to Lollards Tower: but it pleased God to put in the hearts of them to send me to the Marshalsey amongst our Brethren and my old Prison-Fellows: So merciful hath God dealt with me in easing of my burden, that I looked for. So when they perceived that I feared not Imprisonment, but rather rejoiced, as they well perceived: Then said the Bishop, Methinks he is not afraid of the Prison.

Wood. No, I praise the living God.

Story. This is an Heretick indeed. He hath the right terms of all Hereticks; the living God, I pray you be there dead Gods, that you say the living God?

Wood. Be you angry with me, because I speak the words which are written in the Bible?

Story. Bible babble, bible babble. What speakest thou of the Bible? There is no such word written in all the Bible.

Wood. Then I am much to blame, if it be not so written; Behold, for the offences that you have done, you shall be carried away captive by Nebuchodonosor to Babylon, and there ye shall be seven Generations: and when you be there, you shall see Gods of gold, of silver, of wood, and of stone, born before you and behind you upon mens shoulders, to cast out a fear among the Heathen. When you shall see all these abominations, then say in your heart: It is the living God that ought to be worshipped. Here I prove my saying true, both that there is a living God, and that there be dead gods. Also David faith in the Psalms; My soul hath a desire and longing to enter into the Courts of the Lord: My heart and my flesh rejoice in the living God; with divers other tunes.

places that I could recite. Wherefore I marvel that you rebuke me for speaking the truth.

Chib. I do not deny but it is written, and is the truth, and I know it as well as you; but such is the speech of all Hereticks.

Story. My Lord, I will tell you how you shall know an Heretick by his words, because I have been more used to them than you have been; that is, they will say (the Lord) and (we praise God) and (the living God) By these words you shall know an Heretick.

Story. My Lord, send him to Prison, you shall do no good with him. I will go to Church, and leave you here. This is an old Heretick. Wait thou never before me ere now?

Wood. Yes forsooth, that I have.

Story. Yea, I trow so; and I sent thee to the Bishop of London, and he released thee, and thou promisedst him to be an honest man, and that thou wouldst be of the true Catholick Church, which thou hast not fulfilled.

Wood. I promised him nothing but I have fulfilled it. No man shall be able to prove the contrary.

Story. Well, it will be tried well enough. My Lord, I will take my leave, I fear me you shall do this man no good.

Chib. I would not have you to use such speeches as you do, as the Lord be praised, and the living God, with such like words. Can you not say as well, Our Lord, or our God, as otherwise?

Wood. I marvel why you should reprove me therefore, seeing they be the words of God. I do not refuse to say our God, or our Lord, when I talk of the Scripture where it is written. If I should, it must follow, that I denied the words of God, and must needs be an Heretick; but I do not. Wherefore, I marvel what you mean to find fault therein. It seemeth to me, that you mistrust that I believe not as you do.

Chib. Yea, that is my meaning indeed.

Wood. I believe in the living God, if you do not so, then our beliefs be not alike indeed. But if it please you to examine me upon any particular matter, now, or at any other time, I will make you answer thereto by Gods help.

Chib. Though you believe in God, I can prove you believe not as you ought to do, as I can shew you by your hand writing. You have denied the Catholick Church. Wherefore he that crutch from the Church, it cannot be said that his Faith is good. Wherefore be ruled by the Church, from the which ye have erred. I can shew you perilous things of your writing, if it should be known, but ye shall not be hurt for me, if you will come to any good order. But I promise you I would not for three thousand pounds some had so much against me, as I can shew against you of your own hand writing, which you cannot deny.

Wood. I will not deny my hand by Gods help. For I know well, I have written nothing at any time but the truth. There may be things written against me, reporting it to be mine, and yet be not: but my hand cannot well be counterfeited, there be enough that know my hand.

Chib. Do you know it your self if you see it?

Wood. Yea, that I do. Then he arose and fetcht a great bundle of Writings, and opened them, and bade me come see. I looked on them, and it was my hand indeed.

Chib. How say you, is it not your own writing?

Wood. Yes surely it is.

Chib. How say you to this, is not this your hand also?

Wood. I looked, and it was. And I said, Yes verily is it.

Chib. Well, you know what it meaneth I dare say.

Wood. Yea, I know it very well; here is a great deal, the which I had thought had been in my House, but I thank God that it is here: for in this you shall try whether it be true or not. For in this is contained all the talk that was betwixt the Commissioners and me, when I was before them five times, and also before the Bishop of London divers times: and I am sure, neither you nor they shall find any words false therein written: and I think the Sheriffs men, when they searched my House for me, when I was taken, found this, and carried it with them, but I never knew it before now. But I am not sorry for it, but am rather glad: For herein you may see all the wrong that I received at their hands, and how long I was in Prison, and how I was tossed up and down, and how I was delivered at length, and by this you may try whether it be so or not. I dare say they that found it, and they that brought it to you, had thought it would Woodman charged with his own writings.

Ballade acquired. He that crutch from the Church, which Church crutch me in the right Faith, his Faith cannot be good landed.

have turned me to displeasure, but in very deed all things work for the best to them that fear God.

Chib. Indeed, I find no great fault in this; but here is perilous gear, here is sedition. This was set up upon the Church door, you know it well enough.

Wood. Indeed I wrote it to the Priest, and to others that took upon them to fetch my Child out of my House without my leave, and used it at their pleasure, when they knew it was baptized already, as they were well certified before. Wherefore my Conscience compelled me to shew them my mind in writing, wherein is contained nothing but the Scriptures of God, rebuking them for their folly.

Chib. Yea, but it is terribly meant, and uncharitably. It is such gear coupled together I promise you, as I never saw the like. But I promise you, I will make the best of it. And I protest before God, I would you should do as well as mine own soul and body. Be contented to be reformed. God hath done his part on you. Cast not your self away. Remember your Wife and Children, and the Poor that lack your occupying. Mean to follow your Vocation. Remember you are not called to be a Teacher nor a Preacher. S. Paul saith, Let every man walk wherein he is called, and therein abide. Remember you are called to another Vocation, for Gods sake walk therein. It is not your Office to do as you have done. You might do as much good by the report of worshipful men, as any man might do in all the Country by your example, and if you would follow the Laws of the Catholick Church, it would be an occasion to bring a great many into the true Church, that are out, as you are.

Wood. I would not that you should say, that I am out of the Church of God, for I am not, but do allow the Church of God according to his Word. Yea, if I were abroad, if I could win any into the true Church, that be out, by any means that I could use, I would be very glad. For God knoweth I love all people as my self. And where you say I have been a Preacher, it is not so. I never took any such thing upon me, as it is well known. But as for teaching I cannot deny: for it becometh every man to teach and instruct his Household in the fear of God, and all other (as far as he can) that desire it of him. And whereas you have blamed me for reading the Scripture, and leaving my Vocation (as you say) I left not my Vocation in reading the Scripture. For I trust I followed my Vocation the better therefore. And the greatest cause that I was compelled to read the Scriptures, was, because the Preachers and Teachers were so changeable.

Chib. No? did you not preach at a Fair?

Wood. No surely, but it was so reported. I was at a Fair indeed. Whiles I was in Prison, I had leave of the Council to go home to pay my Debts, and then I went to a Fair to sell Cattle, and there met with me divers poor men that I had set a work, and of love asked me how I did, and how I could away with Imprisonment. And I shewed them how God had dealt with me, and how he would deal with all them that put their trust in him; and this they called preaching. And since that it hath been reported that I have baptized Children, and married Folke, the which I never did; for I was never Minister. Wherefore if I had so done, I had done contrary to the order of the Apostles, as God forbid I should.

Chib. I am well apaid, if you be faultless in those things: for I have heard say the contrary.

Wood. I have shewed you the truth, and that no man living shall be able to prove the contrary.

Chib. You said you do not disallow the true Catholick Church.

Wood. No, that I do not.

Chib. Why do you not then go to the Church? You come not there, it is informed me.

Wood. I trust I am in the true Church every day. But to tell you the truth, I come not at the Church where the most do resort. For if I should, I should offend, and be offended. For at the last time that I was there, I offended many, and was offended my self. Wherefore for Conscience sake I would not come there. For I was sent to Prison for my coming there, and now I am sent to you for biding thence. So they will not be pleased any way with me, for they seek my life. Wherefore look you to it, for I am now in your hands, and you ought to be an house

Anno 1557.

Rich. Woodman's child, being baptized by the Midwife, was brought to the house by the Papists, and confirmed in the Church.

Dr. Christopher Bp. of Chichester beginneth with fair words to persuade Woodman from his doctrine.

Woodman not out of the Church.

A man may teach, though he be no Priest. Reading the Scripture leteeth no man to walk in his vocation, but rather doth further him.

Lies and flanders.

Woodman disalloweth not the Catholick Church.

Anno 1557. The Bishop charged with his office.

of defence against mine Enemies. For if you suffer them to kill me, my blood shall be required at your hands. If you can find any just cause in me worthy of death by Gods Word, you may condemn me your self, and not offend God: wherefore look to it, the matter is weighty, deliver me not into their hands, and think so to be discharged.

Chich. I tell you truth, I can do little in the matter. For I have not full Authority as yet of mine Office: but I will fend for you and talk with you, if I wist I should do you any good.

Wood. I would be glad to talk with you, and to shew you my mind in any thing that you shall demand of me, now, or at any other time.

Chich. So then he desired the Sheriffs men to carry dinner with him; that this man (said he) may dine with me also: for it is possible that he may have no great store of meat whither he shall go.

Wood. So we tarried dinner with him, and had no further talk, neither how to prove where the true Church of God is, nor of the Sacraments, nor of any other thing pertaining to me-ward, nor for the space of two hours or more: but he entered in talk with me, how I understood many Scriptures, and for Bishops and Priests marriages, and whether Paul had a Wife or not. To whom I answered; It is a thing that I have little to do with, as concerning marriages: but I am very well content to talk with you in the matter, as far as my poor learning will serve. So when he had talked with me of divers Scriptures, he liked my talk well. He asked me how I said by S. Paul, whether he were married or not? To whom I answered, I can prove by the Scriptures that he was never married.

Chich. How prove you that?

Wood. I will prove it well enough by Gods help. But yet I will prove that Paul might have had a Wife, as well as the other Apostles had.

Chich. Why, had the Apostles Wives?

Wood. Yes, all, saving Paul and Barnabas, as I understand it. For these are Pauls words in the first to the Corinthians, the ninth Chapter. Am I not an Apostle? am I not free? have I not seen Jesus Christ? Are not ye my work in the Lord? And if I be not an Apostle to others, yet to you I am an Apostle: For you are the seal of my Apostleship in the Lord. Mine answer to them that ask me, is this; Have we not power to eat and to drink? either have we not power to lead about a sister to wife, as well as the other Apostles have, and as the Brethren of the Lord? Either have not Barnabas and I power thus to do so? This Text proveth, that Paul and Barnabas were unmarried. But Paul declareth that the rest had wives, and that they had power likewise to have, but they found no need thereof. But Paul declareth in the seventh Chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians, that he that hath no power over his own flesh, may marry: For it is better to marry then to burn. Wherefore to avoid Fornication (saith he) let every man have his wife. He saith, Let every man have his wife, and every woman her husband. By this place of Scripture I understand, that Bishops and Priests may have wives, because they are men, rather than burn, or commit Fornication. But I think verily, he that can abstain, having power of his own will, doth best; but if he be married, he sinneth not.

So then he debated the Scriptures with me divers ways, that a Bishop or a Priest ought not to have a wife: but I proved by divers Scriptures both in the old Law and in the new, that women were at first made for the help of men, the which was spoken generally to all men. Wherefore (said I) every man may have a woman, and sin not, in honest Matrimony, as well Bishops and Deacons, as other men, which you call Priests, if they be true Ministers of Jesus Christ, and of that Order that Bishops and Deacons were in Pauls time. For Paul declareth to Timothy, first and the third, That a Bishop should be the husband of one wife, and how they should be honestly apparelled, and how they should bring up their Children, and likewise the Deacons. This (said I) proveth more plainly, that both Bishops and Deacons had wives in the Apostles time, the which he could not deny.

But then he alleged, that no Bishop nor Priest might take a wife, after he had taken upon him that office, but if he had a wife before he took the office, tried meet for the purpose for his life and for his learning, he might keep his wife, and bring up his Children according to S. Pauls meaning to Timothy, or else might they have no wives.

Then said I, I think Pauls meaning in that place, was, that a man that hath had two wives might not be made a Bishop nor a Deacon, if he had never so much learning. But that place maketh not that a Bishop or a Deacon may not marry after they be made Bishops and Deacons. For I am sure that Paul was in the State of a Bishop, when he said, He had power to lead about a sister to wife, as well as the other Apostles had. Here Paul declareth, that it was in his power to have a wife, after he had the office of a Bishop, which was not in his power, if he had been forbidden of God.

Thus have I shewed you my mind in this behalf, both of Paul, and also for the Marriages of Bishops and Priests, as I understand the Scriptures. Howbeit, it is a thing the which I have little to do withal: but as you required me to say my mind in that matter, so I have done.

Chich. Marry, I am glad that you have said as you have done. Many do affirm boldly, that Paul had a wife, and yet cannot prove whether he had or had not, by the Scriptures: but you have said very well. I am glad that ye are contented to be ruled by Gods Word. And if you will be contented likewise in other matters, no doubt you shall do well: therefore gentle Goodman Woodman be ruled. God hath given you a good wit. I protest before God, I would you should do as well as mine own soul and my body, and so would I dare say all the worshipful men in the Country, as they have reported to me.

Wood. Why, my Lord, I take God to record (whom I trust to serve) that I would be as glad to live in rest and peace, as any man in all the World, if I might. And I stand to learn, and am contented to be reformed of any thing that I hold, if it can be proved that it be not agreeable to Gods Word. And the truth is so, I have talked with a dozen Priests at the least, since I was delivered out of Prison, of certain matters, and they have not been able to certify me in any thing that I have asked them: and therefore they have complained on me to the Sheriff, and justices, making tales and lies on me, to turn me to displeasure, as much as in them lieth. I promise you, there be as many unlearned Priests in your Diocess, as in any one Diocess in England I think; the more it is to be lamented.

Chich. I promise you, I do much lament it my self: for I hear say no less, but it is true that you say. I would I could remedy it, but I cannot: but I will do the best that I can, when I come into the Country, and I will be glad to talk with you some other time, when I am somewhat better at ease. You see I am very tender now, as I have been this half year and more. Come to dinner; our dinner is ready. I caused you not to tarry for any great cheer that you shall have, nor would I you should think that I go about to win you with my meat. But you be welcome with all my heart. Come sit down.

Wood. I thanked him, and went to dinner; and there dined with him, a Merchant man, one of the Sheriffs men, and I, and no more, and we had good cheer, God be praised therefore. We had no talk of the Scriptures all the dinner while: but when dinner was done, the Bishop said, Chich. Now call Mr. Storres man. For the Commissioners have committed you to Prison: but I will fend for you or ever it be long, and I pray God I may do you good. I would be very glad of it.

Wood. If it please you to fend for me, I would be very glad to talk with you, for I like your talk well. And then if it please your Lordship to examine me upon any particular matter, I will then show you my mind therein, by Gods grace, without dissimulation. But I pray you let me have nothing to do with Mr. Storres, for he is a man without reason, methinks.

Chich. Well, or ever you go, how say you to the seven Sacraments? Let me hear what you say to them, that I may be the willingest to fend for you again.

Wood. I know not seven Sacraments.

Chich.

The Bishop biddeth Woodman to dinner.

Talk between Rich. Woodman and the Bishop about Priests marriages.

Paul, if he were not married, yet he had power to marry as well as the other had.

1 Cor. 9.

1 Cor. 7.

Priests ought to have wives rather then to burn, by S. Pauls doctrine.

Gen. 2. Tim. 3. Bishops and Deacons were married in the Apostles time.

Pauls household, that Bishops and Deacons having wives becom, might keep them that love not having wives, might not offend and marry.

Paul confesseth himself after his Apostleship to have power to marry.

The Bishop said words to Rich. Woodman.

Rich. Woodman complained of by unlearned Priests which could not certify him in matters of Religion.

As Bishop he dined without any talk of Scriptures.

Dr. Storres man wrote out reason.

Seven Sacraments denied.

Two only Sacraments.

Chib. Then what shall I talk with you? How many do you know?

Wood. I know but two; one the Sacrament of Baptism, and the other the Supper of the Lord. But if you can justly prove by Gods Word, that there be more then two. I stand to be reformed.

Chib. If I prove not seven by Gods Word, then believe me not: and so he bade me farewell.

Then the Sheriffs two men, and one of Dr. Stories men, carried me to Dr. Cooks House, which Dr. Cook commanded them to carry me to the Sheriffs Prison in Southwark, saying, he shall be called before us again shortly and all his fellows, and we shall dispatch them for troubling the Country any more.

Rich. Woodman carried to the Marshalsey.

And so I was brought to the Marshalsey, where I now am merry (God be praised therefore) looking for judgment of my flesh: for they intend to dispatch me shortly, if God will give them leave: but God hath their hearts in his hands, and they can do nothing to me, but as God will give them leave.

Luke 12. The Devils members persecutors of the Christians.

Wherefore I commit my cause to God only, and I am sure there shall not one hair of my head perish without my heavenly Fathers will, although I bide never so much trouble. Job perished not for all his trouble, although God gave the Devil leave to trouble and try him divers and many ways, as God hath suffered his Members to trouble and try me divers and many ways, I praise God. They shall as little prevail against my Faith (I have no mistrust) as the Devil prevailed against Job, whatsoever they do with my Goods, Life, or Body. For he that kept Job in all his trouble, neither slumbereth nor sleepeth, but keepeth me, and all his elect, that whether we live or dye, it shall be to the praise and glory of God. For if we live, we live at the Lords will, and if we dye, we dye to the Lords will: so, whether we live or dye, we are the Lords, blessed be his Name therefore.

Rich. Woodman to the faithful brethren.

Wherefore, dear Brethren and Sisters, to whom this my writing shall come, be of good cheer, and fear not what man can do unto you. For they can but kill the body: but fear him that hath power to kill both body and soul. And yet once again I bid you be of good cheer. For the Sheriff, with divers other Gentlemen and Priests, whilst I was at the Sheriffs House, said to me, that all the Heretics in the Country hung on me, as the People did in times past upon S. Augustine or S. Ambrose, or such like. Wherefore said they, look well on it, you have a greatching to answer for. To the which I answered; I pray God lay nothing more to my charge, than he will do for Heretics, as I am sure he will not. For he hath for my sins as far from me, as it is from the East to the West: so that I am sure they shall never come near to me any more. Yea, and that they call Heretic, we serve God withal. And I am sure there is no man nor woman that hangeth on me, but on God. But yet that is their imaginations and thoughts, that if they might win me to them, they should win a great many likewise: and thinking to kill me, if they cannot win me, as I trust in God, and am sure they shall never by Gods grace, if it were possible for them to kill me ten times. For I am so linked to Christ in a chain by Faith, that it is impossible for men to loose us asunder, neither for life nor death, I praise my Lord God therefore. And no doubt their full intent and purpose is to kill me, thinking thereby to make other afraid. Which death of my Body were best of all for me, if God were so pleased. But if I may live for the comfort of other, his name be praised therefore. I know what he can do; but what he will do I know not. But if death be offered me, so that I cannot refuse it without displeasing of God, I trust in God I shall not offend my Brethren in receiving of death, but shall be rather an occasion of the strengthening of their Faith, by choosing and receiving of it, and that with joy. For as Christ hath given his life for us, so ought we to give our lives for the defence of the Gospel, and comfort of our Brethren. And whereas the Bishop saith, he will prove seven Sacraments, be you out of doubt he shall never be able to do it, no more than he hath proved other Arguments with me already.

Psal. 103.

Those that fear God hang not on man.

The inseparable bond of love between Christ and his Members.

Christians ought to give their lives for defence of the Gospel, if they be thereto called.

Thus fare ye well, from the Marshalsey, where I now am, as a Sheep appointed to be slain, God be praised therefore.

The second Examination of Richard Woodman before the Bishop of Chichester, two of his Chaplains; and Dr. Story as the last came to us, the twenty seventh day of April.

1557

First, I was sent for to the Marshalsey by Dr. Story, and was carried to his House besides S. Nicholas Shambles; and when I had spoken to him, he sent me to the Bishop of Chichester, and said he would come to him his self straightway: and when we were in the Bishops Hall, we had not tarried long, but the Bishop sent for me: and when I came before him, I did my duty to him as much as I could.

The second Examination of Rich. Woodman, before Dr. Chichester, Dr. Story, Sec.

Chib. Then said the Bishop, You be welcome; how do you now?

Wood. Well, I praise God, thanking your Lordship for the gentle talk that you had with me at my last departing from you.

Chib. Well, Goodman Woodman, I have sent for you of love and good will, that I bear to you, to talk with you, and I would have you to tell me your mind in few words. For indeed the last time that I talked with you, our talk was so long, that I fell into a great drought thereby, and have been the worse in my body ever since. Wherefore I pray you shew me your mind briefly in those particular matters that I shall demand of you, according to your promise that you made when you were with me the last time! How say you, will you?

Wood. Yea forsooth, I will answer to any thing that you shall demand of me (by Gods help) as well as I can.

Chib. How say you to the seven Sacraments? for there we left off, and there we will begin again. You said then there were but two. How say you now to it? will you deny all saving two?

Wood. I say now, as I said then. You said, there be seven Sacraments; and I said, I knew but two: but if you could approve seven by Gods Word, when I came before you again, I must needs grant them. And you said, if you could not prove them by Gods Word, I should not believe them: and now I am come to see how well you can prove them. Herewith he was moved and all his Chaplains.

Chib. By God and my troth, I wene he thinketh I cannot prove them. How say you to the Sacrament of Matrimony?

Wood. Why, my Lord, S. Paul saith to Timothy, A Bishop should be faultless, and you use much swearing, which is a great fault in a Bishop, of all other, that should be an example to the Flock. Then he and his Prelats were in a great rage with me, because I reproved him for his swearing.

Dr. Chichester, who was at Chichester, reproved for swearing.

Chib. What, I perceive this man is worse then he was the last day: what, he taketh upon him to reach me to speak, as though I could not tell what I had to do?

Priest. So me thinketh, my Lord, he is a stout fellow indeed, as we have seen.

Wood. Yea, I am stout, because I do that I am commanded I dare not for my life hold my peace: for I should bear your sin, which I will not do for any of you all, I tell you plainly.

Swearing not to be born with.

Chib. Where find you that you are commanded to reprove me?

Wood. If thou see thy Brother sin, reprove him: if he repent, thou hast won thy Brother. But you repent it not, methinketh, but rather go about to maintain the same. Christ saith, He that breaketh one of the least of my Commandments, and teacheth men so, shall be called least in the Kingdom of Heaven; and you go about to teach men so, so far as I see.

Priest. Why my Lord, this man is past cure. I see no hope in him.

Chib. No, so me thinketh. I will never talk with him more. Go call Mr. Story; let him do with him what he will. He hath been with his Fellows in the Marshalsey, and now he is worse than he was before. I had some hope in him the other day, but now I see none.

Chichester, for he said he was reprov'd for swearing, given him over to Dr. Story.

Wood. No, I praise God, my Faith hangeth upon no men, but upon God.

Priest.

Anno 1557. Priest. Nay, my Lord, I think he is not the worke for them: but I fear me they be the worke for him: I know this Man of old, before mine old Lord.

Wood. Well my Lord, look well to it: will you deliver me to other Men to shed my Blood, and so think to wash your hands of me, as Pilate did by Christ? Nay, you cannot be so discharged.

Chib. I have nothing to do with you: but of my gentleness I have sent for you, because you said, you would declare your mind in any particular matter I would demand of you.

Wood. Why, I do not deny but I will do so, if you do demand it of me. But you go about to deliver me to other to kill me: and I know that there is none that hath to do with me but you.

Chib. I am not confuted yet: wherefore my Lord Cardinal may examine you, and condemn you, or my Lord of London: for you are now in his Diocese.

Wood. Yea my Lord, is the matter even so? Then I perceive whereabout you go. Nay, I will talk no more with you then, if you be at that point. Ask me what you will: but I will shew you nothing of my mind. I promise you I will not answer in particular matters, and so you to accuse me to other, and they to kill me.

Chib. I go not about to kill you, but would be glad to hear your mind in the Sacraments, and if you understand them not aright, I would be glad with all my heart to shew you my mind how I understand them. For I would you should do as well as mine own self.

Wood. If you would talk with me to do me good, I would be content to hear you, and shew you my mind; otherwise I would be loath.

Chib. Nay, I will promise you, if I can do you no good, I will do you no harm: for if I meant to do you harm, I would lay your own hand-writing against you, but I will not: wherefore be in no doubt of me. How say you to the Sacrament of Matrimony? is it a Sacrament or no? How think you by it?

Wood. I think it is an Holy Institution ordained of God in Paradise, and so to continue to the Worlds end.

Chib. Lo, now you shall see how you be deceived in that, as you be in all the rest. Come hither. You can read Latin I am sure.

Wood. Yea I can read Latin, but I understand very little.

Chib. Come to me, you shall see that Paul calleth it a Holy Sacrament. For these be the words, For this cause shall a Man leave Father and Mother, and shall be joined to his Wife: and the two shall be made one Flesh: This is a great Sacrament.

Wood. I remember such a saying, but Saint Paul calleth it not a Sacrament. But he saith, It is a great mystery.

Chib. Where faith he so?

Wood. I am not sure in what Text it is, but I am sure these be St. Paul's words, and that he calleth it not a Sacrament in all his writings.

Chib. What, the last day ye were full of Scriptures; here it is written, and there it is written? What, we can rehearse the Scriptures as well as you. Wherefore, if we be sure it is written, it is no great matter for the place. Come hither, I will shew you the place, I think, that you mean.

Wood. I looked, and it was written Sacramentum. I know it is a great Mystery, in the English Translation.

Chib. I permit it to be a Mystery. What it is a Mystery?

Wood. A Mystery is (I take it) unseen: for he saith, he speaketh betwixt Christ and the Congregation: So the great Mystery that he speaketh of, I take to be the Faith of them that be married, which is hid in Christ, the which we see not, but Christ. But the deed which is in the Congregation, which is the outward marriage we see, but the inward marriage of the heart we see not. Wherefore Paul calleth it a Mystery. And therefore if it be a Sacrament, it is invisible to us: it is not seen, as other Sacraments be.

Chib. Nay, I tell you it is a visible Sacrament, seen as the other be: for is not the marriage seen? is not the Man and Woman seen?

Wood. My Lord, I pray? you what is a Sacrament?

Chib. It is the sign of a Holy thing.

Wood. Me thinks you have certified me very well. There need not be a sign of a holy thing, where the holy thing is itself. Then his Chaplains would have interrupted me, but I desired my Lord I might say out my mind in the matter. So with much ado he bade me say what I could.

There need not to be a sign of a thing, where the thing is itself. Matrimony is an holy thing itself, and is ended outwardly, and need no more signs but themselves: Wherefore it cannot be a Sacrament as other be.

Chib. Lo, how much you speak against your self. And for an example, I come by an Host, and there hangeth a pair of Hosts, the which be Hosts, and be a sign of Hosts that be to sell within.

Priest. How say you to this? Now my Lord hath hit you home indeed.

Wood. He hath hit me perilously, I tell you, with Sophistry to blind mine eyes wical. I marvel you be not all ashamed of it. I can answer that to all your shames, if I might be justly heard, I tell you plainly.

Priest. What, you be angry me thinks.

Wood. I am not angry, but I am earnest, I tell you, to see your blindness and folly. I talked of the Scriptures that be written, and it is Gods word, to prove my matter true by, and you will prove your matter true by a pair of Hosts. And as well can you prove it by that, as I can prove it by Gods Word.

Priest. Why, is there nothing true, but that is written in the Bible?

Wood. Saint Paul saith to the Galathians the first Chapter, If an Angel come from Heaven and preach any other Doctrine then may be proved by Gods Word, bold him accursed: and so do I, I tell you plainly.

Priest. Here is a Testament in my hand, if I hurl him in the Fire and burn him, have I burned Gods Word, or not? I will buy a new one for x-pence.

Wood. I say, you have burned Gods Word, and believe, he that will burn a Testament willingly, would burn God himself, if he were here, if he could: for he and his word are all one.

Then they made a great laughing at it.

Wood. Laugh on, quoth I. Your laughing will be turned to weeping, and all such joy will be turned to mourning, if you repent it not with speed.

Chib. Then the Bishop began to cloak the Priests folly, saying, Why, if my Counting house were full of Books, and if my house should be on Fire by chance, and so burned, were Gods Word burned?

Wood. No, my Lord, because they were burned against your will: but yet if you should burn them willingly, or think it well, and not be sorry for it, you burn Gods Word as well as he. For he that is not sorry for a firewood turn, doth allow it to be good.

Chib. Follow your Vocation; you have a little learning. We have an Altar, whereof you may not eat. What meaneth Saint Paul thereby?

Wood. There is no Man so foolish to eat Stones I trow.

Chib. What Mockers and Scorners be you, to say no Man will be so foolish to eat Stones? it is a plain mock.

Wood. Why, my Lord, you said I had no learning, nor knowledge, nor understanding. Wherefore it becometh you to make things more plain to me, and not to ask me such dark questions, and yet blame me too; me think it is too much.

Chib. I dare say, you know what it meaneth well enough. The most fool in my house will understand my meaning better than you do.

Wood. There stood some of his Men not far off, talking together beside a Window. He called one of them by his Name.

Argumentum.

A thing signified and a thing signifying cannot be at one time, in respect of itself, in one Subject.

Matrimony is an holy thing in itself signified.

Ergo, Matrimony cannot be a Sacrament signifying an holy thing.

The Host in an Hostess shall may be a sign, signifying more Hosts to be within, but it is not signifying sign of itself. Neither again is every sign of another thing to be called a Sacrament.

Whether Matrimony be a Sacrament.

Whether Matrimony be a Sacrament.

Ephes. 5.

St. Pauls words be these: This Mystery is great.

In the Greek Text St. Paul calleth it a Mystery. What is a Mystery, and what difference there is between a Mystery and a Sacrament.

Chib.

Chib. Come hither. I say to thee, thou shalt not eat of this Table. What do I mean thereby?

The Man. Forsooth, my Lord, you would not have me eat of this Table, laying his hand thereupon. With this answer he made all them in the house to fall on laughing, and I could not hold it in, but burst out with laughter, and said.

Wood. He hath expounded the matter almost as well as I.

Chib. He meaneth well enough, if you would understand him.

Answer me again, to make it more plain. I say to thee, thou shalt not eat of this Table. What mean I thereby?

The Man. Forsooth you would not have me eat this Table.

Wood. These words made them all laugh. Wherewith the Bishop was almost angry, because the answer proved no better, and said.

Chib. He meaneth that I would not have him eat any of the meat that is set upon this Table. How saist thou, dost thou not mean so?

The Man. Yes forsooth my Lord, that was my meaning indeed.

Wood. Yea, my Lord, now you have told him what you mean, he can say so too: and so could I have done (as little wit as I have) if you had said, Paul meant that no Man might eat of that which was offered upon the Altar, but the Priests.

Chib. Yea, I perceive you understand the meaning of Paul well enough, but that you list to cavil with me.

Wood. Why my Lord, do you thing I understand such dark places of the Scripture, without learning? you said even now, I had no knowledge nor learning, wherefore I answered you, as you judged of me.

Chib. Well, let this matter pass, and let us turn to the principal again. How say you by the Sacrament of the Altar?

Wood. You mean the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ.

Chib. I mean the Sacrament of the Altar, and so I say.

Wood. You mean Christ to be the Altar, do you not?

Chib. I mean the Sacrament of the Altar in the Church. What, is it so strange to you?

Wood. It is strange to me indeed, if you mean the Altar of stone.

Chib. It is that Altar that I mean.

Wood. I understand not the Altar so.

Chib. No, I think so indeed: and that is the cause that you be deceived. I pray you, how do you understand the Altar then?

Wood. If you will give me leave till I have done, I will shew you how I understand the Altar, and where it is.

Chib. Yes, you shall have leave to say your mind, as much as you will.

Wood. It is written, Matth. 18. That whosoever two or three be gathered together in Christ's Name, there is he in the midst among them: and whatsoever they ask the Father upon Earth, it shall be granted them in Heaven. Agreeing to the fifth of Matth. saying, When thou comest to offer thy gift at the Altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee, leave there thy offering, and go first and be reconciled to thy brother, and then offer thy gift. The Priests would have interrupted me, but the Bishop bade them let me alone.

Chib. You shall hear a pretty conclusion anon.

Wood. I pray yet let me make an end, and then find fault with me if you can. Now to the matter. In these two places of Scripture, I prove that Christ is the true Altar, whercon every Christian Man and Woman ought to come and offer their gifts. First, whersoever the people are gathered together in Christ's Name, there is he in the midst; and where he is, there is the Altar, so that we may be bold to come and offer our gift, if we be in love and charity: if we be not, we must leave there our offering, and go first and be reconciled to our Brother, and agree with him quickly, and so forth, and then come and offer the gift. Some will say, how shall I agree with my adversary, when he is not nigh by a hundred miles? may I not pray till I have spoken with him? To all such I answered; if thou presume to pray among the Faithful, wishing any evil to any Man, Woman, or Child, thou askest vengeance upon thy self. For no such askest any thing else of the Lord in his Prayer. Wherefore agree with thy adversary, that is, make thy Life agreeable to Gods Word. Say in thy heart without dissimulation, that thou askest God and all the World forgiveness from the bottom of thy heart, intending never to offend them any more. Then all such may be bold to come and offer their gift, their Prayer on the Altar, where the people of God be gathered together. Thus have I shewed you my mind, both of the Altar, and of the offering, as I understand it.

Chib. Do you understand the offering and the Altar so? I never heard any Man understand it so, no not Luther the great Heretic, that was condemned by a General Council, and his picture burned.

Wood. If he were an Heretic, I think he understood it not so indeed: but I am sure all Christians ought to understand it so.

Chib. Oh what vain glory is in you, as though you understood all things, and other Men nothing? Hear me; I will shew you the true understanding, both of the Altar, and the offering on the Altar. We have an Altar (saith Paul, Heb. 13. that ye may not eat of. Meaning thereby, that no Man might eat of that which was offered on the Altar, but the Priest. For in Paul's time all the living that the Priest had, the people came and offered it on the Altar, Money or other things: and when the people came to offer it, and then remembered that they had any thing against their Brother, then they left their offering upon the Altar, and went and were reconciled to their Brother; and they came again and offered their gift, and the Priest had it. This is the true understanding of the place that you have rehearsed: wherefore you be deceived.

Wood. My Lord, that was the use in the Old Law. Christ was the end of that. But indeed I perceive by Paul's words, the Sacrifice was offered in Paul's time: yet that maketh not that was well done, but he rebuked it. Wherefore, it seemeth to me that you be deceived.

Chib. Who shall be Judges betwixt us in this matter?

Wood. The 12. of John declareth who shall be Judge in the last day.

Chib. You mean the Word shall judge the Word. How can that be?

Wood. Saint Peter saith, The Scripture hath no private interpretation: But one Scripture must be understood by other.

Chib. You will understand it one way, and I will understand it another way: and who shall be Judges betwixt us then?

Wood. The true Church of God is able to discuss all doubts: to whom I refer it.

Chib. I am glad you say so, if you will say so indeed.

Wood. My Lord, I never meant otherwise.

Chib. The Church of God doth allow the Sacrament of the Altar.

Wood. What do you offer now upon the Altar?

Chib. We offer up in the Blessed Sacrament of the Doctrine Altar, the Body of Christ to pacify the Wrath of God the Father; and therewith they put off their caps all to the abominable Idol.

Wood. Saint Paul saith to the Hebrews, in the tenth Chapter, We are sanctified by offering of the Body of Jesus Christ upon the Cross once for all: and every Priest is daily ministering, and oftentimes offereth one manner of offering, which can never take away Sins; and that is the offering that you use to offer. As far as I can see, you be Priests after the order of Aaron, that offered up Sacrifice for their own Sins, and the Sins of the people.

Chib. Nay, Aaron's Sacrifice was with Blood which signifieth the death of Christ, the which was ended upon the Cross by his Blood-shedding: but we are Priests Sacrament of the Altar.

Christ the true and only Altar.

The place of March 5. expounded.

The Catholics will not have the word to judge.

Woodman referreth himself to the true Church.

The Doctrine prejudicial to Christs passion to say, that the Sacrament of the Altar doth pacify the Wrath of God.

The Catholics make themselves Priests, not after the order of Aaron, but of Melchisedek.

Anno 1557. Priests after the order of Melchisedech, the which offereth Bread to the King in remembrance, and signifieth the giving of Christs Body in Bread and Wine at the last Supper, the which he gave to his Disciples, and commanded it to be used to the end of the World. This is the Sacrifice that we offer, according to his word.

Wood. Me think you have made the matter very plain to me, that as Christ was the end of all Sacrifices, so was he the beginning of the Sacraments, willing them to be used in the remembrance of him, to the Worlds end.

Chib. What in remembrance of him, and not himself, as his word saith, Take, eat, this is my Body? It is not the sign only, but the thing it self. How say you? It is not his Body, after the words be spoken by the Priest? How say you? go briefly to work, for I cannot long tarry with you.

Wood. My Lord, if you will answer me to one Sacrament, I will answer you to another.

Chib. Yes I am very well content with that.

Wood. If you say the words of Baptism over the Water, and there be no Child there, is there true Baptism?

Chib. No, there must be the Water, the Word and the Child, and then it is Baptism.

Wood. Very well. Then if a Child be Baptized in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, it is not truly Baptized.

Chib. No: the Child must be Baptized in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and the Holy Ghost, or else it is not truly Baptized.

Wood. Then there may be nothing added, nor taken away from the Sacraments: may there?

Chib. No, said the Bishop.

Wood. Now my Lord, I will answer to you, if it please you.

Chib. Well, how say you, Take, eat, this is my Body: is it not Christs Body, as soon as the words be said?

Wood. My Lord, I will answer you by your own words, that you answered me, which is true: the Water, the Word, and the Child, all these together make Baptism; the Bread, Wine, and the Word make the Sacrament; and the Eater, eating in true Faith, maketh it his Body. Here I prove it is not Christs Body, but to the faithful receiver. For he said, Take, eat, this is my Body.

He called it not his Body before eating, but after eating. And St. Augustine saith, Credo & manducasti, Believe and thou hast eaten. And Saint John saith, He that believeth on God, dwelleth in God, and God in him: Wherefore it is impossible to dwell in God, and to eat his Body, without a true Faith.

Priest. Then the Faith of the receiver maketh it his Body, and not his word, by your saying. I pray you what did Judas eat?

Wood. Judas did eat the Sacrament of Christ, and the Devil with all.

Priest. He eat the Body of Christ unworthily, as St. Paul saith.

Wood. Nay, St. Paul saith no such thing. He speaketh not of eating of his Body unworthily, but of the Sacrament unworthily. For he saith, Whoever eateth of this Bread, and drinketh of the cup unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own Damnation, because he receiveth the Lords Body: and not because he eateth the Lords Body. If Judas had eat Christs Body, it must needs follow, that Judas is saved. For Christ saith in the sixth of John, Whoever eateth my Flesh, and drinketh my Blood, hath eternal life, and I will raise him up again at the last day.

Priest. My Lord, this Man is an interpreter after his own mind.

Chib. I see it is but folly to talk with you: it is but lost labor. How say you? Do you not believe that after the words be said, there remaineth neither Bread nor Wine, but the very Body of Christ really? make me a plain answer, for I will talk no more with you.

Wood. I will make you a direct answer, how I believe of the true Sacrament. I do believe, that if I come to receive the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ truly ministered, believing that Christ was born for me, and that he suffered death for me, and that I shall be saved from my Sins by his Blood-shedding, and so receive the Sacrament in that remembrance, then I believe I do receive wholly Christ, God and Man, mystically by Faith: this is my belief.

Chib. Why, then is no Body without Faith Gods word is of no force as you count it?

Wood. My Lord, I have told you my mind without dissimulation, and more you get not of me, without you will talk with me by the Scriptures: and if you will do so, I will begin a new with you, and prove it more plainly three or four manner of ways, that you shall not say nay to that I have said, your self.

Then they made a great laughing, and said, This is an Heretick indeed, it is time he were burned. Which words moved my Spirit, and I said to them, Judge not, lest you be judged. For as you judge me, you shall be judged your selves. For that you call Heresie, I serve God truly with, as you all shall well know, when you shall be in Hell, and have Blood to drink, and shall be compelled to say for pain, This was the Man that we jested on, and whose talk we thought foolishness, and his end to be without honor: but now we may see how he is counted among the Saints of God, and we are punished. These words shall you say, being in Hell, if you repent not with speed, if you consent to the shedding of my Blood: wherefore look to it, I give you Counsel.

Priest. What? you be angry, me thinks. Now I will say more to you, then I thought to have done. You were at Basill a twelvemonth ago, and sent for the Parson and talked with him in the Churchyard, and would not go into the Church: for you said; it was the Idols Temple. Yea I was with mine old Lord, when he came to the Kings Bench to you, and you said many stout words to him.

Woodman. That I said, I said: and where you said I was angry, I take God to my Record, I am not, but I am zealous in the truth, and speak out of the Spirit of God with cheerfulness.

Priest. The Spirit of God? hough, hough, hough: think you that you have the Spirit of God?

Woodman. I believe surely that I have the Spirit of God, I praise God therefore: and you be deceivers, mockers, and scorners before God, and be the Children of Hell, all the sort of you, as far as I can see. And therewith came in Doctor Story, pointing at me with his finger, speaking to the Bishop in Latin, saying at the length, Story. I can say nothing to him, but he is an Heretick. I have heard you talk this hour and a half, and can hear no reasonableness in him.

Wood. Judge not, lest you be judged: for as you judge, you shall be judged your self.

Story. What, be you a Preaching? you shall Preach at a Stake shortly with your fellows. My Lord, trouble your self no more with him.

With these words, one brought word that the Abbot of Westminster was come to dine with the Bishop, and many other Gentlemen and Women. Then there was rushing away with speed to meet him. Then said Doctor Story to my Keeper.

Story. Carry him to the Marshalsee again, and let him keep close, and let no Body come to speak with him.

Wood. And so they departed. Then one of the Priests began to flatter with me, and said, For Gods sake remember your self. God hath given you a good wit: You have read the Scriptures well, and have born them well in memory. It were great pity you should do amiss.

Wood. What a flatterer be you, to say my wit is good, and that I have read the Scriptures well: and but even now you said I was an Heretick and despised me. If I be an Heretick, I can have no good wit as you have confessed. But I think your own Conscience doth accuse you. God give you Grace to repent, if it be his will.

Priest. I call it a good wit, because you are expert in all questions.

Wood.

Doctor Story, 17 months in.

Doctor Story commanded that Woodman again to the Marshalsee.

Wood. You may call it a wicked wit, if it agree not with Gods Word: then one cried, Away, away, here come strangers. So we departed, and I came again to the Marshallsey with my Keeper.

The third Examination of Richard Woodman (copied with his own hand) before Doctor Langdale, Parson of Buxted in Suffex, and Chaplain to my Lord Mountague, and M. James Gage, at my Lord Mountagues House, besides S. Mary Overies in Southwark, the 12. day of May Anno 1557.

The third examination of R. Woodman, before D. Langdale, and M. James Gage, May 12.

The twelfth day of May the Marshall came to the Marshallsey, and sent for me to speak with him. When I came before him, and had done my duty, he asked my Name, and what Countryman I was; I shewed him both. Then he asked me when I was abroad in the City. To whom I answered, if it shall please your Master ship I was abroad in the City on Monday was seven night.

Marshall. What made you abroad?

Wood. The Bishop of Chichester sent for me to talk with me at home at his house beside St. Nicholas Shambles.

Marshall. Were you abroad no otherwise then so?

Wood. No forsooth: I was never abroad since I was sent hither, but then. For I have nothing to do abroad, unless they send for me.

Falle lies and lewd reports.

Marshall. This is a marvellous matter. I promise you I was not so rebuked these seven years, as I was for you within these three days. It is reported that you were abroad in the City at certain Taverns, and spake seditious words both in the Taverns and Streets as you went.

Wood. Sir, the truth is, I was in never a House or Tavern, while I was abroad, but in the Bishops House, as my Keeper can, and will (I am sure) testify: nor did I ever talk with any Man in the Streets as I came, but with my Keeper, saving with one Man indeed, of the Parish of Framfield in Suffex, where Mr. James Gage dwelleth. His Name is Robert Smith, being one of my most enemies; who stood in a wain as we came by, and was unlading of Cheefe (me thought) but a little way from the Marshallsey. Indeed I bade him God speed, and asked him how he did: and he said, well he thanked me: and he asked me, how I did: and I said, well, I praise God; and that was all the talk that we had: and these words were spoken as I came by him. I promise you, Sir, I stood not still while I spake them, as my Keeper can tell: and I think these words were not seditious words, but might be spoken well enough (I think) or else it were very trait.

Woodman warned to appear.

Marshall. Then is it to be thought, that that Man reported otherwise then it was. I am glad it is as you say. Well, make you ready: for you must go forth straightway, where you shall be examined of that and of other things, where you shall answer for your self. Go make haste, for I will tarry till you be ready.

Woodman: Keth his leave of his fellows.

Wood. So I departed from him, and went to my Prison fellows, and took my leave of them, desiring them to pray for me, for I thought verily to come no more to them. For I supposed I should have gone before the Council, because the Marshall said, he would tarry for me himself: and especially because he said, it was reported that I had spoken seditious words, it made me think it is possible that there may be some false things imagined upon me, to bring me to my end. I remember what Christ said, The Servants are not above his Lord. Seeing the Jews brought false witness against Christ, I thought they would do much more, or at the least do so to me, if God would suffer them, which made me cast the worst. But I was, and am sure (I praise my Lord God) that all the World is not able to accuse me justly of any such thing. Which thing considered, made me merry and joyful: and I was surely certified, that they could do no more against me, then God would give them leave. And so I bade my Prison Fellows farewell, and went into the Porters Lodge to the Marshall, and he delivered me to one of his own Men, and to one of my Lord Mountagues Men, and bade me go with them: and they carried me to my Lord Mountagues place in Southwark, not far from S. Mary Overies, and brought me into a

Woodman delivered to one of the Lord Mountagues Men.

Chamber in my Lord Mountagues House; and there was one D. Langdale, Chaplain to my Lord. My Keepers said to the Doctor, This is the Man that we went for.

Long. Is your Name Woodman?

Wood. Yea forsooth, that is my Name.

Lang. Then he began with a great circumstance, and said, I am sorry for you, that you will not be ruled, but stand so much in your own conceit, displeasing your Father and other, judging that all the Realm doth evil, save a few that do as you do with many such words, which be too long to rehearse; but I will declare the substance of them.

Lang. What think you of them that died long ago, your Grandfather, with their Fathers before them? You judge them to be damned, and all other that use the same that they did throughout all Christendom, unless it be in Germany and here in England a few years, and in Denmark, and yet they are returned again. Thus we are sure this is the truth, and I would you should do well. Your Father is an honest Man, and one of my Parish, and hath wept to me divers times, because you would not be ruled: and he loveth you well, and so doth all the Country, both rich and poor, if it were not for those evil opinions that you hold, with many such like tales of Robin Hood.

Wood. I pray you give me leave to speak a few words to you.

Lang. Yes, say your mind.

Wood. You have told a great tale and a long, as it were against me (as you think) saying, I hold this and that; I judge my Father and my Grandfather, and almost all the World, without it be a few that be of our Sect. But I judge no Man. But the 12. of John declareth, who it is that judgeth, and shall judge in the last day. The Father shall not bear the Sons offences, nor the Son the Fathers offences: but that Soul that sinneth shall dye, as saith the Prophet. And again, we may not follow a multitude to do evil, as saith the Prophet: for they must go the wrong way. And Christ saith in the 12. of Luke, that his flock is a little flock. Here be places enow to discharge me, although I do not as the most do. But can any Man say that I do not as I ought to do: where be my accusers?

Lang. What, you be full of Scriptures me think, and call your accusers, as though you were afraid to utter your mind to me. But I would have you not be afraid to talk with me. For I mean no more hurt to you, then I do to my self, I take God to be my record.

Wood. I cannot tell, it is hard trusting of fair words. When a Man cannot trust his Father nor Brother, nor other that have been his familiar friends, but they deceive him, a Man may lawfully follow the example of Christ towards them that never saw before, saying, Be as wise as Serpents, and as innocent as Doves. Beware of Men, for they go about to betray you. And it maketh me to suspect you much, because you blame me for answering with the Scriptures. It maketh me to doubt that you would take vantage of me, if I should speak mine own words. Wherefore I will take as good heed as I can, because I have been deceived already by them I trusted most. Wherefore blame me not though I answer circumpectly. It shall not be said, by Gods help, that I will run wilfully into mine enemies hands, and yet I praise God, my Life is not dear to my self, but it is dear with God: Wherefore I will do the uttermost that I can to keep it.

Lang. You be afraid where no fear is, for I was desired of Master Sheriff and his Brother, and of other of your friends, to talk with you, and they told me that you were desirous to talk with me, and now ye make the matter as though you had nothing to do with me, and as though you were sent to Prison for nothing: for you call for your accusers, as though there were no Man to accuse you. But if there were no Man to accuse you, your own hand writing did accuse you enough, that you set upon the Church door (if you be remembered) and other Letters that you let fall abroad, some at one place and some at another. Wherefore you need not to call for your accusers. Your own hand will accuse you enough, I warrant you; it is kept safe enough. I would not for two hundred pounds there were so much against me.

Hard trusting of any man is this World.

Woodman blamed for answering with Scriptures.

D. Langdale said to R. Woodman, upon what occasion and by whose procurement, for you charged with his own hand writing.

Anno 1557. Wood. I will not deny mine own hand, by Gods help. For it cannot be lightly counterfeited. I do not deny but I wrote a Letter to the Priest and other of the Parish, declaring to them their folly and presumption, to come into my House without my love or leave, and set out my Child, and use it at their pleasures. Which moved me to write my mind to them: and because I could not tell how to convey it to them, I set it on the Church door. Which Letter my Lord of Chichester hath: for he shewed it me when I was before him: wherein is contained nothing but the very Scriptures, to their reproach. Let it be laid before me when you or he will, I will answer to it by the help of God, to all their blames that I wrote it to. And as for any other Letters, I wrote none, as you said I did, neither had I wrote that, if they had done like honest neighbours. Wherefore if they be offended with me for that, I will answer them with Christs words, in the 18. of Matthew, Woe unto themselves, And whereas they gave me the occasion.

And whereas you said, I was desirous to speak with you, and that Master Sheriff and his Brother, and other of my friends willed you to talk with me, and that I fare now as though I had nothing to do with you, and as though I were sent to prison for nothing: the truth is, I know no more wherefore I am sent to Prison, then the least Child in this Town knoweth. And as for me, I desired not Master Sheriff to speak with you: but indeed he desired me that I would speak with you, and utter my Faith to you. For he supposed that I did not believe well, and he reported you to be learned. But I refused to talk with you at the first. For I remembered not that you were the Parson at Buxted: wherefore I said to him, I would not utter my Faith to any but to the Bishop. I said, he is mine Ordinary: wherefore I appeal unto him. I am commanded by Saint Peter in the first Epistle, the third Chapter, to render account of my hope that I have in God, to him that hath Authority: wherefore I will talk with none in that matter, but with him. Wherefore send me to him, if you will, or else there shall no Man know my Faith I tell you plainly.

These words then made the Sheriff angry, and he went his way: and when he was gone from me, I remembered that it was you that he would have me to talk with, and then I remembered that I had made a promise to my Father and Goodman Day of Vespeld, not pass a fortnight before I was taken, that whensoever you came into the Country, I would speak with you by Gods help, because they praised you so much, that ye were learned, and they would hear him us talk.

So all these things called to remembrance, I desired my Keeper, which was the Sheriffs Man, to shew his Master, that I would speak with him: for I had remembered things that were not in my mind before, when I spoke to him. So he went to his Master, and shewed him the matter, and he came to me; and then I told him my mind, and what promise I had made: and he said, he would fend for you on the morrow, as he did, and the messenger brought word you could not come; you Preached before the Queen, he said. Whereupon the Sheriff came up himself, and spoke to the Bishop that he should come down, but he was sick. So when he came home again, he sent me to the Bishop, and I have talked with him twice already, and I am sure he can find no fault in me, if he say justly: and yet I know not wherefore I was sent to Prison, For I was not guilty of that which was laid to my charge, that I had Baptized Children, the which I never did, as God knoweth: wherefore I had wrong to be thus handled.

D. Lang. Indeed it hath been reported, that you have Christened Children; and that you Christened your own Child: but since I heard say, you would not have the Child Christened, which is a damnable way, if you deny Baptism: and they said, your Child was not Christened in a fortnight or three weeks after it was born, and the chiefest of the Parish were fained to fetch it out of your House against your will. Wherefore you wrote railing words against the Priest and them for their good will: the which declareth that you allow not Baptizing of Children. And if the Child had died, it had been damned, because it was not Christened, and you should have been damned, because you were the let thereof.

Wood. What abominable lies have you told? Be you not ashamed to speak such words as you have done? First you say, I Christened mine own Child; and by and by you said, I denied Baptizing of Children, and that my Child was a fortnight or three weeks old ere it was Baptized. What abominable lies be these? I neither Baptized my Child my self, neither held against the Baptizing of it, but did most gladly allow it: for it was Baptized as soon as it was born, and I was glad thereof; therefore you be to blame to report so of me.

Lang. I pray you, who Baptized it? some unthrif of your providing.

Wood. Nay surely, the Midwife Baptized it.

Lang. But it was your mind that it should be so.

Wood. Nay sure, I was not nigh home by almost 20. miles, nor heard that my Wife was brought to bed four days after the Child was Christened. But it was not like to live: and therefore the Midwife Baptized it.

Lang. Would you have had it to Church to have been Christened, if it had not been Christened?

Wood. That is no matter what I would have done. I am sure you cannot deny but it is sufficiently done, if the Midwife do it, and I hold not against the doing of it, neither did I it my self, as you said I did.

Lang. Wherefore were you displeased with them that set it to Church?

Wood. First tell me whether the Child were not truly Baptized by the Midwife?

Lang. Yes, it was truly Baptized, if he Baptized it in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

Wood. Yes, that I am sure he did, and you grant that was sufficient: and the cause that I blamed them for, was because they did more to it then need was, by your own saying. Yea, they set it out of my House without my leave: the which was not well done.

Lang. They had it to Church to confirm that was done.

Wood. Yea, but that was more then needs. But God forgive them, if it be his will. But let that matter pass. But I would you should not say, that I hold against Baptizing of Children: For I do not, I take God to record; but do allow it to be most necessary, if it be truly used. But me thought you spoke words even now that were uncomely to be spoken of a Child dyed, and be not Baptized, it is damned. How think you? be he damned that receive not the outward sign of Baptism?

Lang. Yea, that they be.

Wood. How prove you that?

Lang. Go faith Christ, and Baptize in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, and he that believeth, and is Baptized, shall be saved: and he that believeth not shall be damned. These be the words of Christ, which are my warrant.

Wood. Then by your saying, Baptism bringeth Faith, and all that be Baptized in the Water shall be saved: shall they? how say you?

Lang. Yea, that they shall: if they dye before they come to discretion, they shall be saved every one of them; and all that be not Baptized shall be damned every one of them.

Wood. Then my Spirit was moved with him to reprove him sharply, because I had manifest Scriptures fresh ved.

O Lord God! how dare you speak such Blasphemy against God and his Word, as you do? how dare you for your life take upon you to Preach, and teach the people, and understand not what you say? For I protest before God you understand not the Scriptures, but as charged D.

Lang. Wherein have I spoken amiss; take heed; you have a toy in your head will make you despair: I dare say you cannot tell what you say. Wherefore reprove you me as you do?

Wood. Because you Blaspheme God: and as for despairing, take heed to your self. For I cannot see but you be out of your wit already: and as for me, I praise God, I can tell what I say, and what you have said: the which shall turn to your shame, if you will talk by the Scriptures with me.

So, when he perceived that I spoke earnestly and challenged him to talk by the Word, his colour began to change, and his Flesh began to tremble and quake. And I said :

Prove your sayings true, if you can : for I will prove them false by Gods help. You said, All Children, or other that be not Baptized with Water, shall be damned. I dare not say so for all the good in the World. And you brought in the saying of Christ for your Warrant. In the 16 of Mark it is written, Who so believeth, and is Baptized, shall be saved : which words be very true : and who so believeth not, shall be damned. Which words be very true also. He saith, He that believeth not, shall be damned. Yea, Saint John saith, He that believeth not, is condemned already, because he believeth not. But neither of these two Scriptures, nor any other Scripture in all the New Testament saith, That he that is not Baptized shall be damned, or is damned already. But if he believeth not, he shall be damned, and is damned already, as is aforesaid. Then he would have interrupted me, and would have laid to my charge, that I was an Anabaptist. But I would give him no place to speak, but said :

Let me make an end, and then say what you can. You shall have as much to do, by Gods help, with this matter, as ever you had to answer thing in your life. You know (I am sure) it is no manners to pluck a tale out of a Mans Mouth, nor is it the order of reasoning, as you know that better then I can tell you. Then D.

Langdale bade me say on.
Woodman. My saying was, that they that believe not shall be damned, and be damned already. But I dare not say for all the goods under Heaven, that all they that receive no material Baptism by the Water shall be damned, as you have said : yet I would you should not gather of these words, that I deny Baptism, as you were about to lay to my charge, ere ever I had half told out my tale. But I would not have you, nor any Man so rash in Judgment, to condemn the thing that they are not able to prove by the word, and to make it seem to the simple, that the outward washing of the water were the cause of Faith.

Lang. Why, is it not so? will you deny it? How say you? Will you deny it? I say, the Child hath no Faith before it is Baptized; and therefore the Baptizing bringeth the Faith. How say you to it? Make me a plain answer to this question.

Repeating of Water is not the cause of Faith. The Catholicks do hold the contrary.

Woodman. Now I perceive you go about nothing else, but to take vantage of my words. But by Gods help, I will answer you so, that you shall well see your sayings untrue. And yet I will not speak mine own words, but the words of the Holy Ghost, out of the Mouth of the Prophets and Apostles : and then ask them whether they will deny it.

A Catholic paradox.

You said, that Faith cometh by Baptism, had by the use of material water. I must be so bold to ask you where Jacob was Baptized before he had Faith. Saint Paul saith in the ninth Chapter to the Romans, Ere ever the Children were born, ere ever they had done either good or bad, that the purpose of God, which is by election, might stand, not by the reason of works, but by the Grace of the caller, the elder shall serve the younger. Jacob have I loved, and Esau have I hated. How think you, had this Child Faith or ever he were born, or no? answer to this if you can.

The purpose of Gods election stands by Grace, and not by reason of works.

Lang. What : you speak of the old Law. Jacob was not Christened, but circumcised. I speak of Baptism, and you are gone from Baptizing to the time of circumcision : answer me to the Baptizing. And me think by your talks, you deny Original sin, and free will, by the words that you brought in of Saint Paul.

D. Langdale Argues, that Children dying without Baptism may be saved.
Ergo Chi-dren have no original sin.

For if Children can be saved without Baptism, then it must needs follow, that Children have no Original sin, the which is put away in the Baptizing. But I think you know not what Original sin is, nor free will neither. Me think by your talk.

Wood. Yes, I praise God (I think) I can tell them all better then you can, me think even by your words. First I pray you what Free will hath Man to do good of himself? tell me this first, and then I will answer to all other your questions that you have objected against me.

Lang. I say, that all Men have as much Free will now, as Adam had before his fall.

Wood. I pray you how prove you that?

Lang. Thus I prove it, that as sin entered into the World, and by the means of one that sinned all Men became sinners, the which was by Adam : so by the obedience of one Man, righteousness came upon all Men that had sinned, and set them as free as they were before their fall, the which was by Jesus Christ, Rom. 5.

Woodman. Oh Lord, what an overthrow have you given your self here in Original sin, and yet cannot see it? For in proving that we have Free will, you have denied quite Original sin. For here you have declared that we be set as free by the death of Christ, as Adam was before his fall, and I am sure that Adam had no Original sin before his fall. If we be as free now as he was then, I marvel wherefore Paul complained thrice to God, to take away the sting of it, God making him answer, and saying, My Grace is sufficient for thee.

These words with divers other, prove Original sin in us; but not that it shall hurt Gods elect people, but that his Grace is sufficient for all his. But you say in one place, it is not without Baptism; and in another place, you put it away quite by the death of Christ; and in very deed you have spoken truer in the matter then you are aware of. For all that believe in Christ are Baptized in the Blood of Christ that he shed on the Cross, and in the water that he swet for pain, and putting away of our sins at his death. And yet I lay with David in the 51. Psalm, In sin was I born, and in sin hath my Mother conceived me : but in no such sin that shall be imputed, because I am born of God by Faith, as Saint John saith, John 3. Therefore I am blessed, as saith the Prophet, Psalm 23. Because the Lord imparteth not my sin, and not because I have no sin; but because God hath not imputed my sins. Not of our own deserving, but of his free mercy he hath saved us. Where is now your Free will become that you speak of? If we have free will, then our Salvation cometh of our own selves, and not of God; the which is a great Blasphemy against God and his word.

For S. James saith, James 1. Every good gift and every perfect gift cometh from above, from the Father of light, with whom is no variableness; neither is he changed into darkness. Of his own will he begat us. For the wind bloweth where it listeth, and we hear the sound thereof, as saith Saint John, Chap. 3, but we cannot tell from whence it cometh, neither whither it goeth : Even so is it with every one that is born of God. For Saint Paul saith, Phil. 2. It is God that worketh in us the will, and also the deed, even of good will. Seeing then that every good and perfect gift cometh from above, and lightneth upon whom it pleaseth God, and that he worketh in us both the will and the deed, methinks all the rest of our own will is little worth, or nought at all, unless it be wickedness. So me think here be places enow to prove that a Man hath no free will to do good of himself, with a hundred places more that I could recite, if time did serve. And as for Original sin, I think I have declared my mind therein, how it remaineth in Man; which you cannot deny, unless you deny the word of God.

Now, if you will suffer me, I will prove my saying of Jacob and Esau, that I brought in to prove that Faith was before Baptism, and you refused it, because (you said) Jacob was not Baptized. If you will give me leave, you shall see what I can say therein : for me think you think me talk long, this I said, because I saw he was fore offended at my sayings.

Lang. Say what you can. For it availeth me to say nothing to you. For I was desired to fend for you, to teach you; and there will no words of mine take place in you but silence. You go about to reprove me. Say what you will, for me.

Wood. I take not upon me to teach you, but to answer to such things as you lay to my charge : and I speak not mine own mind, but the mind of the Holy Ghost, written by the Prophets and Apostles. Will you give me leave to answer briefly in that matter, that you may report to other what I hold? And he said he was contented. But I think it was for nothing but to have caught vantage of my words.

Anno 1557. Wood. First, If you be remembered, you said, that if my Child had died without Baptism, if I had been the cause that it had not been baptized, the Child should have been damned, and I too. How say you?

Lang. Yes that you should.
Wood. That is most untrue. For the Prophet saith, The Father shall not bear the Childs offences, nor the Child the Fathers offences: but the Soul that sinneth shall dye. What could the Child have done wial, if it had died without Baptism? the Child could not do wial. How say you unto this? And I am sure, that which I brought in, in the old Law, to prove that Faith is before Circumcision, is not disgraceable unto the word. For Circumcision was a Figure of Baptism. And that I may bring to prove Baptism by, as well as S. Peter did: for he brought in Noahs Flood, which was a long time before Jacob and Esau, to prove Baptism, saying, While the Ark was a preparing, wherein few (that is to say) eight Souls were saved by water, like as Baptism also now saveth us, not in putting away of the filth of the flesh, but there is a good Conscience consenting to God.

1 Pet. 3.

Gen. 6.

Here Peter proveth, that Water had not saved Noah and the other seven, no more than it saved all the rest, if it had not been for their Faith, which Faith now saveth us; not in putting away of the filthy soil of the flesh, by the washing of the water, but by a good Conscience consenting unto God.

But you said, if they be baptized with the water, if they dye before they come to the years of discretion, they be all saved: the which S. Peter is clean against, unless you grant that Children have Faith before they be baptized.

Now I ask you what content of Conscience the Children have, being Infants. For you say, they believe not before they be baptized: Ergo, then they consent not to be baptized, because they believe not. And by this it followeth, that none shall be saved, although they be baptized. I would fain see how you can answer this.

Lang. You are the most perverse man that ever I knew. You wot not what you say. The Children are baptized in their Godfathers and Godmothers Faith, and that is the good Conscience that S. Peter speaketh of: and the Christning is the keeping of the Law, that S. Paul speaketh of, saying, Neither is Circumcision, any thing worth, nor Uncircumcision any thing worth, but keeping of the Law is all together. Like as the Circumcision was the keeping of the old Law, so is Baptism the keeping of the new Law.

Wood. Ah, me-thought if you would talk with me, you should be fain to bring in the old Law to maintain your sayings by (for all that you refused it) when I brought it in. But yet it serveth not for your purpose, so much as you think for. For here you have confessed, that neither Circumcision availeth, nor Uncircumcision; the which you your self have coupled with Baptism, proving that none of them both prevaileth, but keeping of the Law is all together: the which Law is kept (you say) by the outward signs; the which is nothing to: for Abraham believed God, and that was counted to him for righteousness, and this was before he was circumcised. So the Children believe before they be either circumcised or baptized, according to my first saying of Jacob and Esau, Jacob I loved, but Esau I hated. These words declare, that Jacob had faith in his Mothers Womb. And John Baptist was sanctified in his Mothers Womb, and therefore it was counted to them for righteousness: and I am sure, if they had died before they had either received Circumcision or Baptism as concerning the outward deed, they should have been saved. For Gods gifts and callings are such, that he cannot repent him of them. But by your saying he doth both repent and change. For you say, keeping of the outward Law is all together. But a bad excuse is as good as none at all. And where you said, the Children be baptized in their Godfathers and Godmothers Faith, they being all unbelievers, in what Faith is that Child baptized then? in none at all, by your own saying. Which words made him stamp and stare.

Lang. What? then you would count that there were very few Believers, if there be not one of three that believeth. You enter into judgment against the People: Belike you think there be none that believe well, unless they be of your mind: Indeed then Christs Flock were a very little Flock.

Wood. Indeed these be Christs words in the twelfth of Luke, the which we may see to be very true. Yea, you said, if there were not one amongst three, that were very few. But there is not one amongst three hundred, for any thing that I can see. For if there were, there would not be so many that would seek their Neighbours Goods and Lives as there be.

Lang. Is the Flock of Christ such a little Flock as you speak of? You may call it a great Flock. How many be there of them, can you tell me?

Wood. A pretty question, I promise you, it is that you ask me: as though I did make my self equal with God.

No, no, you shall catch no such vantage of my words; nor do I know how many there be. But I will tell you as nigh as I can. For therefore you look. I am sure that I should enter into judgment.

Lang. Yea, I pray you tell me as much as you can, seeing you be so cunning.

Wood. You shall see my judgment in it by and by. First the Prophet saith, Follow not a multitude to do evil, for they must go the wrong way. For the most go the wrong way. There is one point to know them.

Then Christ saith in the seventh of Matthew, Broad is the way, and wide is the gate that leadeth into destruction, and many there be that go in thereto: and strait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. And in the twelfth of Luke, it is written (which words were spoken of Christ) Come ye little Flock, it is my Fathers will to give you a Kingdom. The third point is this, in the third of Mark and second of Matthew, Ye (saith Christ) shall know the Tree by the fruits. A good Tree bringeth forth good fruits, and a bad Tree bringeth forth bad fruits: So by Fruits I know them: For every Tree that bringeth not forth good Fruits, must be hewen down, and cast into the fire (into Hell I think Christ meant) and your fruits declare that you be one of them. Thus have I proved four ways, that the People that shall be saved is but a small Company in comparison of the rest. But if that be not enough, for the proof thereof, I have twenty ways more to prove it by, and you were never the nearer of your purpose.

Lang. What a naughty man are you? you would make the patientest man in the World angry with you. I think your talk is nothing but pride and vain-glory, with frumps, and mocks, and despising and judging of men. It was time such a Fellow were taken indeed. Such a one is enough to trouble a whole Country. I think he is blest of God that took you: for you are not meet to be in a Commonwealth.

Wood. With divers other such like words that I cannot recite, they came out so thick, with stamping and staring and chafing, as though he had been out of his wit. I held my peace, until he had made an end of his Tormentors talk, and then I spake.

Wherein have I said amiss? or have I not answered you unto every question that you have demanded of me? What fault can you find in one word that I have said? I dare say you can find none. I marvel why you take on thus against me, having no cause so to do.

Lang. No, no, you have not answered me to Original sin, you deny Original sin.

Wood. With these words came in at the door Mr. James Gage: and I think he stood at the door a good while before he came in, and that Dr. Langdels saw him: for his face was to the door-ward, and my face was from it.

Gage. Ah Woodman, me-think Mr. Doctor and you cannot agree.

Wood. Yes Sir, me-think we agree very well.

Lang. Without doubt, Sir, he is the naughtiest man that ever I talked with in all my life: for he will have his own way in all things.

Gage. Woodman leave that pride. Do not trust too much Gods election standeth not by the multitude, but by the fewest.

Four Arguments proving Christs flock to be a small number.

Dr. Langdels railing against Woodman without a cause.

Mr. James Gage enters with Woodman.

much to your own wit. Harken to this man, this is a Learned man, I tell you. He is known to be learned. For else he should not be allowed to preach before the Queens Majesty: and I dare say, he will tell thee nothing, nor will thee to do anything, but that he will do himself: and I dare say, he will not go to the Devil to bring thee thither. How say you Mr. Doctor? Thou mightest think us mad, if we would hurt our selves to hurt thee. No I promise thee, my Brother, neither I, nor any Gentleman in the Country, I think of my Conscience, but would thou shouldst do as well as their own Bodies and Souls, as a great many of them have said to thy face whilst thou wait at my Brothers, and which thou canst not deny.

Wood. Sir, I can say none otherwise but I was gently intreated at your Brothers, both with meat and drink and gentle words, both of you and him, and divers other Gentlemen: and I am sure neither you nor they can say, that you found me unreasonable at any time. For I said, I was contented to learn of them that were able to teach me, and so I am, as God knoweth: and here Mr. Doctor (I think) can say no otherwise; for I dare say he can find no fault in the talk that we have had.

Lang. No marry, I can find nothing else in you. I promise you, Mr. Gage, if you had been here, you would have said so for your self. He took me up indeed, and said, he marvelled how I durst preach. For he said, I understood not the Scripture, but as far as Natural Reason comprehended: as though he understood all, and I nothing. With divers other such like words he made a great complaint to him on me, and said to Mr. James Gage, he would make you believe that I could find no fault in him. Yes, I wis: he denieth Original sin.

Gage. Yea; doth he so? by S. Mary that is a great matter: Woodman, leave that pride. That pride will come to naught. Can ye live without sin?

Wood. Sir, now I perceive he will soon lye on me behind my back, when he will not stick to lye before my face.

He said, I denied Original sin; and it was he himself, as I will let you be judge in the matter. For as he went about to prove, that man hath Free-will, he said, we were set as free by the Death of Christ, as Adam was before his fall: which words prove plainly, that we have no Original sin: And I took him withal, and said, Had Adam Original sin before his fall? and then he could not tell what to say, but cavilled with words, and said he meant not so: and therefore I marvel he is not ashamed to make such lies to my face. These words made them both astonished.

Gage. Mr. Doctor, he said even now you could find no fault in all his talk. I will bid you ask him a question, and I will warrant you, you will find fault enough. I pray you ask him, how he believeth in the Sacrament of the Altar. I think he will make but a bad account thereof.

Wood. Yes, I will make account good enough of that, by Gods help.

Lang. Well, how say you to the Sacrament of the Altar?

Wood. I say, I know no such Sacrament, unless Christ be the Altar that you mean.

Gage. Lo, I told you, you should soon find fault in him, if you came to that point with him. You should have begun with that first, and never have talked with him about other things. What? know you not the Sacrament of the Altar?

Wood. No sure, I know no such, unless Christ be the Altar that you mean; for Christ is the Altar of all goodnes. And if you mean Christ to be the Altar of the Sacrament you speak of, you shall soon hear my mind and belief therein.

Lang. Well, we mean Christ to be the Altar. Say your mind, and go briefly to work; for I think it almost dinner time.

Gage. I pray you go roundly to work, that you may make an end before dinner.

Wood. Yes, you shall soon hear my mind therein, by Gods help. I do believe, that whensoever I come to receive the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, being truly ministered according to Christs institution, I believing that Christ was born of the Virgin Mary, and that he was crucified on the Cross, and shed his blood for the remission of my sins, and so take and eat the Sacrament of Bread and Wine in that remembrance, that then I do receive whole Christ, God and Man, mystically by Faith. This is my belief of the Sacrament, the which no man is able to disprove.

Gage. By S. Mary, I can find no fault in this. How say you Mr. Doctor?

Lang. Sir, you see not so much as I do. For he goeth craftily to work, I tell you as I have heard. For though he hath granted that the faithful receiver receiveth the Body of Christ, God and Man, yet he hath not granted that it is the Body of Christ before it be received, as you shall see by and by, I warrant you, by his own words. How say you? Is it the Body of Christ as soon as the words be spoken by the Priest, or not? for these words will try him more than all the rest.

Wood. Doth the Word say that it is his Body before it is received? if it do, I will say so too.

Gage. Why? then we shall agree well enough, if you will be tried by the Word.

Wood. Yes forsooth, that I will; God forbid else.

Gage. Why? the Word faith it is his Body before it is eaten.

Wood. Those words would I fain hear; but I am sure they be not in the Bible.

Lang. No? that you shall see by and by (Mr. Gage, quote he) and turned to the 22. of Luke, and there he read, When supper was done, Christ took bread, gave, and brake it, and gave to his Disciples, and said, Take, eat, this is my Body: Then they spake both at once eating. Here he faith it is his Body.

Wood. Mr. Gage, I do not deny but he called it his Body, but not before eating, as I said before. Wherefore I pray you mark the words. Christ said, Take, eat: I pray you Sir mark these words that he said, Take, eat, and then he said, it was his Body. So you see, cat-ting goeth before. For he said, Eat, this is my Body. So according to the very word, I do believe it is his Body. Which words made them both astonished.

Lang. Why, then by your saying, Judas eat not the Body of Christ. How say you? Did he not?

Wood. Nay, I ask you. Did he?

Lang. I ask you.

Wood. And I ask you.

Lang. And I ask you.

Wood. Marry I ask you. And I bid you answer if you dare for your life. For whatsoever you answer, unless you say as I have said, you will damn your own Soul. For Mr. Gage, I protest before God, I would you should do as well as mine own Soul and Body; and it lamenteth my heart to see how you be deceived with them; they be deceivers all the sort of them. He cannot answer to this, but either he must prove Judas to be saved, or else he must prove that it is no Body before it be received in Faith, as you shall well perceive, by Gods help, if he dare answer the question.

Gage. Yes, I dare say he dareth. What? you need not to threaten him so.

Wood. Then let him answer if he can.

Then he said he knew what I would say to him; therefore he was much in doubt to answer the question.

Lang. Mr. Gage, I will tell you in your ear what words he will answer me, or ever I speak to him.

Wood. Then he told Mr. Gage a tale in his ear, and said:

Lang. I have told Mr. Gage what you will say.

Gage. Yea, and I will speak the truth for both parties.

Wood. Well, how say you? Did Judas eat the Body of Christ, or not?

Lang. Yea, I say Judas did eat the Body of Christ.

Wood. Then it must needs follow, that Judas hath everlasting life. For Christ faith in the sixth of John, Who so eateth my Flesh, and drinketh my Blood, hath everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day. If like, Jan. c.

Judas did eat Christs Body, I am sure you cannot deny but that he did both eat his Flesh, and drink his Blood, and then is Judas saved by Christs own words.

Therefore now you are compelled to say that it was eating his.

Dr. Langdale drives to his shute.

Dr. Langdale should answer to R. Woodman. The Catholics hold that Judas did eat the Body of Christ.

Argument: Who ever eateth the flesh of Christ, hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day. If like, Jan. c. Judas did eat the Body of Christ, Ergo, Judas hath everlasting life.

not

1557. Anno not Christs Body, or else that Judas is saved. Gage. Surely these be the very words that the Doctor told me in mine ear, that you would say to him. Wood. Well, let us see how well he can avoid this Argument.

Lang. Judas is damned, and yet he eat the Body of Christ; but he eat it unworthily: and therefore he is damned.

Wood. Where find you that Judas did eat the Body of Christ unworthily?

1 Cor. 11. Lang. They be Saint Pauls words, 1 Cor. Chap. 11. Wood. Master Gage, I desire you for Gods sake mark my words well what I say. If Saint Paul speak any such words there, or in any other place; if there be any such words written in all the whole Bible, that ever any Man eat the Body of Christ unworthily, then say that I am the falsest Man that ever you heard speak with Tongue. But indeed, these be the words of Saint Paul, Who eateth of this Bread, and drinketh of this cup unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own damnation, because he maketh no difference of the Lords Body; that is, because he presumeth to eat the Sacrament of the Lords Body without Faith, making no difference betwixt the Sacrament and other Bread and Drink. And that is Saint Pauls meaning, and not that any Man doth or can eat the Body of Christ unworthily. For whosoever eateth the Body of Christ, hath everlasting life, as is afore said in the sixth of John; with these words one came for them to dinner in all haste.

Gage. I am sorry, I would fain hear more of this talk, but we shall have another day well enough.

Lang. Nay, Master Gage, I will never talk with him more; for he is the unreasonabest Man that ever I talked with in all my life.

Wood. Then Master Gage put off his cap, and desired him that he would not refuse to talk with me, and that it might not be grievous to him. For he said, we will seek all the means possible to make him an honest Man, and to keep him from burning, if we could. For if my Brother and I had not been, he had been burned ere this time. Then there was great curtesie betwixt them.

Lang. Sir, for your sake, and for my Master your Brothers sake, and for his Fathers sake, and other of his friends sakes, that have spoken to me many times with weeping tears, I will do the best to him that I can; but for no love nor favour that I bear to him, I tell you truth.

Gage. Woodman, you hear what Master Doctor saith: When will you come again?

Wood. Even when you will send for me. For I am a Prisoner, and cannot come when I would. Or if I should desire to come, it will cost me Money, and I have none to give: but if you send for me, it shall cost me none.

Gage. Well, I will send for you on Friday or Saturday, at the farthest, for to morrow I must ride forth of Town, and I would fain hear your talk.

Wood. Sir, I would be very glad you should hear our talk always, and I trust in God you shall hear me say nothing, but the Word of God shall be my Warrant. So Mr. Gage took his leave, and went his way to his lodging, which was right in my way as I went unto Prisonward again; and when he came without my Lord Mountagues gates, there we met with one Head of Bursted, a Smith. Then said Master Gage:

Gage. Woodman, I had forgot one thing, that Head hath brought me in remembrance of as soon as I saw him; for he heard when the tale was told me.

Gage. Head, did not you hear when Smith of Framfield told me that he saw Woodman abroad in the City at liberty.

Head. Yea forsooth that I did.

Gage. Yea surely, and I was very glad, for I had well hoped you had been conformable. But I heard otherwise afterward again, that you had leave of the Keeper to go abroad and speak openly in the Streets, as you went up and down.

Wood. Indeed so the Marshal told me to day. But indeed I was never abroad since I came to Prison, but when I was sent for; and indeed the same time I was abroad with my Keeper, coming from the Bishop, and as I was coming, even as I was from the Marshalsey, I saw Woodman Smith stand in a Wain unloading of Cheefe-brid asked him how he did, even as I went by, and I never tayed for the wain, and thereupon it did rise. So I departed from thence, with my Keeper to the Marshalsey again, where I now am merry, I praise God therefore, as a sheep appointed to be slain.

The Fourth Examination of Richard Woodman, had before the Bishop of Winchester, the Bishop of Rochester, and a certain Doctor, with divers other Priests and Gentlemen, the 25. day of May, Anno 1557.

Woodman. I was fet from the Marshalsey to the said Bishop and Priests, sitting in St. Georges Church in Southwark, by one of the Marshalls Men and one of the Sheriffs Men. When I came before them, and had done my duty to them as nigh as I could, then said the Bishop of Winchester.

Winch. What is your Name?

Wood. My Name is Richard Woodman forsooth.

Winch. Ah Woodman, you were taken and apprehended for Heretic about three years ago, and were sent to Prison in the Kings Bench, and there remained a long time. Mine old Lord of Chichester, being a famous Man, well known in this Realm of England, and almost throughout all Christendom, I think came to Prison to you, and there, and at other places, called you before him divers times, travelling and perceiving with you many times (because he was your Ordinary) to speak you from your Heresies that you held, but he could by no means advertise you.

Whereupon you were delivered to the Commissioners, and they could do no good with you neither. Then they sent you unto my Lord of London. My Lord of London calling you before him divers times, labour was made unto him of your friends, that you might be released. My Lord having a good hope in you, that you would become an honest Man, because he had heard so of you in times past, yea and you your self promising him, that you would go home and recant your Heresies that you held, delivered you, sending also a Letter of your recantation to the Commissary, that he should see it done. But as soon as you were out of his hands, you were as bad as ever you were, and would never fulfil your promise, but have hid your self in the woods, bushes, dens, and caves, and thus have you continued ever since, till it was now of late. Then the Sheriff of that shire (being a worshipful Man) hearing thereof, sent certain of his Men, and took you in a wood, and so carried you to this House. I cannot tell his Name. What is your Sheriffs Name?

Wood. Forsooth, his Name is Sir Edward Gage.

Winch. Well, you were apprehended for Heretic, and being at Master Gages three weeks or more, ye were gently intreated there; he and other Gentlemen perceiving with you divers times, little prevailed.

Then you appealed to the Bishop of Chichester that now is. The Sheriff like a worshipful Man, sent you to him, and he hath travelled with you, and other also, and can do no good with you, whereupon we have sent for you.

Wood. Then I spake to him. For I thought he would be long, before he would make an end. I thought he was a year in telling of those lies that he had told there against me already. Yea, I kept silence from good words, but it was great pain and grief unto me (as David said.)

At length the Fire was so kindled within my heart, that I could not chuse but speak with my Tongue; for I feared lest any of the company should have departed or ever I had answered to his lies, and so the Gospel to have been slandered by my long silence keeping. So I spake, I praise God therefore, and said; my Lord, I pray you let me now answer for my self, for it is time.

Winch. I permit you to answer to these things that I have said.

Wood. I thank God therefore. And I think my self happy (as Paul said, when he was brought before King Agrippa) that I may this day answer for my self. My Lord, I promise you there is never a word of your sayings true that you have alleged against me.

1 Cor. 11. Saint Pauls words are alleged by D. Langdsh.

Making no difference of the Lords Body expounded.

* Christ speaketh of eating his Flesh, without any determination of unworthiness; that is, finally, whosoever believeth in Christ, he shall be saved, whether is any unworthiness in believing in Christ.

Note well the working of this Man's charity, do for a Man more at request, then for any compassion of the party.

Lead tales and false lies raised upon Woodman.

The fourth Examination of R. Woodman before the Bishop of Winchester.

The old Bishop of Chichester was Doctor Day.

Utrac. For Bishop Beor delivered him of his own accord to the burning of this priappon other case.

False and untrue.

Sir Edward Gage Sheriff of Sussex.

Winch. I cannot tell, but thus it is reported of you. As for me, I never did see you before this day; but I am sure it is not all lies that I have said, as you report.

Wood. Yes, my Lord, there is never a true word of that you have said. And further, where you said you never saw me before this day, you have both heard me and seen me, I dare say, before this day.

Winch. I think I heard you indeed on Sunday, where you plaid the malapart Fellow; but I cannot tell that I saw you. But I pray you, were you not taken in the woods by the Sheriffs men?

Wood. No sure, I was taken besides my House, I being in my House when they came, wherefore that is not true.

Winch. Were not you at the Sheriffs three weeks?

Wood. Yes that I was, a Month just, and was gently intreated of him, I can say no otherwise; for I had meat and drink enough, and fair words.

Winch. Ah, I am well paid; it is not all lies then, as it is chanced. For I spake but of three weeks, and you confess a Month your self.

Wood. Yet your tale is never the truer for that. For you said, I was there three weeks for Heretic, the which is not so. For I was not apprehended for Heretic at the first, neither did mine old Lord of Chichester travel with me to pull me from Heretic, as you said; for I held none then, neither do I now, as God knoweth, neither was I sent to the Commissioners, nor to the Bishop of London for Heretic, neither was I delivered to him for any such thing, nor promised him to recant, as you said I did. Wherefore I marvel you be not ashamed to tell so many lies, being a Bishop, that should be an example to other.

Winch. Lo, what an arrogant Heretic this same is. He will deny God; for he that denieth his own hand, denieth God.

Wood. My Lord, judge not lest you be judged your self. For as you have judged me, you shall be judged, if you repent not. And if I have let my hand to any Recantation, let it be seen to my shame, before this Auditor. For I will never deny mine own hand, by Gods help.

Winch. It is not here now, but I think it will be had well enough; but if it cannot be found, by whom will you be tried?

Wood. Even by my Lord of London; for he dealt like a good man with me in that matter that I was sent to Prison for. For it was upon the breach of a Statute, as Master Sheriff here can tell: For he was Sheriff then, as he is now, and can tell how I was tossed up and down from Sessions to Sessions; and because I would not consent that I had offended therein, they sent me to Prison again.

Then my Lord of Chichester being mine Ordinary, and I being his Tenant, came to me, to persuade with me that I should have consented to them, and to find my self in fault, where I was in none. To the which I would not agree, but I desired him that he would see me released of my wrong; but he said he could not, but wiled me or my Friends to speak to the Commissioners for me, because it was a Temporal matter: and when I came before them, they sent me to my Lord of London, and my Lord of London was certified by the hands of almost thirty men, both Esquires, Gentlemen and Yeomen, the chiefest in all the Country where I dwelt, that I had not offended in the matter that I was sent to Prison for. Whereupon he delivered me, not willing me to recant Heresies, for I held none (as God knoweth) neither do I now: nor do I know wherefore I was sent to Prison, no more than any man here knoweth; for I was taken away from my work.

Winch. No? wherefore appealed you then to my Lord of Chichester, if it were not for Heretic?

Wood. Because there was laid to my charge that I had baptized Children, and married Folks, the which I never did, for I was no where Minister. Wherefore I appealed to mine Ordinary, to purge my self thereof, as I have. Wherefore if any man have any thing against me, let them speak; for I came not hither to accuse my self, neither will I.

Winch. Master Sheriff, can you tell upon what breach of Statute he was sent to Prison first?

The Sheriff. Yea forsooth, my Lord, that I can.

Wood. My Lord, if you will give me leave, I will Anno shew you the whole matter.

Winch. Nay, Master Sheriff, I pray you tell the matter, seeing you know it.

The Sheriff. My Lord, it was for speaking to a Curate in the Pulpit, as I remember.

Winch. Ah, like enough, that he would not stick to reprove a Curate. For did you not see how he fashioned himself to speak to me in the Pulpit on Sunday? he played the malapart fellow with me; and therefore it was no great marvel though he played that part with another.

Wood. Why, you will not blame me for that, I am sure. For we spake for no other cause, but to purge our selves of those Heresies that you laid to our charge. For these were your words; Good people, these men that be brought before us, being here, deny Christ to be God, and the Holy Ghost to be God; pointing to us with your left hand) the which might seem to the whole Audience, that you meant us all. Wherefore to clear our selves thereof, we spake, and said we held no such thing. And you said you would cut out our Tongues. But I am sure you have no such Law.

Winch. Yes that we have, if you blaspheme, and as it chanced, I found such amongst you.

Wood. Indeed after we spake, you declared who they were, but not before; for you spake generally. Wherefore we blasphemed not, but purged our selves.

Winch. But I pray you, how can you purge your self for speaking to the Curate, that it is not Heretic?

Wood. Forsooth these be the words of the Statute; Whosoever doth interrupt any Preacher or Preachers, lawfully authorized by the Queens Majesty, or by any other lawful Ordinary, that all such shall suffer three Months imprisonment, and furthermore be brought to the Quarter Sessions, there (being sorry for the same) to be released upon his good abearing one whole year. But I had not so offended as it was well proved: For he that I spake to was not lawfully authorized, nor had put away his wife. Wherefore it was not lawful for him to preach by your own Law; and therefore I brake not the Statute, though I spake to him.

Winch. I am glad, I perceive this man speaketh against Priests marriages; he is not contented with Priests that have wives. He is an honest man than I took him for, Master Sheriff, have him away. I am glad he loveth not Priests marriages.

Wood. Then I would have answered to his sayings, but he would in no wise hear me, but bade the Sheriff have me away. So the Sheriff took me by the hand, and plucked me away, and would not let me speak, but going out of the Chancel door, I said; I would shew him the whole matter, if he would have given me leave, but seeing he will not, if he will let me go so, they shall see whether I will not go home to my wife and children, and keep them, as my bounden duty is, by the help of God. So I was sent to the Marshalsey again, where I now am merry, I praise God therefore, as a Sheep appointed to be slain.

Moreover, I was credibly informed by one of our Brethren that heard our talk, that the Bishop said when I was gone, that they would take me whilst I was somewhat good. Which words seemed to many of the people that were there, that I spake against Priests marriages, but I did not, but did only answer to such questions as he asked me, as you shall perceive well by the words, if you mark them, which words were these:

How can you purge your self from Heresies, for talking to the Curate in the Pulpit, and not offend the Statute, said the Bishop? meaning thereby, I think, to have taken vantage of my words; but it was not so intended him by the words of the Statute, which words be as hereafter followeth, (that is) Whosoever doth interrupt any Preacher or Preachers, lawfully authorized by the Queens Majesty, or by any other lawful Ordinary, that all such shall suffer three Months imprisonment. But I proved that this man was not lawfully authorized to preach (by their own Law) because he had not put away his wife. For their Law is, that no Priest may say Mass, nor preach with the Mass, but he must first

A Priest keeping his wife, yet would needs hold again with Popery.

R. Woodman leaving himself from his enemies by their own Law.

Now I give you all to understand, that I did not reprove this Priest, because he had a wife, but because he taught false Doctrine, which grieved my soul, because he had been a fervent Preacher against the Mass, and all the Idolatry thereof, seven years before, and then came and held with it again; for the which cause I reprov'd him in the Pulpit. And the words that I spake to him, are written in divers of my Examinations at my first imprisonment for that fame. But in very deed, I knew not of the Statute when I perceived it. But because I was sent to Prison upon the breach of it, I bought a Statute Book, and when I had perused it, I perceived I had not offended by their own Law; and therefore still when I was called to answer, I answered them with their own law. But yet they kept me in Prison a year and almost three quarters or ever I was released. I was at mine answer for that eighteen times. If any think I do not allow Bishops and Priests marriages, let them look in my first Examination before the Bishop of Chichester that now is, during this my imprisonment, and there they shall find what I have said in the matter. The truth is, I looked to be condemned with my brother that same day; But we may all fee that they can do nothing but as God will permit them to do. But when the time is full come, I trust in God I shall run that joyful race that my brethren have done. Thus I commit you all into the hands of God, who is the preserver, defender, and keeper of all his Elect for evermore, Amen.

The fifth Examination of Richard Woodman, had before the Bishop of Winchester, the Archdeacon of Canterbury, Dr. Langdale, with a fat headed Priest, and others, whose names I know not, with certain also of the Commissioners, at S. Mary Overies Church in Southwark, in the presence of three hundred people at the least, the 15th day of June, Anno 1557.

The fifth Examination of Richard Woodman before the Bishop of Winchester, and divers others. June 15. Anno 1557. Winchester. Woodman, you were before us the last day, and would not be known in any wife that you were sent to Prison for Heresie, and called for your Accusers, and stood stoutly in defending of your self, and in your departing I had thought you had spoken against Priests marriages, thinking by your words we should have found you an honest man, and conformable, when we had called you before us again. You told such a fair tale for your self, as though you had been free from all that was laid to your charge. For you said it was all lies that I told against you; but since I have proved the contrary, as here is your own hand to shew. By the which I have proved, that you reprov'd not the Priest for lacking of Authority, and because he had not put away his wife, but because you liked not his preaching. For indeed I took it, that you reprov'd him because he was not lawfully authorized, but I have proved the contrary since.

Wood. I told you not that I did either reprove him for lack of Authority, or because I liked not his preaching, but I told you wherefore I was first sent to Prison. For you said I was sent to Prison for Heresie, and made a long tale against me. And indeed I told you that there was never a word of your sayings true, but was all lies, as it was indeed. For I never was sent to Prison for Heresie, neither held I any then, nor do now, I take Heaven and Earth to witness; but I told you I was sent to Prison upon the breach of a Statute, which was for speaking to a Priest in the Pulpit, and for that cause the Justices of that Country had thought I had offended the Statute, and called me before them, and would have had me to have been bound to my good bearing, and because I refused it, they sent me to Prison. And these be the words of the Statute, as I told you the last day.

If any man do interrupt any Preacher or Preachers, lawfully authorized by the Queens Majesty, or by any other lawful Ordinary, that then every party that so offendeth, shall suffer three months imprisonment, and furthermore be brought to the Quarter Sessions, and there being convicted to the same, and also bound for his good bearing one whole year, to be released, or else to remain to Prison again.

And when I was in Prison, I bought a Statute Book, which when I had perused over, I found by the words thereof that I had not offended, because he was not lawfully authorized, as the Bishop of London was certified by the hands almost of thirty men, both Esquires, Gentlemen, and Yeomen, the chiefest in all that Country. For he had not put away his wife, and therefore the Statute took no place on me, as I told you the other day. Wherefore my Lord of London, seeing me have so much wrong, did like a good man to me in that matter, and released me. Now when I had told you this matter, you bade the Sheriff have me away; You said you were glad I held against Priests marriages, because I answered to the question you asked me.

The fat Priest. My Lord, do you not hear what he saith by my Lord of London? He saith he is a good man in that he released him, but he meaneth that he is good in nothing else.

Wood. What? can you tell what I mean? let every man say as he findeth; he did justly to me in that matter. I say, if he be not good in any thing else, as you say, he shall answer for it, and not I; for I have nothing to do with other mens matters.

Winch. Well, how say you? how liked you his preaching? I pray you tell us.

Wood. That is no matter how I liked it. Howsoever I liked it, I offended not the Statute. Wherefore you have nothing to say to me for that I am sure.

Winch. Well, how like you this then? Here is your own hand writing. I am sure you will not deny it. Will you look on it?

Wood. It is mine own handy work indeed, the which by Gods help I will never deny, nor ever did yet, I praise God therefore.

Winch. And here is good gear I tell you. I pray you hearken well to it; these be the words before the Commissioners. How say you? Do not you believe as soon as the words be spoken by the Priest, that there remaineth neither Bread nor Wine, but only the very Body of Christ, both flesh and blood, as he was born of the Virgin Mary? these were the words of the Commissioners.

And then thou saidst, thou durst not say otherwise than the Scripture saith. I cannot find (say you) that it is the Body of Christ before it is received by Faith, bringing in the 22. of Luke, saying, Christ said, Take, eat, this is my Body. So I cannot prove it is his Body before it be eaten. Then said the Commissioners, Did not Judas eat Christs Body? And if you can prove that Judas is saved (said you) I must grant that he eat his Body. For Christ saith in the sixth of John, Who eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day; which words prove, said you, that if Judas eat the Body of Christ, he must needs be saved. How say you now? Did Judas eat the Body of Christ, or not?

Wood. Then I perceived he went about nothing but to catch words of me in his Diocess, to condemn me with. Though I should confound him never so much, I perceived that he was fully bent thereto. To whom I answered and said:

I will answer you to no such thing, for I am none of your Diocess; wherefore I will not answer to you.

Winch. Thou art within my Diocess, and thou hast offended within my Diocess; and therefore I will have to do with thee.

Wood. Have to do with me if you will; but I will have nothing to do with you, I tell you plainly. For though I be now in your Diocess, I have not offended in your Diocess; if I have, shew me wherein.

Winch. Mary here is thine own hand writing, the which thou affirmedst in my Diocess.

Wood. I do not deny but it is mine own hand writing; but that proveth never the more that I have offended in your Diocess: for that doth but declare what talk there was between the Commissioners and me, the which you have nothing to do withal.

No face I on the Statute why

The Priest saith on the meaning of Woodman.

See how nearly these men seek matter against him, whereby to trap him.

Luke 22. Woodman charged matter as the Commissioners before the last Examination.

Dr. VVide of VVinchester, bent to have the blood of Woodman.

Dr. VVide from the Bishop of Winchester to his Ordinary.

Winch. No? hold him a Book, and thou shalt swear whether thou holdest it now, or not, and whether thou wrotest it not in my Diocess, as I think thou didst; Lay thy hand on the Book.

Woodman.
I had to swear or answer about Winchester, being not his Ordinary.

Wood. I will not be sworn for you; for I am not of your Diocess; and therefore you have nothing to do with me. And as for the writing of the same, I never wrote word of it in your Diocess.

Lang. No, did you not? my Lord, let me see; I will find where you wrote it.

Wood. Then he took it and looked on it, and anon he found that I was sent for out of the Kings Bench, to come before the Commissioners.

Lang. My Lord, here you may see it was in the Kings Bench, the which is in your Diocess.

Wood. Although I were fetcht out of the Kings Bench, that proveth not that I wrote it there, nor did I, I promise you truly.

The far Priest. Where wrote you it then?

Wood. Nay, I owe you not so much service as to tell you; find it out as well as you can: For I perceive you go about to fledge my blood.

Winch. It is no great matter where it was written; it is here, and he denieth not but he wrote it. You shall hear more of it. Here the Commissioners asked you, whether Judas did eat any more than bare Bread, and you answered, that he eat more than bare Bread.

Woodman
in a great burning of Conscience, for fear lest he had granted too much to the Commissioners before, saying that Judas did eat more than bare bread.

Whereupon they sent you away back to the Kings Bench again, and asked you not what more, for the which cause (as you have written here) you had a Hell burning in your Conscience. For you had thought they would have sent a Discharge to the Kings Bench, and so let me go (said you) and register my name in their Books, that I had granted that Judas did eat the Body of Christ, and so the Gospel should have been slandered by me. For the which Cause I was in such case, I could faintly eat, drink, or sleep for that space, as all my Prison-fellows can testify. If all you, I say, that go to the Church of Satan, and there hear the detestable Doctrine, that they spit and spue out in their Churches and Pulpits, to the great dishonour of God, if all you, I say, that come there, had such a Hell burning in your Conscience for the time, as I had till I came before them again, and had uttered my Conscience more plainly, I dare say you would come there no more. All this is your writing; is it not? How say you?

Wood. I do not deny but it was mine own deed.

Winch. And I pray you, where is there such spitting and spuing out of false Doctrine as you speak of?

Wood. In the Synagogue of Satan, where God is dishonoured with false Doctrine.

Winch. And I pray you, where is one of them?

Wood. Nay, that judge your self; I came not hither to be a Judge.

Winch. Well, here you have affirmed, that Judas (your Master) eat more than Bread; but yet he eat not the Body of Christ, as you have declared by your words. For, you had a Hell burning in your Conscience, because you were in doubt, that the Commissioners understood by your words, that Judas had eaten the Body of Christ, because you said, he eat more than bare Bread. Therefore thou hadst a great sort of Devils in thee; for in Hell be many Devils: and therefore the Devil and Judas is thy Master, by thine own words.

Wood. Nay, I defy Judas and the Devil, and his Servants; for they be your Masters, and you serve them, for any thing that I can see, I tell you truth.

The Bishops Argument.

The Devil is Master in Hell
Woodman tells a burning Hell in his Conscience. Ergo, the Devil was Woodman's Master.

Answer.

Hell is taken in Scripture two ways, either for the place where damned spirits and souls are tormented, or for the life or estate of Gods correction and anger, as of the soul in this life, which sometimes is full of sharp, that it is resembled to Hell itself. As where we read, The Lord bringeth to Hell, and bringeth out again, Psalm 137. The pains of Hell have tormented me, Psalm 134.

Winch. Nay, they be thy Masters. For the Devil is Master where Hell is, and thou saidst thou hadst a burning Hell in thee. I pray thee tell me, how thou canst avoid it, but that the Devil was in thee by thine own saying?

Wood. The Hell that I had, was the loving correction of God towards me, to call me to Repentance, that I should not offend God and his People in leaving things so dark, as I left that. For the which cause my Conscience bare me record, I had not done well, as at all times I have felt the sting of it, when I have broken the Commandments of God by any means, as all Gods People do, I dare say, and it is the loving kindness of God towards them, to drive them to repentance. But it is to be thought, that your Conscience is never troubled, how wickedly soever you do. For if it were, it should not be so strange to you as you make it, which declareth plainly whole Servant you be.

Winch. What a naughty fellow is this? This is such a perverse Villain as I never talked with in all my life. Hold him a Book, I will make him swear, to answer directly to such things as I will demand of him; and if he will not answer, I will condemn him.

Wood. Call you me a Fellow? I am such a Fellow, I tell you, that will drive you all to Hell, if you consent to the shedding of my blood, and you shall have blood to drink, as faith S. John in his Revelation, the ninth Chapter, and being in Hell, you shall be compelled to pay for pain of Conscience; This is the man that we have had in derision, and thought his life madnes, and his end to be without honour; but now we may see how he is counted among the Saints of God, and we are punished. This shall you see in Hell, if you repent it not, if you do condemn me. This you shall find in the fifth Chapter of the Book of Wisdom: and therefore take heed what you do, I give you counsel.

Winch. Wisdom? What speakest thou of Wisdom? thou never hadst it; for thou art as very a fool as ever I heard speak.

Wood. Do you not know, that the foolish things of this world must confound the wise things? Wherefore it grieveth me not to be called a fool at your hands.

Winch. Nay, thou art none of those fools; thou art an obstinate fool, and an Heretic. Lay hand on the Book, and answer to such things as I will lay against thee.

Wood. I will lay hand on the Book for none of you all. You be not my Bishop; and therefore I will have nothing to do with you.

Winch. I will have to do with you. This man is without Law, he careth not for the King nor Queen, I dare say; for he will not obey their Laws. Let me see the Kings Commission. I will see whether he will obey that, or not.

Wood. I would you loved the King and Queens Majesty no worse than I do, if it pleased God: You would not do as you do then.

Winch. Hold him a Book, he is a rank Heretic. Thou shalt answer to such things as I will demand of thee.

Wood. I take Heaven and Earth to record I am no Heretic, neither can I tell wherefore I am brought to Prison, no more then any man here can tell, and therewith I looked round about on the People, and said to the Bishop, If you have any just cause against me worthy of death, lay it against me, and let me have it; for I refuse not to dye (I praise God) for the Truths sake, if I had ten lives. If you have no cause, let me go home, I pray you, to my Wife and Children to see them kept, and other poor Folk that I would set a work by the help of God. I have set on work an hundred persons ere this, all the year together, and was unjustly taken from them; but God forgive them that did it, if it be his will.

Winch. Do you not see how he looketh about for help? But I would see any man shew thee a cheerful countenance, and especially you that be of my Diocess. If any of you bid God strengthen him, or take him by the hand, or embrace him, or shew him a cheerful countenance, you shall be excommunicated, and shall not be received in again, till you have done open Penance; and therefore beware of it.

Wood. I look for no help of men, for God is on my side, I praise him therefore; and therefore I need not to care who be against me, neither do I care.

Then they cried, Away with him, and bring us another. So I was carried again to the Marshalsea, where I am now merry (I praise God therefore) as a Sheep appointed to be slain. But for lack of time, I have left out much of our talk; but this is the chiefest of it.

Anno 1557.

The sixth and last Examination of Richard Woodman, written and copied with his own hand.

BE it known unto all Men by this presents writings, that RICHARD Woodman, sometime of the Parish of Warbleton, in the County of Suffex, was condemned for Gods everlasting truth, Anno 1557. July 16. by the Bishop of Winchester, in the Church of Saint Mary Overies in Southwarke, there sitting with him the same time the Bishop of Chichester, the Archdeacon of Canterbury, D. Langdale, M. Roper, with a false headed Priest, I cannot tell his Name. All these confessed to the shedding of my Blood, upon this occasion, as hereafter followeth.

I affirmed, that Iudas received the Sacrament with a Sop and the Devils subtilty; and because I would not be sworn upon a Book, to answer directly to such Articles as he would declare to me; and because I would not believe that there remained neither Bread nor Wine after the words of Consecration, and that the Body of Christ could not be received of any but of the Faithful: For these Articles I was condemned, as hereafter shall follow more at large, by the help of God.

The sixth Examination of Richard Woodman before the B. of Winchester, and divers others, in the Church of St. Mary Overies.

FWinch. The Bishop said when I came before him: I said before you were before us on Monday last past; and there you affirmed certain Heresies. How say you now? Do you hold them still, or will you revoke them?

Wood. I hold no Heresies then, neither do I now, as the Lord knoweth.

Winch. No? did you not affirm, that Iudas received Bread? which is an Heresie, unless you tell what more then Bread.

Wood. Is it Heresie to say, Iudas received no more then Bread? I said he received Bread bare Bread for he received the same Sacrament that was prepared to the worth the Lords death, and because he presumed to eat without Faith, he eat the Devils subtilty, as the words of Christ declare; after he eat the Sop, the Devil entred into him, as you cannot deny.

Winch. Hold him a Book. I will have you answer directly, whether Iudas did eat the Body of Christ or no.

Wood. I will answer no more, for I am not of your Diocess; wherefore I will have nothing to do with you.

Winch. No, you be in my Diocess, and you be of my Diocess, because you have offended in my Diocess.

Wood. I am not of your Diocess, although I am in your Diocess; and I was brought into your Diocess against my will, and I have not offended in your Diocess, if I have, tell me wherein.

Winch. Here in your own hand writing, the which is Heresie. These be the words: I cannot find, say you, that it is the Body of Christ to any, before it is received in Faith. How say you? is not this your own hand-writing?

Wood. Yes, I do not deny but it is mine own hand-writing; but when, or where was it written, or where were the words spoken?

Before the Commissioners, and here is one of them; Master Roper, the words were spoken before you. Were they not?

Roper. Yes indeed that they were, Woodman, I am sure you will not deny them; for you have written the words even as you spake them.

Woodman. No Sir, indeed I will not deny but that I spake them, and I am glad that you have seen it. For you may see by that whether I lye, or not.

Roper. Indeed the words be written word by word as you spake them.

Winch. Well, here you affirm, that it is your own deed. How lye you now? will you be sorry for it, and become an honest Man?

Wood. My Lord, I trust no Man can say, but that I am an honest Man; and as for that, I marvel that you will lay it to my charge, knowing that my Lord of London discharged me of all matters that were laid against me, when I was released of him.

Winch. You were released, and it might fortune, it was not laid to your charge then; therefore we lay it to your charge now, because you be suspected to be an Heretic; and we may call you before us, and examine you upon your Faith upon suspicion.

Wood. Indeed St. Peter willeth me to render account of my hope that I have in God, and I am contented so to do, if it please my Bishop to hear me.

Chich. Yes I pray you let us hear it.

Wood. I do believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of Heaven and of Earth, and of all things visible and invisible, and in one Lord Jesus Christ my Saviour, very God, and very Man. I believe in God the Holy Ghost, the comforter of all Gods elect people, and that he is equal with the Father and the Son. I believe the true Catholic Church, and all the Sacraments that belong thereto. Thus have I rendered account of my hope that I have of my Salvation.

Winch. And how believe you in the blessed Sacrament of the Altar? And with that word they all put off of the Altar their Caps to that abominable Idol.

Wood. I pray you be contented, for I will not answer to any more questions; for I perceive you go about to shed my Blood.

Winch. No? hold him a Book. If he refuse to swear, he is an Anabaptist, and shall be Excommunicated.

Woodman. I will not swear for you, Excommunicate me if you will. For you be not meet to take an Oath; for you laid Heresies to my charge in yonder Pulpit, the which you are not able to prove; wherefore you be not meet to take an Oath of any Man. And as for me, I am not of your Diocess, nor will have any thing to do with you.

Winch. I will have to do with thee, and I say thou art a froeg Heretic.

Wood. Yes, all truth is Heresie with you; but I am content to shew you my mind, how I believe on the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, without flattering. For that you look for, I am sure. But I will meddle no further, but what I hold my self of it. I will not meddle of any other Mans belief on it.

N. Harp. Why? I am sure all Mens Faith ought to be alike.

Wood. Yes, I grant you so, that all true Christians Faith ought to be alike. But I will answer for my self.

N. Harp. Well, let us hear what you say to it.

Wood. I do believe, that when I come to receive the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, if it be truly ministred according to Christs Institution, I coming in Faith, as I trust in God I will whenever I come to receive it, I believing that Christ was born for me, and that he suffered death for the remission of my Sins, and that I shall be saved by his death and Blood-shedding, and to receive the Sacrament of Bread and Wine in that remembrance, that then I do receive whole Christ, God and Man, mystically by Faith, this is my belief on the Sacrament.

Then they spake all at once, saying mystically by Faith? Mystically

The false Priest. What a fool art thou, mystically by Faith? thou canst not tell what mystical is.

Wood. If I be a fool, so take me: But God hath chosen such fools of this World to confound such wise things as you are.

The false Priest. I pray thee what is mystical?

Wood. I take mystically to be the Faith that is in us, 1 Cor. 13. that the World seeth not, but God only.

Winch. He cannot tell what he saith. Answer to what is the Sacrament of the Altar, whether it be not the Body mystically of Christ before it be received, and whether it be not the Body of Christ to whomsoever receiveth it? Tell me, or else I will Excommunicate thee.

Wood. I have said as much as I will say? Excommunicate me if you will. I am none of your Diocess. The Bishop of Chichester is mine Ordinary. Let him do it if you his Ordinary will needs have my Blood, that it may be required at his hands.

Chich. I am not Consecrated yet, I told you when you were with me.

Wood. No indeed, your Kine bring forth nothing but Cow-Calves, as it chanceth now; meaning thereby he had not his Bulls from Rome.

Then they were all in a great rage with me, and called me all to naught, and said I was out of my wits, because I spake furiously to every Mans question; all the which I cannot remember, but I said:

So Pellus said to Pani, when he spake the words of of soberness and truth out of the Spirit of God, as I do. But as you have judged me, you be your selves. You will go to Hell all the sort of you, if you condemn me, if you repent it not with speed.

Wood. Then my Keeper, and the Sheriffs deputy Fuller, rebuked me, because I spake so sharply to them. And I said, I pray you let me alone; I must answer for my Life.

Then there was much ado that I should keep silence, and so I held my peace. Then spake the Bishop of Winchester and the Archdeacon of Canterbury, saying, We gonot about to condemn thee, but go about to save thy Soul, if thou wilt be ruled, and do as we would have thee.

Wood. To save my Soul? nay, you cannot save my Soul. My Soul is saved already. I praise God therefore. There can no Man save my Soul, but Jesus Christ; and he it is that hath saved my Soul, before the Foundation of the World was laid.

This fat Priest well seen in the Scriptures.
The fat Priest. What an Heresie is that my Lord there is an Heresie. He faith his Soul was saved before the Foundations of the World were laid. Thou canst not tell what thou sayest. Was thy Soul saved before it was?

Wood. Yes, I praise God, I can tell what I say, and I say the truth. Look in the first of the Epheſians, and there you shall find it, where Paul faith, Epheſians 1. Blessed be God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which hath blessed us with all manner of spiritual blessings in Heavenly things, by Christ, according as he hath chosen us in himself before the Foundation of the World was laid, that we should be holy and without blame before him, through love, and thereto were we predestinated. These be the words of Paul, and I believe they be most true. And therefore it is my Faith, in and by Jesus Christ, that I save, and not you, or any Man else.

Jesus Christ only Saviour of Mankind.
The fat Priest. What? Faith without works? St. James faith, Faith without works is dead, and we have free will to do good works.

Good works not disallowed.
Wood. I would not that any of you should think, that I disallow good works. For a good Faith cannot be without good works. Yet not of our selves, but it is the gift of God, as faith St. Paul to the Philipians; the second Chapter, It is God that worketh in us both the will and also the deed, even of good will.

Phil. 2.
Winch. Make an end; answer to me. Here is your Ordinary, the Archdeacon of Canterbury; he is made your Ordinary by your Lord Cardinal, and he hath authority to examine you of your Faith upon a Book, to answer to such Articles as he will lay to you. And I pray you refuse it not: for the danger is great if you do. Wherefore we desire you to shew your self a Subject in this matter.

The Archdeacon of Canterbury made Ordinary by the Cardinal to examine Woodman.
Then they spake all, and said; Lo, my Lord desireth you gently to answer to him, and so we do all. For if you refuse to take an Oath, he may excommunicate you. For my Lord Cardinal may put whom he will in the Bishops Office, until he is consecrated.

Wood. I know not so much. If you will give me time to learn the truth of it (if I can prove it to be as you say) I will tell you my mind in any thing that he shall demand of me, without any flattering.

Priest. My Lord and all we tell thee it is true; and therefore answer to him.

B. Woodman challenges his Judges to be all turn-coats and changelings.
Wood. I will believe none of you all, for you be turn-coats and changelings, and be wavering minded, as faith St. James; you be neither hot nor cold, as faith St. John, therefore God will spue you out of his Mouth. Wherefore I can believe none of you all, I tell you truth.

Winch. What? be we turn-coats and changelings, what meanest thou by that?

Wood. I mean, that in King Edwards time you taught the Doctrine that was set forth then, every one of you, and now you teach the contrary; and therefore I call you turn-coats and changelings, as I may well enough. Which words made the most part of them to quake.

Winch. Nay, not all as it chanced.

Wood. No? I pray where were you then?

Winch. I was in the Tower, as the Lieutenant will bear me record.

Wood. If you were in the Tower, it was not therefore, I dare say, it was for some other matter.

Then they all took heart of Grace, and said; My Lord, he cometh to examine you, we think he will not answer to the Articles, you were best to Excommunicate him.

Winchester. He is the naughtiest varlet Heretick that ever I knew. I will read the Sentence against him.

Wood. Then they spake all at once, and I answered them as fast as I could. But I cannot remember it all, the words came out so thick, I spared them not, I praise God therefore; for I spake freely.

Then they that stood by rebuked me, and said; You cannot tell to whom you speak I think.

Wood. No? Think you so? they be but Men. I am sure I have spoken to as good as they be, and better then they will ever be, for any thing that I can see, if they repent not with speed.

Winchester. Give ear; for I will read Sentence against you.

Wood. Will you so? wherefore will you? you have no just cause to Excommunicate me; and therefore if you do condemn me, you will be condemned in Hell, if you repent not: and I praise God, I am not afraid to dye for Gods sake, if I had a hundred lives.

Winchester. For Gods sake? nay, for the devils sake. Thou sayst thou art not afraid to dye; No more was Judas that hanged himself, as thou wilt kill thy self willingly, because thou wilt not be ruled.

Woodman. Nay, I defy the Devil, Judas and all their members. And Judas Fleth was not afraid, but his Spirit and Conscience was afraid, and therefore despaird and hung himself. But I praise God, I feel no loqueness in my Fleth to dye, but a joyful Conscience, and a willing mind thereto. Wherefore my Fleth is subdued to it, I praise God; and therefore I am not afraid of death.

Chich. Woodman. For Gods sake be ruled. You know what you said to me at my House. I could say more, if I would.

Wood. Say what you can; the most fault that you found in me was, because I praised the living God, and because I said, I praise God, and the Lord; which you ought to be ashamed of; if you have any Grace; for I told you where the words were written.

Winchester. Well, how say you? will you confess that Judas received the Body of Christ unworthily? tell me plainly.

Wood. My Lord, if you, or any of you all can prove before all this audience, in all the Bible, that any Man ever eat the Body of Christ unworthily, then I will be with you in all things that you will demand of me, of the which matter I desire all this people to be witnes.

Priest. Will you so? that we shall agree well enough.

St. Paul faith so.

Wood. I pray you where faith he so? rehearse the words.

Priest. In the 11. of the first to the Corinthians he faith; Whoſo eateth of this Bread, and drinketh of this cup unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own damnation, because he maketh no difference of the Lords Body.

Wood. Do these words prove that Judas eat the Body of Christ unworthily? I pray you let me see them. They were contented. Then said I, these be the words, even that you said: Good people hearken well to them, Whoſo eateth of this Bread and drinketh of this Cup unworthily: He faith not, Whoſo eateth of this Body unworthily, or drinketh of this Blood unworthily: But he faith; Whoſo eateth of this Bread, and drinketh of this Cup unworthily (which is the Sacrament) eateth and drinketh his own damnation, because he maketh no difference between the Sacrament which representeth the Lords Body, and other Bread and drink. Here (good people) you may all see they are not able to prove their sayings true. Wherefore I cannot believe them in any thing that they do.

Winch. Thou art a rank Heretick indeed. Art thou an expounder? Now I will read Sentence against thee.

Woodman. Judge not left you be judged. For as you have judged me, you be your self. Then he read the Sentence. Why, said I, Will you read the Sentence against me, and cannot tell wherefore?

Winch. Thou art an Heretick, and therefore thou shalt be Excommunicated.

Wood.

Anno 1557. Wood. I am no Heretick, I take Heaven and Earth to witness, I defie all Hereticks; and if you condemn me, you will be damned, if you repent not. But God give you Grace to repent all; if it be his will; and so he read forth the Sentence in Latin, but what he said, God knoweth, and not I. God be judge between them and me. When he had done, I would have talked my mind to them, but they cried, Away, away with him: So I was carried to the Marshall again, where I am; and shall be as long as it shall please God; and I praise God most heartily, that ever he hath elected; and predestinated me to come to so high dignity, as to bear rebuke for his Names sake; his Name be praised therefore; for ever and ever, Amen.

And thus you have the Examinations of this Blessed Woodman, or rather Goodman; wherein may appear as well the great Grace and Wisdom of God in that Man, as also the gross ignorance and barbarous cruelty of his adversaries, especially of Doctor White Bishop of Winchester. Now followeth likewise the effect of his Letter.

A Godly Letter of Richard Woodman, written to a Christian Woman, Mistress Roberts of Hawkhurst.

Grace, Mercy, and Peace from God the Father, and from his Son our alone Saviour Jesus Christ, by the operation and working of the Holy Ghost; be multiplied plentifully upon you dear Sister Roberts; that you may the more joyfully bear the Cross of Christ that ye are under, unto the end, to your only comfort and consolation, and to all our Brethren and Sisters that are round about you, both now and ever, Amen.

In my most humble wife I commend me unto you, and to all our Brethren and Sisters in those parts, that love our Lord unfainedly, certifying you, that I and all my Brethren with me are merry and joyful, we praise God therefore, looking daily to be dissolved from these mortal Bodies, according to the good pleasure of our Heavenly Father, praising God also for your constancy, and gentle benevolence, that you have shewed unto Gods elect people, in this troublesome time of persecution, which may be a sure pledge and token of Gods good will and favour towards you, and to all other that hear thereof. For blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy. Wherefore the fruits declare alway what the tree is. For a good Man or Woman, out of the good treasure of their heart, bring forth good things.

Wherefore (dear Sister) it is not as many affirm in these days (the more is to be lamented) that say God asketh but a Mans heart; which is the greatest injury that can be devised against God and his Word. For St. James saith; Shew me thy Faith by thy deeds, and I will shew thee my Faith by my deeds, saying; the Devils have Faith, and tremble for fear, and yet shall be but Devils still, because their minds were never to do good. Let us not therefore be like them, but let our Faith be made manifest to the whole World by our deeds, and in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, as St. Paul saith, let our light shine as in a dark place.

Oh dear hearts, now is the Gospel of God overwhelmed with many black and troublesome clouds of persecution, for the which cause very few go about to have their eyes made clear by the true light of the Gospel, for fear of loosing of their treasures of this World, which are but vain, and shall perish.

Let not us therefore be like unto them which light their candle, and put it under a bushel; but let us set our candle upon a candlestick, that it may give light unto all them that are in the House: that is to say, let all the people of the household of God see our good works, in suffering all things patiently that shall be laid upon us for the Gospels sake, if it be deplorable self. For Christ died for us, leaving us an Example, that we should follow his steps; and as he hath given his life for us, so ought we to give our lives for the defence of the Gospel, to the comfort of our Brethren.

How is it then that some will say, that their Faith is good, and yet they do all the deeds of Antichrist the Devil, and be not ashamed to alledge certain Scriptures to maintain their wickedness? Saint Paul saith; To believe with the heart, justly, and to confess with the mouth, maketh a Man safe. Oh good God, here may all Men see, that no Man or Woman can have a true Faith, unless they have deeds also; and he that doubteth, look for no good thing at the Lords hands. May not Man judge all such to be like those which St. John speaketh of, that be neither hot nor cold; and therefore God will (he saith) spue them out of his Mouth? If we judge evil of such, have not they given us occasion? had it not been better for them to have had a Millstone tied about their necks, and to have been cast into the Sea, then they should give such offences to Gods elect people in condemning them as they do, in going to the Synagogues of Satan, and there to receive the mark of the Beast, in that they see and hear God blasphemed there; and hold their peace? Doth not that declare to the whole World, that they allow their doings to be good? and these do not only defile themselves, but also be an occasion to confirm the Papists in their Papistry, and so be an occasion of our weak Brothers falling, the which will be all required at their hands, which will be too heavy a burden for them to bear, if they repent it not with speed. For they that know their Masters will, and do it not, shall be beaten with many stripes. Oh, do not we perceive, that now is the acceptable time that Christ speaketh of? yea even now is the Axe put to the roots of the trees, so that every tree that bringeth not forth good fruits now, must be hewen down, and cast into the Fire.

Now is the Lord come with his Fan in his hand, to try the Wheat from the Chaff. The Wheat will he gather into his barn, and the Chaff he will burn as is afore said. Now is the time come that we must go meet the Bridegroom with oyl in our lamps. We are also bidden to the Feast, let us make no excuses. Yea our Master hath delivered his talents unto us, God, give us Grace to occupy them well, that at his coming he may receive his own with vantage. Yea, now is the Lord come to see if there be any fruit upon his trees; for that if the Lord come and find none, he will serve us as he did the wild figg-tree, that is, never fruit shall grow on him more; Also, if we go to meet the Bridegroom without oyl in our Lamps, and should go to buy, the doubt is, we should be served as were the foolish Virgins; that was, God said to them, depart, I know you not. Or if we should make excuses to come to the Feast, other shall be bidden in our rooms; If we occupy not our Talents well, they shall be taken from us and given to others, and all such unprofitable servants shall be cast into Prison in Hell, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Oh good God! what a sort of fearful sayings are here contained? what Christian heart will not hearken diligently hereto? Oh, may not all people well perceive now that this is the time that our Master Christ speaketh of; that the Father should be against the Son, and the Son against the Father, and one Brother against another; that the Brother shall deliver the Brother to death; yea, and that the wicked shall say all manner of wicked sayings against us for his Names sake, the which I have well found by experience, I praise God therefore, that hath given me strength to bear it. For I think there can be no evil devised but it hath been imagined against me, and that of my familiar friends, as David saith; but I praise my Lord God, they are notable to prove any of their sayings true, but that they go about to find fault in them that God hath chosen, because they themselves list not to take up their Cross and follow Christ; and therefore they speak evil of the thing that they know not, the which shall give account for it before him that is ready to judge both the quick and the dead.

But my trust is, that all the people of God will be ruled by the Counsel of St. John, saying; My Sheep will hear my voice, strangers they will not hear: meaning thereby, that ye should not believe strangers, counting them strangers that go about to subvert the Gospel. Wherefore mark well what they be, and try them well or ever you give credit to them, according to St. Johns Counsel in his Epistle, saying; Believe not every Spirit, but try the Spirits whether they be of God, or not; meaning thereby, that they that be not of God, will speak good of none but of them that be as they be. be of good cheer, and give no credit to such People, whatsoever ye hear them say. For I have no mistrust by Gods help, but that all the world shall see and know that my blood shall not be dear in mine own fight, whensoever it shall please God to give my Adversaries leave to shed it. I do earnestly believe, that God which hath begun this good work in me, will perform it to the end, as he hath given me grace and will always, to bear this easie yoke and light burden; the which I have always found, I praise my Lord God.

The manifold troubles which Woodman hath passed through.

For when I have been in Prison, wearing one while bolts, otherwhile shackles, otherwhile lying on the bare ground, sometime sitting in the Stocks, sometime bound with cords, that all my Body hath been swollen, much like to be overcome for the pain that hath been in my flesh, sometime fain to lye without in the Woods and Fields, wandering to and fro, few I say, that durst keep my Company for fear of the Rulers, sometime brought before the Justices, Sheriffs, Lords, Doctors, and Bishops, sometime called Dog, sometime Devil, Heretick, Whoremonger, Traitor, Thief, Deceiver, with divers other such like; yea, and even they that did eat of my Bread, that should have been most my Friends by nature, have betrayed me: Yet for all this I praise my Lord God that hath separated me from my Mothers womb, all this that hath happened unto me hath been easie, light, and most delectable and joyfull of any Treasure that ever I possessed; for I praise God they are not able to prove one jot or tittle of their sayings true. But that way that they call Heresie, I serve my Lord God, and at all times before whomsoever I have been brought, God hath given me mouth and wisdom, where-against all my Adversaries have not been able to resist, I praise God therefore. 1557.

Wherefore (dear Sister) be of good comfort with all your Brethren and Sisters, and take no thought what you shall say, for it shall be given you the same hour, according to the promises, as I have always found, and as you and all other of Gods Elect shall well find, when the time is full come. And whereas I and many other have hoped, that this Perfection would have been at an end ere this time, now I perceive, God will have a further trial to root out all dissemblers, that no man should rejoyce in himself, but he that rejoyceth, shall rejoyce of God.

Wherefore if Prophecy should fail, and Tongues should cease, yet love must endure. For fear hath painfulness, but a perfect love casteth out all fear: which love I have no mistrust but God hath poured it upon you abundantly, that nothing in the world shall be able to separate you from God. Neither high nor low, rich nor poor, life nor death, shall be able to put you from Christ; but by him I trust you shall enter into new Jerusalem, there to live for ever, beholding the glory of God with the same eyes that you now have, and all other faithful people that continue to the end. Give all honour and glory to God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, three Persons and one God, to be honoured now and ever, Amen.

After these Examinations thus had and commenced between Richard Woodman and the Bishops, he was (as is afore told) judged by Sentence of Condemnation, and

The burning of 10. Martyrs at Lewes

The martyrdom of ten pious Martyrs of Christ at Lewes, Anno 1557. June 22.

so deprived of his life; with whom also was burned nine other, to wit, five men and four women, which were taken not past two or three days before their Judgment. The names of all which being also before expressed, here again follow in this order. Richard Woodman, George Stevens, William Maynard, Alexander Holman his Servant, Thomasine a Wood his Maid, Margery Moris, James Moris her Son, Dennis Burgess, Ashdowne's Wife, Groves's Wife.

These Persons here above named, and blessed Martyrs, were put to death at Lewes the 22. of June.

Of the which number the eight last were apprehended (as is said) either the same day, or the second or third day before, and so with the said Woodman and Stevens, were together committed to the fire; in which space no

Writ could come down from London to the Justices, for certain Justices charged for burning of such persons. Wherefore what is to be said to such Justices, or what reckoning they will make to God and to the Laws of this Realm, I refer that to them that have to do in the matter. The like whereof is to be found also of other Justices, who without any lawful Writ of discharge or order of Law, have unlawfully and disorderly burnt the Servants of Christ (whose blood the Law both may and also ought to revenge;) especially at Salisbury and at Canterbury, and Garstoe. But concerning these matters, though mans Law do wink, or rather sleep at them, yet they shall be sure Gods Law will find such Murderers out at length. I pray God the doers may repent betime.

Ambrose died in Prison confessor.

One Ambrose died in Maidstone Prison.

After these ten above named burnt at Leves, about the same time and Month, one Ambrose died in Maidstone Prison, who else should have been burned in the like cause and quarrel as the other were.

The Condemnation and Martyrdom of Richard Lush.

The Condemnation of R. Lush.

In the Registers of Gilbert Bishop of Barbe and Wells, I find a Certificate made to King Philip and Queen Mary, of one Richard Lush, there condemned and given to the Secular Power to be burned for the cause of Herefie, whose Affirmations in the said Certificate be expressed in tenour and effect, as followeth.

His Articles: 1. First, for denying the verity of the Body and Blood of Christ in the Sacrament of the Altar.

2. Item, for denying auricular confession to be made to the Priest.

3. Item, for affirming only to be three Sacraments; to wit, of Baptism, of the Supper, and of Matrimony.

4. Item, for refusing to call the Lords Supper by the Name of the Sacrament of the Altar.

5. Item, for denying Purgatory, and that prayer and almes profit not the dead Body.

6. Item, that Images are not to be suffered in the Church, and that all that kneel to Images at the Church, be Idolators.

7. Item, that they which were burnt of late for Religion, died Gods Servants and good Martyrs.

8. Item, for condemning the single life of Priests, and other votaries.

9. Item, for denying the Universal and Catholick Church, meaning belike the Church of Rome.

For these Assertions, as there are expressed, he was condemned and committed to the Sheriffs, and also a Certificate directed by the Bishop aforesaid, to the King and Queen. Whereby we have apparently to understand, that the said Richard Lush, thus condemned by Bishop Brown, was there burnt and executed, unless peradventure in the mean season he died, or was made away in the Prison; whereof I have no certainty to express.

A note of John Hullier Minister and Martyr, burned at Cambridge.

Concerning the Story of John Hullier Martyr, partly mentioned before, for the more full declaration of the death and Martyrdom of that good Man, because the Story is but rawly and imperfectly touched before; for the more perfecting thereof, I thought thereunto to add that which since hath come to my hand, as followeth.

First, John Hullier was brought up at Eaton College, and after, according to the Foundation of that House, for that he was ripe for the University, he was elected Scholar in the Kings College, where also not tarrying full three years of probation, before he was fellow of the College, he after a little season was one of the ten Conducts in the Kings College, which was Anno 1539. Then at length in process of time, he came to be Curate of Babram, three miles from Cambridge, and so went afterward to Lynn; where he, having divers conflicts with the Papists, was from thence carried to Ely, to Doctor Thurlyby, then Bishop there; who after divers Examinationes, sent him to Cambridge Castle, where he remained but a while.

From thence he was conveyed to the Town Prison, commonly called the Tolbooth, lying there almost a quarter of a year, while at length he was cited to appear at great Saint Maries on Palm Sunday Eve, before divers Doctors, both Divines and Lawyers, amongst whom was chiefest Doctor Shaxton, also Doctor Young, Doctor Sedgewicke, Doctor Scot, Mitch, and others: Where after Examination had, for that he would not recant, he was first condemned, the Sentence being read by Doctor Fulter,

Then consequently he was degraded after their Popish manner, with scraping crown and hands. When they had degraded him, he said cheerfully; This is all the joyfulllest day that ever I saw, and I thank you all, that ye have delivered and lightened me of all this paltry.

In the mean time whilst it was doing, one standing by, asked Hullier what Book he had in his hand. Who answered, a Testament. Whereat this Man in a rage took it and threw it violently from him. Then was he given over to the Secular Powers, Brasley being Major, who carrying him to Prison again, took from him all his Books, writings, and papers.

On Maundy Thursday coming to the Stake; he exhorted the people to pray for him, and after holding his peace, and praying to himself, one spake to him, saying; The Lord strengthen thee. Whereat a Sergeant, named Brasley, stayed and bade him hold his Tongue, or else he should repent it.

Nevertheless Hullier answered and said (either thus or very like, the effect was all one) Friend; I trust that as God hath hitherto begun, so also he will strengthen me, and finish his work upon me. I am bidden to a Maundy, whither I trust to go, and there to be shortly. God hath laid the Foundation, as I by his aid will end it.

Then going to a stool (prepared for him to sit on) to have his hosen plucked off, he desired the people to pray for him again, and also to bear witness that he died in the right Faith, and that he would Seal it with his Blood, certifying them, that he died in a just cause, and for the testimony of the verity and truth, and that there was no other rock but Jesus Christ to build upon; under whose banner he fought, and whose Souldier he was; and yet speaking, he turned himself about toward the East, and exhorted the people there likewise.

Now it chanced on a bank to stand three arch Papists, George Boyes, Henry Barley, and Gray, all three of Trinity College. This Boyes was one of the Professors of the University that year. To whom Master Gray spake, saying; Hear ye not Master Proctor, your Blasphemy this fellow uttereth? surely it is evil done to suffer him.

At whose words, this Boyes spake with a loud voice; Master Major, what mean ye if ye suffer him thus to talk at liberty, I tell ye the Council shall hear of it, and we take you not to be the Queens friend. He is a pernicious person, and may do more harm then you wote of. Whereat simple Hullier, as meek as a Lamb, taking the matter very patiently, made no answer, but made him ready, uttering his prayer. Which done, he went meekly himself to the Stake, and with Chains being bound, was beset with Reed and Wood, standing in a pitch barrel, and the Fire being set to, not marking the wind, it blew the flame to his back. Then he feeling it, began earnestly to call upon God. Nevertheless his friends perceiving the Fire to be ill kindled, caused the Sergeants to turn it, and Fire it to that place where the wind might blow it to his face.

That done, there was a company of Books which were cast into the Fire, and by chance a Communion Book fell between his hands, who received it joyfully, opened it, and read so long till the force of the flame and smoak caused him that he could see no more; and then he fell again to prayer, holding his hands up to Heaven, and the Book betwixt his Arms near his Heart thanking God for sending him it: and at that time the day being a very fair day and a hot, yet the wind was somewhat up, and it caused the Fire to be the fiercer, and when all the people thought he had been dead, he suddenly uttered these words; Lord Jesus receive my Spirit, dying very meekly.

The place where he was burned, is called Jesus Green, not far from Jesus College. Seagar gave him certain Gunpowder, but little to the purpose; for he was dead before it took fire. All the people prayed for him, and many a tear was shed for him. Which the Papists seeing, cried, he was not to be prayed for, and being but a damned Man, it could profit him nothing: nevertheless they continued praying, whereat the Papists fell into such a rage that they menaced them with terrible threatnings to ward. His flesh being consumed, his bones stood upright even as if they had been alive. Of the people, some took what they could get of him, as pieces of Bones. One had his Heart, the which was distributed so far as it would go; one took the Scalp and looked for the Tongue, but it was consumed except the very root.

One rounded him in the ear, and desired him to be constant to the end; at which he spake nothing, but shewed a joyful countenance, and so continued both constant and joyful to the end.

A note of Thomas Rede.

Refer this to the Rede Martyr, because.

T Thomas Rede who was burned at Lewes, as it appeareth above, before he was in Prison, determined with himself to go to Church. The night following he saw a vision, a company of tall young men in white, very pleasant to behold; to whom he would have joynted himself, but it would not be.

Then he looked on himself, and he was full of spots, and therewith waked, and took hold, and stood to the truth; God be thanked therefore, and so constantly was burned with his fellows, as is above specified.

Simon Miller and Elizabeth Cooper burnt at Norwich.

July 19. Simon Miller a Merchant Martyr.

IN the Month of July next ensued the Martyrdom of Simon Miller and Elizabeth Cooper. This Simon dwelling in the Town of Lynn, a Godly and zealous Man in the knowledge of the Lord and of his Truth, detesting and abhorring the contrary enforced Religion then set forth, came from Lynn to Norwich, where he standing in the press and hearing of the people, coming out the same time from their Popish Service ended in the Church, began to ask them coming out of the Church, where he might go to have the Communion. At which words, divers much marvelling to hear and see his boldness, one that was an evil disposed Papist, hearing the same, said, that if he would needs go to a Communion, he would go bring him thither where he should be fed of his purpose. Whereupon shortly after he was brought to the Chancellor of Norwich (whose Name was Dunning) who after a few words, and small talk passed with this examine, committed him to ward.

The words of Simon Miller to the people. The cause why Simon Miller was taken.

Simon Miller examined before Doctor Dunning.

In the mean while as he was in Examination, he laid in his shoe, his Confession, written in a certain paper, whereof a piece appearing above his shoe, was spied and taken out. The Chancellor asking if he would stand to the Confession of the same Faith therein contained, he constantly affirmed the same. Whereupon, as is said, he was committed. Thus the said Simon being in the Bishop's House, under custody of the Keeper there called Master Fellow, how it hapned it is not certain, whether by gentleness of the Keeper (who was somewhat gentle that ways) or by leave given of the Bishop, or else whether he had condescended of a purpose to their Articles, he was dismissed, and went home to his House at Lynn. Where he continued a certain space, while he had disposed and set there all things in order.

Simon Miller Confession espied in his Shoe.

Simon Miller dismissed to his House at Lynn.

That done, he returned again to the Bishop's House to his Prison and Keeper, till the time at length, he constantly abiding in his professed purpose, and defence of Gods truth, was by the said Bishop and his Chancellor, condemned and committed to the Fire about the 13 day of July.

Elizabeth Cooper, Martyr.

E. L. Cooper Martyr.

WITH this Simon Miller also was burnt one Elizabeth Cooper (as is aforesaid) a Pewterers Wife, dwelling in S. Andrews Parish in Norwich, where she had before recanted, and being unquiet for the same, and greatly troubled inwardly, at the last she came into the said Saint Andrews Church, the people being at their Popish Service, and there standing in the same, said she revoked her recantation before made in that place, and was heartily sorry that ever she did it, willing the people not to be deceived, neither to take her doings before for an example, &c. These or such like words she spake in the Church.

Elizabeth Cooper revokes her recantation in the open Church.

Then cried one Bacon of the said Parish, laying his Arms abroad, saying; Master Sheriff, will you suffer this and repeating the same, urged him to go from the Church to her House, at whose knocking she came down, and was taken and sent to Prison.

The Sheriff (named Master Thomas Sutton) and she had been Servants together before in one House, and for the friendship he bare unto her, and the more for the Gospels sake he was very loath to do it, but that he was enforced by those other persons (before specified) much against his own Confidence, which he now earnestly repenteth.

This good Woman being condemned, and at the Stake with Simon Miller to be burnt, when the Fire came unto her, she a little shrunk thereat, with a voice crying, ha. When the said Simon Miller heard the same, he put his hand behind him toward her, and willed her to be strong and of good cheer: For good Sister (said he) we shall have a joyful and a sweet supper. Whereat she being as it seemed, thereby strengthened, stood as still and as quiet as one most glad to finish that good work which before most happily he had begun. So in fine she ended her life with her companion joyfully, committing her Soul into the hands of Almighty God.

The Martyrdom of ten faithful and blessed Martyrs, five Men and five Women burnt at Colchester, five in the forenoon, and five in the afternoon, for the testimony and witness of Christ Jesus and his glorious Gospel.

AS it is no new thing in those whom we call Prelates and Priests of the Church, to be raisers up of Persecution against Christ and his poor Flock: so it is much to be marvelled or rather lamented, that Noble Persons and Men of Honour and Worship, would be made such Ministers, to serve the affections of these tyrants, as commonly, as well in all the sorrowful days of the late Queen Mary, as namely in this present Story is to be marked.

And first thou rememberest (gentle Reader) how mention was made a little before of xxii. which were sent up Prisoners together from Colchester to London by the Earl of Oxford, the Lord Darcy, Master Tyrril of Saint Ovis, and other Commissioners and Justices, &c. The which xxii. (as is aforesaid) through a gentle submission put unto them, were afterward released and delivered.

In the number of these aforesaid 22. was one William W. Mass, Munt of Muchbentley in Essex, Husbandman, with Alice his Wife, and Rose Allen Maid, the daughter of the said Alice Munt; which coming home again to their House at Muchbentley aforesaid, refrained themselves from the unfavoury Service of the Popish Church, and frequented the company of good Men and Women which gave themselves diligently to reading, invoking, and calling upon the Name of God through Christ: whereby they so fretted the wicked Priest of the Town, called Sir Thomas Tye, and other like unto him, that calling their heads together, they made a pestilent Supplication to the Lord Darcy, in the Name of the whole Parish: the tenor whereof hereafter followeth.

The manner of a Supplication to the Lord Darcy, and by him delivered to Sir John Kingston Priest and Commissary.

PLEASETH it your Honourable Lordship to be advertised that we confess, whilst your good Lordship lay here in the Countrey, the people were stayed in good order to our great comfort: but since your Lordships departure, they have made digression from good order in some places, and namely in the Parish of Muchbentley, by reason of three Seditious persons, William Munt and his Wife, and Rose her daughter, who by their colourable submission (as it doth appear) were dismissed and sent down from the Bishop of London, and since their coming home they have not only in their own persons shewed manifest signs and tokens of disobedience, in not coming to the Church, nor yet observing other good orders, but also most maliciously and seditiously have seduced many from coming to the Church, and from obeying all other good orders; mocking also those that frequent the Church, and calling them Church Owls, and Blasphemously calling the Blessed Sacrament of the Altar a blind God, with divers such like Blasphemies. In consideration whereof, whereof, in my it please your Honour, (for the love of God, and for the tender zeal your good Lordship beareth to Justice, and the common Peace and quietness of the King and Queens Majesties loving Subjects) to award out your warrant for the said William Munt, his Wife, and Rose her Daughter, that they being attached and brought before your good Lordship, we trust the rest will fear to offend (their Ring-Leaders of Sedition being apprehended) to the quietness of their Obedient Subjects.

Your daily Orators, the Parishoners of Muchbentley, Thomas Tye Priest, John Carter, Thomas Candler, John Barker, Richard Mere, J. Painter, Will. Harris John Richard, with other.

This being done, the said Sir Thomas Tye bathought with himself, where the persecuted did resort. For in the beginning of Queen Marius Reign, for a Twelvemonth and more he came not to the Church, but frequented the Company of godly men and women, which abstained from the same, and as they thought, he laboured to keep a good Conscience, but the sequel shewed him to be a false Brother.

Now (as I said) he partly knowing the places of refuge for honest men, did further inquire of other men about the same: and being thereof sufficiently (as he thought) instructed to his purpose, immediately about the time the Supplication above specified was exhibited to the said Lord Darcy, wrote secretly a Letter to Boner Bishop of London, wherein he maketh his account how he had bestowed his time, and complained of divers honest men, among which was the said William Munt and his Company: The tenor of which Letter hereafter followeth.

A Letter sent to Boner Bishop of London, from Sir Thomas Tye, Priest.

Yr Letter to B. Boner

Right honourable Lord, after my bounden duty done in most humble wise, these shall be to signify unto your Lordship the State of our parts concerning Religion. And first since the coming down of the twenty two rank Heretics dismissed from you, the detestable sort of Schismatics were never so bold since the King and Queens Majesties Reign, as they are now at this present. In Muchbentley where your Lordship is Patron of the Church, since William Munt, and Alice his Wife, with Rose Allin her Daughter came home, they do not only absent themselves from the Church, and service of God, but do daily allure many other away from the same, which before did outwardly show signs and tokens of Obedience.

They assemble together upon the Sabbath day in the time of Divine Service, sometimes in one house, sometimes in another, and there keep their Privy Conventicles and Schools of Heresie. The Jurates say, the Lords Commission is out, and they are discharged of their Oath. The Quest-men in your Archdeacons Visitation alledged, that so far as much as they were once presented and now sent home, they have no more to do with them nor any other. Your Officers say, namely Mr. Boswel, that the Council sent them not home without a great consideration. I pray God some of your Officers prove not favourers of Heretics. The Rebels are stout in the Town of Colchester.

The Ministers of the Church are hemd at in the open streets, and called Knaves. The blessed Sacrament of the Altar is blasphemed and rayled upon in every House and Tavern. Prayer and Fasting is not regarded. Seditions talks and news are rife, both in Town and Country, in as ample and large manner, as though there had no honourable Lords and Commissioners been sent for reformation thereof. The occasion riseth partly by reason of John Love of Colchester lieth (a perverse place) which John Love was twice indicted of Heresie, and thereupon fled with his Wife and household, and his goods seized within the Town of Colchester, to the King and Queens Majesties use. Nevertheless the said John is come home again, and nothing said or done to him. Whereupon the Heretics are wonderfully encouraged, to the no little discomfort of good and Catholick People, which daily pray to God for the profit, unity, and relevation of his Church again: which thing shall come the sooner to pass, through the Travel and pains of such honourable Lords and Reverend Fathers as your Lordship is, unto whom I wish long life and continuance, with encrease of much honour. From Colchester the 18. of December.

Your humble Bedfoman, Thomas Tye, Priest.

When Judas this wicked Priest had thus wrought his malice against the People of God, within a while after the storms began to arise against those poor persecuted, William Munt and his Company, whereby they were enforced to hide themselves from the heat thereof. And continuing so a little space, at last, the seventh day of March, Anno 1557. being the first Sunday in Lent, and by two of the Clock in the Morning, one Mr. Edmund Tyrrel (who came of the house of those Tyrrels which murdered King Edward the fifth and his Brother) took with him the Bayliff of the hundred called William Samuel, dwelling in Colebeester, and the two Constables of Muchbentley aforesaid, named John Baker and William Harris, with divers other a great number; and besetting the house of the said William Munt round about, called to them at length to open the Door: which being done, Mr. Tyrrel with certain of his Company went into the Chamber where the said Father Munt and his Wife lay, willing them to rise: for (said he) you must go with us to Colebeester-Castle. Mother Munt hearing that, being very sick, desired that her Daughter might first fetch her some Drink; for she was (the said) very ill at ease.

w. Samuel, J. Baker W. Harris Persecutors.

The taking of W. Munt, his Wife, and R. Allin their Daughters.

Then he gave her leave and bade her go. So her Daughter the forenamed Rose Allin, Maid, took a stone Pot in one hand, and a Candle in the other, and went to draw drink for her Mother: and as she came back again thorow the house, Tyrrel met her, and willed her to give her Father and Mother good counsel, and advertise them to be better Catholick People.

Rose, Sir, they have a better Instructer then I. For the Holy Ghost doth teach them, I hope, which I trust will not suffer them to err.

Tyrrel. Why, said Master Tyrrel, art thou still in that mind, thou naughty Hufwife? Marry it is time to look upon such Heretics indeed.

Rose, Sir, with which you call Heretic, do I worship my Lord God, I tell you truth.

Tyrrel. Then I perceive you will burn, Gossip, with the rest, for Companies sake.

Rose. No Sir, not for Companies sake, but for my Christs sake, if so I be compelled, and I hope in his mercies if he call me to it, he will enable me to bear it.

Talk between Ed. Tyrrel and Rose Allin.

Tyrrel. So he turning to his Company, said, Sirs, this Gossip will burn: do you not think it? Marry Sir, quoth one, prove her, and you shall see what the will do by and by.

Tyrrel burneth R. Allin hand,

Then that cruel Tyrrel, taking the Candle from her, held her Wrist, and the burning Candle under her hand, burning cross-wise over the back thereof, so long, till the very Sinews crackt asunder. Witness herof William Chandler then dwelling in Muchbentley, who was there present and saw it. Also Mrs. Bright of Romford, with Ann Starkey her Maid, to whom Rose Allin also both declared the same, and the said Mrs. Bright also ministered salve for the curing thereof, as she lay in her house at Romford going up towards London with other Prisoners.

In which time of his tyranny, he said often to her, Why Whore, wilt thou not cry? Thou young Whore, wilt thou not cry? Unto which always she answered that she had no cause, she thanked God, but rather to joyce. He had (the said) more cause to weep, then she if she considered the matter well. In the end, when the Sinews (as I said) brake that all the house heard them, he then thrust her from him violently, and said, A strong Whore, thou shameless beast, thou beastly Whore, with such like vile words. But the quietly suffering his rage for the time, at the last said, Sir, have ye done what ye will do? And he said, yes, and if thou think it be not well, then mend it.

The patience of the Faithful.

N n n Rose.

The burning of Rose Allins hand by Edmund Tyrrel, as she was going to fetch drink for her Mother, lying sick in her bed.

The Devil payeth the Pelliculators their wages.

She revengeth not evil for evil.

Rose. Mend it? nay, the Lord mend you, and give you repentance, if it be his will. And now if you think it good, begin at the Feet, and burn the Head also. For he that set you a work, shall pay you your wages one day, I warrant you: and so she went and carried her Mother drink as she was commanded. Furthermore after the searching of the house for more Company, at the last they found one John Thurston and Margarets his Wife there also, whom they carried with the rest to Colchester-Castle immediately.

And this said Rose Allin being Prisoner, told a Friend of hers this cruel act of the said Tyrrel; and shewing him the manner thereof, she said while my own hand (quoth she) was a burning, I having a Pot in my other hand, might have laid him on the Face with it, if I had would: for no man held my hand to let me therein. But I thank God (quoth she) with all my heart, I did it not.

Also being asked of another, how she could abide the painful burning of her hand, she said, at first it was some grief to her, but afterward, the longer she burned, the less she felt, or well near none at all.

And because Mr. Tyrrel shall not go alone in this kind of Cruelty, you shall hear another like example of a blind Harpers hand burnt by Bishop Boner, as is testified by the relation of Valentine Dingley, sometime Gentleman to the said Bishop, who declared before credible witnesses, as followeth: How the said B. Boner, having this blind Harper before him, spake thus unto him, That such blind abjects which follow a sort of Heretical preachers, when they come to the feeling of the Fire, will be the first that will fly from it.

To whom the blind man said, that if every joyn of him were burnt, yet he trusted in the Lord not to fly. Then Boner signifying privily to certain of his men about him what they should do, they brought to him a burning Coal. Which Coal being put into the poor mans hand, they clost it fast again, and so was his hand pitiously burned. Amongst the doers whereof was the said Mr. Valentine Dingley, witness and reporter hereof, as is declared.

We read in the Story of Titus Livius of King Por-senna, who after the burning of the right hand of Marcus Scævola, which came purposely to kill him, being only contented therewith, sent him home to Rome again. But thus to burn the hand of poor Men and Women which never meant any harm unto them, and not yet contented with that, but also to consume their whole

The Martyrdom of three men and three women at Colchester, burned in the forenoon, besides foure others burned in the afternoon.

Bodies without any just cause, we find no example of such barbarous Tyranny, neither in Titus Livius neither in any other story amongst the Heathen.

But to return to our Colchester Martyrs again, as touching William Munt and his Wife, and burning of their Daughter Rose Allins hand, sufficient hath been declared. With the said William Munt and his Family, was joynd also in the same Prison at Colchester another Faithful Brother, named John Johnson, alias Aliker, of Thorp in the County of Essex Labourer, of the age of four and thirty years, having no Wife alive, but three young Children, who also was with them indicted of Heresie, and so all these four lay together in Colchester Castle.

The other six Prisoners lay in Mote-Hall in the said Town of Colchester, whose names were:

First, William Bengeor, of the Parish of S. Nicholas in Colchester, Glasier, of the age of sixty years.

2. Thomas Benold of Colchester, Tallow Chandler.

3. W. Parcas of Bocking in the County of Essex Fuller, a young man, of the age of twenty years.

4. Agnes Silverfide, alias Smith, dwelling in Colchester, Widow, of the age of forty years.

5. Helen Ewring, the Wife of John Ewring Miller, dwelling in Colchester, of the age of 45. years or thereabouts, who was one of the 22. Prisoners mentioned before, sent up in bands from Colchester to London, and after being delivered with the rest, repaired home to Colchester again to her Husband, where notwithstanding she enjoyed her liberty not very long: for shortly after her return, met with her one Robert Maynard then Bay-liff of Colchester, a special enemy to Gods Gospel, who spying her, came to her, and kissed her, and bade her welcom home from London. Unto whom she confidently answered again, and said, that it was but a Judas kiss. For in the end, quoth she, I know you will betray me, as indeed it came to pass: for immediately after that talk she was apprehended by him again, and there lodged with the rest in the Town Prison (as is aforesaid) called the Mote-Hall.

6. The sixth of this Company was Elizabeth Folke, a young Maid, and Servant in Colchester, of the age of twenty years. These six were imprisoned in the Town Prison of Colchester, called Mote-Hall, as the other four, above specified, were in the Castle.

Ann Divers Examinations these good men had at sundry times before divers Justices, Priests, and Officers, as Mr. Roper, John Kingdon, Commissary, John Boswel Priest and Boners Scribe, and others more, whereof the said Boswel made relation to Bishop Boner, certifying him of their depositions, as is to be read in our first Book of Acts and Monuments. Last of all they were examined again in Mote-Hall the twenty fourth day of June, by Dr. Chadsey, John Kingdon Commissary, with other Priests, and Boswel the Scribe, in the presence of the two Bayliffs of Colchester, Robert Brown and Robert Maynard, with divers other Justices both of the Town and Country, and other Gentlemen a great sort: at which time and place, and before the said persons, they had Sentence of Condemnation read against them, chiefly for not affirming the Real presence of the Sacrament in their Altar. The effect of their words therein, was this, or such like, as here followeth.

W. Bonger First the Lords faithful Prisoners in Mote-Hall.
William Bonger of the Parish of St. Nicholas in Colchester Glazier, said, that the Sacrament of the Altar was Bread, is Bread, and so remaineth Bread, and for the Consecration it is not the holier, but rather the worse. To this he did stand, as also against all the rest of their Papistical Doctrine: and so had Sentence read against him.

T. Bould The Bould of Colchester, Tallow Chandler, affirmed the like in effect that the said William Bonger did: and so had Sentence also read against him.

W. Turrell condemned.
W. Turrell of Boxford said, that when he received the Sacrament, he received Bread in an holy use, that preacheth the remembrance that Christ died for him. To this he stood, and against other their Popish matters: and so also had Sentence read against him.

Ag. Silver condemned.
Agnes Silverfide, alias Smith, said, that she loved no Consecration. For the Bread and Wine is rather worse then better thereby, she said. This good old Woman answered them with found judgment and boldness, to every thing they asked her, that it rejoiced the hearts of many, and especially to see the patience of such a reverend old age, against the taunts and checks of her Enemies. To this she also stood, and had Sentence read against her in like manner.

Helene Ewring condemned.
Helene Ewring answered the like in effect as the other did, clearly denying all the Laws set forth by the Pope, with her whole heart. This good Woman was somewhat thick of hearing, but yet quick in understanding the Lords matters, his name therefore be praised. Against her also there was Sentence read.

Elizabeth Folks condemned.
Elizabeth Folks the young Maiden, being Examined whether she believed the presence of Christs Body to be in the Sacrament substantially and really, or no; answered that she believed that it was a substantial Lie, and a real Lie. At which words the Priests and others chafed very much, and asked her again, whether after the Consecration there remained not the Body of Christ in the Sacrament. And she answered, that before Consecration and after, it is but bread, and that man blest with God Word, is cursed and abominable by the Word, &c. Then they examined her of Confession to the Priest, of going to Church to hear Mass, of the Authority of the Bishop of Rome, &c. Unto all which she answered, that she would neither use nor frequent any of them all, by the grace of God, but utterly detest and abhor them from the bottom of her heart, and all such trumpery.

D. Chadsey wrote.
Then read they the Sentence of Condemnation against her. In which time Doctor Chadsey wept, that the tears trickled down his Cheeks. So the Sentence being read, she kneeled down on both her knees, lifting up her hands and eyes unto Heaven, with fervent prayer in audible voice praising God that ever she was born, to see that most blessed and happy day, that the Lord would see that most worthy to suffer for the Testimony of Christ:

Elizabeth Folks prayed for and Lord, said she (if it be thy will) forgive them that this have done against me, for they know not what they do. Then rising up, she exhorted all those on the Bench to repentance, especially those who brought her to Prison, as Robert Maynard the Bayliff, and such like; which Maynard commonly, when he fate in judgment upon life and death, would sit sleeping on the bench many times, so careful was his mind on his Office.

Further she willed halting Gospellers, to beware of Blood, for that would cry for vengeance, &c. And in the end she told them all, laying her hand upon the Barr, if they did not repent their wicked doings therein, that undoubtedly the very Barr would be a witness against them at the day of judgment; that they had that day shed innocent Blood.

This Elizabeth Folks, the day before she was condemned, was examined only upon this Article, Whether she believed that there was a Catholick Church of Christ or no. Unto which she answered, Yea. Then was she immediately (by Boswel, means the Scribe) delivered unto her Uncle Holt of the same Town of Colchester to keep, who carried her home unto his house: and she being there, might have departed thence many times, if she had would: for there were means offered to convey her away. But she hearing that some doubted that she had yielded to the Pope (although it was most untrue) would in no wise content her self, but wept, and was in such anguish of mind and terror of Conscience, that (no remedy) she would to the Papists again, for any persuasions that could be. And coming before them at Cosins House at the White-Hart in Colchester, she was at utter defiance with them and their Doctrine: and so had, as you have heard, in the end a Papistical reward, as the rest of her Brethren had.

The Lords faithful Prisoners in Colchester Castle.

W. Munt condemned.
William Munt of Muchbently in Essex of the age of sixty one years, said, that the Sacrament of the Altar was an abominable Idol, and that if he should observe any part of their Popish proceedings, he should displease God, and bring his Curse upon him, and therefore for fear of his vengeance he durst not do it. This good Father was examined of many things: but God be thanked, he stood to the Truth, and in the end there fore had Sentence of Condemnation read against him.

John Johnson condemned.
John Johnson of Thorp in Essex, Widower, of the age of thirty four years, was examined as the rest, and made answer in such sort, as the Papists counted him none of theirs, and therefore condemned him with their Bloody Sentence; as they had done the rest before. This John Johnson affirmed, that in the receiving of the Sacrament, according to Chrills institution, he receiveth the Body of Christ spiritually, &c.

Alice Munt condemned.
Alice Munt, the Wife of the said William Munt, of the age of one and forty years, being also examined as the rest, said and confirmed the same in effect as her Husband did, and was therefore also condemned by their Bloody Sentence in like manner.

Rose Allin condemned.
Rose Allin Maid the Daughter of the said Alice Munt, of the age of twenty years, being examined of auricular Confession, going to the Church to hear Mass, of the Popish seven Sacraments, &c. answered stoutly, that they stank in the face of God, and she durst not have to do with them for her life, neither was she (the said) any member of theirs: for they were the members of Antichrist; and so should have (if they repented not) the reward of Antichrist. Being asked further, what she could say of the See of the Bishop of Rome, whether she would obey his Authority or no: she answered boldly, that she was none of his. As for his See (quoth she) it is for Crows, Kites, Owls, and Ravens to swim in, such as you be: for by the grace of God I shall not swim in that See, while I live; neither will I have any thing to do therewith. Then read they the Sentence of Condemnation against her, and so sent her unto Prison again unto the rest, where she sung with great joy, to the wonder of many.

Thus these poor condemned Lambs, being delivered into the hands of the Secular power, were committed again every one unto the Prison from whence they came, where they remained with much joy and great comfort (in continual reading and invoking the name of God) ever looking and expecting the happy day of their dissolution. In which time the cruel Papists left not their malicious attempts against them (although they would seem now to have no more to do with them.) For Bloody Boner, whose Throat never cried but shortly after got a Writ for the burning of the foresaid then good Creatures; and to shew the more diligence in the cause, he sent his own trusty man down with it, named Edward Cofin, and with him also his Letter for the furtherance of the matter, the 30. day of July, the next month after the Condemnation.

The Writ being thus received of the said Bayliffs, and they having then no leisure thereabouts, appointed the day of the execution thereof, to be the second day of August next following. And because the faithful Souls were in two several Prisons, as the Castle, was for the Country, and Mote-Hall for the Town: therefore it was agreed among them, that they in Mote-Hall should be burnt in the forenoon, and those at the Castle, by the Sheriff of the Shire, in the afternoon, as here thou mayst see it more plain how it came to pass accordingly.

The second day of August, 1557. betwixt six and seven of the Clock in the morning, was brought from Mote-Hall unto a plot of ground, hard by the Town-wall of Colchester on the outward-side, William Bongeror, William Farcas, Thomas Benall, Agnes Silver-side, Alas Smith, Helene Ewring and Elizabeth Folke, afore-named; which being there, and all things prepared for their Martyrdom, at the last these said constant Martyrs kneeled down, and made their humble prayers to God, but not in such sort as they would, for the cruel Tyrants would not suffer them: especially one Master Cleve among the rest (who sometime had been a Gospeler shewed himself very extreme unto them; the Lord give him repentance (if it be his good will) and grace to be a better man. When they had made their prayers, they rose, and made them ready to the fire. And Elizabeth Folke, when he had plucked off her Petticoat, would have given it to her Mother (which came and kist her at the Stake, and exhorted her to be strong in the Lord) but the wicked there attending, would not suffer her to give it. Therefore taking the said Petticoat in her hand, she threw it away from her, saying, Farewell all the world, farewell Faith, farewell Hope, and so taking the Stake in her hand, said, Welcom Love, &c. Now she being at the Stake, and one of the Officers nailing the Chain about her, in the striking of the Staple, he mist the place, and strake her with a great stroke of the hammer on the shoulder Bone: whereat the suddenly turning her head, lifting up her eyes to the Lord, and prayed smilingly, and gave her self to exhorting the People again.

When all the six were also nailed likewise at their stakes, and the Fire about them, they clapped their hands for joy in the Fire, that the flanders by (which were by estimation thousands) cried generally almost; The Lord strengthen them, the Lord comfort them, the Lord pour his mercies upon them, with such like words, as was wonderful to hear.

Thus yielded they up their Souls and Bodies into the Lords hands, for the true testimony of his Truth. The Lord grant we may imitate the same in the like quarrel (if he so vouch us worthy) for his mercies sake, Amen.

In like manner the said day in the Afternoon, was brought forth into the Castle-Yard, to a place appointed for the same, William Munt, John Johnson, Alice Munt and Rose Allin afore-said: which godly Constant persons, after they had made their prayers, and were joyfully tied to the Stakes, calling upon the name of God, and exhorting the People earnestly to flee from Idolatry, suffered their Martyrdom with such triumph and joys, that the People did not less shout thereto to see it, then at the other that were burnt the same day in the Morning.

Thus ended all these glorious ten Souls that day, their happy lives unto the Lord, whose ages all did grow to the sum of four hundred and six years, or thereabouts. The Lord grant we may well spend our years and days likewise to his glory, Amen.

John Thurston died in Colchester Castle.

Before you have heard of the taking of John Thurston at Muckbentley, in the house of one William Munt of the same Town; which said John Thurston said, died in Colchester-Castle, a constant Confessor of Jesus Christ.

1 Thomas Confessor of Christ.

The age of these ten made the sum of 406 years.

The story and Death of George Eagles, otherwise termed Trudgeover, a most painful Traveller in Christ: Gospel, who for the same Gospel most cruelly was Martyred by the Cruel Papists.

Anno

1557.

Among other Martyrs of singular vertue and constancy, one George Eagles deserveth not the least admiration, but is so much the more to be commended, for that he, having little learning or none, most manfully served and fought under the banner of Christs Church. For oftentimes the will and pleasure of God is, to beautify and adorn his Kingdom with the weak and simple Instruments of this world; such as in the old Testament Amos was, who with many other of obscure and unknown names, were called from the heards and folds to the honor of Prophets; as likewise we read of the Apostles that were called from Fishermens craft, and put into Churches. Wherefore this George Eagles is not to be neglected for his base occupation, whom Christ called thence to set forth and declared abroad his Gospel. Rather we ought to glorify God the more thereby in his holiness, which in so blind a time inspired him with the gift of preaching, and constancy of suffering: who after a certain time he had used the occupation of a Taylour, being eloquent and of good utterance, gave and applied himself to the Profit of Christs Church.

Which man, as before in those most bright and clear days of King Edward the sixth, he had not unfruitfully shewed and preached the power and force of the Lord, so afterward in the tempestuous time and fall of the Church (at what time the Confessors of Christ and his Gospel were troubled, divers of them murdered, part banished, and othersome constrained for fear not to shew their heads) he expressed and uttered his manly stomach. For he, wandering abroad into divers and far Countries where he could find any of his Brethren, did there most earnestly encourage and comfort them, now tarrying in this Town, and sometime abiding in that certain months together, as occasion served, lodging sometime in the Country, and sometime for fear living in Fields and Woods, who, for his immoderate and unreasonable going abroad, was called Trudgeover. Oftentimes he did lie abroad in the night without covert, spending the most part in devout and earnest prayer.

His diet was so above measure spare and slender, that for the space of three years, he used for the most part, to drink nothing but very Water, whereunto he was compelled through necessity of the time of persecution: and after when he perceived that his Body by Gods providence proved well enough with this diet, he thought best to inure himself therewithal against all necessities.

Now when he had profited Christs Church in this sort, by going about and preaching the Gospel a year or two, and especially in Colchester, and the quarters thereabout; that privy Enemy which envieth always the salvation and blessed estate of the good, lurked and laid wait by all means possible for him, so that there were divers Spies sent out, who had in commandment, wherefore they found him, to bring him either quick or dead.

But when this their attempt could not prevail, but all was in vain (the said Eagles with his Brethren keeping in close, and hiding themselves in out and dark places, as in Barns, Thickets, Holes, and privy Closets) his Adversaries went about another way to compass this their enterprise of taking him.

For in the Queens name a grievous Edict was proclaimed thoroughout four Shires, Essex, Suffolk, Kent, and Norfolk, promising the party that took him, twenty pounds for his pains; doubtless a worthy hire to entice any Jew to treachery. For being inflamed with greedy desire of the money, they devised and invented all ways and reasons they could possible to be enriched with the hurt and destruction of this filly man.

At length it came to pass, that this George being seen by chance at Colchester upon Mary Magdalens day, at which time they kept a Fair in the Town, should have forthwith been delivered to his Adversaries, if he perceiving the same (as God would have it) had not conveyed himself away as fast as he could, a great multitude pursuing after, and seeking diligently for him.

Who

G. Eagles Martyred.

The painful travel of G. Eagles.

Ann. Who first hid himself in a grove, and then from thence stole into a Corn-field thereby, and so lay secretly couched from the violence of his enemies, inasmuch as they were all, saving one, past hope of taking him, and therefore ready to depart their way.

This one, having more subtilty and wicked craft in his head then the rest, would not depart thence with his Fellows, but climbed up into a high tree, there to view and spy if he might see Eagles any where stir or move.

Quid non mori illis precora cogis, Aure sacra James?

Enclit.

The poor man thinking all sure enough, by reason that he heard no noise abroad, rose up on his knees, and lifting up his hands, prayed unto God. And whether it were for that his head was above the Corn, or because his voyce was heard, the lurker perceiving his desired prey that he hunted after, forthwith came down, and suddenly laying hands on him, brought him as Prisoner to Colchester. Notwithstanding the greedy and Judas Knave, which had foomish promised him, was fain to be contented with a very small reward, and glad to take that too, lest he should have had nothing at all.

This George, not without great lamentation of divers good men, and great lick unto the Church of God (of which to his power he was a worthy Instrument) was committed to Prison there, and from thence within four days after conveyed to Chelmsford, where he abode all that night in devout Prayer, and would not sleep, neither would he eat or drink but Bread and Water. The next day he was carried to London to the Bishop or the Council, and there remained a certain time, and then was brought down to Chelmsford to the Sessions, and there was indicted and accused of Treason, because he had assembled Companies together, contrary to the Laws and Statutes of the Realm in that case provided. For so it was ordained a little before, to avoid sedition, that if men should flock secretly together, above the number of six, they should be attached of Treason: which strict Law was the casting away of the good Duke of Somerset before mentioned.

And albeit it was well known, that poor Eagles did never any thing seditiously against the Queen, yet to cloak an honest matter withal, and to cause him to be the more hated of the People, they turned Religion into a Civil offence and crime, and though he defended his cause stoutly and boldly, making a full declaration of his Religion, or Faith before the Judges, yet could he not bring it to pass by any means, but that he must needs be indicted (as is said) of Treason; whose indictment did run much after this fashion.

George Eagles, thou art indicted by the name of George Eagles, otherwise Trudgeover the Word, for that thou didst such a day make thy prayer, that God should turn Queen Maries heart, or else take her away.

He denied that he prayed that God should take her away, but he confessed, he prayed that God would turn her heart in his prayer. Well, notwithstanding he was condemned for a Traitor, although the meaning thereof was for Religion.

This thing done, he was carried to the New-Inn, called the sign of the Crown in Chelmsford, by the beastly Bayliffs which some of them were they that before did their best to take him; and being in the Inn, one Richard Potts the Elder, an Inn-holder, dwelling at the sign of the Cock in the same Town, did much trouble him, in perswading him to confess he had offended the Queen in his prayer, which he was condemned for, and to ask her forgiveness.

R. Potts Innholder at the Cock in Chelmsford.

To whom he said, he had not offended her Grace in that behalf. So in process of time, he was laid upon a Sled, with an hurdle on it, and drawn to the place of execution, being fast bound, having in his hand a Psalm-Book, of the which he read very devoutly all the way with a loud voyce, till he came there: and being on the Ladder this forefaid Potts did much trouble him with the matter aforesaid, when he would have uttered other things, till such time as the Sheriff commanded Potts to hold his peace, and trouble him no more.

So he made his confession, and stood very constant till then he was tumbled off the Ladder. With him were cast certain Taverners, and the next day, when they were brought out to be executed with him, there happened a thing that did much set forth and declare the innocency and godlyness of this man. For being led between two Thieves to the place where he should suffer, when as he exhorted both them and all other to stand steadfastly to the Truth, one of these turned the counsel he gave, into a jesting matter, and made but a jest at it.

Why should we doubt to obtain Heaven, saith he, forasmuch as this holy man shall go before us, as Captain and leader unto us in the way. We shall flee thither straight as soon he hath once made us the entry.

In this George Eagles and that other did greatly reprove him, who on the other side gave good heed to Georges exhortation, earnestly bewailing his own wickedness, and calling to Christ for mercy. Put the more that the first was bid to be still, and to leave off his scoffing the more perverse he did continue in his foolishness, and his wicked behaviour. At length he came to the Gallows, where they should be hanged, but George was carried to another place, thereby to suffer. Between the two it was the godliers chance to go the foremost, who being upon the Ladder, after he had exhorted the People to beware and to take heed to themselves, how they did transgress the Commandments of God, and then had committed his Soul into Gods hands, he ended his life after a godly and quiet manner.

The mockers turn cometh next, which would have said likewise somewhat, but his Tongue did fumble and he was so faulter in his head, that he was not able to speak a word. Fain would he have uttered his mind, but he could not and bringing it out. Then did the Under-sheriff bid him say the Lords Prayer, which he could not say neither but fluttering, as a man would say, one word to day and another to morrow. Then one did begin to say it, and so bade him say after.

An example to be noted of a Thief rejecting and deriding wholesome and godly preaching.

Such as were there, and saw it, were very much astonished, especially those that did behold the just punishment of God against him that had mocked so earnest a matter. George Eagles in the meantime, after he had hanged a small time, having a great check with the halter, immediately one of the Bayliffs cut the halter asunder, and he fell to the ground being still alive, although much amazed with the check he had off the Ladder.

Then one William Swallow of Chelmsford a Bayliff, did draw him to the Sled that he was drawn thither on, and laid his neck thereon, and with a Cleaver, such as is occupied in many mens Kitchens, and blunt, did hackle off his head, and sometime hit his neck, and sometime his Chin, and did slowly mangle him, and so opened him. Notwithstanding this blessed Martyr of Christ abode steadfast and constant in the very midst of his torments, till such time as this tormentor William Swallow did pluck the heart out of his Body. The Body being divided in four parts, and his Bowels burnt, was brought to the forefaid Swallows door, and there laid upon the Filth-stals before his door, till they had made ready a horse to carry his quarters, one to Colchester, and the rest to Harwich, Chelmsford, and S. Rowles.

W. Swallow tormentor of George Eagles.

His Head was set up at Chelmsford on the Market-Cross on a long Pole, and there stood, till the Wind did blow it down, and lying certain days in the Street Gods just judgment upon a cruel Persecutor. that he shewed on this wicked Bayliff Swallow, who within short space after this was so punished, that all the hair went well near off his head, his eyes were as it were closed up, and could scanty see, the nails of his fingers and toes went clean off. He was in such case of his Body as though he had been a Leprosy, and now in his last age almost a very beggar, and his Wife, which he a little after married, God hath punished with the Falling-sickness, or a distill like unto that: which may be a warning or glass for all men and women to look in, that be enemies to Gods true Servants.

W. Swallow's Wife punished with the Falling-sickness.

No less token of his marvellous judgment did God Gods judgment upon the forefaid Richard Potts, which did so much trouble this George Eagles in the inn, and at the place of execution, as is above specified. He lived till the beginning of Q. Elizabeths Reign, all which time he litle joyed, and being on a time in a great clafe with two or three of his neighbours in his own house, feeling himself not well, he said to one of his Servants, Go with me in to the Chamber, and when he came there, he fell down on a low Bed, as heavy as in had been Lead, and lay there foming at the mouth, and could never speak after, neither yet understand what was said to him, as by all means was tryed by his neighbours with signs to him made, but lay as senseless as it had bin a very dumb Beast, and within three or four days dyed. God grant that this token sent of God, with many more like, may be a warning to us ever hereafter, while we shall live unto the worlds end.

Besides this, God hath wonderfully shewed his work. For at a time when they laid great wait for this George Eagles, so that it was thought that it was impossible, but that he should be taken being so beset; his Friends did put him into Apprentice apparel, viz. Watchet-hose as there manner is, and an old Cloak, and set him on a Pack of Wool, as though he had ridden to carry Wool to the Spinners, so he rode amongst the midst of his Adversaries, and escaped them all for that time. Another trouble of the said George Eagles, was also Justice Brown who enjoyed not his cruelty many years after, &c.

Also when he was at the Sessions at Chebmsford, there was a rumor raised, that he had accused divers honest men that did keep him in their houses, and was conversant with him, and all to discredit him; which rumor was very false and utterly untrue. Witness one Raynold, with divers other dwelling in Chebmsford.

The Martyrdom, and Examination of Richard Craftfield of Wymundham, condemned to death for the testimony of Jesus Christ.

August 5.

About this time suffered at Norwich, a godly man and a constant Martyr of Christ, called Richard Craftfield, whose Examinations before the Chancellor, named Dunning, as he penned them with his own hand, fo have we faithfully recorded the same.

How say you Sirrah, said the Chancellor, to the Ceremonies of the Church?

Then said I, What Ceremonies?

He said unto me, do you not believe that all the Ceremonies of the Church were good and godly?

My answer was, I do believe so many as are grounded in the Testament of Jesus Christ.

Tush, said he, Do you believe in the Sacrament of the Altar?

I said, I knew not what it was.

Then said he, Do you not believe that Christ took Bread, gave thanks, brake it, and said, Take, eat, this is my Body?

Yes verily, said I, and even as Christ did speak, so did he perform the work.

Tush, said he, Do you not believe this, that after the words be spoken by the Priest, there is the substance of Christs Body, Flesh and Blood? How say you, do you not believe this? speak man.

I do believe that Christs Body was broken for me upon the Cross, and his Blood shed for my redemption, whereof the Bread and the Wine is a perpetual memory, the pledge of his mercy, the Ring and Seal of his promise, and a perpetual memory for the Faithful unto the end of the world. So then I was commanded into Prison until the next day.

Another Examination of Richard Craftfield

Another Examination of Craftfield.

The day following I was brought forth. Then the Chancellor said unto me, Richard, how say you? Are you otherwise minded than you were yesterday? He rehearsing all the words that we had afore, said, Are not these your words? Whereunto I answered, Yes.

Then said he, How say you, can you not find in your heart, when you come to the Church, to kneel down before the Rood, and make your Prayer?

I answered and said, No; rehearsing the Commandment of God forbidding the same.

He said, Have you not read or heard, that God commanded an Image to be made?

I answered, What Image?

He said, The brazen Serpent.

I said, Yes, I have heard it read, how that God did command it to be made, and likewise to be broken down.

Then Doctor Bridges said, Wherefore did God command the Seraphims and Cherubims to be made?

I said, I could not tell; I would fain learn.

Then said the Chancellor, But how say you to this? can you find in your heart to fall down before the Picture of CHRIST, which is the Rood?

I said, No, I fear the curse of God: for it is written, that God curseth the hands that make them, yea and the hands that make the tools wherewith they are carved.

Then Dr. Bridges raged and said, List now what a piece of Scripture he hath here gotten to serve his purpose, for he will not allow but where he listeth.

Then said the Chancellor, How say you to Confession to the Priest? when were you confessed?

I said, I confess my self daily unto the eternal God, whom I most grievously offend.

Then the Chancellor said, Do you not then take Confession to the Priest to be good?

I answered, No, but rather wicked.

Then the Chancellor said, How say you by yonder the Organs gear, yonder finging and yonder playing on the Organs? is it not good and godly?

I said, I could perceive no godliness in it.

Then he said, Why, is it not written in the Psalms, That we should praise God with hymns and Spiritual Songs?

I said, Yes spiritual Songs must be had: but yonder is of the Flesh, and of the Spirit of error. For to you it is pleasant and glorious, but to the Lord it is bitter and odious.

Then said the Chancellor, Why, is it not written, My house is an house of Prayer?

I said, Yes. It is written also, That you have made my house of prayer a Den of Thieves.

With that, the Chancellor looked and said have we?

I answered and said, Christ said so. Then was I commanded to ward.

Then Thursday next following, was Dr. Bridges sent to mee to examine mee of my Faith. And he said, Country-man, my Lord Bishop (for love hee would have you saved,) hath sent me unto you, because to morrow is your day appointed: therefore my Lord hath thought it meet, that you should declare unto me your Faith. For to morrow my Lord will not have much ado with you.

I answered and said, Hath my Lord sent you?

It is not you, to whom I am disposed to shew my mind.

Then he said to me, I pray you shew me your mind concerning the Sacrament of the Altar.

I answered, Are you ignorant what I have said?

He said, No for it was well written, Except you believe, faith he, as the Church hath taught you are damned both Body and Soul.

I answered and said, Judge not, lest you be judged: condemn not, lest you be condemned.

And he said, Lo, we shall have a traitor as well as an Heretick: for he will disallow the Kings Judgment.

I said, No, I do not disallow the Kings Judgment, but yours I do disallow. For I pray you tell me, how came you by this Judgment?

He answered and said, by the Church: for the Church hath power to save and condemn: for if you be condemned by the Church, be ye sure, that you be damned both Body and Soul.

Then I answered, if you have this power, I am sore deceived. For I believe that Christ shall be our judge. But now I perceive that you will do much for him, that you will not put him to the pain.

Then he said, stand nearer Country-man: why stand ye so far off?

I said, I am near enough, and a little too near.

Then he said, Did not Christ say, Is not my Flesh meat, and my Blood Drink indeed?

I said, To whom spake Christ those words?

He said, To his Disciples.

I (intending to rehearse the Text) said, whereat did Christs Disciples manure inwardly?

1557.

He said; No, they did not murmur, but they were the Infidels (saith he) for the Disciples were satisfied with these words.

I said, did not Christ say thus; as he taught at Capernaum? whereas his Disciples murmured, saying, This is an hard saying. Who can abide the bearing of it? Jesus perceiving their thoughts, said, doth this offend you?

Then he raged and said, Oh, thou wretchest the Text for thine own purpose. For the Disciples did never murmur, but the unbelievers, as thou art.

I said, Yes, but I perceive you know not the Text. Then said he, with much raging, I will lay my head thereon, it is not so.

Then said I, I have done with you.

Then said he, What shall I tell my Lord of you?

If you have nothing to tell him, your errand shall be sooner done said I. And so he departed.

Then on Friday was brought forth to receive judgment. Then the Chancellor said unto me, Are you a new Man, or are you not?

I answered and said, I trust I am a new Man Born of God.

God give Grace you be so, said he. So he rehearsed all my examination, and said, How say you; are not these your words?

I said, Yes, I will not deny them.

Then he said to Dr. Pore, standing by, I pray you talk with him. Then he alledging to me many fair flattering words, said, Take, eat, this is my Body. How say you to this? Do you not believe that it is Christs Body? speak.

I said, Have you not my mind? Why do you trouble me?

He said, What did Christ give you? was it Bread, or was it not?

I said, Christ took Bread, and gave thanks, and gave it, and they took Bread, and did Eat. And St. Paul maketh it more manifest, where he saith, So oft as ye shall Eat of this Bread, and Drink of this Cup, ye shall shew forth the Lords Death until he come. St. Paul saith not here as you say: for he saith, So oft as ye shall Eat of this Bread. He doth not say, Body. So they intending that I should go no further in the Text, said, Truſt, you go about the bush. Answer me to the first question. Let us make an end of that.

What say you to the Bread that Christ gave? Let me have your mind in that.

I answered, I have said my mind in it.

Then the Chancellor said, No, we will have your mind in that.

I answered, I have said my mind in it.

Then said the Chancellor, No, we will have your mind more plainly. For we intend not to have many words with you.

I said, my Faith is fully grounded and stablished, that Christ Jesus the Eagle Lamb hath offered his blessed Body a Sacrifice to God the Father, the price of my redemption. For by that onely sacrifice are all the faithful sanctified, and he is our only Advocate and Mediator, and he hath made perfect our redemption. This hath he done alone, without any of your daily oblations.

Then Dr. Bridges start up, and said, Truth, your Words are true indeed. You take well the literal sense: but this you must understand, that like as you said that Christ offered his Body upon the Crosse, which was a bloody sacrifice, and a visible sacrifice: so likewise we daily offer the self same Body that was offered upon the Crosse, but not bloody and visible, but invisible, unto God the Father.

Do you offer Christs Body, I said? Why then Christs Sacrifice was not perfect. But Christ is True, when all Men shall be lyars.

Then he said, Thou shalt not fear him that hath power to kill the Body: but thou shalt fear him that hath power to kill both Body and Soul.

I answered and said, It is not so. But the Text is thus, Thou shalt not fear them that have power to kill the Body, and then have done what they can. But thou shalt fear him that hath power to kill both Body and Soul, and cast them both into Hell-fire, and not them.

He answered and said, Yes: for it is the Church.

I answered and said, Why, Christ saith, I give my life for the redemption of the world. No man taketh my life from me (saith he) but I give it of my own power, and so I have power to take it again. Therefore Christ the Son of God did offer his Body once for all. And if you will presume to offer his Body daily, then your power is above Christs power. With that he chafed and said, What shall we have Doctrine? Ye are not hereto appointed.

Then the Chancellor stood up, and said, Wil ye turn from this wicked error, and be an example of goodness, as you have been an example of evil (for by your wicked reading, you have perwaded simple Women to be in this error) and ye shall have mercy.

And I said, it is of God that I do crave mercy, whom I have offended, and not you.

Then said the Chancellor, When were you at your Parish Church? These two years and more have you stood Excommunicate. Wherefore you are condemned. And so I was condemned.

Thus hast thou (gentle Reader) the Examinations of this godly young Man, set forth and written with his own hand, who, not long after his condemnation, was by the Sheriffs and Officers there, brought to the stake, where with much patience and constancy he entered his blessed Martyrdom. At the burning of which Christian Martyr, one Thomas Carman the same time was apprehended, by what occasion, it is not yet to us fully certain, whether it was for words, or for praying with him, or for pledging him at his burning, concerning which Thomas Carman, his story hereafter followeth in his order and place, further to be seen.

One Fryer, and a certain godly Woman burned at Rochester, who was the Sister of George Eagles.

About the same time and Month, one named Fryer, with a Woman accompanying him, who was the Sister of George Eagles, in the like cause of righteousness, suffered the like Martyrdom by the unrighteous Papists, whose Tyranny the Lord of his mercy abate and cut short, turning that wicked generation, if it be his will, to a better mind.

The apprehension and Death of Mistress Joyce Lewes, the Wife of Thomas Lewes, of Mancetter, most constantly suffering for Gods Word at Lichfield.

Mistress Joyce Lewes, a Gentlewoman born, was delicately brought up in the pleasures of the world, having delight in gay apparel, and such like foolishness with the which follies the most part of the Gentilefolks of England were then, and are yet infected, who was married first to one called Appleby, and afterward to Thomas Lewes of Mancetter. In the beginning of Queen Mary's time shee went to the Church and heard Mass as others did, but when she heard of the burning of that most godly and learned Martyr, Laurence Sanders, who suffered in Coventry, she began to take more heed to the matter, and enquired earnestly of such as she knew feared God, the cause of his Death: and when she perceived it was because he refused to receive the Mass, she began to be troubled in Conscience, and waxed very unquiet. And because her house was even hard by Mr. John Glovers house, of whom mention was made before, a Man of Blessed Memory, and a singular example of his unfained godliness and manifold troubles which he suffered for the Gospel, she did oftentimes resort to him, and desired him to tell her the faults that were in the Mass, and other things that at that time were urged as necessary to salvation.

Now he perceiving both her unquiet mind, and also the desire she had to know the truth, did most diligently instruct her in the ways of the Lord, approving unto her out of Gods Holy Word, that the Mass, with all other papistical inventions, was odious in Gods sight; and besides this, reproved her, for that she delighted in the vanities of this world so much. By the which godly counsel given by him, it happened that she began to wax weary of the world, thoroughly sorrowful for her sins, being inflamed with the Love of God, desirous to serve him according to his word, purposing also to flee from those things the which did displeafe the Lord her God. And because she had learned the Maie to be evil and abominable, she began to hate it. And when at a time she was compelled by the furiousness of her Husband to come to the Church, at the same time when the Holy Water was cast, she turned her Back towards it, and shewed her self to be displeafed with their Blasphemous Holy Water, injurious to the Blood of Christ. Whereupon she was accused before the Bishop for the despiing of their Sacramentals.

Immediately, a Citation was sent for her to her Husbands Houfe, to appear before the Bishop incontinently. The Sumner that brought the Citation delivered it to her Husband, who looking upon it, and perceiving that it was moved with anger, willing the Sumner to take the Citation with him again, or else he would make him to eat it. The Sumner refused to take it again, for he thought no Man durst have been so bold to trouble him. But in the end Lewes compelled the said Sumner to eat the Citation indeed, by setting a Dagger to his Heart; and when he had eaten it, he caused him to drink to it, and so sent him away. But immediately after, the said Lewes with his Wife were commanded to appear before the Bishop, where the said Lewes by and by submitted himself, and desiring the Bishop to be good to him, excusing himself after the best Fashion he could. Whereupon the Bishop was content to receive his submission, with condition that his Wife should submit her self also. But the stoutly told the Bishop, that by refusing of the Holy Water she had neither offended God, nor any part of his Laws. At the which words the Bishop being grievously offended, yet because she was a Gentle Woman, he would not take her at the worst (as he said) he gave her one Months respite, binding her Husband in an hundred pound to bring her again unto him at the Months end, and so they were both let go.

When they came to their own Houfe, the said Mistris Joyce Lewes gave her self to most diligent prayer, and invoking of the name of God, resorting continually to the abovenamed Man of God, Master John Glover, who did most diligently instruct her with Gods Word, willing her in any case not to meddle with that matter in respect of vaine glory, or to get her self a name, shewing her the great dangers she was like to cast her self in, if she should meddle in Gods matter otherwise than Christ doth teach.

When the Month was now almost expired, and the time at hand that she should be brought before the said Bishop her Husband being advertised by the said Mr. John Glover and others, not to carry her to the Bishop, but to seek some ways to save her, or if the worst should come, to be content to forfeit so much Money, rather than to cast his own Wife into the fire: He answered, he would not loose or forfeit any thing for her sake: and so, like a murderer of his own Wife, he carried her to the bloody Bp. where she was examined, and found more stout, than she was before Death was threatened. And to begin withal, she was sent to such a stinking prison, that a certain maid, which was appointed to keep her company, did swoon in the same prison.

Being thus kept in prison, and oftentimes examined, and ever found stout, at the length she was brought in judgment, and pronounced an Heretick worthy to be burned. When the Bishop reasoned with her, why she could not come to the Maie, and receive the Sacraments and Sacramentals of the Holy Ghost: she answered, Because I find not these things in Gods Word, which you so urge and magnifie, as things most needful for mens Salvation. If these things were in the same Word of God commanded, I would with all my Heart, receive, esteeme, and believe them. The Bishop answered, If thou wilt believe no more than is in the Scripture, concerning matters of Religion, thou art in a Damnable case. At which words she was wonderfully amazed, and being moved by the Spirit of God, told the Bishop, that his words were ungodly and wicked.

After her condemnation, she continued a whole twelve Months in prison, because she was committed to the Sheriff that was of late chosen, who could not be compelled to put her to Death in his time, as he affirmed: for the which things, after her Death, he was sore troubled and in danger of his Life. All that time she was in prison, her behaviour was such both in words and deeds, that all they, that had any spark of godliness or honesty, did greatly lament her case, that she should be put to Death.

Now when the time did draw near the which God had appointed for her Deliverance, the Writ De committendo (as they term it) being brought down from London, the desired certain of her Friends, to come to her, with whom when they came, she consulted how she might behave her self, that her Death might be more glorious to the Name of God, Comfortable to his People, and also most Discomfortable unto the Enemies of God. As for Death (said she) I do not greatly pafs: when I behold the amiable Countenance of Christ my dear Saviour the Ouglesome Face of Death doth not greatly trouble mee. In the which time also she reasoned most comfortably out of Gods Word, of Gods election and reprobation.

In the evening, before the day of her suffering, two of the Priests of the clofe of Litchfield, came to the under Sheriffs Houfe where she lay, and sent word to her by the Sheriff, that they were come to hear her Confession: for they would be sorry she should die without. She sent them word again, she had made her Confession to Christ her Saviour, at whose hands she was sure to have forgiveness of her sins. As concerning the cause for the which she should die, she had no cause to confess that, but rather to give unto God most humble praise, that he did make her worthy to suffer Death for his Word: And as concerning that Absolution that they were able to give unto her, being authorized by the Pope, she did desire the same, even from the bottom of her Heart. The which thing when the Priests heard they said to the Sheriff, Well, to morrow her stoutness will be proved and tryed. For although perhaps she hath now some Friends that whisper her in her ears, to morrow we will see who dare be so hardy as to come near her: and so they went their ways with anger, that their confession and absolution was nought set by.

All that night she was wonderfully cheerful and merry, with a certain gravity, in so much that the Majesty of the Spirit of God did manifestly appear in her, who did expel the fear of Death out of her Heart, spending the time in prayer, readings, and talking with them that were purposely come unto her, to comfort her with the Word of God.

About three of the clock in the mornings, Satan (who never sleepeth, especially when Death is at hand) began to stir himself busily, shooting at her that fiery dart the which he is wont to do against all that are at defiance with him, questioning with her, how she could tell that she was chosen to eternal Life, and that Christ dyed for her. I grant that he dyed, but that he dyed for thee how canst thou tell; with this suggestion when she was troubled, they that were about her did counsel her to follow the example of Paul, Galatians 2. where he saith, Which hath loved me, and given himself for me. Alfo, that her vocation and calling to the knowledge of Gods Word, was a manifest token of Gods love towards her, especially that same Holy Spirit of God working in her Heart, that love and desire towards God to please him, and to be justified by him through Christ, &c. By these and like persuasions, and especially by the comfortable promises of Christ, brought out of the Scripture, Satan was put to flight, and shee comforted in Christ.

About eight of the clock, Mr. Sheriff came to her into her Chamber, saying these words, Mistris Lewes, I am come to bring you tidings of the Queens pleasure, the which is, that you shall live no longer but one hour in this world: therefore prepare your self thereunto, it standeth you in hand. At which words, being so grossly uttered, and so suddenly by such an officer as he was free was somewhat abashed. Wherefore one of her Friends and acquaintance standing by, said these words, Mistris Lewes, you have great cause to praise God, who will vouchsafe so speedily to take you out of this world, and make you worthy to be a witness of his truth, and to bear record unto Christ, that he is the only Saviour.

After the which words spoken thus, shee said, Master Sheriff your message is welcome to mee, and I thank my God

Joyce Lewes comforted in her temptations.

Anno 1557. God that he will make me worthy to Adventure my Life in his quarrel. And thus Mr. Sheriff departed: and within the space of one hour he came again, cum gladiis & fustibus; and when he came up into the Chamber, one of her Friends desired him to give him leave to go with her to the stake, and to comfort her, the which the Sheriff granted at that time, but afterwards he was fore troubled for the same, when she was dead.

Now when she was brought through the Town with a number of Bill-men, a great multitude of People being present, she being led by two of her Friends (which were Mr. Michael Reniger, and Mr. Augustine Bernier) (he was brought to the place of execution: and because the place was far off, and the throng of the People great, and the not acquainted with the fresh ayre (being so long in prison) one of her Friends sent a messenger to the Sheriff's House for some drink; and after he had prayed three several times, in the which prayer he desired God most instantly to abolish the Idolatrous Mass, and to deliver this Realm from Papistry (at the end of the which prayers the most part of the people cried Amen, yea, even the Sheriff that stood hard by her, ready to cut her in the fire for not allowing the Mass, at this her prayer said with the rest of the people, Amen), when she had thus prayed, she took the Cup into her Hands, saying; I drinke to all them that unadvisedly love the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and wish for the abolishment of Papistry.

When she had drunk, they that were her Friends drank also. After that a great number, specially the Women of the Town did drink with her; which afterward were put to open penance in the Church by the cruel Papists, for drinking with her.

When she was tied to the stake with the Chain she shewed such a cheerfulness, that it passed mans reason, being so well coloured in her face, and being so patient, that the most part of them that had honest hearts did lament, and even with tears bewail the Tyranny of the Papists. When the fire was set upon her, the neither struggled nor stirred, but only lifted up her hands towards Heaven, being dead very speedily: for the Under-Sheriff at the request of her Friends had provided such stuff, by the which she was suddenly dispatched out of this miserable world.

This amongst other things may not be forgotten, that the Papists had appointed some to rail upon her openly, and to revile her, as she went to the place of execution, and also when she came at the stake. Amongst others there was an old Priest, which had a pair of writing Tables to note both the names of the Women that drank of her Cup (as before you heard,) and also described her Friends by their apparel, for presently he could not learn their names, and afterwards enquired for their names: and so immediately after Process was sent out for them, both to Coventry and other places: but God whose providence sleeps not, did defend them from the hands of these cruel tyrants. Unto the which God, with the Son and the Holy Ghost, be honour and glory for ever, Amen.

The Martyrdom of Ralph Allerton, James Austoo, Margery Austoo, and Richard Roth, burned at Hillingdon. In searching out the certain number of the faithful Martyrs of God that suffered within the time and Reign of Queen Mary, I find, that about the seven-teenth day of September, were burned at Hillingdon, nigh unto London, these four constant Professors of Christ, Ralph Allerton, James Austoo, Margery Austoo, his Wife, and Richard Roth. Among the which, it first appeareth that this Ralph Allerton was, more then a year before his condemnation, apprehended and brought before the Lord Darcy of Chichester, and was there accused, as well for that he would not consent and come unto the Idolatry and Superstition which then was used, as also that he had by preaching enticed others to do the like.

Being then hereupon examined, hee confessed that he coming into his Parish of Bentley, and seeing the People sitting there, either gazing about, or else talking together, he exhorted them that they would fall unto prayer, and meditation of Gods most Holy Word, and not sit still idly. Whereunto they willingly consented. Then after prayer ended, he read unto them a Chapter of the New Testament, and so departed.

In the which exercise he continued until Calendmas, and then being informed that he might not so do by the Law (for that he was no Priest or Minister) he held off, and kept himself close in his house until Easter then next after. At what time, certain Sworn Men for the inquiry of such matters, came unto his house, and attached him for reading in the Parish of Helling.

But when they understood that he had read but once, and that it was of obedience (whereunto he earnestly moved the People) they let him for that time depart. Nowwithstanding for fear of their cruelty; he was not long after constrained to forsake his own house, and keep himself in Woods, Barns, and other solitary places, until the time of his apprehension.

After this examination, the Lord Darcy sent him unto the Council; but they (not minding to trouble themselves with him unto Boner who by threatenings and other subtle means, so abused the simple and fearful heart of this Man (as yet not thoroughly layd upon the ayd and help of God) that within short time he won him to his most wicked will, and made him openly at Pauls Cross to revoke and recant his former profession, and thereupon set him at liberty of Body. Which yet brought such a bondage and Terror of Soul and Conscience, and so cast him down, that except the Lord (whose mercies are immeasurable) had supported and lift him up again, he had perished for ever.

But the Lord, who never suffereth his elect Children utterly to fall, casting his pitiful eyes upon his lost sheep, with his merciful and Fatherly Condescensions, did (with Peter) raise him up again, giving unto him not only hearty and unfeigned repentance, but also a most constant boldness to profess again (even unto the Death) his most holy name and glorious Gospel, Wherefore at the procurement of one Thomas Iye Priest, sometime an earnest professor of Christ, but now a fierce Persecutor of the same (as appeareth more at large before in the history of William Muns and his wife) he was again apprehended, and set up again unto Boner, before whom he was the eighth day of April, and sundry other times examined. The report of which examination, written by his own hand with Blood for lack of other ink, hereafter followeth.

The Examination of Ralph Allerton at his second apprehension, appearing before the Bishop of London at Fulham, the eighth day of April, Anno 1557, written by himself, with his own Blood.

Boner. Ah firrah, how chanceth it that you are come hither again on this fashion? I dare say thou art accused wrongfully.

Ralph. Yea my Lord so I am. For if I were guilty of such things as I am accused of, then would be very sorry.

Boner. By Saint Mary that is not well done. But let me hear, Art thou an honest Man? for if I can prove no Heresie by thee, then shall thine Accusers do thee no harm at all. Go to, let me hear thee: for I did not believe the tale to be true.

Ralph. My Lord, who did accuse me? I pray you let me know, and what is mine accusation, that I may answer thereunto.

Boner. Ah, wilt thou so? Before God if thou hast not dissembled, then thou needest not be afraid, nor ashamed to answer for thy self. But tell me in Faith, hast thou not dissembled?

Ralph. If I cannot have mine accusers to accuse me before you, my Conscience doth constrain me to accuse my self before you: For I confess that I have grievously offended God in my dissimulation at my last being before your Lordship, for the which I am right sorry, as God knoweth.

Boner. Wherein I pray thee, didst thou dissemble, when thou wast before me?

Ralph. Forsooth my Lord, if your Lordship remember, I did set my hand upon a certain writing, the contents whereof (as I remember) were, That I did believe in all things as the Catholick Church teacheth, &c. In the which I did not disclose my mind, but shamefully dissembled, because I made no difference between the True Church and the untrue Church.

Boner. Nay, but I pray thee let me hear more of this gear. For I fear me thou wilt smell of an Heretick anon. Which is the True Church, as thou sayest? Dost thou not call the Hereticks Church the True Church, or the Catholick Church of Christ? Now which of these two are the True Church, sayst thou? Go to, for in Faith I will know of thee ere I leave thee.

Ralph. As concerning the Church of Hereticks, I utterly abhor the same, as detestable and abominable be false God, with all their enormities and Heresies: and the Church Catholick is that I only embrace whose Doctrine is sincere, pure and true.

Boner. By S. Augustine, but that is well said of thee. For by God Almighty, if thou hadst allowed the Church of Hereticks, I would have burned thee with fire for thy labour.

Morton. Then said one Morton a Priest, My Lord, you know not yet what Church it is that he calleth Catholick. I warrant you he meaneth naughtily enough.

Boner. Think you so? Now by our blessed Lady, if it be so, he might have deceived me. How say you, firrah, which is the Catholick Church?

Ralph. Even that which hath received the wholesome sound, spoken of Ezay, David, Malachy, and Paul, with many other more. The which sound, as it is written, hath gone throughout all the Earth in every place, and unto the ends of the world.

Boner. Yea, thou sayest true before God. For this is the sound that hath gone throughout all Christendom, and he that believeth not the sound of the Holy Church, as St. Cyprian saith, doth err. For he saith, that whoever is out of the Church, is like unto them that were out of Noah's ship when the flood came upon all the whole world; so that the Ark of Noah is likened unto the Church: and therefore thou hast well said in thy confession. For the Church is not alone in Germany, nor was here in England in the time of the late Schisme, as the Hereticks do affirm. For if the Church should be there alone, then were Christ a liar. For he promised that the Holy Ghost should come to us, lead us unto all truth, yea, and remain with us unto the end of the world. So now if we will take Christ for a true sayer, then must we needs affirm, that the way which is taught in France, Spain, Italy, Flanders, Denmark, Scotland, and all Christendom over, must needs be the True Catholick Church.

Ralph. My Lord, if you remember, I spake of all the world, as it is written, and not of all Christendom only, as me thinks your Lordship taketh it, the which kind of speaking you do not find in all the Bible. For sure I am, that the Gospel hath been both preached and persecuted in all Lands: First, in Jewry by the Scribes and Pharisees, and since that time by Nero, Dioclesian, and such like, and now here in these our days by your Lordship knoweth whom. For truth it is that the Church which you call Catholick, is none otherwise Catholick then was figured in Cain, observed of Jeroboam, Ahab, Jezabel, Nabuchodonosor, Antiochus, Herod, with innumerable more of the like: and as both Daniel and Ezdras make mention of these last days by a plain prophecy, and now fulfilled, as appeareth, and affirmed by our Saviour Christ and his Apostles, saying; There shall come grievous Wolves to devour the flock.

Boner. Now, by the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, Mr. Morton, he is the rankest Heretick that ever came before me. How say you? have you heard the like?

Morton. I thought what he was my Lord at the first, I.

Boner. Now by all Hallows thou shalt be burnt with fire for thy lying, thou whoremong'ring varlet and prick-louse thou. Dost thou find a prophecy in Daniel of us? Nay, you knave, it is of you that he speaketh of, and of your false pretended holiness. Go to, let me hear what is the saying of Ezdras, and take heed ye make not a lie, I advise you.

Ralph. The saying of Ezdras is this; The heat of a great multitude is kindled over you, and they shall take away certain of you, & feed the idols with you, and be contented unto them, shall be had in derision, laughed to scorn, and trodden under foot: yea they shall be like Mad Men, for they shall spare no Man; they shall put and waste such as fear the Lord, &c.

Boner. And have you taken this thing to make your Market good? Ah firrah, wilt thou so? by my Faith a pretty instruction, and a necessary thing to be taught among the People. By my troth I think there be more of this opinion. I pray thee tell me: Is there any that understandeth this Scripture on this fashion? Before God, I think there be none in all England, but thou.

Ralph. Yes, my Lord, there are in England three Religions.

Boner. Sayest thou so? which be those three?

Ralph. The first is that which you hold, the second is clean contrary to the same; and the third is a Neuter, being indifferent: that is to say, observing all things that are commanded outwardly, as though he were of your part, his heart being set wholly against the same.

Boner. And of these three which art thou? for now thou must needs be one of them.

Ralph. Yea, my Lord, I am of one of them; and that which I am of, is even that which is contrary to that which you teach to be believed under pain of Death.

Boner. Ah fir, you were here with me at Fulham, and had good cheer, yea and money in your purse when you went away, and by my Faith I had a favour unto thee, but now I see thou wilt be a naughty knave. Why, wilt thou take upon thee to read the Scripture, and canst understand never a word? For thou hast brought a text of Scripture, the which maketh clean against thee. For Ezdras speaketh of the multitude of you Hereticks, declaring your hate against the Catholick Church, making the simple or idle people believe, that all is Idolatry that we do, and so entice them away until you have overcome them.

Ralph. Nay, not so my Lord. For he maketh it more plain, and saith on this wise; They shall take away their goods, and put them out of their houses, and then shall it be known who are my chosen (saith the Lord) for they shall be tried, as the silver or gold in the fire. And we see it so come to pass, even as he hath said. For who is not now driven from house and home, yea and his goods taken up for other Men that never sweat for them, if he do not observe as you command and set forth? Or else, if he be taken, then must he either deny the truth, as I did, in dissembling; or else he shall be sure to be tried, as Ezdras saith, even as the gold is tried in the fire. Whereby all the world may know, that you are the bloody Church, figured in Cain the Tyrant, neither yet are ye able to avoid it.

Morton. I promise you my Lord, I like him better now than ever I did, when he was here before you the other time. For then he did but dissemble, as I perceived well enough; but now me think he speaketh plainly.

Boner. Marry, fir, as you say indeed, he is plain. For he is a plain Heretick, and shall be burned. Have the knave away. Let him be carried to Little-else at London until I come.

Ralph. And so was I carried to London unto Little-else, and there remained that night, and on the next morning I appeared before him again, the Dean of Pauls and the Chancellor of London being present. Then were brought forth certain writings that I had set my hand unto.

Boner. Come on your ways, firrah. Is not this your hand, and this, and this?

Ralph. Yea, they are my hand all of them; I confess the same, neither yet will I deny any thing that I have set my hand unto. But if I have set my hand to any thing that is not lawful, therefore am I sorry. Nevertheless, my hand I will not deny to be my doing.

Boner. Well said, Now ye must tell me; Were you never at the Church since you went from me, at Mais Mattens? &c.

Ralph. No; my Lord, not at Mais Mattens, nor any other strange worshipping of God.

Boner. Yea, sayest thou so? Wast thou neither at thine own Parish Church, nor at any other? And dost thou also say, that it is a strange worshipping? Why, I pray thee, wilt thou not believe the Scripture to be true?

Ralph.

1557.

Three forms of Religion in England.

The place of Ezdras explained.

Allerton charged with his own hand writing.

Anno 1557. Ralph. Yea, my Lord, I believe the Scripture to be true, and in the defence of the same I intend to give my lik, rather then I will deny any part thereof, God willing.

Dean. My Lord, this fellow will be an honest man, I hear by him. He will not stand in his opinion; for he sheweth himself gentle and patient in his talk.

Boner. Oh, he is a glorious knave. His painted terms shall no more deceive me. Ah whoreſon Prick-loufe, doth not Christ ſay, This is my Body? And how dareſt thou deny theſe words, for to ſay, as I have a writing to ſhew, and thine own hand at the ſame? Let me ſee, wilt thou deny this? Is not this thine own hand?

Ralph. Yes, my Lord, it is my own hand, neither am I aſhamed thereof, becauſe my confeſſion therein is agreeable to Gods Word. And whereas you do lay unto my charge, that I ſhould deny the Words of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; Oh, good Lord! from whence cometh this rath, haſty, and untrue judgment? Forſooth not from the Spirit of Truth; for he leadeth Men into all Truth, and is not the Father of lyars. Whereupon ſhould your Lordſhip gather or ſay of me ſo diffamouſly? Wherefore, I beſeech you, if I deny the Scriptures Canonical, or any part thereof, then let me die.

Tye the Prieſt. My Lord, he is a very ſeditious fellow, and perſwadeth other men to do as he himſelf doth, contrary to the order appointed by the Queens Highneſſe and the Clergy of this Realm. For a great fort of the Pariſh will be gathered one day to one place, and another day to another place to hear him; ſo that very few come to the Church to hear divine Service: and this was not only before that he was taken and brought unto the Council, but alſo ſince his return home again, he hath done much harm. For where both Men and Women were honeſtly diſpoſed before, by Saint Anne now are they as ill as he almoſt. And furthermore; he was not alhamed to withſtand me before all the Pariſh, ſaying, that we were of the malignant Church of Anti-chriſt, and not of the True Church of Chriſt, alledging a great many of Scriptures to ſerve for his purpoſe, ſaying; Good People, take heed, and beware of theſe Blood-thirſty Dogs, &c. And then I commanded the Conſtable to apprehend him, and ſo he did. Nevertheless, after this apprehenſion, the Conſtable let him go about his buſineſſ all the next day, ſo that without putting in of Sureties, he let him go into Suffolke and other places, for no goodneſſ; I warrant you my Lord: It were Alms to teach ſuch Officers their duty; how they ſhould let ſuch Rebels alſo at their own liberty; after that they be apprehended and taken, but to keep them faſt in the Stocks until they bring them before a Juſtice.

Ralph. As I ſaid before, ſo ſay I now again; thou art not of the Church of Chriſt, and that will I prove, if I may be ſuffered. And where you ſaid, that you commanded the Conſtable to apprehend me, you did ſo indeed, contrary to the Laws of this Realm, having neither to lay unto my charge, Treafon, Felony, nor Murder: No, neither had you Precept, Proceſs, nor Warrant to ſerve on me; and therefore I ſay, without a Law was I apprehended. And whereas you ſeek to trouble the Conſtable, becauſe he kept me not in the Stocks three days and three nights, it doth ſhew in part what you are: And my going into Suffolke was not for any evil, but only to buy half a Buſhel of Corn for Bread for my poor Wife and Children, knowing that I had no long time to tarry with them. But if I had run away, then you would ſurely have laid ſomewhat to his charge.

Boner. Go to, thou art a Merchant indeed. Ah firrah, before God thou ſhalt be burnt with fire. Thou knoweſt Richard Rabiſ; doſt thou not? Is he of the ſame mind that thou art of, or no? canſt thou tell?

Ralph. He is of age to anſwer; let him ſpeak for himſelf; for I hear ſay that he is in your houſe.

Bon. Loe what a knave here is. Go Clany, fetch me Rabiſ hither. By my troth he is a falſe knave; but yet thou art worſe than he. Ah firrah, did you not ſet your hand to a writing, the tenor whereof was, that if thou ſhould at any time fayor do Heretically, then it ſhould be lawfull for me to take thee with a reſcap, and to proceed in ſentence againſt thee?

Ralph. Yea, that is ſo. But here is to be asked, whether it be ſufficient, that my hand or name in writing be able to give Authority to you or to any other to kill me? For if I by writing can do ſo much, then muſt my Authority be greater then yours. Nevertheless, I have neither ſaid nor done heretically, but like a True Chriſtian man have I behaved my ſelf. And ſo I was committed unto priſon again, and the 24. day of the ſame Month, I was brought before the Biſhop, the Lord North, Dr. Starry, and others, and after a long talk in Latine amongſt themſelves (unto the which I gave no anſwer, becauſe they ſpoke not to me, although they ſpoke of me) at the laſt the Biſhop ſaid:

Boner. How ſay you firrah? tell me briefly at one word, wilt thou be contented to go to Kilburn with me, and there to kneel thee down at Maſſ, ſhewing thy ſelf outwardly as though thou diſt it with a good will? Go to, ſpeak.

Ralph. I will not ſay ſo.

Boner. Away with him, away with him.

The ſecond day of May I was brought before the Biſhop, and three Noble Men of the Council, whoſe names I do not remember.

Boner. Lo my Lords, this ſame is the fellow that was ſent unto me from the Council, and did ſubmit himſelf, ſo that I had half a hope of him: but by St. Anne I was always in doubt of him. Nevertheless, he was with me, and ſaid well; and when I delivered him, I gave him money in his purſe. How ſaiſt thou? was it not ſo as I tell my Lords here?

Ralph. Indeed my Lord I had meat and drink enough; but I never came in bed all the while. And at my departing you gave me twelve pence, howbeit I asked none, nor would have done.

A Lord. Be good to him my Lord. He will be a honeſt Man.

Boner. Before God, how ſhould I truſt him? He hath once deceived me already. But ye ſhall hear what he will ſay to the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar. How ſay you firrah? after the words of Conſecration be ſpoken by the Prieſt, there remaineth no bread, but the very Body of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, God and Man, and none other ſubſtance, under the form of Bread.

Ralph. Where find you that, my Lord, written?

Boner. Lo Sir. Why? Doth not Chriſt ſay, This is my Body? How ſaiſt thou? Wilt thou deny theſe words of our Saviour Chriſt? Or elſe was he a diffembler, ſpeaking one thing, and meaning another? Go to, now I have taken you.

Ralph. Yea, my Lord, you have taken me indeed, and will keep me untill you kill me. Howbeit, my Lord, I marvel why you leave out the beginning of the inſtitution of the ſupper of our Lord? For Chriſt ſaid; Take ye, and Eat ye, this is my Body. And if it will pleaſe you to joyn the former words to the latter, then ſhall I make you an anſwer. For ſure I am, that Chriſt was no diffembler; neither did he ſay one thing, and mean another.

Boner. Why? Then muſt thou needs ſay, that it is his Body; for he ſaith it himſelf, and thou confeſſeſt that he will not lie.

Ralph. No, my Lord; he is true, and all men are lyars. Notwithſtanding, I utterly reſuſe to take the Words of our Saviour ſo fantastically as you teach us to take them: for then ſhould we conſpire with certain Hereticks called the Neforians; for they deny that Chriſt had a true natural Body, and ſo methink you do; my Lord. If you will affirm his Body to be there, as you ſay he is, then muſt you needs alſo affirm, that it is a fantactical Body; and therefore look to it for Gods ſake, and let theſe words go before; Take ye and Eat ye, without which words the reſt are not ſufficient; but when the worthy receivers do take and Eat, even then are fulfilled the words of our Saviour unto him, or every of them that ſo receiveth.

Boner. Ah, I feel well thou canſt not underſtand theſe words; I will ſhew thee a Parable. If I ſhould ſet a piece of Beef before thee, and ſay; Eat, it is Beef: And then take part of it away, and ſend it to my Cook; and he ſhall change the faſhion thereof, and make it look like Bread: What, wouldſt thou ſay that it were were no Beef, because it hath not the fashion of Beef?

Ralph. Let me understand a little further, my Lord; shall the Cook add nothing thereunto, nor take any thing therefrom?

Boner. What is that to the matter, whether he do or no, so long as the shape is changed into another likeness?

Ralph. Ah, will you fo my Lord? your Sophistry will not serve; the truth will have the victory nevertheless, as Esay saith; He that restraineth himself from evil, must be spoiled. And Amos hath such like words also: For the Wife must be fain to hold their peace; so wicked a time it is, saith he: Nevertheless, he that can speak the truth, and will not, shall give a strait account for the same.

A Doctor. By my Lords leave, here me thinks thou speakest like a fool. Wilt thou be a Judge of the Scripture? Nay, thou must stand to learn, and not to teach; for the whole Congregation hath determined the matter long ago.

A Priest. No, by your leave, we have a Church, and not a Congregation. You mistake that word, Mr. Dr.

Ralph. Then said I to my fellow prisoners standing by; My Brethren, do ye not hear how these Men help one another? Let us do so also. But we never came all in together. Then was I carried away for that time. The 19. day of May I was brought before the Bishop of Rocheſter, and Chicheſter, with others.

B. Rocheſt. Were you a companion of George Eagles, otherwise called Trudgeover? My Lord of London telleth me that you were his fellow companion.

Ralph. I know him very well, my Lord.

Rocheſt. By my Faith, I had him once, and then he was as drunk as an Ape, for he flunk fo of drink, that I could not abide him; and so sent him away.

Ralph. My Lord, I dare say you took your mark amiss. It was either your self, or some of your own company, for he did neither drink Wine, Ale, nor Beer, in a quarter of a year before that time; and therefore it was not he forsooth.

The rest of mine Examinations you shall have when I am condemned, if I can have any time after my coming into Newgate, the which I trust shall touch the matter a great deal more plainly; for the pithy matters are yet unwritten. Thus fare you well good Friends all. Yea, I say, farewell for ever in this present world. Greet ye one another, and be joyful in the Lord. Salute the good widows among you, with all the rest of the Congregation in Berford, and Dedham, and Colcheſter.

This promise of his, being either not performed, for that he might not thereto be permitted, or else if he did write, the same not coming to my hands. I am fain in the rest of his examinations to follow the only report of the Register; who witnesseth, that the 15. day of May, Anno 1557. in the Bishops Palace at London, he was examined upon certain Interrogatories, the contents whereof be these.

Articles ministred against Ralph Allerton.

First, that he was of the Parish of Machbentley, and so of the Diocese of London.

Secondly, that the 10. day of January then last past, Mr. John Morant preaching at Pauls, the said Ralph Allerton did there openly submit himself unto the Church of Rome, with the Rites and Ceremonies thereof.

Thirdly, that he did consent and subscribe as well unto the same submission, as also to one other bill, in the which he granted, that if he should at any time turn again unto his former opinions, it should be then lawful for the Bishop immediately to denounce and adjudge him as an Heretic.

Fourthly, that he had subscribed to a bill, wherein he affirmed, that in the Sacrament, after the words of Consecration be spoken by the Priest, there remaineth still material Bread and material Wine; and that he believeth that the Bread is the Bread of thanksgiving, and the memorial of Christs Death; and that when he receiveth it, he receiveth the Body of Christ spiritually in his Soul, but material Bread in substance.

Fifthly, that he had openly affirmed, and also advisedly spoken that which is contained in the said former fourth Article last before specified.

Sixthly, that he had spoken against the Bishop of Rome, with the Church and See of the same, and also against the 7. Sacraments and other ceremonies and ordinances of the same Church, used then within this Realm.

Seventhly, that he had allowed and commended the opinion and faith of Mr. Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, and others of late burned within this Realm, and believed that their opinions were good and godly.

Eighthly, that he had divers times affirmed, that the Religion used within this Realm, at the time of his apprehension, was neither good, nor agreeable to Gods Word, and that he could not conform himself thereunto.

Ninthly, that he had affirmed, that the Book of Common Prayer set forth in the Reign of King Edward the sixth, was in all parts good and godly; and that the said Ralph and his company prisoners, did daily use amongst themselves in prison some part of the Book.

Tenthly, that he had affirmed, that if he were out of prison, he would not come to Mass, Mattins, nor Evensong, nor bear Taper, Candle, or Palm, nor go in Procession, nor would receive Holy Water, Holy Bread, Athes, or Pax, or any other ceremony of the Church then used within this Realm.

Eleventhly, that he had affirmed, that if he were at liberty he would not confess his sins to any Priest, nor receive absolution of him; nor yet would receive the Sacrament of the Altar, as it was then used.

Twelfthly, that he had affirmed, that praying to Saints and prayers for the Dead, were neither good nor profitable, and that a man is not bound to fast and pray, but at his own will and pleasure; neither that it is lawful to reserve the Sacrament, or to worship it.

Thirteenthly, that the said Allerton hath, according to these his affirmations, abstained and refused to come unto his Parish Church ever since the 10. day of January last, or to use, receive, or allow any ceremonies, Sacraments, or other rites then used in the Church.

To all the Articles he answered affirmatively, denying precisely none of them; saving to this clause contained in the twelfth Article, that a Man is not bound to fast and pray but at his own will and pleasure, he said that he had affirmed no such thing, but he confessed that he had not fasted nor prayed so oft as he was bound to do. And unto this answer he also subscribed in this sort.

Except it be proved otherwise by the Holy Scriptures, I do affirm these Articles to be true. By me Ralph Allerton.

The next Examination was the fourth day of July; The Acts whereof, because they do appear more amply in his other examination, had the 10. day of September, I do here omit, giving you further to understand, that upon the seventh day of the same month of July, he was brought before Dr. Darbyshire in the Bishops Palace, who examined him again upon the former Articles, and after persuaded him to recant, threatening him that otherwise he should be burned. To whom he boldly answered, I would I might be condemned even to morrow; for I perceive my Lord (meaning Boner) doth nothing but seek Mens Blood. Upon which saying Darbyshire committed him again to prison, and the 10. day of September the Bishop caused him (with the other three abovenamed) to be brought unto Fulham, and there in his private Chapel within his house, he judicially propounded unto him certain other new Articles; of the which, the Tenors of the first, fifth, sixth, and seventh are already mentioned in the second, third, and fourth former objections: As for the rest, the contents thereof here follow, Thou Ralph Allerton canst not deny, but that the Information given against thee, and remaining now in the Acts of this Court of thine Ordinary, Edmund Bishop of London, was and is a True Information.

This Information was given by Thomas Tye, Curate of Bentley (of whom you have already heard) and certain other of the same Parish and affinity: as namely,

John

Persecutors:
 Information given against Ralph Allerton,
 by Sir
 Thomas Tye Priest, & wicked Pro-motor.

The effect whereof was, that one Lawrence Edwards, of Bentley aforesaid, had a Child that was unchristened, and being demanded by the said Tye, why his Child was not baptized, he made answer it should be when he could find one of his Religion (meaning a true professor of Christs Gospel.) Whereat the Curate said, Ah, ye have had time to utter that hath schooled you of late. Yea (quoth the said Edwards) that I have, and if your Doctrine be better then his, then I will believe you; and therewithal fondly offered to fetch him.

Whereupon the Constable going with him, they brought before the said Curate the said Ralph Allerton; of whom in this Information they make this report that he was a Seditious person who since his coming down from the Bishop, had set upon the Constables door certain Seditious Letters, moving and perswading thereby the People to follow his malicious disobedience; and that these his perswasions had taken effect in many: And farther, that the said Ralph Allerton (the Curate asking him whether he had instructed this Lawrence Edwards, that it was against Gods Commandment to enter into the Church) casting abroad his hands, should say; Oh good People, now is fulfilled the saying of the godly Priest and Prophet Ezechias, who saith, 4. Ekd. 16. The fire of a multitude is kindled against a few: they have taken away their houses, and spoiled their goods, &c. Which of you all have not seen this day? who is he here amongst you, that seeth not all these things done upon us this day? The Church which they call us unto, is the Church of Antichrist, a persecuting Church, and the Church malignant. With these and many more words (said they, most maliciously and falsely alledged out of the Scriptures) he thus perswaded a great multitude there present (as much as in him lay) unto disobedience. For the which cause the Constables did then apprehend him.

3. Item, thou Ralph Allerton canst not deny, but that the Letter sent unto me by my Lord Darcy, beginning with these words (Please it your Lordship, &c.) was thine one Letter, and was subscribed by thine own hand.

The contents of the Letter mentioned in this Article, and written by Allerton unto the Lord Darcy, was a Confession of his demeanour before his first apprehension, the effect and purport whereof, because it appeareth in the beginning of his History, I do here omit.

4. Item, thou Ralph Allerton canst not deny, but that the other Letter, sent also to me from my said Lord Darcy, beginning thus (Please it your Lordship, &c.) and ending with those words (whensoever it be) is thine own very Letter, and subscribed with thine own hand.

This was also another Letter written by him unto the Lord Darcy, the Contents whereof were, that where the said Lord Darcy had commanded him to declare where he had been ever since Whitsontide last before his first apprehension, this was to certify his Lordship, that he was not able to do so, otherwise then as he had already shewed him by his former Letters. And moreover, whereas he charged him to have read unto the People abroad in the Woods, he certified him that he did never read any thing abroad, saving once when he was in the Company of George Eagles and others, Richard Roth took a writing out of his bosom, and desired the said Ralph to read it, which request he then accomplished; and demanding of him whole doing the same was, the said Roth told that it was Master Crasmers, late Archbishop of Canterbury; and farther he could not shew him. Nevertheless, he was ready and willing to suffer such punishment as his Lordship should think meet, desiring yet that the same might be with favour and mercy, although he feared neither punishment nor death, praying the Lord, that it might be in his fear, whensoever it should be.

8. Item, thou Ralph Allerton canst not deny, but that the Letters written with Blood, beginning with these words (Grace, mercy, and peace, &c. and ending thus, (Farewell in God) remaining now registred in the Acts of this Court, were written voluntarily with thine own hand.

He wrote this Letter in the Prison with Blood for lack of other Ink, and did mean to send the same unto Agnes Smith alias Silver-side, at that time imprisoned; and afterward burned at Colchester for the testimony of the Gospel of Christ, as before is mentioned. The Copy of which Letter here ensueth.

A Letter written by Ralph Allerton, unto Agnes Smith Widow.

Grace, mercy and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ, with the assistance of Gods holy Spirit, and the abundant health both of Soul and Body, I wish unto you, as to my own Soul, as God knoweth, who is the Searcher of all secrets.

Forasmuch as it hath pleased Almighty God of his infinite mercy to call me to the state of grace, to suffer Martyrdom for Jesus Christs sake, although heretofore I have most negligently dallied therewith; and therefore far unworthy I am of such an high benefit, to be crowned with the most joyful Crown of Martyrdom: Nevertheless, it hath pleased God not so to leave me, but hath raised me up again according to his promise, which saith; Although he fall, yet shall he not be hurt: For the Lord upholdeth him with his hand, Psal. 37. Whereby we perceive Gods election to be most sure, for undoubtedly he will preserve all those that are appointed to die. And as he hath begun this work in me, even so do I believe that he will finish the same, to his great glory, and to my wealth, through Jesus Christ, So be it.

Dearly beloved Sister (I am constrained so to call you; because of your constant Faith and love unfained) consider, that if we be the true Servants of Christ, then may not we in any wise make agreement with his enemy Antichrist. For there is no concord and agreement between them, faith the Scriptures, and a man cannot serve two Masters, faith Christ. And also it is prefigured unto us in the old Law, whereas the People of God were most straitly commanded that they should not mingle themselves with the ungodly Heathen, and were also forbidden to eat, drink, or to marry with them. For as often as they did either marry unto their Sons, or take their Daughters unto them, or to their Sons, even so oft came the great and heavy wrath of God upon his own People, to overthrow both them and all their Cities, with the holy Sanctuary of God; and brought in strange Princes to reign over them, and wicked Rulers to govern them, so that they were sure of Hunger, Sword, Pestilence, and wild Beasts to devour them. Which plagues never ceased, until the good People of God were clean separated from the wicked Idolatrous People.

Oh dearly beloved, this was written for our learning that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. And is it not in like case hapned now in this Realm of England? For now are the People of God had in derision, and troden under foot, and the Cities, Towns, and Houses where they dwell, are inhabited with them that have no right thereunto, and the true owners are spoiled of their labours; yea, and the holy Sanctuary of Gods most blessed Word is laid desolate and wast, so that the very Foxes run over it, &c. yet is it the food of our Souls, the Lantern of our feet, and the Light unto our paths; and where it is not preached, the People perish. But the Prophet saith, Esay 59. He that refraineth himself from evil, must be spoiled. Why should men then be abashed to be spoiled, seeing that it is told us before, that it must so happen unto them that refrain from evil? And thus I bid you farewell in God.

R. A.

Item, thou Ralph Allerton, canst not deny, but that the Letters written with Blood, beginning with these words in the over part thereof: (The Angel of God, &c.) and ended thus (Be with you, Amen.) and having also this Postscript (Do ye suppose that our Brethren &c.) remaining now registred in the Acts of this Court, are thine own hand-writing.

9. For the better understanding of this Article, I have also here inserted the Copy of the Letter mentioned in the same; which Letter he wrote (by his own Confession) unto Richard Roth, then in danger of the subtle snares of that bloody Wolf Boner,

A Letter of
Ralph Allerton.

Another Letter written by Ralph Allerton unto Richard Roth, his fellow-Martyr.

THe Angel of God pitch his Tent about us, and defend us in all our ways, Amen, Amen.

O dear Brother, I pray for you; for I hear say, that you have been divers times before my Lord in Examination. Wherefore take heed for Gods sake what the wise man teacheth you, and shrink not away when you are enticed to confels an untruth, for hope of life, but be ready always to give an answer of the hope that is in you. For whosoever confesseth Christ before men, him will Christ also confels before his Father. But he that is ashamed to confels him before men, shall have his reward with them that do deny him. And therefore, dear Brother, go forward: ye have a ready way, so fair as ever had any of the Prophets or Apostles, or the rest of our Brethren, the holy Martyrs of God. Therefore covet to go hence with the multitude while the way is full. Alfo (dear Brother) understand that I have seen your Letter, and although I cannot read it perfectly, yet I partly perceive your meaning therein, and very gladly I would copy it out, with certain comfortable additions thereunto annexed. The which as yet will not be brought to pass for lack of Paper, until my Lord be gone from hence, and then your request shall be accomplished, God willing, without delay. Thus fare ye well in God. Our dear Brother and Fellow in tribulation, Robert Allin, saluteth you, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost be with you, Amen.

Ralph Allerton.

Postscriptum.

Do ye suppose that our Brethren and Sisters are not yet dispatched out of this world? I think that either they are dead, or shall be within these two days.

And for the other Objection yet remaining, and not specified, if it were not more somewhat to shew the folly of these bloody Tyrants (which of so small trifles take occasions to quarrel with the Saints of God) than for any weighty thing therein contained; I would neither trouble you with the reading thereof, nor yet my self with writing. But that ye may judge of them as their doings do give occasion, I will now proceed in the matter.

Item, thou Ralph Allerton canst not deny, but confest, that the writing of Letters in a little piece of Paper on both sides of it, with this Sentence following on the one side (look at the foot of the Stock for a Knife) and with this Sentence following upon the other side (look between the Post and the Wall for two Books and two Epistles, leave them here when ye go) remaining now in the Register and Acts of this Court, is voluntarily written by thee Ralph Allerton with thine own hand.

Item, thou Ralph Allerton canst not deny, but that thou art privy to a certain Writing remaining now in the Register and Acts of this Court, the beginning whereof is with these words (I would have men wise, &c.) and ending thus (from house to house).

Item, thou Ralph Allerton canst not deny, but that thou art privy, and of consent and maintenance of a certain great Woodknife, a long Sword, a Hook, a Stone and of a Trencher written upon with Chalk, having this Sentence (All is gone and lost, because of your folly;) of two Boords written upon with Chalk, the one having this Sentence (under the Stone look) and the other having this Sentence (whereas you bid me take heed, I thank you, I trust in God that I shall be at peace with him shortly) remaining now Registered in the Acts of this Court.

Answers to the Articles
Ex Regist.

For answer unto all these Articles, he granted that the first Nine were true, as the Register recordeth. Howbeit, I find noted in the backside of the Information, specified in the second Article (although crossed out again) that he denied such things as were there in the same informed against him. Wherefore it is not likely that he did simply grant unto the contents of the second Article, but rather that he only affirmed, that such an Information was given against him, and not that the same was true.

Thus much I thought to warn the Reader of, lest that in mistaking his answers, it might seem, that he granted himself to be a seditious and a Rebellious Person; of which fact he was most clear and innocent. And being farther demanded upon the contents of the eighth Article, where he had the Blood he wrote that Letter withal; he said, that Richard Roth, sometime his Prison-fellow, did make his Nose bleed, and thereby he got the Blood wherewith he did then write. The Bishop again asked him, to whom he would have sent the same. He answered unto one Agnes Smith alias Silver-side, of Colchester. Why (quoth the Bishop) Agnes Smith was an Heretic, and is burned for Heresy. Nay, said Allerton, she is in better case, than either I my self, or any of us all. Then being again demanded (upon the ninth Objection) to whom he would have sent the Letter mentioned in the same; he answered, that he meant to have sent it unto Richard Roth, at that present separated from him. Whereupon the Bishop farther inquired, what he meant by these words Brethren and Sisters, specified in the said Letter? He answered, that he meant thereby, such as were lately condemned at Colchester, and were like (at the writing thereof) shortly to be burned. Now as for the contents of the tenth and the eleventh Articles he utterly denied them. But to the twelfth he confest, that he writ upon the said Trencher and other Boords, the words mentioned in the said Article, and that he did leave the same in the Prison-house, to the intent that Richard Roth should read them. Boner also bringing out the Wooden Sword, mentioned in the said Article, asked him who made it, and for what purpose. Whereunto he answered, that he was the maker thereof, howbeit for no evil purpose. But being idle in the Prison, and finding there an old Boord, he thought the time better spent in making thereof, then to sit still, and do nothing at all.

The forenoon being now spent, the rest of this tragedy was deferred until the afternoon. Wherein was manifested unto him yet certain other Objections, the tenor whereof was.

First, that he had misliked the Mass, calling upon Other Objections, Saints, and carrying the Cross in Procession, with other their Ceremonies, calling them Idolatry, and also that he had disfavoured them therefrom.

2. Item, that he was much desirous to have the People believe as he did; and therefore being in Prison with his Fellows, did sing Psalms and other Songs against the Sacrament of the Altar, and other Ordinances of the Church, so loud that the People abroad might hear them and delight in them.

3. Item, that he had divers times conspired against his Keeper, and had provided things to kill him, and so to break the Prison, and escape away.

4. Item, that he had railed against the Bishop, being his Ordinary, calling him a bloody Butcher, Tyrant, and ravening Wolf, and also against his Officers, especially Cluny his Sumner, calling him Butchers Cur, with other such names.

5. Item, that he had murmured, grudged, disdained and misliked, that the Bishop had proceeded against certain of his Dioceses, and had condemned them as Heretics, or that he should proceed now against him and others yet remaining in errors, notwithstanding that he and his Chaplains had charitably admonished and exhorted them from the same.

6. Item, that he ought faithfully to believe, that there is one Catholick Church, without the which there is no salvation; of the which Church Jesus Christ is the very Priest and Sacrifice, whose Body and Blood is really and truly contained in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the forms of Bread and Wine; the Bread and Wine being by the divine power transubstantiated into his Body and Blood.

7. Item, that he had kept himself, and also distributed to others certain heretical and corrupt Books, condemned and reprobated by the Laws of this Realm.

8. Item,

Anno

1557.

A 000
1557.

8. Item, that he had contrary to the orders and Statutes of this Realm kept Company with that seditious Heretick and Traytor, George Eagles, commonly called Trudgeover, and had heard him read in Woods and other places, yet not accusing but allowing and praising him.

Unto which Articles, because they were for the most part so foolish and full of lies, he would in a manner make no answer, saying he granted that he did mislike their Mass and other Ceremonies, because they were wicked and naught. And moreover, he told the Bishop, that he and his complices did nothing but seek how to kill Innocents.

The Bishop then asked him, whether he would believe in all points touching the Sacrament of the Altar, as is contained in the General Council holden and kept under Innocentius the Third, and therewithal he did read the Decree of the said Council touching the Sacrament.

Whereunto Allerton again made answer and said; I believe nothing contained in the same Council, neither have I any thing to do therewith; and it were also very necessary, that no man else should have to do therewith.

Then (quoth Boner) thou art of the Opinion that the Hereticks lately burnt at Colchester were of.

Yes, said he, I am of their Opinion, and I believe that they be Saints in Heaven.

This done, the Bishop perceiving that he would not recant, demanded what he had to say, why he should not pronounce the Sentence of Condemnation against him. To whom he answered, Ye ought not to condemn a man Heretick, for I am a good Christian. But now go to, do as you have already determined: For I see right well, that Right and Truth be suppressed, and cannot appear upon the Earth.

These words ended, the Bishop pronounced the Sentence of Condemnation, and so delivered him unto the temporal Officers: Who reserved him in their custody until the 17. day of September, at which time, both he and the other three before mentioned, were all burned, as ye have already heard. Of which other three, because as yet little is said, I will therefore now proceed to declare such cause of their cruel deaths, as in the Register is recorded.

James Austoo, and Margery his Wife

Examination of James Austoo and Margery his Wife.

Touching the first Apprehension of these two persons, I find neither occasion why, neither time, nor manner how: Howbeit, as the days then served, it was no hard or strange matter to fall into the hands of such, as with cruelty persecuted the true Professors of Gods Gospel, especially having so many Promoters, and unneighbourly neighbours to help them forwards. By which kind of People, it is not unlike these two godly yoke-fellows were accused and taken; and being once delivered into the pitiless handling of Boner, their Examinations (ye may be sure) were not long deferred. For the 16. day of July 1557. they were brought before him into his place at London. Where first he demanded of the said James Austoo (amongst other questions) where he had been confessed in. Lent, and whether he received the Sacrament of the Altar at Easter, or not?

To whom he answered, That indeed he had been confessed of the Curate of Albhallows Barking, nigh to the Tower of London, but that he had not received the Sacrament of the Altar; for he defied it from the bottom of his heart.

Why (quoth the Bishop) dost thou not believe, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is the true Body and Blood of Christ?

No, said Austoo, not in the Sacrament of the Altar, but in the Supper of the Lord, to the Faithful Receiver is the very Body and Blood of Christ by Faith.

Boner not well pleased with this talk, asked then the Wife, how she did like the Religion then used in this Church of England?

She answered, that she believed, that the same was not according to Gods Word. but false and corrupted, and that they which did go thereunto, did it more for fear of the Law, than otherwise.

Then he again asked her, if she would go to the Church and hear Mass; and pray for the Prosperous estate of the King, being then abroad in his Affairs.

Whereunto the said, that she defied the Mass with all her heart, and that she would not come into any Church wherein were Idols.

After this the Bishop objected unto them certain Articles, to the number of eighteen. The Tenor whereof (because they touch only such common and trifling matters as are already mentioned in divers and sundry places before) I do here for brevities sake omit and pass over; giving you yet this much to understand; that in the matters of Faith they were as found, and answered as truly (God be therefore praised) as ever any did, especially the Woman, to whom the Lord had given the greater knowledge, and more ferventness of Spirit. Notwithstanding according to the measure of grace that God gave them, they both stood most firmly unto the truth. And therefore to conclude, the tenth day of September they were (with Ralph Allerton, of whom ye have heard) brought again before the Bishop within his Chappel at Fulham, where he speaking unto them, said first on this wise; Austoo, dost thou know where thou art now, and in what place, and before whom, and what thou hast to do?

Yes (quoth Austoo) I know where I am: For I am in an Idols Temple.

After which words, their Articles being again read, and their Constancy in Faith perceived, Boner pronounced against either of them severally the Sentence of Condemnation, and delivering them unto the Sheriff there present, did rid his hands (as he thought) of them; but the Lord in the end will judge that: to whom I refer his cause.

It so happened upon a night, that as this Margery Austoo was in the Bishops Prison (which Prison I suppose was his Dog-Kennel; for it was, as is reported, under a pair of Stairs,) by the Bishops procurement there was sent a stout Champion (as appeared) about twelve of the Clock at night, who suddenly opened the door, and with a Knife drawn, or ready prepared, fell upon her, to the intent to have cut her Throat. Which he by reason of the clearness of the Moon perceiving, and calling unto God for help, he (but who it was the knew not) giving a grunt, and fearing belike to commit to cruel a deed, departed his ways without any more hurt doing.

The next night following, they caused a great rumbling to be made over her head, which seemed to her to have been some great Thunder, which they did to have feared her out of her wits, but yet, thanks be to God, they missed of their purpose.

Richard Roth.

IN the godly fellowship of the forenamed three Martyrs, was also this Richard Roth, as is already specified. Who being apprehended, and brought up unto the Bishop of London, was by him examined the fourth day of July; at what time the Bishop did earnestly travel to induce him to believe that there were seven Sacraments in Christs Church, and that in the Sacrament of the Altar (after the words of Consecration duly spoken) there remained the very substance of Christs Body and Blood, and none other. Whereunto (at that present) he made only this answer; that if the Scripture did so teach him, and that he might be by the same so persuaded, he would so believe, otherwise not. But at another Examination (which was the 9. day of September) he declared plainly, that in the said Sacrament of the Altar as it was then used there was not the very Body and Blood of Christ, but that it was a dead God, and that the Mass was detestable, and contrary to Gods holy word and will, from the which Faith and Opinion he would not go or decline.

The next day, being the tenth day of the same month of September, the Bishop at his house at Fulham (by way of an Article) laid and objected against him; that he was a comforter and bolder of Heretics; and therefore had written a Letter to that effect unto certain that were burned at Colchester; the Copy whereof ensued.

The Martyrdom of Ralph Allerton, James Austbo, Margery Austbo, Richard Roth, Anno 1557. Sep. 17.

The Martyrdom of Margaret Thurlston, Agnes Bongcor, at Colchester. Anno 1557. Sep. 17.

A Letter written by Richard Roth, unto certain Brethren and Sisters in Christ, condemned at Colchester, and ready to be burned for the Testimony of the Truth.

A Letter of
R. Roth.

O Dear Brethren and Sisters, how much have you to rejoyce in God, that he hath given you such Faith to overcome this Blood-thirsty Tyrant thus far? and no doubt he that hath begun that good work in you, will fulfil it unto the end. O dear hearts in Christ, what a Crown of glory shall ye receive with Christ in the Kingdom of God? Oh that it had been the good will of God that I had been ready to have gone with you. For I lie in my Lords Little-chaise in the day, and in the night I lie in the Cole-house, from Ralph Allerton, or any other: and we look every day when we shall be condemned. For he said, that I should be burned within ten days before Easter; but I lie still at the Pools brink, and every man goeth in before me: but we abide patiently the Lords leisure, with many bonds, in fetters and stocks; by the which we have received great joy in God. And now fare you well dear Brethren and Sisters, in this world, but I trust to see you in the Heavens face to face.

Oh Brother Munt, with your Wife and my dear Sister Rofe, how blessed are you in the Lord, that God hath found you worthy to suffer for his sake? with all the rest of my dear Brethren and Sisters known and unknown. O be joyful even unto death. Fear is not, faith Christ; for I have overcome death, faith he. Oh dear hearts! seeing that Jesus Christ will be our help, Oh tarry you the Lords leisure. Be strong, let your hearts be of good comfort, and wait you still for the Lord. He is at hand. Yea, the Angel of the Lord pitcheth his Tent round about them that fear him, and delivereth them which way he seeth best. For our lives are in the Lords hands; and they can do nothing unto us before God suffer them. Therefore give all thanks to God.

Oh dear hearts! you shall be clothed with long white garments upon the mount Zion, with the multitude of Saints, and with Jesus Christ our Saviour, which will never forsake us. Oh blessed Virgins! ye have played the wife Virgins part, in that you have taken Oyl in your Lamps, that ye may go in with the Bridegroom, when he cometh, into the everlasting joy with him. But as for the foolish, they shall be shut out, because they made not themselves ready to suffer with Christ, neither go about to take up his Cross. Oh dear hearts, how precious shall your death be in the fight of the Lord? for dear is the death of his Saints. O fare you well, and pray. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all, Amen. Amen. Pray, pray, pray.

By me Richard Roth, written with my own Blood.

This Letter he confessed indeed (upon the said Examination) that he had written with his Blood, and that he meant to have sent the same unto such as were condemned at Colchester for the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and were afterwards burned there, as ye have already heard.

The Bishop then farther asked him, what he thought his Prison-fellow Ralph Allerton to be.

He answered, that he thought him to be one of the The Elect Children of God; and that if at any time hereafter he happened to be put to death for his Faith and Religion, he thought he should die a true Martyr. And moreover, finding himself aggrieved with the Bishops privy and secret condemning of Gods People, he said unto him in this sort; My Lord, because the People should not see and behold your doings, ye cause me and others to be brought to our Examinations by night, being afraid (belike) to do it by day.

The Bishop not greatly caring for his talk, proceeded to examine him of other matters, amongst which this high and weighty thing was one, videlicet, how he did like the Order and Rites of the Church then used here in England.

To whom he said, that he ever had, and yet then did abhor the same withal his heart.

Then divers of the Bishops Complices intreated and persuaded him to recant, and ask mercy of the Bishop.

No (quoth Roth) I will not ask mercy of him that cannot give it. Whereupon he was (as the rest before mentioned) condemned and delivered unto the Sheriff, and the 17. day of September they all most joyfully fended their lives in one fire at Ilington, for the Testimony of Christ, as before is declared.

Agnes Bongcor, and Margaret Thurston, two goodly Christian Women, burnt at Colchester for the sincere profession of Christs Gospel.

A Little before (gentle Reader) was mention made of ten that suffered Martyrdom at Colchester, at which time there were two other Women also, one called Margaret Thurston, and the other Agnes Bongcor, that should have suffered with them, and were likewise condemned at the same time and place that the other above named ten were, for the like cause, and answered also in their examinations the like in effect as the other did. But the one, namely Margaret Thurston, that morning she should suffer with those that went from the Castle, was for that time deferred. What the cause was, the Testimony of Joan Cook, shall declare unto us. Which Joan Cook, the Wife now of John Spark, being then in the Castle of Colchester for Religion, did demand of this Widow Thurston, whose Husband died in the Prison, being imprisoned for Religion, wherefore the said Margaret, being a condemned Woman, should be reserved when the other suffered in the Castle Bailey: she answered, that it was not for any fear of Death, but being prepared as the rest were that suffered the same day, she felt in her self a great shivering and trembling of the flesh. Whereupon forsaking the company, she went aside to pray. And whilst she was a praying, she thought that she was lifted up with a mighty wind that came round about her. Even at that instant came in the Gaoler and company with him, and whilst she turned her self to fetch her Psalter, they took the other prisoners and left her alone. Shortly after she was removed out of the Castle, and put into the Town-prison, where she continued until Friday sevensnight after her company were burnt. That day, not two hours before her death, she was brought to the Castle again, where she declared thus much to the foresaid Joan Cook.

The other, named Agnes Bongcor, who should have suffered in like manner with the six that went out of Motehall, was also kept back at that time, but not in like sort, because her name was wrong written within the Writ, as in the Bayliffs Letter of Colchester, sent to Bomer about the same more plainly doth appear in the Book of our first edition, pag. 1632.

The same morning, the second of August, that the said six in Motehall were called out to go to their Martyrdom, was Agnes Bongcor also called with them, by the name of Agnes Bover. Wherefore the Bayliffs understanding her (as I said) to be wrong named within the Writ, commanded the said Agnes Bongcor to Prison again as ye have heard in the Letter before named, and so from Motehall that day sent her to the Castle, where she remained until her Death.

But when she saw her self so separated from her said Prison-fellows in that sort, Oh good Lord! what pitious mone that good Woman made, how bitterly she wept, what strange thoughts came into her mind, how naked and desolate she esteemed her self, and into what plunge of despair and care her poor Soul was brought, it was pitious and wonderful to see: which all came because she went not with them to give her life in the defence of her Christ; for of all things in the world, life was least looked for at her hands. For that morning in which she was kept back from burning, had she put on a smock that she had prepared only for that purpose. And also having a Child, a little young Infant sucking on her, whom she kept with her tenderly all the time that she was in Prison, against that day likewise did she send away to another Nurse, and prepared her self presently to give her self for the testimony of the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ. So little did she look for life, and so greatly did Gods gifts work in her above nature, that death seemed a great deal better welcom than life. But this took not effect at that times the thought it would, and therefore (as I said) was the not a little troubled.

Being in this great perplexity of mind, a friend of hers came to her, and required to know whether Abrahams Obedience was accepted before God, for that he did Sacrifice his Son Isaac, or that he would have offered him? Unto which she answered thus:

I know (quoth she) that Abrahams will before God was allowed, or the deed, in that he would have done it, if the Angel of the Lord had not staid him: but I (said she) am unhappy, the Lord thinketh me not worthy of this dignity, and therefore Abrahams case and mine is not alike.

Why (quoth her friend) would ye not willingly have gone with your company, if God should so have suffered it?

Yes (said she) with all my heart, and because I did not, it is now my chief and greatest grief.

Then said her Friend; My dear Sister, I pray thee consider Abraham and thy self well, and thou shalt see thou dost nothing differ with him in will at all.

Alas (quoth she) there is a far greater matter in Abraham than in me; for Abraham was tried with the offering of his own Child, but so am not I; and therefore our cases are not alike.

Good Sister (quoth her Friend) weigh the matter but indifferently. Abraham I grant (said he) would have offered his Son: and have not you done the like in your little sucking Babe? But consider further than this, my good Sister (said he) where Abraham was commanded but to offer his Son, you are heavy and grieved because you offer not your self, which goeth somewhat more near you than Abrahams Obedience did; and therefore before God, assuredly, is no less accepted and allowed in his holy presence; which further the preparing of your throud also doth argue full well, &c. After which talk between them, she began a little to stay her self, and gave her whole exercise to reading and prayer, wherein she found no little comfort.

In the time that these foresaid two good Women were prisoners, one in the Castle, and the other in Motehall, God by a secret mean called the said Margaret Thurston unto his truth again; who, having her eyes opened by the working of his Spirit, did greatly sorrow and lament her backsliding before, and promised faithfully to the Lord in hope of his mercies, never more while she lived to do the like again, but that she would constantly stand to the confession of the same, against all the Adversaries of the Cross of Christ. After which promise made, came in a short time a Writ from London for the burning of them, which according to the effect thereof was executed the 17. day of September, in the year afore said.

Now when these fore said good Women were brought to the place in Colchester where they should suffer the 17. day of September, in the year afore said, they fell down upon both their knees, and made their humble prayers unto the Lord: which thing being done, they rose and went to the stake joyfully and were immediately thereto chained, and after the fire had compassed them about, they with great joy and glorious triumph gave up their Souls, Spirits, and Lives, into the hands of the Lord, under whose Government and protection, For Christs sake we beseech him to grant us his holy defence and help for ever more, Amen.

Thus (gentle Reader) God chooseth the weak things of the world, to confound mighty things.

John Kurde, Martyr.

In the story before, was something touched of a certain Shoemaker suffering at Northampton, being unnamed, whom because we understand by a Letter sent from the said parties, that he suffered in this year. 1557. and in the Month of September, therefore we thought there to place him. His name was John Kurde, a Shoemaker, late of the Parish of Syssam in Northampton Shire, who was imprisoned in Northampton Castle for denying the Popish Transubstantiation, for the which cause William Binsley Bachelor of Law, and Chancellor unto the Bishop of Peterborough, and now Archdeacon of Northampton, did Pronounce Sentence of Death against the said Kurde, in the Church of all Saints in Northampton, in August, Anno 1557. And in September following, at the commandment of Sir Thomas Tresham, Sheriff then of the Shire he was led by his John Kurde,

A Popish Priest standing by, whose name was John Rose, Vicar of Saint Giles in Northampton, did declare unto him, that if hee would recant, he was authorized to give him his pardon. His answer was, that he had his Pardon by Jesus Christ, &c.

A True Certificate of the taking of one John Noyes of Laxfield, in the County of Suffolk, Shoemaker, who was taken the nineteenth day of April, in the year of our Lord God, 1557. as hereafter followeth.

IN the Month of September this present year, (as some report) in the year past, suffered the blessed Martyr J^o. Noyes, whose story here followeth.

First, Master Thomas Lovell being then chief Constable of Hoxton Hundred, in the County aforesaid, and one John Jacob, and William Stannard then being under-Constables of the foresaid Town of Laxfield, and W^olffren Dowling, and Nicholas Stannard of the same Town, being then accounted faithful and Chatholick Christians, though undoubtedly they proved most cruel hinderers of the True Professours of Christ and his Gospel, with others, were command'd to be that present day before the Justices whose names were Master Thurston, Sir John Tyrrel, and Master Kene, and Sir Jo. Siliard being High Sheriff.

These sitting at Hoxton in the County of Suffolk aforesaid, and there the said Townsmen aforesaid having commandment of the said Justices to inquire in their Town if there were any that would neglect to come to their Service and Mass, further to examine the cause why they would not come, and thereupon to bring the true certificate to the said Justices within fourteen days then next ensuing; they then coming homeward, being full of hatred against the truth, and desirous to get promotion, without any such commandment of the Justices (as far as we can learn) took Counsel one with another how to attach the said John Noyes without any more delay.

This devilish enterprise agreed upon, chiefly through the Counsel of Master Thomas Lovell, W^olffren Dowling, and Nicholas Stannard aforesaid with expedition his house was beset on both sides. This done, they found the said John Noyes, on the backside of the said house going outward, and Nicholas Stannard called to the said John, and said, Whither goest thou? And he said, to my neighbours. And the said Nicholas Stannard said, your Master hath deceived you; you must go with us now. But the said John Noyes answered, No, but take you heed your Master deceive not you. And so they took him and carried him to the Justices the next day. After his appearance and sundry causes alledged, the Justices and the Sheriff together cast him into Eye-dungeon, and there he lay a certain time. And then was carried from thence to Norwich, and so came before the Bishop, where were ministered unto him these positions following:

1 Whether he believed that the Ceremonies used in the Church were good and godly, to stir up Mens minds to Devotion.

2 Item, whether he believed the Pope to be Supreme Head of the Church here in Earth.

3 Item, whether he believed the Body of our Lord Jesus Christ to be in the Sacrament of the Altar under the Forms of Bread and Wine, after the Words of Consecration.

Whereunto he answered, that he thought the natural Body of Christ to be only in Heaven, and not in the Sacrament, &c.

For the which, Sentence at last was read by the Bishop against him, in the presence of these there sitting the same time, Dr. Dunning Chancellor, Sir W. Woodboue, Sir Thomas Woodboue, Mr. George Heyden, Mr. Spenser, W. Farrar Alderman of Norwich, Mr. Thurston, Winesden with divers other.

More of his Examination than this came not to our hands.

In the mean time his Brother-in-law, one Nicholas Fisk of Dinwington going to comfort him at such time as he remained prisoner in the Guild hall of Norwich, after Christian Exhortation, asked him if he did fear Death when the Bishop gave judgment against him, considering the terror of the same; And the said John Noyes answered, he thanked God he feared death no more at that time, than he or any other did, being at liberty. Then the said Nicholas required him to shew the cause of his Condemnation. Upon which request the said John Noyes writ with his own hand as followeth:

I said

Sentence read against John Noyes.

Anno 1557. I said (quoth he) that I could not believe, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is the natural Body of Christ. But I said, that the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ is received of Christian People in the remembrance of Christs death, as a spiritual food, if it be ministered according to Christs Institution.

But they said, I could not tell what spiritual meant.

The Bishop said, that the Sacrament was God, and must be worshipped as God. So said the Chancellor also.

Then answered I, my Lord, I cannot so believe.

Then (quoth the Bishop) why? Then say thou dost believe. Notwithstanding these collutions could not prevail.

4. Noyes brought to the place of Marys martyrdom.

Now being condemned, he was sent again from Norwich to Eye-Prison, and upon the 21. day of September in the year aforesaid, about midnight, he was brought from Eye to Laxfield to be burned, and on the next day morning was brought to the Stake, where was ready against his coming the foresaid Justice, Maister Thurston, one Mr. Waller then being under Seriff, and Mr. Thomas Lovell being High Constable, as is before expressed, the which commanded men to make ready all things meet for that sinful purpose. Now the fire in most places of the Street was put out, saving a smोक was edied by the said Thomas Lovell proceeding out from the top of a Chimney, to which house the Sheriff and Grannow his Man went, and brake open the door, and thereby got fire, and brought the same to the place of execution. When John Noyes came to the place where he should be burned, he knelt down and said the 50. Psalm, with other Prayers, and then they making haft bound him to the Stake, and being bound, the said John Noyes said, Fear not them that can kill the Body, but fear him that can kill both Body and Soul, and cast it into everlasting fire.

The words of John Noyes to his Sister.

When he saw his Sister weeping and making moan for him, he bade her that she should not weep for him, but weep for her sins.

Then one Nicholas Cadman being Haftler, a valiant Champion in the Popes affairs, brought a Fagot and set against him; and the said John Noyes took up the Fagot and kissed it and said; Blessed be the time that ever I was born to come to this.

Then he delivered his Pfalter to the under Sheriff, desiring him to be good to his Wife and Children, and to deliver to her that same Book; and the Sheriff promised him that he would, notwithstanding he never as yet performed his promise. Then the said John Noyes said to the People, they say they can make God of a piece of Bread, believe them not.

The words of John Noyes to the People.

Then said he; Good People, bear witness that I do believe to be saved by the merits and passion of Jesus Christ, and not by mine own deeds; and so the fire was kindled, and burned about him, then he said; Lord have mercy upon me. Christ have mercy upon me. Son of David have mercy upon me.

And so he yielded up his life, and when his Body was burned, they made a pit to bury the Coals and Ashes, and amongst the same they found one of his feet that was unburned, whole up to the Ankel, with the hofe on, and that they buried with the rest.

John Jarvis wrongfully troubled the words spoken at the burning of Noyes.

Now while he was a burning, there stood one John Jarvis by, a mans Servant of the same Town, a plain Fellow, which said; Good Lord, how the Sinews of his Arms shrink up. And there stood behind him one Grannow and Benet, being the Sheriffs men, and they said to their Maister, that John Jarvis said, What villain wretches are these? And their Maister bid lay hand on him, and they took him and pinioned him, and carried him before the Justice that same day, and the Justice did examine him of the words aforesaid, but he denied them, and answered that he said nothing but this? Good Lord, how the Sinews of his Arms shrink up. But for all this the Justice did bind his Father and his Maister in 5. l. a piece, that he should be forth coming at all times. And on the Wednesday next he was brought again before the Justices, Mr. Thurston and Mr. Kent, they listing at

Fre. in the Hall. Hundred, and there they did appoint a 11. man, that the said John Jarvis should be set in the stocks the next market day, and whipt about the market about. But his Maister, one William Jarvis, did after crave friendship of the Constables, and they did not set him in the Stocks till Sunday Morning, and in the Afternoon they did whip him about the Market with a Dog-whip, having three Curds, and so they let him go.

Some do give out, that John Jarvis was whipped for saying that Nicholas Cadman was Noyes Haftler, that is, such a one as maketh and halseth the fire.

The Copy of a certain Letter that he sent to comfort his Wife at such time as he lay in Prison.

Wife, you desired me that I would send you some tokens that you might remember me. As I did read in the New Testament, I thought it good to write unto you certain places of the Scripture for a remembrance. St. Peter saith, 1 Pet. 4. Dearly Beloved be not troubled with this heat that is now come among you to try you, as though some strange thing had happened unto you, but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christs sufferings, that when his glory appears ye may be merry and glad. If ye be nailed on for the name of Christ, happy are ye, for the spirit of glory, and the spirit of God resteth upon you. It is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing than for evil doing 1 Pet. 2.

So 1 Pet. 4. See that none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a Thief, or an evil doer, or as a busy-body in other mens matters; but if any man suffer as a Christian man, let him not be ashamed, but let him glorifie God in this behalf; for the time is come that Judgment must begin at the house of God. If it first begin at us, what shall the end of them be, that believe not the Gospel of God? Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit their Souls to him in well doing.

St. Paul saith, 2 Tim. 3. All that will live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution.

St. John saith, 1 John 2. See that ye love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, as the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world, which passeth away and is the lust thereof, but he that fulfilleth the will of God abideth for ever.

St. Paul saith Colos. 2. If ye be risen again with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things that are above, and not on things which are on earth.

Our Saviour Christ saith, Mat. 18. Whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, it were better for him that a Millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were cast into the Sea.

The Prophet David saith, Psal. 34. Great are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth them out of all.

Fear the Lord, ye his Saints: for they that fear him lack nothing.

When the Righteous cry, the Lord heareth them and delivereth them out of all their troubles: But misfortune shall stay the ungodly, and they that hate the righteous shall perish.

Hear, O my People. I assure thee O Israel, if thou wilt hearken unto me, there shall no strange God be in thee, neither shalt thou worship any other God. Oh that my People would obey me: for if Israel would walk in my ways, I should soon put down their Enemies, and turn my hand against their Adversaries.

Our Saviour Christ saith; The Disciple is not above his Master, nor yet the Servant above his Lord. It is enough for the Disciple to be as his Master is, and that the Servant be as his Lord is. If they have called the Master of the house Belzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household? fear not them therefore.

St. Paul

St. Paul faith, 2. Cor. 4. set your selves therefore at large, and bear not a strangers yoke with the unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? what Company hath light with darkness? either what part hath the believer with the Infidel &c. ? Wherefore come out from among them, and separate your selves now (saith the Lord) and touch none unclean thing; so will I receive you, and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my Sons and Daughters, saith the Lord Almighty.

For neither eye hath seen, nor the ear hath heard, neither can it enter into the heart of man what good things the Lord hath prepared for them that love him, 1 Cor. 2.

Ye are bought neither with Silver nor Gold, but with the precious Blood of Christ, 1 Pet. 1.

There is none other Name given to men wherein we must be saved, Acts 4.

So fare ye well Wife and Children; and leave worldly care, and see that ye be diligent to pray.

Take no thought (saith Christ, Mat. 6.) saying, what shall we eat, or what shall we drink, or wherewith shall we be clothed? (for after all these things seek the Gentiles) for your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things; but seek ye first the Kingdom of Heaven, and the righteousness thereof, and all these things shall be ministered unto you.

The Martyrdom of Cicely Ormes at Norwich. An. 1557. September 23.

The Martyrdom and suffering of Cicely Ormes, burnt at Norwich for the Testimony and witness of Christs Gospel.

Sep. 23. Cicely Ormes, Martyr.

About the 23. day of the said month of September, next after the other above mentioned, suffered at Norwich Cicely Ormes Wife of Edmund Ormes Worstead-weaver, dwelling in St. Laurence Parish in Norwich: the being of the age of 32. years or more, was taken at the death of Simon Miller and Elizabeth Cooper above mentioned, in a place called Lollards-pit without Bishops-Gate, at the said Norwich, for that the said the would pledge them of the fatne Cup that they drank on. For so saying, one Master Corbet of Sprowston by Norwich, took her and sent her to the Chancellor. When she came before him, he asked her what she said unto the Sacrament of Christs Body. And she said, she did believe that it was the Sacrament of the Body of Christ. Yea, said the Chancellor, but what is that that the Priest holdeth over his head? She answered him and said, it is Bread: and if you make it any better, it is worse. At which words the Chancellor sent her to the Bishops Prison to the Keeper called Fellows, with many threatening and hot words, as a man being in a great chafe.

Mr. Corbet of Sprowston, Persecutor.

The Chancellor's name was Drinning.

Bridges a Popish persecutor.

The 23. day of July she was called before the Chancellor again, who sat in judgment with Master Bridges and others. The Chancellor offered her, if she would go to the Church and keep her Tongue, she should be at liberty, and believe as she would.

But she told him she would not consent to his wicked desire therein, do with her what he would; for if she should, she said, God would surely plague her. Then, the Chancellor told her, he had showed more favour to her, than ever he did to any, and that he was loth to condemn her, considering that she was an ignorant, unlearned, and foolish Woman. But she, not weighing his words, told him if he did, he should not be so delirious of her sinful flesh, as she would (by Gods grace) be content to give it in so good a quarrel. Then rose he and read the bloody Sentence of Condemnation against her, and did deliver her to the Secular Power of the Sheriffs of the City, Mr. Thomas Sutherton, and Mr. Leonard Sutherton Brethren, who immediately carried her to the Guild-hall in Norwich, where she remained until her death.

This Cicely Ormes was a very simple Woman, but yet zealous in the Lords cause, being born in East Dereham, and was there the Daughter of one Thomas Heund Taylor. She was taken the fifth day of July, and did for a twelve month before she was taken, recant, but never after was the quiet in Conscience, until she was utterly driven from all their Popery. Between the time that she recanted, and that she was taken, she had gotten a Letter made to give to the Chancellor, to let him know that she repented her recantation from the bottom of her heart, and would never do the like again while she lived. But before she exhibited her Bill, she was taken and sent to Prison as is before-said. She was burnt the 23. day of September, between seven and eight of the Clock in the

Cicely Ormes recanteth her Recantation.

Anno 1557. the morning, the said two Sheriffs being there, and of people to the number of 200. When she came to the stake, she kneeled down, and made her prayers to God: that being done, she rose up and said, Good People, I believe in God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, three persons and one God.

This do I not, nor will I recant; but I recant utterly from the bottom of my heart the doings of the Pope of Rome, and all his Popish Priests and shavelings. I utterly refuse and never will have to do with them again by Gods Grace. And good people, I would you should not think of me that I believe to be saved in that I offer my self here unto the Death for the Lords cause, but I believe to be saved by the Death and passion of Christ; and this my Death is and shall be a witness of my Faith unto you all here present. Good People, as many of you as believe as I believe, pray for me. Then she came to the stake, and laid her hand on it, and said, Welcome the Cross of Christ. Which being done, she looking on her hand, and seeing it blacked with the stake, she wiped it upon her smock, for she was burnt at the same stake that Simon Miller and Elizabeth Cooper was burned at. Then after she had touched it with her hand, she came and kissed it, and said, Welcome the sweet Cross of Christ, and so gave her self to be bound thereto. After the Tormentors had kindled the fire to her, she said, My Soul doth magnifie the Lord, and my Spirit rejoiceth in God my Saviour: and in so saying she set her hands together right against her breast, casting her eyes and head upward, and so stood, heaving up her hands by little and little, till the very sinewes of her Arms did break asunder, and then they fell; but she yielded her Life unto the Lord, as quietly as if she had been in a slumber, or as one feeling no pain; So wonderfully did the Lord work with her; his Name therefore be praised for evermore. Amen.

The last words of Cox, O man as the stake

The trouble and disturbance among good Men and Women at Lichfield.

After the Death and Martyrdom of Mistress Joyce Lewys, a little above specified, diverse good Men and Women in the same Town of Lichfield were vexed and in trouble before the Bishop and his Chancellor, for kissing the said Joyce Lewys, and drinking with her about the time of her Death; the names of which persons were these: Josane Love, Elizabeth Smith, Margaret Biddel, Helcke Baring, Margaret Coatesfuse, Nicholas Bird, John Harristone and his Wife, Agnes Glyn, Agnes Glover, Agnes Penisfather, &c. These with other were produced to their examination before the Bishop and his Chancellor for the cause abovenamed, and therefore adjudged for Hereticks, for that they did pray and drink with the said Mistress Lewys, but especially Agnes Penisfather sustained the most trouble, for that she accompanied the said Joyce Lewys going to her Death. Which Agnes being examined further of the said Bishop, what words she had spoken to two Priests of the Church of Lichfield, called John Aley and James Foxe, concerning the said Joyce Lewys after her burning, said, as followeth, That she being asked by the said two Priests being at her Fathers House in the City of Lichfield, at such time as she came from the burning of the said Joyce Lewys, wherefore she the said Agnes did weep for such an Heretick, meaning Joyce Lewys, whose Soul they they said was in Hell; the said Agnes Penisfather to their demand made this answer, that she thought the said blessed Martyr to be in better case than the said two Priests were.

Agnes Penisfather accused of two Priests for words.

With the which words being charged and willed to submit her self as the other had done above rehearsed to such penance as they should enjoyn unto her, she refused so to do, and therefore was commanded to close prison, the Sheriffs being charged with her under pain of 100 pounds, that none should have any access unto her. At length, at the perswasion of her Friends she was compelled to do as the other had done before. And thus much concerning things done at Lichfield.

The persecution and cruelty exercised by the Papists in the Dioceses of Chichester.

And now from Lichfield to come to Chichester, although we have but little to report thereof, for want of certain relation and records of that Country, yet it seemeth no little trouble and persecution there also to have raged, as in other Countries. For what place was there almost in all the Realm, where the Popes Ministers did not better them, murdering some or other, as in the Acts of this Ecclesiastical history may sufficiently appear? Whereby as this plague of the Popes Tyranny was general to all other People and Countries of England, so likewise in the Dioceses of Chichester, divers and many there were condemned and Martyred for the true Testimony of righteousness within the compass of Queen Maries Reign. In the number of whom were these:

John Foreman of Esgrenewest.
John Warner of Berne.
Christian Grover of the Archdeaconry of Lewys.
Thomas Atkoth, Priest.
Thomas Avington of Fordingly.
Dennis Burgess of Buxsted.
Thomas Ravensdale of Rie.
John Milles of Hellinglegb.
Nicholas Holden of Wubiam.
John Hart of Witbiam.
Margery Morice of Hethfield.
Anne Try of Esgrenewest.
John Oseward of Woodmancote.
Thomas Harland of Woodmancote.
James Morice of Hethfield.
Thomas Dougate of Esgrenewest.
John Alsheden of Katberfield.

Martyrs.

The greatest doer against these godly and true faithful Martyrs, and letters upon their condemnation, were these: Christopherson the Bishop after Deay, Richard Bristly Dr. of Law, and Chancellor of Chichester, Robert Taylor Bachelor of the Law his Deputy, Thomas Paccard Civilian, Amib. Clarke, Albane Longdale Bachelor of Divinity, &c.

The Examination of Thomas Spurdance one of Queen Maries Servants, before the Chancellor of Norwich.

The Bishops Chancellor did ask me if I had been with the Priests, and confessed my sins unto him. And I said, No, I had confessed my sins to God, and God faith, In what hour soever a sinner doth repent and be sorry for his sins, and ask him forgiveness, willing no more so to do, he will no more reckon his sin unto him, and that is sufficient for me.

The examination of the Spurdance.

Then said the Chancellor; Thou deniest the Sacrament of penance.

I said, I deny not penance, but I deny that I should shew my sins unto the Priest.

Then said the Chancellor, that is a denying of the Sacrament of penance.

Write this Article.

Have you received the blessed Sacrament of the Altar (said he) at this time of Easter?

And I said, No.

And why have you not faith he?

I said, I dare not meddle with you in it, as you use it.

Why, do we not use it truly, said he?

I said, No: for the Holy Supper of the Lord serveth for the Christian Congregation; and you are none of Christs Members: and therefore I dare not meddle with you, lest I be like unto you.

Why are we none of Christs Members, said the Chancellor?

I said, Because you teach Laws contrary to Gods Laws.

What Laws are those, said he?

I said, These three Articles that you swear the people unto here, be false and untrue, and you do evil to swear the people unto them.

Then

Then said he, good people take no heed unto his words: for he is an Heretick, and teacheth you disobedience: and so he would no more speak of that matter.

Then said he, How belevest thou in the blessed Sacrament of the Altar: dost thou not believe that after it is consecrated, it is the very same Body that was born of the Virgin Mary?

I said, No, not the same Body in substance: for the same Body hath a substance in Flesh, Blood and Bones, and was a bloody Sacrifice, and this is a dry Sacrifice.

And I said, Is the Mass a Sacrifice?

Unto which a Doctor answered that fate by him, It is a Sacrifice both for the Quick and the Dead.

Then said I, No, it is no Sacrifice: for St. Paul saith, that Christ made one Sacrifice once for all: and I do believe in none other Sacrifice, but only in that one Sacrifice that our Lord Jesus Christ made once for all.

Then said the Doctor, That Sacrifice that Christ made, was a wet Sacrifice, and the Mass is a dry Sacrifice.

Then said I, that same dry Sacrifice is a Sacrifice of your own making, and it is your Sacrifice, it is none of mine.

Spurdance examined upon the Sacrament of the Altar.

Then said the Chancellor, He is an Heretick, he denieth the Sacrament of the Altar.

Then said I, Will ye know how I believe in the Holy Supper of our Lord?

And he said, Yea.

Then said I, I believe that if I come rightly and worthily as God hath commanded me, to the Holy Supper of the Lord, I receive him by Faith, by believing in him. Put the Bread being received is not God, nor the Bread that is yonder in the Paxe is not God. God dwelleth not in Temples made with hands, neither will be worshipped with the works of Mens hands. And therefore you do very evil to cause the People to kneel down and worship the Bread: for God did never bid you hold it above your heads, neither had the Apostles such use.

Then said the Chancellor, He denieth the presence in the Sacrament. Write this Article also. He is a very Heretick.

Then said I, The Servant is not greater than his Mr. For your Predecessors killed my Master Christ, the Prophets and Apostles, and Holy Vertuous Men, and now you also kill the Servants of Christ, so that all the righteous Blood that hath been shed, even from righteous Abel, until this day, shall be required at your hands.

Well said the Chancellor, have him away.

Another Examination of Spurdance, before the Bishop in his house.

Another examination of Thomas Spurdance before the Bishop.

The Bishop said, Sirrah, dost thou not believe in the Catholick Faith of Holy Church?

And I said, I believe Christs Catholick Church.

Yea said he, in Christs Church, of the which the Pope is the Head? dost thou not believe that the Pope is supreme Head of the Catholick Church?

And I said, No. I believe not that he should be above the Apostles, if he take them to be his Predecessors. For when there came a thought among the Apostles, who should be the greatest when their Master was gone, Christ answered them unto their thoughts, The Kings of the Earth bear domination above other, but ye shall not so do, for he that will be greatest among you shall become servant unto you all. How is it then (said I) that he will climb so high above his fellows? And also we were sworn in my Master King Henry's time, that we should to the uttermost of our power, never consent to him again. And therefore as he hath nothing to do here in England, so neither in his own country more, then a Bishop hath in his Diocess.

Luke 22.

Yea, said the Bishop, what of that? We were then in error and sin, now we are in the right way again and therefore thou must come home again with us, and acknowledge thy fault, and become a Christian man, and be sworn unto the Pope as our Supreme Head. Wilt thou be sworn unto the Pope? How saiest thou?

The Popes Supremacy.

Then I said, No, I warrant you, by the grace of God Anno not as long as I live. For you cannot prove by the Scripture that the Pope is Head of the Church, and may do therein what him listeth.

No said he? Yes I trow: for as the Belweather which weareth the Bell, is head of the Flock of Sheep, even so is the Pope the Head of the Church of Christ. And as the Bees in the Hive have a Master Bee, when they are gone out, to bring them home again to the Hive: even so the Pope when we be gone astray and wandered from the Fold, from the Hive, &c. then is ordained our Head by succession of Peter, to bring us home again to the true Church; as thou now, my good fellow, hast wandered long out of the way like a scattered sheep, &c. Hear therefore that Belweather, the Master Bell, &c. and come home with us to thy mother the Church again.

Unto whom I answered, My Lord, all this is but natural reason, and no Scripture: but since yee cannot prove the Pope to be Authorized by Scripture, ye answer not me as I thought yee would.

Ha, said he, I see well ye be stout, and will not be answered: therefore ye shall be compelled by Law whether ye will or no.

My Lord, said I, so did your Forefathers intreat Christ and his Apostles. They had a Law, and by their Law they put him to Death; and so likewise, you have a law which is Tyranny, and by that would ye enforce me to believe as you do: but the Lord I trust will assist me against all your beggarly Ceremonies, and make your foolishness known to all the world one day.

Then said he, when were ye at Church and went in Procession, and did the Ceremonies of the Church? And I said, Never since I was born.

No said he? how old are you?

And I said, I think about xl.

Why, said he, How did you use your self at Church twenty years ago?

I said, As you do now.

And even now, said he, you said you did not use the Ceremonies since you were born.

No more I did, said I, since I was born anew; as Christ said unto Nicodemus, Except ye be born anew, ye cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.

Then said a Doctor that fate by, he is a very Anabaptist: for that is their opinion plain.

No Sir, you say falsely, said I: for I am no Anabaptist: for they deny Children to be Baptised, and so do not I.

Well, said the Bishop, why dost thou not go to the Church, and do the Ceremonies?

And I said, Because they be contrary to Gods Word and Laws, as you your self have taught: but now you say it is good again: and I think if there were a return to morrow, you would say that false again which you hold now. Therefore, I may well say, there is no Truth in you.

Then said the Bishop, thou art a stubborn fellow, and an Heretick, and a Traytor.

No, said I, I am no Traytor, for I have done, I think, better Service to the Crown imperial of England, than you.

If you had done so good service (said he) you would be obedient to the Laws of the Realm.

So I am, said I. There is no Man alive (I thank God) that can accuse me justly that ever I was disobedient to any Civil Laws. But you must consider my Lord, that I have a Soul and a Body, and my Soul is none of the Queens, but my Body and my goods are the Queens. And I must give God my Soul, and all that belongeth unto it, that is I must do the Laws and Commandments of God; and whosoever Commandeth Laws contrary to Gods Laws, I may not do them for losing of my Soul, but must rather obey God than Man.

And hee said, Why dost thou not these Laws then? are they not agreeable to Gods Law?

And I said, No, you cannot prove them to be Gods Laws.

Yea, said he, that I can.

Then said I, if you can prove by the Word of God Image that you should have any Graven Images made to set in your Churches for lay Mens Books, or to worship God Obedience to Princes, how false.

Anno 1557. God by them, or that you should have any Ceremonies in your Church as you have, prove them by the Word of God; and I will do them.

Then, said he, it is a good and decent order to furnish the Church: as when you shall go to dinner, you have a cloth upon the Table to furnish the Table before the meat shall come upon it; so are these Ceremonies a comely, decent order to be in the Church among Christian people.

These, said I, are inventions and imaginations out of your own brain, without any Word of God to prove them. For God saith, Look what you think good in your own eyes, if I command the contrary, it is abominable in my sight. And these Ceremonies are against Gods Laws. For, Saint Paul saith, they be weak and beggarly, and rebuketh the Galatians for doing them.

Well, said he, if you will not do them, seeing they be the Laws of the Realm, you are an Heretick and disobedient: and therefore come home again and confess your faults with us, that you have been in error, &c. Will you do so?

And I said, No, I have been in no error: for the spiritual Laws were never truller set forth then in my Master King Edwards time, and I trust unto God I shall never forsake them while I live.

Then came a Gentleman to me and said, Are ye wiser than all Men? and have ye more knowledge than all Men will ye cast away your Soul willingly? My Lord and other Men also, would fain you would save your self: therefore choose some Man where you will, either spiritual or temporal, and take a day, my Lord will give it you.

Then said I, if I save my life, I shall lose it; and if I lose my life for Christs sake, I shall find it in life everlasting. And if I take a day, when the day cometh, I must pay then even as I do now, except I will lie, and therefore that needeth not.

Well, then have him away, said the Bishop.

This above named Thomas Spurdance was one of Queen Marias Servants, and was taken by two of his fellows, the said Queens Servants, named John Haman otherwise called Barker, and George Loosen, both dwelling in Codman in the County of Suffolk, who carried him to one Mr. Golsal, dwelling in the said Codman, and by him he was sent to Bury, where he remained in prison, and afterwards burned in the Month of November.

The Story and Martyrdom of three constant witnesses of Christ.

November 11. Not long after the Martyrdom of the two good Women at Clochester, above named, were three faithful witnesses of the Lords Testament, tormented and put to death in Smith-field at London, the eighteenth of November, in the year aforesaid, whose names hereafter follow:

John Hallingdale.
William Sparrow.
Richard Gibson.

Which three were produced before Boner Bp. of London, the fifth day of November, 1557. and had by him and his officers certain Articles ministred unto them: the sum whereof hereafter followeth.

Articles ministred by Boner unto John Hallingdale.

First, that the said John Hallingdale is of the Diocess of London, and so subject to the jurisdiction of the Bishop of London.

Secondly, that the said John before the time of the Reign of K. Edward the sixth, late King of England, was of the same Faith and Religion that was then observed, believed, taught, and set forth in the Realm of England.

Thirdly, that during the Reign of the said K. Edward the sixth, the said John Hallingdale, upon occasion of the preaching of certain Ministers in that time, did not abide in his former Faith and Religion, but did depart from it, and so did and doth continue till this present day, and so determineth to do (as he saith) till his life end.

Fourthly, that the said John Hallingdale hath thought, believed, and spoken divers times, that the Faith, Religion, and Ecclesiastical Service received, observed, and used now in this Realm of England; is not good and laudable; but against Gods Commandment and Word, especially concerning the Mass and the seven Sacraments; and that he the said John will not in any wise conform himself to the same, but speak and think against it during his natural life.

Fifthly, that the said John abseneth himself continually from his own Parish Church of St. Leonards, neither hearing Mattins, Mass, nor Evensong; nor yet confessing his sins to the Priest, or receiving the Sacrament of the Altar at his hands, or using other Ceremonies as they are now used in this Church and Realm of England; and as he remembereth, he never came but once in the Parish Church of St. Leonards, and careth not (as he saith) if he never come there any more, the Service being as it is there, and so many abuses being there, as he saith there are, especially the Mass, the Sacraments, and the Ceremonies and Service set forth in Latine.

Sixthly, that the said John, when his Wife, called Alice, was brought in bed of a Man Child, caused the said Child to be Christned in English, after the same manner and form in all points, as it was used in the time of the Reign of K. Edward the sixth aforesaid, and caused it to be called Josue, and would not have the said Child Christned in Latine after the form and manner as it is now used in the Church and Realm of England, nor will have it by his will (as he saith) to be confirmed by the Bishop.

Unto all which Articles the said John Hallingdale made answer, confessing them all, and every part of them to be true, and saying, that he would not revoke his said Answers, but stand unto them according as is in every Article above written.

Furthermore, the said John Hallingdale, being demanded by the said Boner, whether he did firmly believe that in the Sacrament, commonly called the Sacrament of the Altar, there is really and truly the very Body and Blood of our Saviour Christ, or no; made answer, that he neither in the time of the said K. Edward the sixth, nor at that present did believe, that in the said Sacrament there is really the very Body and Blood of Christ. For he said, that if he had so believed, he would (as others had done) have received the same, which he did not, because he had and then did believe, that the very Body of Christ is only in Heaven, and no where else. And furthermore the said John Hallingdale said, that Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, Hooper, and generally all that of late have been burned for Hereticks, were no Hereticks at all, because they did preach truly the Gospel: upon whose preaching he grounded his Faith and Conscience, as he said, according to the saying of S. John, in the 18. Chapter of his Revelation, where he saith, That the Blood of the Prophets, and of the Saints, and of all that were slain upon Earth, was found in the Babylonical Church, by the which, he said, is understood the Church where the Pope is the head.
